Q. There is no letter on that subject which you have suppressed or canceled?—A. No, sir.

Q. Nor which you have kept back intentionally?—A. No, sir.

Q. You have endeavored to present all the letters that you could find on the subject?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you fairly made an effort to find everything that you could on the subject?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the three letters produced in evidence are the results of that effort?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have not given any letters to the committee which you wrote to Mr. Stockwell on the subject?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you swear positively that you are unable to do so.

The WITNESS. Do you mean at present?

Mr. BELL. Yes.

A. I do.

Mr. BELL. This whole examination has been going on for some time.

The WITNESS. Yes; and I have been in Washington during all that time.

Q. Have you made any efforts since you came here to obtain your correspondence?—A. No; I looked for it myself when I was in San Francisco, but I could not find it.

Q. A copy of the letter would have been in the letter-book.—A. It may have been, or it may not have been.

Q. Did you have a letter-book?—A. I did.

Q. Did you examine the letter-book, to see if there was any copy of such a letter?—A. I do not think that I found the letter-book of those dates. That letter-book was kept by Mr. Abert, and there were one or two books kept by Mr. Abert which I could not find. One of them was a scrap-book, which I wanted very much to find.

Q. Have you preferred to withhold from the committee the letters which you sent in reply to Mr. Stockwell, if you did send them?—A. No, sir; I would produce them if I was able. I am satisfied that I have correctly stated the contents of them.

Q. You stated that you sent a message by Mr. Abert to Mr. Stockwell.—A. It was not a verbal message that I sent by Mr. Abert, but I sent him a draught of the letter.

Q. It was simply a message sent through him accompanied by a memorandum of a letter which you would like Mr. Stockwell to write in return?—A. Yes.

Q. Have you stated that you ever wrote him a letter directly bearing on the subject of this contract since the 13th of February?—A. I have so stated.

Q. That you have?—A. Yes.

Q. When was it?—A. I am satisfied that I wrote to him on the 15th of February, I think that my original letter bears a note on the top, "Answered 15th February."

Q. You think you did write him on the 15th of February?—A. I think I did. I think that that note is on the letter itself.

Q. Did you draw any money yourself over the counter of the American Exchange Bank in May, 1872?—A. I think I did.

Q. Can you, by the aid of any refreshing to your memory furnished by the investigation, state when it was that you did so?—A. I cannot state the date precisely; I think it was about the 23d or 24th of May.

Q. How much did you draw on that occasion?—A. I think there is a check there for $10,000, which it is my impression I drew myself.

Q. Did you get the bills for it?—A. I think I did.

Q. Did you draw yourself either of the three checks, the two for $100,000, and the one for $125,000?—A. I did not.

Q. Were you present when the money was drawn on them?—A. I was present when the money was drawn on the $125,000 check.

Q. By whom was it drawn?—A. By Charles Abert, and I was present either at the time or just after the time when Mr. Whiting drew his check for $100,000. I think it must have been at the time, from the fact of his having returned the money to me. I think I must have been with him, but I only draw that inference. I do not recollect being there.

Q. You were present at the time the money was drawn on the $125,000 check.—A. I was.

Q. It was drawn by Charles Abert?—A. Yes.

Q. Can you state the date when it was drawn?—A. It was on the date set down in the account. That is the 27th of May.

Q. By what officer of the bank was the money handed to Mr. Abert?—A. I think by Mr. Clarke, the assistant cashier.

Q. You know Mr. Clarke very well?—A. Yes.

Q. How long have you been acquainted with him?—A. For several years.

Q. Was any question asked you in regard to vouching for the check, or did the officers of the bank know Mr. Abert?—A. I think that I went in and introduced him. I do not think that anything else took place.

Q. You were present when the money was paid on one of the $100,000 checks?—A. I have said that I was present either at the time or immediately after the time when Mr. Whiting drew his $100,000.

Q. Did you identify Mr. Whiting at the bank?—A. I think I did.

Q. Do you now think that you were present when that money was drawn?—A. That is my impression; but I cannot say whether I was present either at the time or just after the time; but it was one of the two.

Q. Who paid him the money?—A. I think that a portion of the money was paid to Mr. Whiting by Mr. Clarke.

Q. How much of it?—A. About $40,000—the money which he returned to me.

Q. What was done with the balance?—A. Mr. Whiting said that he was going to take a certificate of deposit for a portion of it. Then I did not see anything more about it.

Q. You do not know whether he got the certificate of deposit or not?—A. I do not know anything more about it.

Q. You stated in your evidence, on page 99, that the amount of all the checks was stated by the company to be about $750,000, and you were asked: "Q. And you believe that to be correct?"—A. I believe that to be correct." Was that a true answer at that time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you then believe that the amount was only $750,000?—A. Yes; I was speaking then of particular checks.

Q. No; you were speaking of an amount, were you not?—A. I was speaking of the amount of particular checks.

Q. You did not intend in that answer to speak of the total amount of money which you had received?—A. No, sir; because I had already stated some of the prior amounts which I had received.

Q. Did you then know that the amount which you had received was greatly in excess of that sum of $750,000?—A. Yes.

Q. Had you then made the calculations which you have since made, which enabled you to state that amount at a larger sum?—A. I had made some of them.

Q. Could you then have stated the gross amount of all the money which you had received, if you had wished to have done so?—A. I could not. I could have stated that I had about $900,000, but I would have stated it from general recollection.

Q. In reference to your own checks on the American Exchange Bank, you swore, as I understood you, that you destroyed those checks?

The WITNESS. Did I say that positively?

Mr. BELL. Then I will ask you directly whether you did destroy your own checks on the American Exchange Bank?

The WITNESS. I do not distinctly recollect the fact of the destruction. I think I did destroy them.

Q. Where do you think you destroyed them?—A. I think in San Francisco.

Q. At what place there?—A. At my office.

Q. How did you destroy them?—A. If I destroyed them at all, it would have been by burning them.

Q. Do you think that you burned them?—A. That is my impression.

Q. All of them?—A. Yes; I think I burned them all.

Q. About what time?—A. That would have been about September, 1873.

Q. Was there anybody present at the time?—A. I cannot say, positively. I have only a general recollection that I burned up a number of papers at that time. Persons were present a part of the time, and part of the time they were not present; it was in my public office.

Q. Have you also destroyed the stubs of those checks?—A. I am not at all certain whether I have or not.

Q. Where are the stubs of those checks, if they were not destroyed?—A. If the stubs are in existence they are in San Francisco.

Q. Whereabouts?—A. I cannot say; they are either at my house or at my office.

Q. While you were at San Francisco making the examination of which you spoke, did you look for those stubs?—A. I did.

Q. Carefully?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you go through your papers carefully?—A. I did.

Q. Did you find those stubs?—A. I did not find them.

Q. Do you believe now that those stubs are destroyed?—A. My impression is that they are not.

Q. What gives you that impression?—A. I cannot tell you what gives it to me. There exists an impression on my mind that they are not destroyed.

Q. Are there any stubs?—A. I am speaking of the stubs of those checks which had stubs.

Q. Were there any stubs to the checks at all?—A. To some of them; certainly.

Q. Were they not written on loose checks?—A. Some of them were.

Q. Were not the bulk of them written on loose checks without stubs?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you not so sworn?—A. I think not. Some of them were written on loose checks and some were written on the checks of a temporary check-book, and some were written on the checks of a permanent check-book. Those written on my permanent check-book would be a very small portion.

Q. Have you the stubs of the checks drawn on the other banks in which you kept accounts during those periods?—A. I cannot say.

Q. Did you look for them?—A. I looked for the stubs of all my check-books. I could not find the stubs of any of my check-books for several years. They are all together, wherever they are.

Q. On your examination you found no stubs whatever?—A. No, sir; they were all tied up together once, and I did not find the bundle in which they were.

Q. Did you pay any money out at the Hoffman House, in New York, in May, 1872, between the 23d and the 27th?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you pay any money out at the Hoffman House to any person, that was not in checks; I do not mean for hotel bills, but in connection with this business?—A. I think I did, but I cannot be positive.

Q. Did you pay anybody there, in connection with this affair, in greenbacks?—A. I may have done so.

Q. Whom did you pay?—A. I may have paid to anybody, but I cannot recollect anything about it.

Q. Is that a fair answer?—A. I give you a fair answer. My recollection is not such as to include or to exclude the idea.

Q. You have no recollection of doing it?—A. No, sir; none whatever.

Q. Did you draw any checks at the Hoffman House at that period?
—A. Yes.

Q. To whom?—A. I think that the check or checks to Samuel A. Hatch were written there.

Q. Were they delivered there?—A. That is my impression. I think that the check to William Moran was drawn there; I think that the check to John G. Schumaker was drawn there; I think that the two checks to Mr. Abert and the one check to Mr. Whiting were drawn there; I think they were all written there, and that is my reason for thinking that those checks were written on a temporary check-book. I think that the check to Mr. King was written on a fly-check in Philadelphia, as I have stated.

Q. Did you have a temporary check-book at the Hoffman House, or were they mere loose checks?—A. I cannot say positively, but my impression is that I did have a check-book.

Q. You do not recollect paying any greenbacks to anybody at the Hoffman House?—A. No, sir.

Q. Who was with you of your party at the Hoffman House on that occasion; did you have any secretary or clerk?—A. Mr. Abert was at the Hoffman House at that time; that is, he arrived on the morning of the 27th of May.

Q. Did you have a clerk or secretary there?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you have any agent or assistant?—A. No, sir; except Mr. Abert, who arrived on the morning of the 27th.

Q. When did you leave New York for San Francisco?—A. On the 27th of May, in the noon train.

Q. And you went directly to Philadelphia?—A. Yes.

Q. And left there?—A. I left on the 11.40 train on the 28th of May.

Q. For what point?—A. For San Francisco direct.

Q. By rail?—A. By rail.

Q. The checks which you say were destroyed on the 24th of May, how were they destroyed; were they actually torn up in your presence?

The WITNESS. Do you mean the Stockwell and company's checks?

Mr. BELL. Yes. You say that $560,000 in checks were torn up by Mr. Bellows.

A. I have made this correction of my testimony on that subject. I say as a correction to page 554: "I am not quite so positive about the actual destruction of those checks by Mr. Bellows. In going over the thing in my mind, I find my memory distinct and positive as to handing him the checks and everything else up to the moment of tearing them up. I cannot say that I actually saw him tear them up, although that was my distinct impression."

Q. That is made as a correction to your testimony on page 554?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you still say that it is your belief that the checks were destroyed?—A. It was, when I made that correction.

Q. Has anything occurred to change your impression about it since that time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have no recollection as to the manner of the destruction of those checks?—A. I have not. I thought at that time that I had seen Mr. Bellows tear them up, but when I come to go over the thing in my mind the whole picture is perfect up to the time when I come to see him tearing them up, and I cannot see him tear them up.

Q. Did you not state that your recollection was most distinct and perfectly clear?—A. I did, and I thought it was. But your question was whether I was mistaken or whether Mr. Bellows was mistaken in reference to the time and place of the destruction, and my attention was directed particularly to the question of time and place and not to the question of destruction. That was the time and place I delivered them to him, and my recollection was that he had destroyed them then. Now, I find that I recollect everything perfectly and distinctly until I come to see him tearing up the checks, and I cannot see him doing it. That is all.

Q. Then what makes you think that they were destroyed?—A. I do not think so now. I think they were not destroyed.

Q. Have you any recollection about it?—A. I have not; but you asked me if I had heard anything since to change my impression, and I said I had.

Objection was made by some members of the committee to the course of the cross-examination, and after some discussion the examination was resumed as follows:

Q. On what bank were the $250,000 checks that were sent to you in the letter of February 13, 1872?—A. On the Merchants and Manufacturers' Bank.

Q. Were they the checks of the Howe Sewing-Machine Company?—A. They were not. I have said that they were A. B. Stockwell's checks.

Q. I ask you now if they were not the checks of the Howe Sewing-Machine Company to his order?—A. I think that they were A. B. Stockwell's personal checks. I will not swear positively that they were not the Howe Sewing-Machine Company's checks, because that would have struck me as the same thing.

Q. Were not the $400,000 checks of May 4th the checks of the Howe Sewing-Machine Company to the order of A. B. Stockwell?—A. They were not.

Q. You are positive of that?—A. I am.

Q. On what bank were the $400,000 checks, sent to you on the 4th of May, drawn?—A. That is all in the testimony. I have described them fully. They were on the National Bank of Commerce, in New York.

Q. I wish to call your attention to page 109 of the testimony, in which you make use of this statement: "I say that everything I have which in any way represents money that ever belonged to the Pacific Mail Company, I own by virtue of written contracts, of which the company has or ought to have copies." What do you mean by saying that "the company has or ought to have copies?"—A. I say that the company has them or ought to have them.

Q. Did you ever have any written contract other than the letters which you have stated?—A. No, sir.

Q. And are those letters the written contracts to which you refer in that statement?—A. They are.

Q. And there was no other contract?—A. There was no other contract.

Q. Do you think that the company was entitled to the copies of Mr. Stockwell's individual letters?

The WITNESS. The question is whether these were his individual letters.

Mr. BELL. Answer the question whether you think the company had any right to the copies of Mr. Stockwell's letters to you?—A. I think it had.

Q. Do you think that the company ever did have them?—A. I think it did.

Q. Had you any stock speculation yourself in 1872, during the pendency of this measure?—A. I had not.

Q. Were you interested in puts and calls?—A. I was not.

Q. Were you interested, directly or indirectly, in long or short contracts?—A. No, sir.

Q. With Mr. Stockwell or with Musgrave & Co.?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you make a proposition to the China Trans-Pacific Company, limited, at any time since this investigation that you were prepared to submit to it an eligible offer for the employment of its vessels?

The Chairman inquired what bearing that question had on the matter before the committee. Did it mean that the witness was hostile to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?

Mr. BELL. Yes; it tends to show his status as a witness.

The question was repeated to the witness.

A. I did make a proposition once.

Q. What was that proposition?—A. That the company should delay acting upon the charter of the Vasco de Gama and the Vancouver to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company until it heard from the overland railroad companies.

Mr. Bell read to the committee a letter from the secretary of the China Trans-Pacific Company, limited, to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, denying that there were any negotiations between the former company and Mr. Irwin or Captain Bradbury, but that Mr. Irwin on one occasion made use of an observation, that if the China Trans-Pacific Company was uncommitted to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company he was prepared to submit eligible offers for the employment of their vessels, and that so soon as the committal of the China Trans-Pacific Company to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company was ascertained, one of the directors of the former company was at once instructed to inform Mr. Irwin that that company was not open to enter into negotiations.

Q. Is the statement in that letter true?—A. No, sir; it is substantially true for their purpose, but, as to my connection with it, it is inaccurate.

Q. Do you deny the statements made in this letter?—A. So far as their relations with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company are concerned, the statement is perfectly accurate; but so far as it relates to any proposition made by me to the China Trans-Pacific Company, it is inaccurate. I told them that if they were uncommitted, the overland railroad companies would probably be ready to make them a proposition, but I did not tell them that I was prepared to do so, for I was not.

Q. What authority had you for making that statement?—A. The authority of the railroad companies.

Q. Written or verbal?—A. I had written authority to say what I said.

Q. Was your authority from any official connected with the railroad companies?—A. I so regard it.

Q. You state on page 461 of the testimony, "I understand that the Pacific Mail Steamship Company has passed resolutions releasing all their officers and agents from any relation of confidence to the company." Had you then read the resolutions which had passed the board, and which were presented to this committee?—A. I do not think I had.

Q. You had seen them in the newspapers?—A. I think so, but I do not recollect whether I had read them or not.

Q. Did you not know that those resolutions only applied to counsel?—A. I had not paid any particular attention to them at all.

Q. Do you not know now that the resolutions had no reference whatever to you, in any shape or manner?—A. No, sir; I thought it was the intention of the company to release everybody.

Q. Did you not know that the resolutions read that any attorney, counsel, or person claiming to have acted as such for that company, was released?—A. That is how I supposed it read.

Q. You were not an attorney or counsel, were you?—A. I think not.

Q. Were you released in any manner, by that resolution, from your obligation not to make any disclosures?—A. My impression was, after reading them, that I was.

Q. Did you make any disclosures by virtue of those resolutions which you otherwise would not have made?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then, why was it your duty to come out of jail, as you stated on page 461?—A. I did not say that. I said that I came out because I did not consider it my duty to stay there any longer, and then I went on to say that if the same circumstances should arise again, I should be obliged to do the same thing again.

Q. Did you consider it your duty at that time to come out?—A. I beg pardon; I said that I came out because I did not consider it my duty to stay there any longer.

Q. Did you consider it your duty to come out?—A. I did not consider it as a question of duty. It was a matter of inclination for me to come out.

Q. Did you furnish the letter published in the New York Times signed Vacuum Gauge, referring to Mr. John Roach in connection with this legislation, and giving a statement attempting to compromise him in regard to it?—A. I object to answering that question unless the letter itself is produced in evidence.

The CHAIRMAN. You can answer whether you have written such letter.

A. I did not.

Q. Did you write a letter to the New York Times, signed Vacuum Gauge, making any insinuations in regard to the exchange of the $200,000 checks with Mr. Roach?

The WITNESS. Let me have the letter.

The CHAIRMAN. Answer the question.

A. I did not. I never wrote any letter signed Vacuum Gauge.

Q. Did you inspire or direct its writing?

The WITNESS. I object to answering the question, because the letter does not bear the interpretation which Mr. Bell puts upon it, and I object to answering unless the letter is put in evidence.

The CHAIRMAN. If it was proper for you to answer the question whether you wrote it, it is also proper to answer whether you inspired or directed its writing.

The WITNESS. Without the letter being in evidence?

The CHAIRMAN. The letter will not harm you unless it is put in evidence.

The WITNESS. Mr. Bell has put a false interpretation on it.

The CHAIRMAN. You have already answered that you wrote no letter bearing that interpretation.

The WITNESS. Then, why am I to answer the question if the letter does not bear that interpretation? Mr. Bell does not connect it with Washington. I have never written to the New York Times any letter bearing any relation to this inquiry.

Q. Did you inspire or direct the writing of a letter to the New York Times signed Vacuum Gauge?

The WITNESS. I object to answering any question before this committee which does not relate to the subject-matter under this inquiry.

Q. Did you inspire or direct the writing of this letter, or was it prepared with your knowledge or approval?

The WITNESS. I object to the question on the ground that it does not relate to the subject-matter under the inquiry. It does not relate to anything in Washington. There is nothing to connect it with this inquiry.

Mr. BELL. It is most distinctly connected with the inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN (to Mr. Bell.) Unless you put the letter in evidence there is no occasion to examine the witness about it.

Mr. BELL. If his answer warrants its being put in evidence, I shall put it in, of course.

The chairman submitted the point to the committee and the question was excluded.

The following corrections were made by the witness to his testimony on page 554. I am not quite so positive about the actual destruction of those checks by Mr. Bellows. In going over the thing in my mind, I find my memory distinct and positive as to handing him the checks, and everything else up to the moment of tearing them up. I cannot say that I actually saw him tear them up, although that was my distinct impression.

Witness also made the following corrections to his testimony on pages 560 and 563. After studying the matter, I am satisfied that I did not go on to give the reasons in detail at this time. I had gone over them long before, and did not repeat them on the 23d of May.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 13, 1875.

MOSES DILLON sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Do you recollect testifying before this committee last Congress?—Answer. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you any knowledge beyond that which you then testified to?—

A. I have no information except what I derived from hearsay..

Q. As we have not a report of your testimony last Congress, can you repeat it?—A. No, sir. I erased all the names from my book, and have forgotten them.

Q. Do you know any fact about the payment of money by any agent of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. I do not, except what I have heard from outsiders.

Q. Do you know of anybody who does know of such payment?—A. I do not. I heard rumors. My attention was first attracted by a gentleman coming into the office and saying that he would not be in the subsidy scrape for the world—showing that he had heard something outside.

Q. Did he say what the scrape was?—A. No; but he alluded to the money which had been paid for that subsidy, I suppose; because at that time the $1,000 bills were being circulated. That called my attention to it; and, out of a spirit of sport, (nothing else,) I put down the names of some of those gentlemen.

Q. Can you tell now those names?—A. No, sir; I cannot. I have a bad memory for names, so that frequently when members of Congress came in I would have to ask their names.

Q. And you cannot call to mind the names of any of them?—A. I might call to mind the names of one or two of them from their having been mentioned in the newspapers.

Q. Can you call to mind any except those who have been mentioned lately in the newspapers?—A. No, sir; not one.

Q. Who were those?—A. Mr. Storm, Mr. Voorhees, and Mr. Winchester. They have been here and testified.

Q. Do you recollect any except those?—A. I do not.

Q. What do you recollect now about the thousand-dollar bills?—A. Only that there were a good many coming into the office to be changed during the few days after the passage of the subsidy bill.

Q. By a good many, how many do you mean?—A. I had, I think, certainly six names, probably more. Some came in of course before I commenced taking them at all, and there may have been some who came in afterward; I suppose there might have been thirteen to fifteen altogether; I do not really recollect how many I had. I think I gave the initials of one only, that was D. W. V., and you asked me who the initials stood for, and I said I supposed they stood for Mr. Voorhees.

Mr. BURCHARD. You gave the initials J. B. S., and said that you supposed they stood for John B. Storm.

The WITNESS. I confess that I was mortified a good deal about it, and after the committee agreed to expunge the whole matter I erased the names from my tablet, and from my memory. As before stated, my recollection of names is very deficient, but of figures, faces, and location, very good.

Mr. Kasson remarked that, during a former Congress, he had often been struck with that peculiarity of the witness, having had to mention his own name several times when transacting business with him.

Q. Are you confident that you gave us more than half a dozen names at the last Congress?—A. My impression now is that there were more than six.

Q. Without regard to how many you may have had, do you recollect how many you gave us?—A. I gave you all I had on my tablet. Mr. Dawes took the book out of my hand and read the names.

Q. Have you that memorandum-book now?—A. I have the book but not here. The names were all erased immediately after I went out of the committee-room, the second time I appeared before the committee.

Q. Were they so erased that you cannot discover the names?—A. They were entirely rubbed out. It was one of those slate-tablets.

Q. Do you recollect whether there were anything more than initials?—A. I have no recollection of any initials except the one just mentioned, D. W. V. Mr. Burchard says that there were the initials J. B. S., but I do not recollect how that was.

Q. Were you the teller in the Sergeant-at-Arms' office?—A. I was the book-keeper and cashier; but I made a good many payments, and changed a good deal of money. When members came into the office while I was there the money was changed for them either by Mr. Fuller or by myself.

Q. When you came to examine into the matter after you testified before the committee at last Congress, did you have a reason to change your mind in relation to it?—A. No, sir.

Q. I do not mean as to the names of the men, but as to the circumstance itself.—A. As to the circumstance of having changed the $1,000 notes? No, sir.

Q. Were you not satisfied that if you thought the initials D. W. V. stood for Mr. Voorhees, you must have been mistaken?—A. At my examination before the committee, I expressed some doubts about the matter.

Q. Did you not ascertain with reference to him that you must have been mistaken, as he was out of the city and in Indiana at the time?—A. Mr. Voorhees's sworn testimony would certainly strengthen the doubts before expressed.

Mr. NIBLACK. He testified to having got leave of absence the day before the subsidy passed, and to having gone home and not returned to Washington any more that session.

Q. In regard to Mr. Winchester, did you not ascertain that he could not have had any connection with the Pacific Mail subsidy?—A. No, sir; I did not know who voted for it or against it. Mr. Winchester was in the habit of making deposits with us.

Q. You think that Mr. Winchester deposited $1,000?—A. I think the books will show that he deposited it, but I am not positive about that, but, if I had his name, he certainly brought the $1,000 bill, either for change or credit.

Q. Do you mean to say that those men whose names you had on your memorandum made deposits?—A. Not one of them, except it was Mr. Winchester.

Q. They only came there to have the bills broken up?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you not know that Mr. Winchester was in the habit of bringing you money to deposit there in not very large sums?—A. He deposited good-sized sums. He had quite a good deposit account that Congress.

Q. Are you certain that you did not confound his bringing a thousand-dollar bill with his depositing money?—A. I rather think he did bring a thousand-dollar bill, or I would not have put his name down.

By Mr. BURCHARD:

Q. Did you not testify that you did not make any memorandum or entry at the time, but that afterward in thinking the matter over you made an entry in your pass-book?—A. I do not recollect testifying so, and I do not recollect that being the fact.

Q. Do you not recollect having made use of this expression: That you noticed some members who had been impecunious before the passage of the subsidy and who were subsequently flush?—A. I did, no doubt, use that expression and use it in that connection.

Q. And that you made an entry of the names of those who you thought had received money?—A. No; I made an entry of the names of those who brought the money. I recollect now that I said there had been some gentlemen who I knew had been in the habit of anticipating their salaries by drawing $50 or $100 on account, and who brought in one thousand dollar bills afterward.

Q. And you said that you made the entry afterward—not at the time when they came in, but afterward, in thinking it over?—A. It is possible that I said so, but I do not recollect.

Q. Is not that the fact?—A. Not that I recollect.

Q. Did you, as each man came in having a large bill, put down his name or his initials in this book at the same time that you noticed him?—A. I did it generally immediately after; not in his presence, of course.

Q. Was that before or after the passage of the subsidy?—A. I presume it was afterward, but I do not know.

Q. How long afterward?—A. That I cannot tell, because I really do not know the date of the passage of the bill, and do not know the date of the transaction; but I think that it was in June. I can tell by referring to the books of the Forty-second Congress.

Q. Do you mean the time the bill passed the House, or the time that it became a law?—A. I presume it was at the time that the bill passed the House, but I was so little posted in those matters that I did not keep myself informed as to the passage of such measures.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. We would like you to reproduce everything that you know about the transaction.—A. I have said all that I do know. I have really no personal knowledge of the matter at all.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. Can you now give to the committee the names or the initials of any of the members producing these thousand-dollar bills in your presence except those which you have already stated, and who appeared and gave their testimony before the committee?—A. I cannot. I really do not recollect a single name.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. After you testified before the committee last Congress, did you not subsequently appear before the committee and request to withdraw your testimony?—A. I did.

Q. What did that grow out of—your satisfaction that you were mistaken?—A. No, sir; it grew out of my mortification at having been led on to take those names at all. It was a matter which I had no business to interfere with. It was conceived in a spirit of sport, and I had no idea of its ever getting out of my knowledge. I knew that afterward it had been the means of depriving me of the good opinion of some gentlemen whose esteem I valued very highly, and I erased the names from my book and from my memory, except the circumstance itself. That I never can erase.

Q. Did you not become satisfied that, in reference to the names which you mentioned here, there had been some mistake?—A. I hoped there might be some mistakes. There was one gentleman who came to me and said that I was certainly mistaken about him, as he had never had so large a bill in his possession during his life, and Mr. Winchester, who satisfactorily explained the matter.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. If you had that book now before you, would it aid your memory as to the names or initials?—A. Not at all; they were entirely erased.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Do you recollect saying that after several had come in with these large bills, it occurred to you that you would put down the names, but that you did not do it at first, and that then you put down half a dozen names after a good many had come in?—A. I think not. My recollection of the matter is that I put down only those names that came in after it occurred to me to put the names down at all.

Q. Do you recollect testifying before that it did not strike you as anything remarkable at first, but that when several came in one after the other with these large bills, it occurred to you to put down their names; and do you recollect the committee trying to get you to recollect the names of persons which you did not put down, and who came in before you had begun to keep the record?—A. No, I do not; nor do I recollect giving the testimony which Mr. Burchard says I gave. My recollection of the matter now is that I came in the next morning and requested that the proceedings of the day before might be expunged, and that I might be permitted to withdraw all that I had said in relation to those names.

Q. And you understood that your testimony was withdrawn at your request?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that that was the reason it did not appear in the printed record?—A. Yes, sir; that was my understanding of it.

Q. What was the name of the gentleman who told you that he would not be in the scrape for all the world?—A. It was Mr. Ordway.

Q. Who was the member who came to you and said that you must have been mistaken about his having a thousand-dollar bill?—A. I think it was Mr. Storm.

Q. Are you quite certain that Mr. Ordway's remark did not relate to Mr. King, instead of to members of Congress?—A. I cannot say whom his remark particularly referred to.

Q. You do not know whether it referred to members of Congress or to Mr. King?—A. No, sir; but I think it more than probable that it referred to Mr. King, from his subsequent remarks.

Q. Do you recollect his mentioning any one name in connection with that remark?—A. None except Mr. King's.

Q. He did mention Mr. King's name in that connection?—A. Yes; I think I asked the question who was probably the disburser of this money, and he said that he thought it was Mr. King, the postmaster. I have not been in the employment of the Sergeant-at-Arms since March, 1873.

MOSES DILLON.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 13, 1875.

NATHAN A. FULLER sworn and examined.

To the Chairman. I am paying-teller in the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms, in the House of Representatives. I have been in that position since 1871, with the exception of last winter.

Question. Were you there during all the year 1872?—Answer. Yes.

Q. Can you, by referring to your books, show whether you were constantly in attendance during the months of May and June, 1872?—A. Yes, I think I can. I have got the draft-book here, but I have not got my day-book, the paying-teller's blotter.

Q. Will the book that you have show whether you were present every day during those two months?—A. I think it will.

Q. Examine it, and see if you were.—A. [After examining.] Almost all the orders for drafts in this book are in my handwriting. It runs from December 1, 1871, to March 31, 1872.

Q. Take the two months of May and June; will the daily entries in that book disclose whether you were present all the time during those months?—A. [After examining the book.] Yes, sir, I think they show so. There is now and then an entry by Mr. Dillon, when I may have been out of the office to get a lunch.

Q. Do you find any of Mr. Dillon's entries in the months of May and June?—A. Yes, once in a while I find an order for a draft put down by him.

Q. What was Mr. Dillon doing at that time?—A. He was book-keeper.

Q. Whose duty would it have been to change money presented at the counter?—A. Mine, as paying-teller.

Q. Would Mr. Dillon have any part of that duty to perform while you were present?—A. No, sir; he would charge me with a certain amount of money in the morning, and at night I would have to account to him for it in money or in members' checks.

Q. And if you were in the office he would have nothing to do with changing bills presented at the counter?—A. No, sir; nothing whatever.

Q. Do you recall any unusual transaction at the counter of the Sergeant-at-Arms in the months of May or June, 1872?—A. I do not.

Q. Do you recollect the presentation of any thousand-dollar bills by members?—A. No, sir.

Q. Could there have been a dozen or fifteen members, during either of those two months, presenting new thousand-dollar bills without your noticing the fact?—A. I do not know. I think I should be apt to recollect it, because as a general thing I do not have these large bills to change.

Q. Have you in your memory the fact that any one member did present a thousand-dollar bill to be changed?—A. No, sir; I have no remembrance of any such transaction.

Q. If a dozen members presented each a thousand-dollar bill to be changed, would it have been possible for you to forget that fact?—A. It would depend altogether upon whether there had been some circumstance to fasten it on my memory.

Q. Do you think it possible for you to have forgotten such a fact if it had occurred?—A. No, I do not think it possible for me to have forgotten.

Q. Tax your memory as well as you are able, and tell us whether you can call to mind any circumstance connected with thousand-dollar bills during those two months.—A. No, sir; I cannot.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 13, 1875.

RUFUS HATCH recalled.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. State to the committee what is the result of your examination of the books, which you were requested to make, bearing on the question whether the Pacific Mail Steamship Company furnished the money to Mr. Irwin which he testifies to have expended here.—Answer. I will read a statement which I have prepared, and which covers the question pretty fully.

The statement is as follows:

GENTLEMEN OF THE COMMITTEE: In New York you suggested that the proper way for the company was to wait until the evidence of Mr. Irwin had been concluded, and, also, the other evidence in the case, before the evidence in behalf of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company was closed.

As we have had no control over this investigation, acting under and upon the suggestions of the committee, after having heard the evidence which has already been produced, I respectfully submit, as managing director and executive officer of the company, the following facts:

1st. In reference to the allegation of Mr. Richard B. Irwin, that he was acting under a contract with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company in the transaction, in Washington, which he relates, I wish to state, positively, that I have made, and caused to be made, a careful and thorough examination of the books and records of that company; and I now state, positively, that all his evidence in that connection is absolutely false—that there never was any contract of employment, on the part of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, of Mr. R. B. Irwin in regard to the legislation of 1872, by Congress, of any character whatever.

Mr. Irwin submits three letters from A. B. Stockwell to himself, dated February 1, February 13, and May 4, 1872.

2d. The letter of February 13, 1872, was written before the action of the executive committee authorizing the employment of counsel by the company, and is a statement of the actual terms of the contract between Richard B. Irwin, acting in his own behalf, with Mr. Alden B. Stockwell individually, to which the Pacific Mail Steamship Company was not a party, either directly or indirectly.

The checks inclosed were the personal or individual checks of Mr. A. B. Stockwell, and not the property of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

This is the only one of all the letters which define the terms of the contract, and show it to be an individual engagement on the part of A. B. Stockwell with Richard B. Irwin, acting in their individual capacity, and it conclusively shows that it was not an engagement of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, which it did not purport to be.

Neither of these letters are the letters of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company. All of them are, and purport to be, the individual letters of Mr. Alden B. Stockwell. There is no ratification of those letters by the board of directors or officers of the company, either directly or indirectly. Neither were these letters, or the contract, ever submitted to, or in any manner brought to the attention of, the board of directors of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company. There are no copies thereof, or of either of said letters, or of any contract whatever, on the books of the company, or record of the same of any kind.

3d. Mr. Irwin fails to produce another letter from Mr. A. B. Stockwell, which he claims to have received in answer to Mr. Irwin's letter of 14th February, 1872. Neither does Mr. R. B. Irwin produce any of the letters which he, Irwin, claims to have written to Mr. A. B. Stockwell in regard to the subject of the contract made with Mr. A. B. Stockwell individually. Nor does he produce copies thereof.

After careful search through the letter-books and files of the company, I am able to state positively that there are no records or files of any correspondence relating to this subject between the Pacific Mail Steamship Company and Mr. R. B. Irwin, and that there was no correspondence of any kind between him and the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, except as furnished heretofore, and at pages 218 and 219 of the evidence.

Mr. Richard B. Irwin's relations to the company were simply those of an agent at San Francisco, at a salary of $10,000 per year, and he had no other authority or authorization of employment from the Pacific Mail Steamship Company during the year 1872 whatever, and his statements to the contrary are absolutely false.

The statements of Mr. Irwin that any arrangement was made between Mr. Stockwell, as the president of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, and himself—Mr. Stockwell acting under the authority of the board of directors, as testified to by him on pages 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, and following of the printed testimony, and that he should come to Washington and get the subsidy, or that his transactions in Washington were in any way authorized by that company—are absolutely false.

I have carefully examined the books and records of the company, and swear positively that no such authority was given by the company in any manner for any employment of the kind, nor for any contract of the character he describes. The only resolution authorizing the employment of any person by the company was the resolution adopted February 14, 1872, by the executive committee, of which the following is a copy :

“Resolved, That the president, in his discretion, is hereby authorized to employ counsel, and incur such other necessary expense as may be necessary, in connection with the measures for additional subsidy now pending before Congress.”

Which action of the executive committee was subsequently ratified, on the 21st February, 1872, by the board of directors. The resolution gives no authority to any officer of the company to make any such contract or employment, and in this connection I refer to the evidence of the several members of the board of directors, Theo. T. Johnson, secretary, on pages 69 and 73; O. P. C. Billings, on pages 223 to 225; Chas. J. Osborne, on pages 227 and 228; H. H. Baxter, on pages 229 to 231; Henry Clews, on pages 256 to 258; James D. Smith, on pages 87 and 88, and testimony, January 30, 1875, who have been summoned, and who positively state under oath that it was understood, both in the executive committee and in the board, Mr. Stockwell being interrogated upon the subject, that the amount to be expended under this resolution should not exceed $10,000, and that only for the legitimate purposes therein specified, and this was after the individual contract between A. B. Stockwell and Richard B. Irwin was made.

That resolution gave Mr. Stockwell no authority to employ any one except counsel, and Mr. R. B. Irwin was not an attorney, and could not have acted as counsel for the company, and does not claim that he acted as attorney or counsel, and never was employed as such or his employment authorized by the company.

It is a well-known fact, and I state it of my own knowledge, that Alden B. Stockwell, during the year 1872, and while he was the president of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, had his private office in the office of the company, at 59 and 61 Wall street, New York, and transacted his personal and individual business in the office of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company; that he had his private clerk and secretary there for the transaction of his individual business, and that he was in the habit of using the printed letter-heads of the company for writing letters in regard to his individual business and private affairs.

I state as a fact, positively, that the Pacific Mail Steamship Company never authorized the expenditure of one dollar in money for the purpose of corruptly influencing Congress or for any illegal or improper purpose in connection with the legislation of 1872, and that the only authority which the company has ever given for the expenditure of any money whatever in connection with that legislation was that authorized by the resolution of February 14, 1872, already submitted, which was strictly legitimate and proper.

The allegation and pretense on the part of Mr. Irwin that, in the transactions he has related, or pretended to relate, of his operations in Washington, he represented the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, directly or indirectly, I wish to state positively, as managing director and executive officer of that company, after a careful examination of the most thorough kind of the books and papers of that company, is, and all his statements in that respect are, absolutely false and without any shadow of truth.

Mr. Irwin, in his evidence before this committee, recently made some insinuations respecting settlements between the Pacific Mail Steamship Company and A. B. Stockwell, its late president, of which he conceded he knew nothing of his own knowledge. I wish to state here, distinctly and positively, that his statements and all his insinuations in that connection are absolutely and unqualifiedly false.

At the commencement of this investigation, and when I was first before this committee as a witness, I was not aware of the extent and magnitude of the abstractions of money from the company by these two men—Alden B. Stockwell and Richard B. Irwin.

From my examination, and the light thrown upon the subject by the evidence taken by this committee, I can now state that the amount of money actually abstracted from the treasury of the company by Alden B. Stockwell and Richard B. Irwin, during the administration of Mr. Stockwell, exceeded the sum of $2,500,000. These various abstractions were covered by false and irregular entries of various kinds.

No part of the moneys abstracted by R. B. Irwin, the amount of which he first stated to be $750,000, and last stated by him to be $900,000 or $925,000, were embraced in the settlement between the company and Mr. Stockwell. Neither were certain other large abstractions by him so settled, as the officers were not at the time aware of the nature of the abstractions, their amount, or the method of their concealment by false entries on the books of the company, and have only recently discovered them.

To explain what, I have observed, was not well understood in the minds of certain members of this committee, and to correct an evident misapprehension and false impression in regard to members of the board of directors under the Stockwell administration, in 1872, when these abstractions were principally made, I wish to state that the entries upon the books of the company were so made that an examination of the books of the company by a director, or by an auditing committee, in the usual or ordinary discharge of their duty, would not have discovered or detected them. The entries made on the books of the company to cover the transactions of the $750,000 of money which Mr. Irwin received on May 24, 1872, were so made that if they had been seen upon the books of the company, by any director examining the books, they would have appeared to be in the usual transaction of the company's business, and would not have given rise, ordinarily, to any suspicion.

The usual and ordinary transactions between the company and its San Francisco agency are very large, and the entry of a large amount, as charged to the San Francisco agency, would not in itself be a matter of suspicion to any officer or director of the company. In this case only $100,000 of this amount was charged to the San Francisco agency at the time of the abstraction, and the remaining $650,000 was charged on the books of the company as a loan to Harriot & Noyes, one of the prominent private banking-houses and brokers' firms of the city of New York at that time.

An entry on the books of the company charging large sums, as in the case of a loan on 24th May, 1872, of $650,000 to Harriot & Noyes, was not such an entry as would have excited the least notice on the part of a director who might have discovered it on the books of the company. It was the practice of the company to make large loans, even larger than these sums, to bankers and brokers, and it had frequent transactions of this character. The entries would not have advised a director of the abstraction of money or led him to suspect it; and this is true of the various false and irregular entries that were made to cover the various abstractions of the funds of the company to which I allude.

Some criticisms have been made against the auditing-directors for not examining into this affair and discovering these frauds from an examination of the books. I think these criticisms unjust, for it has only been by the most careful and diligent search, with the aid of this investigation, by careful and competent experts, employed by the company, that the abstractions have been fully detected, and the manner in which they were made and successfully concealed on the books, have been discovered and exposed.

A misapprehension appears to exist not only in the public mind, but, I fear, even by members of Congress, as to the precise nature and character of the legislation of 1872.

This committee is well aware that that legislation was not a subsidy in any sense to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

I wish to show as a part of my evidence in this case, in order that the committee and Congress may exactly understand the true posture of affairs, the exact character of that legislation. There was no act of Congress in 1872 granting any subsidy to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company whatever.

The general appropriation bill of 1872 entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1873," and which was the general bill of that year for the support of that entire branch of the Government, under which numerous contracts for mail-service have been made, was approved June 1, 1872. This act had no provision or clause in favor of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company whatever.

By the 3d and 6th sections of that act the Postmaster-General was authorized to advertise and invite bids or proposals for the mail steamship service between San Francisco, China, and Japan under the conditions prescribed by the act of Congress, and to let the contract for that service to the lowest bidder, according to the terms and provisions of the act.

On the 5th June, 1872, the Postmaster-General made public advertisement, pursuant to the act, inviting proposals for the mail-service. The Pacific Mail Steamship Company was the successful bidder, and, under the authority of the general appropriation bill, the contract was awarded to it, and on the 29th August, 1872, the mail-contract was duly made and entered into between the United States of the one part and the Pacific Mail Steamship Company of the other part for the additional monthly mail-service between the port of San Francisco and the port of Hong-Kong, China, via Yokohama, in Japan, as authorized by the general appropriation act of June 1, 1872. Afterward, and on the 23d August, 1873, the United States Government made and entered into a new contract with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, with George H. Bradbury and Rufus Hatch as sureties, dated that day, for carrying an additional monthly mail for the ports above named, conditioned in all respects like the previous contract of August 29, 1872, for the said mail-service, at the rate of $500,000 per annum, being at the rate of $41,666 for each round voyage, in the currency of the United States, payable in quarterly payments, on the receipt at the Post-Office Department of satisfactory evidence of the performance of the round voyages embraced in said payments, to be paid by the Government of the United States to the company for carrying the mails according to the terms and provisions of the contract.

This contract is still in full force and effect; and the Pacific Mail Steamship Company has maintained the additional monthly mail-service therein provided for between those ports; and has carried the and is still carrying the mails, making, in connection with the previous contract between the United States Government and the company, a semi-monthly mail service.

Up to the present time the Pacific Mail Steamship Company has never received one dollar from the Government on account of this additional monthly service, provided for by the contract.

In order to perform the contract, as construed by the United States, the company was required, at great expense, to build a number of vessels, which were required to be of not less than 4,000 tons register each, to be built of iron, and with their engines and machinery to be wholly of American construction, and to be so constructed as to be readily adapted to the armed naval service of the United States in case of war, and, before acceptance, were to be inspected by the officers of the Government, who were to report to the Secretary of the Navy and Postmaster-General whether these conditions had been complied with. On the faith of such contract, and pursuant to its terms and provisions, and in performance of the same, the Pacific Mail Steamship Company has, since the said contract was made, constructed and fully equipped two steamships not excelled by any afloat in the world, namely, the City of Peking and the City of Tokio, at a cost, including outfit, supplies, and the expense of delivery at the port of San Francisco, where the contract requires the vessels to be delivered, of upwards of $2,800,000. Both these vessels have been duly inspected by the board of naval officers under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, who have duly certified that all the conditions of the law have been fully complied with in their construction, and on the 8th day of August, 1874, both the said steamships were duly accepted by the United States Government for the additional monthly mail-service between San Francisco, Japan, and China, under the contract before recited, and of which the company was officially notified by the Postmaster-General.

The steamship City of Peking is already at San Francisco, and the steamship City of Tokio, now en route for San Francisco from New York, is probably on the Pacific Ocean, and will shortly be in San Francisco.

To enable the company to carry out its contracts, it has commenced the construction of three other additional steamships of the class and character required by the terms of the said contract and the law of June 1, 1872, upon account of the construction of which the company has already expended and paid out the large sum of $375,000.

The total cost of construction and equipment of the three additional steamships now in process of construction, and their delivery at San Francisco, will not be less than the sum of $2,400,000; making a total expenditure, when they are so finished and delivered, of $5,200,000 on the part of the company in the construction of the peculiar class of vessels required by the law of 1872 and the terms of the contract, to enable the company to perform the same according to its terms.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You have stated that over $2,000,000 were extracted from the funds of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company by Mr. Stockwell and Mr. Irwin. Have you any knowledge of any more money being brought to this city for the purpose of procuring legislation on the subsidy measure than Mr. Irwin has testified to?—A. I have no knowledge that any money whatever was brought to this city. There are entries on the books charged to profit and loss, charged to supplies, charged to stores, and charged to steamships, but it is impossible for us to tell what became of the money. I cannot say whether it came to Washington, or went to London, or San Francisco. All that I know is that it has gone.

Q. What the committee desires to know is just how much money has been brought to Washington for the purpose of procuring legislation for the subsidy. Have you any knowledge of any other sums of money having been brought here other than has been testified to by Mr. Irwin?—A. I have not.

Q. Can you put us on the track of any other sum of money having been brought here for the purpose than what Mr. Irwin has testified to?—A. I cannot; I do not know that any money at all was brought here for that purpose.

Q. Do you know of the use of any money here for the purpose of procuring the subsidy in any other manner than has been testified to by Mr. Irwin?—A. I do not.

Q. Have you any knowledge of the use of it in the manner in which Mr. Irwin himself has testified?—A. No, sir; I have not. I do not know that one dollar was ever paid to any member of Congress, Senator, or other person for any legislation.

Q. On the subject of the use of money here by the Pacific Mail Steamship Company to procure the subsidy, have you any knowledge at all that you can communicate to us?—A. I positively deny that any money was ever used for the purpose by the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

Q. Have you any knowledge on the subject which you can communicate to us?—A. Not the least.

Q. When you say that the testimony of Mr. Irwin about a contract between him and the Pacific Mail Steamship Company in regard to the use of money here is absolutely false, do you mean to say that it is absolutely false that Mr. Stockwell made a contract with him in regard to the employment of money?—A. I am only speaking of the books, records, and papers of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company. I do not know Mr. Stockwell's private business.

Q. Do you mean to say that it is absolutely false that Mr. Stockwell made a contract with Mr. Irwin in regard to the expenditure of money here?—A. I mean to say that it is absolutely false that there is any record on any books or papers in the company's office that can be found relative to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company having any contract with Richard B. Irwin for that purpose.

Q. I was inquiring whether you mean to say that it is false that Mr. Stockwell had any such contract with him?—A. My reply is that I do not know Mr. Stockwell's private business.

Q. Do you mean to testify that that statement is false?—A. No, sir.

Q. I understood you to say that you had no knowledge about the contract between Mr. Stockwell himself and Mr. Irwin?—A. Only from the evidence, as submitted by Mr. Irwin, and the letters from Mr. Stockwell to Mr. Irwin on the subject.

Q. At the time that Mr. Irwin testified that this contract was made by Mr. Stockwell, was not Mr. Stockwell president of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. He was.

Q. Whether Mr. Stockwell had authority from the company to make this contract or not, have you any other knowledge except the absence of any record on the subject?—A. I have not.

Q. And therefore, when you say that it is absolutely false that the company made such a contract, do you mean to say anything more than that there is not a particle of a record in the company's office showing any such thing?—A. Not only that, but I mean to say it is already in evidence that it was a private contract between Stockwell and Irwin, and admitted to be so by Irwin, and admitted by other people. That is all the knowledge I have of it.

Q. Then, when you say that it is absolutely false, you mean to say that there is no record of it on the books of the company?—A. Yes.

Q. And that you think it is false from another fact, namely, that the contract was made in the name of Mr. Stockwell with Mr. Irwin?—A. Yes.

Q. Whether Mr. Stockwell is authorized in any manner by the company to make such a contract, otherwise than by record, you have no knowledge?—A. No, sir.

Q. When you say that there was no correspondence between the company and Mr. Irwin, you mean to say that you have not been able to find any?—A. There is no record of any letter written to him, and there are only those letters from him which I produced to the committee in New York.

Q. Have you any other knowledge in regard to the correspondence between the company and Irwin, except that you are unable to find any trace of it in the books of the company?—A. I have not. As the company's books all exist, and as there is no erasure in them, such correspondence would appear in them if there was any.

Q. Have you any fact to communicate to the committee in regard to a correspondence between the company and Mr. Irwin except the fact that you are unable to find any record or any copy of any such correspondence on the books of the company?—A. I have not.

Q. You have taken special pains to find it?—A. I have.

Q. You found none?—A. I found none.

Q. And that is what you mean by the statement that none exists?—A. Yes.

By Mr. NIBLACK:

Q. I do not understand you to deny here the fact that a large amount of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company's funds were spent here in Washington by Mr. Irwin?—A. That I neither deny nor affirm; I was not here. All that I know about it is from the evidence produced here.

Q. And what you desire to impress on us is that, if there was any such expenditure of money, it was without the authority of the company?—A. Yes, sir; it was entirely unauthorized. I think that Mr. Irwin stated that he gave Mr. Stockwell five minutes to pay him three-quarters of a million or else there would be trouble.

Q. After having heard the evidence of Mr. Irwin, and having examined the books, are you prepared to deny that the $750,000 in the checks of Mr. Stockwell were the funds of the company?—A. I should positively state, in that connection, from the examination of the books and cash accounts, that there was a vacuum of three-quarters of a million when Mr. Stockwell left the office that day. There is no doubt about that.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Whether that money came here or not, you do not know?—A. That I do not know.

Q. But you know that he took that money out of the funds of the company that day?—A. He took that money that day, and various sums before and afterward.

By Mr. NIBLACK:

Q. I understand that there was a compromise subsequently by which Mr. Stockwell returned that money?—A. There was not a compromise made as to that money. There was a settlement made by which Mr.

Stockwell turned over to the company four steamers for $800,000, and the notes of the Howe Sewing-Machine Company for $840,000.

Q. For what?—A. In place of money which Mr. Stockwell owed the company individually, and in place of securities which he had used for his own individual account—95,000 shares of Panama Railroad stock.

Q. Mr. Irwin stated in his testimony that Mr. Stockwell told him that Samuel A. Hatch was employed here at your request and suggestion. Have you any statement to make on that subject?—A. He was not employed at my suggestion, to my knowledge. Mr. Hatch is a gentleman from Kentucky and a thoroughbred, and has had an account with me since 1868. He was not in my office at that time that I know of. He had an account of perhaps 1,000 or 2,000 shares of stock. He is no relative of mine, and I had no more connection with his employment than I had with the employment of any member of this committee.

Mr. NIBLACK. A good deal of importance has been placed on the employment of Mr. Hatch, and Mr. Irwin stated that Mr. Stockwell told him that he was employed at your suggestion. Do you deny the fact?—A. I do.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Do you know where this other Hatch is?—A. I do not.

Q. When did you see him last?—A. About the 1st of December.

Q. Did you have anything to do personally with the final adjustment with Mr. Stockwell?—A. No, sir. It was done before I was elected director. I think it was made in February or March, 1873.

Q. It was done without your knowledge?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And without your consent?—A. Yes.

Q. You were a stockholder at the time?—A. Yes; but I did not know anything about it.

Q. Do you know whether Mr. Sage had any hand in it?—A. I do not. He was not a director at that time.

Q. Neither you nor Mr. Sage had any hand in it?—A. No, sir.

Q. And were not consulted about it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you receive any consideration for consenting to it?—A. No, sir. I was not a director at the time of the settlement. Let me explain what I suppose there is a reference to. When we took charge of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company we found a considerable of a wreck, and among the assets we found $840,000 of the notes of the Howe Sewing-Machine Company. This was settled with Mr. Stockwell for ten thousand shares of the Pacific Mail Steamship stock for which the company received $427,000. That is the statement exactly as to the settlement with Stockwell made in March, 1873, prior to the election of Mr. Sage and myself.

Q. You participated in this last settlement that you speak of?—A. Yes.

Q. And so did Mr. Sage?—A. Yes.

Q. Did either of you receive any consideration?—A. I did not receive a dollar in consideration.

Q. Directly or indirectly?—A. Not directly or indirectly.

Q. Did Mr. Sage?—A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Did you receive any credit on the company's books for it in any way?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did Mr. Sage?—A. No, sir. I never have received a dollar, directly or indirectly, from the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, in any way, as a rebate, as a commission, or in any trade, directly or indirectly, beyond my salary. I want to state that, and to have it put in the record, notwithstanding the statements of the New York Times and Tribune.

Q. Have you any knowledge in reference to Mr. Sage in that connection?—A. I have not. Not only that, but I state, in addition to it, that, so anxious was I to get the money to launch the Peking and Tokio, and to get them on the China line to carry the mails as per contract, so that the contract would not be forfeited, I urged on the board of directors to take a less sum of money than they did afterward receive for the ten thousand shares of stock. The settlement by which ten thousand shares of stock were taken for the $840,000 of notes of the Howe Sewing-Machine Company did not, directly or indirectly, refer to any of those abstractions whatever. They were not known then to the company. They were covered up in coal-accounts, steamer-accounts, supplies-accounts, and in various entries, which have all been made public, or will be at some future day. They could not have been settled at the time that the settlement was made in February or March, 1873, because the board of directors knew nothing whatever about them. The settlement by which the ten thousand shares of stock were received in place of the $840,000 notes of the Howe Sewing-Machine Company was late in 1873 or early in 1874, and the dispute, as I recollect it, was about repairs to two steamships, the Dakota and the Moses Taylor.

Q. In that settlement with Mr. Stockwell, were the $2,000,000 which you say he and Irwin abstracted included?—A. The amount is about $2,700,000. Of this, as I before stated, the company received back from A. B. Stockwell that $1,640,000, and that included those four ships.

Q. That would leave unaccounted for how much?—A. Some $1,100,000 or $1,200,000.

Q. Of that, how much came to Washington?—A. I do not know that any of it came to Washington.

Q. Then, when you say that Mr. Stockwell and Mr. Irwin abstracted $2,000,000, you include the various transactions of Mr. Stockwell?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. His transactions in the stock-market as well as the money which it is claimed came here?—A. Yes.

Q. Altogether you make the sum over $2,000,000?—A. Yes; the books show that.

Q. Do you think that Mr. Irwin had anything to do with that abstraction which was used in the stock-market in New York?—A. I do not know anything about it, except what Mr. Irwin admits, when he says that he gave Mr. Stockwell five minutes to pay him three-quarters of a million.

Q. Have you any knowledge of Mr. Irwin being connected with stock-jobbing operations?—A. No, sir.

Q. Whatever of the funds of the company was used by Mr. Stockwell in that connection, have you any knowledge that Mr. Irwin had anything to do with it?—A. I have not. I want to call attention to the four $100,000 checks. Mr. Irwin claims that these were the company's checks. I have the check-books of the company covering all that period, and I find that there are not four $100,000 checks drawn to Mr. Irwin, Mr. Stockwell, or anybody else. There is no trace of them at all on those books, or on any other books.

Q. Is there a trace of any checks drawn to the order of Mr. Irwin, which he has not testified about?—A. There are several, dating back a year previous.

Q. Do you find any traces of checks to the order of Mr. Irwin, covering this period, to which he has not testified?—A. I do not know that I do; but what I want to call attention to is, that he swore positively that he had four $100,000 checks of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, in the letter of March 4.

Q. You mean to say that there is no trace of those checks on the books of the company?—A. There is not, either on the stubs or the books.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 15, 1875.

AUGUSTUS H. WHITING sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. State your residence and occupation.—Answer. I reside at Weedsport, N. Y.; I am a dealer in real estate and securities.

Q. Where were you in the spring and summer of 1872?—A. I came from Arizona in the winter of 1871, arriving at New York late in the month of January, 1872. During the remainder of that spring and until the beginning of the summer I was at Washington.

Q. What was your business in Washington?—A. I came here under employment by Mr. R. B. Irwin.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. Did you know the purpose for which Mr. Irwin was here? What did Mr. Irwin employ you to do?—A. To promote the passage of the bill for the subsidy to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, in any way that I could properly and legitimately.

Q. How long were you engaged in that employment under Mr. Irwin?—A. I took employment late in the month of January, and was engaged at it until late in the month of May.

Q. I suppose that you received some compensation for it?—A. I did.

Q. How much?—A. The compensation agreed upon between Mr. Irwin and myself, at my office in New York, the day after my arrival from Arizona, was $10,000 a year, extending over the term of the subsidy, contingent upon the passage of the subsidy.

Q. What were you to do for that ten thousand a year?—I was to hold myself subject to Mr. Irwin's directions, and to do whatever I could to promote the success of the measure.

Q. Are you now receiving that ten thousand a year?—A. No, sir; at a subsequent interview with Mr. Irwin, we made an arrangement by which that $10,000 a year was capitalized and reduced on a cash basis. It was thus reduced to $56,500.

Q. That was all that you received in any form or manner from Mr. Irwin?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you receive any sum from anybody else in relation to the subsidy?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. How was this $56,500 paid to you?—A. Mr. Irwin gave me his check for it.

Q. On what bank?—A. I think the American Exchange National Bank.

Q. Do you recollect whether that check was payable to your order?—A. It was payable to my order.

Q. Up to what time did you remain in Washington?—A. I was obliged to remain here, on account of the sickness of my child, until some time after Congress had adjourned that summer. I did not leave here until late in June.

Q. State directly the character of your services; what did you do for this money?—A. I did whatever I could by way of exerting my influence, (such little as I had,) and talking with everybody I met, setting forth the object of the bill and the advantages of passing it. I did this, as far as I was able, and on any and all occasions.

Q. In the direct effort to procure the passage of the subsidy, what did you do?—A. I cannot really say that I did anything more than that—talking with everybody that I knew.

Q. I do not mean what you did by talking to men on the street, but to members of Congress in either House.—A. I even talked to people on the street when opportunity offered.

Q. You do not think that that was worth a great deal to the company. We want to know what you did to help to procure the passage of the subsidy. Did you talk with members of the House and Senate, and, if so, with how many?—A. I do not recollect particularly now having spoken with any member of the House. I do recollect having spoken with a member of the Senate.

Q. Then your work, so far as it directly applied to either House, was in the Senate and not in the House of Representatives?—A. My work, as I stated before, was to do anything I could and to speak favorably of the project under all circumstances, and particularly to do what Mr. Irwin requested or directed me to do.

Q. Did he request you to work in the House of Representatives?—A. He requested me, if I saw any opportunity to put in a word that would be of advantage, to do so.

Q. What did you do or whom did you see in the House?—A. I do not recollect seeing any member of the House.

Q. What you did directly was done in the Senate and not in the House, so far as it concerned members of Congress?—A. Yes, sir; so far as I remember now.

Q. What were you asked by Mr. Irwin to do in the Senate?—A. Mr. Irwin told me (to come to the point) that he thought a Senator who he desired should be favorably disposed toward the measure was feeling perhaps a little cross to him personally, and perhaps toward some members of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

Q. Mention his name.—A. It was Senator Cole. Mr. Irwin said that he was very desirous of removing that prejudice from Mr. Cole's mind, if there was any prejudice on it, and that he was very desirous that Mr. Cole should support the measure heartily and wholly. He asked me to see him, and I did so. I found that Mr. Cole, on my first interview with him, had no prejudice to be removed, and that he was very heartily in favor of the measure; that he proposed to support it, and had always supported it; that his constituents demanded it of him; that it was a Pacific-coast measure, and that he could not do otherwise than support it, as he expressed himself.

Q. And so that work was quickly done?—A. That work was quickly done.

Q. Were you asked to see any other Senator in particular?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you recollect any other Senator to whom you addressed yourself on the subject?—A. I do not recollect any other.

Q. Then you received $56,500 for what you have now stated, so far as any direct work in the House or the Senate was concerned?—A. I received the $56,500 in pursuance of a contract made between Mr. Irwin and myself. It was for my time spent here, not particularly for the work which I could do or did do, because I never represented that I could do any particular amount of work. I told Mr. Irwin that I was engaged in quite an extensive business of my own, the business of my house approximating at times to a million of dollars; that I had never failed to make for myself out of that business about $10,000 a year, and that I could not afford to come on here, and undergo the expense of bringing my family here, (as I would not separate myself from my family,) and to give my whole time to this matter, without being paid for it.

Q. The business that you were engaged in at the time was in Arizona?—A. In Arizona, San Francisco, and New York. I had my office at New York, where I was purchasing and forwarding goods to the house of Hooper, Whiting & Co.

Q. Your own headquarters were in New York?—A. Yes, sir; at that time.

Q. And you came here from New York, not from Arizona?—A. I came here from New York. I came from Arizona to New York on the day when I met Mr. Irwin there.

Q. Mr. Irwin did not summon you on here from Arizona?—A. No, sir.

Q. What led Mr. Irwin to believe that your influence with Senator Cole would be more powerful than that of anybody else?—A. That I am unable to tell you. I surmise, however, that it was from the fact that we had been friends, and that Mr. Cole had been my counsel and adviser in various matters connected with my business. I had known Mr. Cole's family somewhat intimately, but had not known himself very intimately. I had been in the habit of calling at his house and visiting his family.

Q. Is there any connection between you and Mr. Cole?—A. There is no connection. Mr. Cole's wife and my uncle's wife were sisters, if you can figure any connection in that way. There is no tie of consanguinity whatever between us. That is the only connection between us.

Q. Did you let Senator Cole know that you had so large a pecuniary interest in the passage of that subsidy?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you let him know that you were hired to secure his influence?—A. I did not.

Q. You never told him what amount you were to receive?—A. Never.

Q. You never told him subsequently what you had received?—A. Never.

Q. You led him to believe that you also were speaking from a Pacific coast point of view, did you?—A. I did.

Q. Did you employ anybody under you, in consideration of this money that was to be paid to you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you do anything with any part of the money under Mr. Irwin's direction?—A. No, sir; I kept it myself, and used it for my own exclusive purposes.

Q. The entire amount?—A. The entire amount.

Q. You were not directed by Mr. Irwin to share any part of it with anybody?—A. None whatever.

Q. And you did not share any part of it with anybody?—A. I did not.

Q. I call your attention to a check which appears to have been signed by you.

It is as follows:

[No. 71.]

NEW YORK, November 11, 1872.

[Revenue-stamp marked A. H. W., 11, 11, '72.]

Pay to the order of Hon. Cornelius Cole eighteen thousand and twenty-three and $\frac{20}{100}$ dollars.

A. H. WHITING.

\$18,023 $\frac{20}{100}$.

(Across the face of the check:)

Stamped. Accepted November 13, 1872. Payable at the National Park Bank.

(Signed)

EUGENE KELLY & CO.,
Per H. G. BEALES.

(Indorsed :)

C. COLE.

Deposit:

GEO. D. KRUMBHAAL, Treasurer.

(Stamped.) Pay to the order of Chemical National Bank, New York, for collection for the Girard National Bank of Philadelphia.

(Signed)

J. RAMSET,
Cashier.

Be good enough to state the facts about it, so that any misapprehension that might arise in regard to it may be cleared up.—A. I will do so very cheerfully. At that time, November 9th, 10th, 11th, and 12th, I was confined at home by sickness. I owed a debt in Philadelphia, and was unable to be there personally to pay it, on account of my sickness. I sent this check to Senator Cole, and asked him to pay that debt for me. It was my own personal private debt. He being at Philadelphia at the time, turned over the check to this party to whom I owed the money, indorsed it, and took the receipt in my name and sent it to me.

Q. I see here an additional indorsement to the Chemical National Bank by the Girard National Bank of Philadelphia.—A. Very likely. I am unable to say how that was. It was a debt that I owed in Philadelphia.

Q. You state distinctly that this was altogether a private transaction?—A. Yes, sir; entirely personal.

Q. In which Mr. Cole had no interest whatever?—A. None whatever.

Q. From what sort of a transaction did this liability arise?—A. From a debt which I had agreed to pay at that time in Philadelphia.

Q. A debt of your own or of somebody else?—A. A debt of my own.

Q. I do not wish to enter into unnecessary particulars, but I would like you to state how you became liable for that debt, whether it was a transaction in real estate, a transaction in personal property, or some other transaction.—A. It might be called a transaction in stock.

Q. To whom did you owe the money?—A. To Mr. Krumbhaal. If you have the check itself, it will verify my statement. Mr. Krumbhaal is the treasurer of the California Construction Company.

Q. And this debt was from an operation in stock?—A. It was for a stock-subscription.

Q. You had subscribed to some stock?—A. I had.

Q. And this was in payment of that subscription?—A. Yes.

Q. And you alone were interested in that subscription?—A. Yes.

Q. You did not subscribe to the stock, or pay this money in a representative capacity, or as an agent for anybody?—A. No, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What occasion was there for you to send this check to Mr. Cole in Philadelphia and have him indorse it to Mr. Krumbhaal; why did you not send it to Mr. Krumbhaal direct?—A. Because I wanted a receipt taken from Mr. Krumbhaal.

Q. Have you got his receipt?—A. I have, but not with me.

Q. Would not the check itself indorsed by him be a receipt to you when it came back?—A. It might have been better to send it in that way.

Q. Does anything occur to you now that was gained by sending it through Mr. Cole, who happened to be in Philadelphia?—A. The object in sending it to him was that he should take a receipt.

Q. Does anything occur to you now to show that there would be any advantage in that process?—A. No, sir; not particularly.

Q. Is Mr. Krumbbaal in Philadelphia now?—A. I presume he is.

Q. What was the business of this California Construction Company; what was it to construct?—A. It was to construct a railroad.

Q. Where?—A. From Texas through to California.

Q. You say that Mr. Irwin sought you out the very next day after you got to New York from Arizona?—A. My impression now is that I met Mr. Irwin at some hotel-office, or on the street, the day of my arrival, and that he asked my address.

Q. How soon after your arrival in New York did you make this contract with him?—A. The very next day.

Q. A contract which covers ten years of service and $10,000 a year?—A. Yes, that was the original contract.

Q. And you made it the day after you got to New York?—A. Yes.

Q. And the service you were to perform was to do what you could here to procure a subsidy?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you and he, when the contract was made, contemplate that you would be ten years in getting the subsidy?—A. I presume not.

Q. How long did you contemplate being at work getting the subsidy?—A. I do not know that I had any settled conviction on the subject.

Q. Then how came you to fix ten years as the time?—A. I presume that that arose from the fact that the subsidy was to extend over ten years, and that my fee, or stipend, or salary, was to be a portion of that subsidy.

Q. Then it was measured not by the time that you were expected to spend here, but by the time that the company was to receive the subsidy?—A. I cannot say that particularly.

Q. I suppose you know Mr. Krumbhaal very well?—A. Yes, sir; I have a business acquaintance with him.

Q. What is his business?—A. He is treasurer of that construction company.

Q. What was he brought up to?—A. I do not know.

Q. What business does he follow in Philadelphia; is he a lawyer there?—A. I do not know.

Q. As to the arrangement with Mr. Irwin, it was for ten years' service at $10,000 a year, graduated by the time the subsidy was to exist, and not by the time that you were expected to be employed in such service?—A. I did not say that.

Q. Tell us how it was.—A. I do not wish to be so understood exactly.

Q. Let me see if I understand you: do I understand you to say that it was a contract for ten years?—A. It was a contract for the payment of $10,000 a year during ten years.

Q. It was not a contract for a service that was to extend over ten years?—A. The contract, so far as the service was concerned, was that I should hold myself in readiness to perform such service as I was directed by Mr. Irwin.

Q. I understood you to say that the reason why you asked so much was, that your own services were worth $10,000 a year, but if you were only to spend such time as was needed to procure the subsidy here, you were at liberty to dispose of the other nine years and ten months, were you not?—A. I presume so.

Q. You would have nine years and ten months to spare?—A. I suppose so.

Q. Give us the reason why you put such a value on your services for the period of two months? Was there any reason why you should charge $10,000 a year for ten years?—A. I believe that gentlemen, in making contracts, generally get what they suppose their services are worth, if they can.

Q. Did you suppose that your services for two months were worth $100,000, if they were worth only $10,000 a year in your own business? It would take ten years, in your own business, according to that estimate, for you to get $100,000?—A. Yes.

Q. Why did you demand of Mr. Irwin, and why did Mr. Irwin agree to pay you, $100,000 for two months' services?—A. I did not say that it was for two months' services.

Q. It was for the time that the subsidy was pending, was it not? It was for what you could do during that time?—A. It was for what I could do in promotion of the subsidy.

Q. Can you think, in addition to your answer to Mr. Kasson, of any other one thing that you did except what you have testified to?—A. I came here and spent my time and reported to Mr. Irwin, from time to time, for orders.

Q. I ask you if you can think of any other one thing that you did?—A. I do not recollect any other thing at present.

Q. Then, for two months' services, and for going once to see Mr. Cole, and bringing back word to Mr. Irwin that Mr. Cole was all right before you went there, you and Mr. Irwin capitalized the $100,000?—A. That was in settlement of the contract.

Q. How came you and he to settle it on that grand sum of $56,500 if, in point of fact, you had only served for two months, and if, in point of fact, you had only done this one thing; that is, gone and seen Mr. Cole once, and found that there was no need of your going to him at all?—A. I cannot give you any reason for it, except that Mr. Irwin found himself bound, as an honorable gentleman, to carry out the contract that he had made.

Q. The settlement at $56,500 was not carrying out the contract, but was making another one after the work was all done.—A. I do not know whether it was after the work was all done.

Q. Did you set that value on the services you rendered?—A. I think that the capitalization took place before the matter was over.

Q. Before you got through the work?—A. I think so.

Q. I thought you said it was after it was all over?—A. I do not think I so stated; I am not positive on that point, but my recollection is that it was before the work was got through.

Q. How long after you saw Mr. Irwin in New York was it before you saw Mr. Cole?—A. I went to Weedsport and got my family, and came on here, occupying perhaps a space of four or five or six days' time. I could not have seen Mr. Cole before I arrived here.

Q. How long was it after you made the contract before you saw Mr. Cole?—A. It was within four or five or six days' time.

Q. Ten days would cover it?—A. Very likely.

Q. Then in ten days' time you found the work done, and after that you made this capitalization, did you?—A. Yes, subsequently to that time.

Q. You reported to Mr. Irwin that the purpose of your employmen was accomplished successfully, and that there was no need of his having employed you at all?—A. I did not say that.

Q. Then you and he settled for $56,500?—A. Yes.

Q. If the object of employing you was to influence Mr. Cole favorably for the subsidy, that was a thing which there was no necessity for doing, because you say that Mr. Cole was already on the side of the subsidy.—A. That was my understanding.

Q. Did Mr. Irwin, when he entered into this contract with you, say that he had any reason to believe that Mr. Cole was on one side or the other?—A. I do not know that he said that he had any reason to believe so.

Q. Did he say that he did not know how Mr. Cole was?—A. I do not know that he did, but he gave me to understand from the conversation that he thought that Mr. Cole was feeling rather cross toward him.

Q. Did he say that he did not know it, or that he only thought so?—A. I think he said he thought so.

Q. And you came right here to Washington to see Mr. Cole as soon as you could get your family to come?—A. Yes.

Q. And Mr. Cole told you that he was always friendly to the thing, and that it was a Pacific coast measure?—A. Yes.

Q. That his constituents demanded it of him?—A. Yes.

Q. And that he was going into it heartily?—A. That he should support the measure.

Q. I understood you to say that he would support it heartily?—A. I think he said something to that effect.

Q. You found him as well disposed toward the measure as you could desire, did you?—A. I think I may say that.

Q. And found him as free to communicate that disposition as you could desire?—A. I think I may say that.

Q. Then, if he was free to communicate it to you, he would have been just as free to communicate it to Mr. Irwin before Mr. Irwin hunted you up in New York. Do you know any reason why he would not have been?—A. I know of no reason why.

Q. Then if, instead of making a contract for $100,000 with you, Mr. Irwin had gone to Senator Cole himself, you know of no reason why Senator Cole would not have told him that he was friendly to the measure?—A. I do not know of any reason why.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. What was the amount of the check given to you by Mr. Irwin?—A. Fifty-six thousand five hundred dollars.

Q. Did he never give you a check for any larger sum?—A. No, sir.

Q. And you never received from him, or from Mr. Stockwell, or from anybody, any other sum than that $56,500?—A. I received no other sum.

Q. Mr. Irwin stated before the committee a charge against you of $65,000.—A. I saw that statement, and I have no doubt that Mr. Irwin made a mistake in it, or confounded me in some way with some other payment, because he did not pay me any other sum than $56,500.

Q. He never made any payment to you except at that one time?—A. No, sir.

Q. Previously he had given you no money?—A. No, sir.

Q. And subsequently he gave you no money, or check, or voucher for money?—A. No, sir. Mr. Irwin evidently made a mistake about it.

Q. In his account with the Bank of California, he has the entry:

"Returned by Whiting, $40,000." Did you ever return any money to him?—A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. You never returned or gave him a balance of $40,000, or any other money?—A. I do not know how he may have considered it. My understanding was that when he handed me a check for $56,500, it was in full settlement; but whether he may have had the balance of the original agreement for the $100,000, and called it money returned by me, I am unable to say. So far as I am concerned, he paid me $56,500, and no other sum.

Q. Your memory is perfectly clear about that?—A. I should not be apt to forget it. I have nothing to conceal in the matter, and I have no disposition to claim loss of memory.

Q. I am free to say that I see no evidence that you have any such disposition. You are perfectly clear that you never returned the sum of $40,000, or any other sum, to Mr. Irwin?—A. I am.

Q. And that you never received any other sum from him than this $56,500?—A. I received no other sum.

Q. And that you never returned any sum to him?—A. I never returned any sum to him.

Q. Nor any paper on which he would procure it?—A. No, sir.

Q. And this amount you drew at New York in money?—A. No, sir; I indorsed the check and passed it over to the cashier, and took a certificate of deposit for it.

Q. And that certificate of deposit you took away with you?—A. I took it away with me for some time. On my return to New York I deposited it with my banker.

Q. In the mean time you made no use of the certificate of deposit?—A. None whatever.

Q. And your banker was Eugene Kelly & Co.?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. NIBLACK:

Q. You say that you have nothing to conceal about this matter, and so far you seem to have testified very frankly; but we have been induced to believe, by what we have seen in the newspapers and heard otherwise, that you have been reluctant to come before the committee to testify; and that you have kept out of the way of the service of the subpoena. I simply want to know what explanation you have to make of that, if you had nothing to conceal.—A. I have simply to say in regard to that matter, and I say it with very much chagrin on my part, that I have made a mistake. But greater men than I have made mistakes before. My first absence from home was not to avoid the service of the subpoena; but I went to the oil regions of Pennsylvania, where I had legitimate business. When I came out, and saw in the newspapers that my name was connected with this matter, I was somewhat appalled by it. Not being a lawyer, I did not know how far I might be involved, and I preferred to take a little time to consider it and reflect upon it. Another reason that deterred me from coming here was the fact that I saw that Mr. Irwin had stated that I had received $100,000, which was an error on his part, and one which I supposed would be obvious to him when he came to reflect upon it, and that he would embrace the first opportunity to go before the committee and correct it, and I preferred that it should be so corrected in order to avoid any conflict. These are the two reasons for my stepping over to Canada, where I was only five or six days.

Q. Would it not have been better for you to come and make the explanation yourself?—A. It is very obvious now that it would have been better. As I said before, I made a mistake which I am very sorry for.

Mr. NIBLACK. I think that your keeping out of the way has been a serious injustice to Mr. Cole, and I spoke of it more on that account.

The WITNESS. I am very sorry for it, indeed.

Mr. NIBLACK. It was popularly supposed that that was the matter which you desired most to conceal.

The WITNESS. I am very sorry for it, indeed; but it is too late now. I did it under a mistaken impression. I wish to say, however, that I came voluntarily.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. How did you get the summons at last?—A. I received no legal summons except at my hotel here.

Q. How did you receive the invitation from this committee?—A. I received a telegram at Hamilton, Canada, to which I very promptly responded that I would come as soon as possible.

Q. Do you know how the committee succeeded in getting that notice to you?—A. No, sir; I have no idea.

Q. Did you get a telegram from somebody else at the same time?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you not know that a message from the committee followed another message to you at Hamilton?—A. A telegram from my wife came to me there.

Q. And just about that time the telegram from this committee followed it?—A. I telegraphed to my wife after my arrival there. I arrived at Hamilton, Canada, I think, during Wednesday night, and perhaps on Thursday I telegraphed to my wife that I was there and well, and I wrote to her. Some time during Sunday this telegraphic summons was delivered to me. Of course I knew it was not a legal subpoena, but I had made up my mind to come.

Q. Did you not get the telegram from your wife on Sunday?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. What time did you come out of the oil-regions?—A. I left the oil-regions for Hamilton, and arrived at Hamilton during Wednesday night.

Q. When you made this contract with Mr. Irwin in New York, which covered a compensation of $10,000 a year for ten years, did you sever your connection with your business-house?—A. I did.

Q. And did not return to that employment?—A. I did not.

Q. You have not been in that employment since?—A. I have not.

Mr. Kasson read to the witness extracts from the testimony of Mr. Dumont Clarke, assistant cashier of the American National Bank, and asked the witness whether, refreshing his memory by that statement, he could speak any differently as to the fact, whether he brought a $100,000 check to the American Exchange Bank.

The WITNESS. I cannot. My impression, which amounts to a conviction, was that the check which Mr. Irwin handed me was for $56,500, and which I handed directly over to the cashier of the American Exchange Bank after indorsing it.

Q. You say that the check to you was for that precise sum of $56,500?—A. Yes, sir; I have no doubt of that.

Q. Did any one accompany you to the bank?—A. Mr. Irwin was there with me, and there was another gentleman there, but I did not know him; he did not go with me.

Q. Where was the check itself given to you by Mr. Irwin—in that bank or somewhere else?—A. In that bank.

Q. That was the first time that you saw the check?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now is it not possible that Mr. Irwin filled out a check for $100,000 and told the officers of the bank to issue this certificate of deposit to you for this $56,500, and that something else was done with the rest of the money?—A. It is certainly very improbable that a check should pass through my hands and I not know the amount of it. Of course, almost anything is possible; but I have been quite in the habit of handling checks, some of them for large amounts, and it certainly is not probable that I would have indorsed a check without knowing the amount it covered.

Q. Do you recollect whether Mr. Irwin had other checks at the time?—A. I believe he had.

Q. He simply passed this check into your hands before it went to the officers of the bank?—A. I think he passed it into my hands, and I turned it over and indorsed it and passed it to the cashier, asking him to give me a certificate of deposit. He asked me to give him my signature so that he could identify the certificate of deposit when returned, which I did.

Q. That was the only possession of the check which you had—passing it in this way to the bank officers?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you recollect the sum of any of the other checks that Mr. Irwin had at that time?—A. I do not; I did not see them.

Q. I would like to refresh your recollection by showing you the account of Mr. Irwin with the American Exchange National Bank, which is before this committee, and in which you see, [exhibiting it to witness,] under date of May 27, no entry made of $56,500, but you do observe two different entries of $100,000 each, which were paid on that day.

The WITNESS. I am quite unable to account for it. I assure you I have stated the exact facts, according to the best of my knowledge.

Q. And you are absolutely certain, if the check was for a larger sum, that you yourself drew no part of it then, or subsequently, beyond the $56,500?—A. I am very certain of that. The only money, or representative of money, that I carried away with me from the bank was this certificate of deposit for $56,500.

Q. Did you go to San Francisco soon after that time?—A. No, sir.

Q. You were not in San Francisco in the latter part of that year?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. NIBLACK:

Q. Did you have any co-operation with Mr. King, the late postmaster of the House, in reference to the subsidy matter?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you know that he was employed in the same business with you?—A. No, sir, I did not. I have not the pleasure of his acquaintance at all.

Mr. NIBLACK. I was informed that you did know him, and that you were employed specially to co-operate with him.

The WITNESS. I do not know him; I would not recognize him if I saw him.

Mr. J. B. STORM again came before the committee in reference to the testimony of Moses Dillon, and said:

I desire to state now what I said in 1872, that if, by Mr. Dillon's putting my initials on the memorandum that he spoke of, they were intended to represent my name, he was entirely incorrect, because I never had a thousand-dollar bill in my life, and I never had that amount changed in the Sergeant-at-Arms' office. I have had small bills changed there, perhaps $100 bills, if I were paid such in my monthly pay, but I never had a $1,000 bill; and I can say here, as I stated before the committee in 1872, that not one dollar was ever paid for my vote or influence on any measure pending in Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. Perhaps you can say whether you had ever any money changed at the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms except what came from your salary?

Mr. STORM. Never, except what came to me from my monthly pay. That I had frequently changed there. Mr. Kerr, who was then a member of this committee, communicated to me the fact that my initials were on Mr. Dillon's list, and I came immediately before the committee and testified. I met Mr. Dillon probably an hour afterward, and I said to him, "Your statement is an outrage on a man who has never had a thousand-dollar bill in his life, and who never has received anything for his vote on any question, and specially on a man who opposed this subsidy measure all the way through." Mr. Dillon frankly stated that he found he had made a mistake. He said to me, "There are some gentlemen about whom I find I have made a mistake, and I am going to the committee and ask them to strike out my testimony." He seemed very much annoyed at the fact having got out. I said to him, "You cannot expect to go before an investigating committee and give testimony reflecting upon a member of the House and expect the matter to be kept quiet. My friends on the committee have informed me that you made that statement." He then said that he would go before the committee and ask to strike out his statement, because it was unreliable as to two or three gentlemen.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Dillon himself, in his recent testimony, swears that he is eminently deficient in the memory of persons and names, so that he had continually to ask members of the House, when they came in, from time to time, for their names, showing that he might very well have mistaken one person for another.

Mr. NIBLACK. Yes, and he states that he did not know that the initials J. B. S. referred to Mr. Storm. He did not remember whether he had any such initials, but he was reminded by Mr. Burchard that he had so stated before the committee two years ago.

WASHINGTON, February 18, 1875.

GEORGE D. KRUMBHAAR sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Please state your residence and occupation.—Answer. I reside at 2131 Walnut street, Philadelphia. I am treasurer of the California and Texas Railroad Construction Company.

Q. What is that?—A. It is a company chartered by the State of Pennsylvania for the construction and equipment of railways.

Q. In any particular place?—A. No particular place.

Q. For the construction and equipment of railways all over the world?—A. All over the United States.

Q. Had it, in 1872, any business in any particular locality; had it commenced its legitimate business anywhere?—A. Yes, sir; it was engaged in constructing the Texas and Pacific Railway.

Q. When was it organized?—A. I do not remember exactly; I think in 1871.

Q. Did you receive, in 1872, a check indorsed over to you by Mr. Cornelius Cole?—A. I did, sir.

Q. What was the sum?—A. I do not remember exactly; it was somewhere about $18,000.

Q. Did you ever receive more than one check from Mr. Cole?—A. I think not, sir.

[The check is already in evidence. It is dated New York, November 11, 1872, and reads:

“Pay to the order of Hon. Cornelius Cole, $18,203.21.

(Signed)

“A. H. WHITING.”]

Q. Tell us all about that.—A. Mr. Whiting subscribed to our company, and I called upon him for a payment on account of his subscription, and it was sent to me through Mr. Cole. Mr. Whiting, I suppose, could not come himself, and in sending this amount he drew the check to the order of Mr. Cole, who acted simply as his agent and handed it to me. Mr. Whiting was credited with the amount, and Mr. Cole received a receipt for the amount for Mr. Whiting. Mr. Cole was not a subscriber to our company. That is all I remember about it.

Q. Was there stock issued to Mr. Whiting?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does it stand in Mr. Whiting's name to-day?—A. I think he placed some shares with Mr. Cole to sell to some friends of his on the Pacific coast. That was some time during last year, and subsequent to that Mr. Whiting said to me that he expected to have those shares retransferred to himself, so I suppose the sale was not made.

Q. There was some stock transferred to Mr. Cole for sale on the Pacific coast?—A. Yes, sir; I simply heard that incidentally.

Q. Was it transferred to Mr. Cole on your books?—A. I think it was.

Q. How much?—A. I think 4,000 shares.

Q. What is the par value of 4,000 shares?—A. $200,000.

Q. It was transferred at what time?—A. It was during last year, 1874; I cannot remember the date.

Q. Has it been retransferred?—A. It has not.

Q. You heard Mr. Whiting make that statement in reference to it?—A. Yes, sir; it was simply mentioned in the office that that was the object of the transfer, and afterward—I do not know whether I asked him or whether he volunteered the statement—he said that he expected to have it transferred back.

Q. How many shares did Mr. Whiting have?—A. I think about $40,000—800 shares.

Q. That is the par value of how many shares?—A. At $50 a share, that would be 800 shares.

Q. Two hundred thousand dollars of stock was transferred besides that to him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And there still stands in his name the amount you have mentioned?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that paid for by Mr. Whiting?—A. It was.

Q. When?—A. It was not entirely paid for; there is an amount due upon it still.

Q. It was paid in installments?—A. Called in installments. Mr. Cole has never spoken to me about the subscription at all, nor about the transaction. It was Mr. Whiting who simply mentioned that fact.

Q. All you know about it is what appears on your books?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did Mr. Cole have any dealings with you at all?—A. None whatever.

Q. He brought this check to you?—A. He brought this check to me simply as an agent for Mr. Whiting. Mr. Whiting drew the check to his order, probably through courtesy, or for safety, and he handed it over to me; and he got an official receipt from me, for Mr. Whiting, for the amount.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. When was the original subscription for the stock made by Mr. Whiting?—A. I cannot give the date. I think the subscriptions were opened in October, 1871; and I think he was one of the early subscribers.

Q. Was there anything in the transaction or transactions that led you to believe that Mr. Cole was personally interested in that subscription?—A. Not at all; on the contrary, I should think he was not.

Q. All you know touching the object of the transfer to him was the statement made by Mr. Whiting that he was transferring those shares to put them on sale on the Pacific coast through Mr. Cole?—A. Yes, sir; he wanted to place them among his friends and the friends of the enterprise, on the Pacific coast.

Q. That left how many shares in Mr. Whiting's name?—A. $40,000; that would be 800 shares left after the transfer was made.

Q. And the whole 4,800 shares were originally subscribed by Mr. Whiting about October, 1871, you think?—A. Subsequent to that; I cannot give the date, but it was not very long after that; it was about the commencement of the subscriptions; it was all subscribed in one subscription. I never saw Mr. Cole in relation to it except on that one occasion, when he said he had this payment to make for Mr. Whiting.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 23, 1875.

PAUL STEVENS sworn and examined.

The CHAIRMAN. In looking over the examination of Mr. King, last Congress, I find your name mentioned in this question put to King: "Are you aware of the fact that it was commonly rumored and believed that both you and Mr. Stevens, on the floor of the House, were in the service of that company for money?" This leads the committee to call you. State your business.

The WITNESS. I am assistant librarian, in charge of the Hall library of the House of Representatives.

Q. Were you in that position in the Forty-second Congress, during the pendency of the subsidy legislation?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you know Mr. Irwin then?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you know any of the agents of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you receive any money from anybody in connection with any service in regard to the subsidy?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you render any service to the company, or engage to render any?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you have any money, in any way, in connection with the subsidy?—A. Not a dollar.

Q. Did you have anything to do with Mr. Schumaker?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you aid him?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or Mr. King?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or Mr. Irwin?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or Mr. Abert?—A. No, sir; I did not know the man.

Q. You had nothing whatever to do with the matter?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. BURCHARD:

Q. Do you know of any money being paid, directly or indirectly, to any member of either House of Congress in connection with the subsidy?—A. No, sir; I do not.

The following correspondence was presented and ordered to be printed in the proceedings of the committee:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 13, 1875.

MY DEAR SIR: It has been stated by Mr. Richard B. Irwin, before the Committee on Ways and Means, that during the winter and spring of 1871-'72, I worked at Washington in aid of the Pacific Mail act, and in particular that I talked with you in favor of it.

Will you be kind enough to inform me whether or not that statement is correct?

Very truly yours,

JOHN ROACH.

Hon. ALEXANDER RAMSEY,
United States Senator.

I would not know Mr. Roach if I saw him, and have no recollection of ever having had any conversation with him on any subject, the Pacific Mail bill or any other.

ALEX. RAMSEY.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 13, 1875.

MY DEAR SIR: It has been stated by Mr. Richard B. Irwin, before the Committee on Ways and Means, that during the winter and spring of 1871-'72, I worked at Washington in aid of the Pacific Mail act, and, in particular, that I talked with you in favor of it. Will you be kind enough to inform whether or not that statement is correct?

Very truly yours,

JOHN ROACH.

Hon. SAMUEL SHELLABARGER.

I never had any conversation with Mr. Roach about the Pacific Mail subsidy that I can recollect, and am very certain he never named that subject to me. I did hear him upon the subject of what we should do in aid of our foreign commerce, and from all I know of his views on that subject, as derived from that interview, I supposed he was opposed to that bill, as I was.

S. SHELLABARGER.

NEW YORK, February 15, 1875.

SIR: I desire to state to the committee that Mr. Irwin is mistaken in his testimony that I worked for the subsidy under an understanding with Mr. Stockwell that I should build ships for the company.

The only interest I then took was in the general subject of commerce and ship-building; mainly in connection with the proposed bill of Secretary Boutwell for making an allowance from the Treasury of the United States of a certain sum per ton for new ships built.

I never advocated, nor gave any particular attention to the Pacific Mail matter.

I had no understanding with Mr. Stockwell that I should build any ships if the bill passed, and had no conversation with Mr. Stockwell, or any of his agents, on the subject of building ships for service under the new contract until about June, 1872, after the bill had become a law, and then only as their agent. Captain Baby said, after they had tried other ship-builders, and found none willing to assume the responsibility of building such large ships. Therefore they came to me as a necessity.

I do not remember seeing Mr. Shellabarger but once, and then only upon the general subject of ship-building, concerning which I wrote him a letter which was printed at the time.

I do not remember ever speaking to Senator Ramsey on any subject. I never spoke to either of these gentlemen in aid of the Pacific Mail contract, as the accompanying letters will show.

I should be very glad to have this letter taken as part of my testimony, or to be recalled as a witness, and to have Messrs. Ramsey and Shellabarger asked to make their statements directly to the committee.

Very respectfully,

JOHN ROACH.

Hon. HENRY L. DAWES, Chairman.

INDEX TO PACIFIC MAIL INVESTIGATION.

	Page.
Testimony of Herbert L. Bridgman.....	1
Testimony of William S. King.....	3
Testimony of Cornelius K. Garrison.....	15, 456
Testimony of J. H. Sypher.....	19, 460
Testimony of Russell Sage.....	51
Testimony of Rufus Hatch.....	31, 55, 58, 213, 218, 240, 260, 606
Check for $750,000 to Richard B. Irwin.....	32
Proceedings as to illness of Richard B. Irwin.....	51
Statements of Rufus Hatch and H. E. Merrill.....	55, 58
Check for $500,000 to A. B. Stockwell.....	59, 148
Stubs from Pacific Mail check-book.....	60
Testimony of F. W. G. Bellows.....	73, 243
Check of Eldridge & Irwin for $29,053.46.....	77
Testimony of George S. Scott.....	82, 160
Testimony of James D. Smith.....	87, 542
Testimony of Richard B. Irwin.....	90, 461, 476, 495, 516, 550, 590
Correspondence between Richard B. Irwin and the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.....	93, 99, 114, 122, 124, 218
Correspondence between Richard B. Irwin and A. B. Stockwell.....	97, 102
Letter from Richard B. Irwin to the New York Tribune.....	107
Notices of legal proceedings, &c.....	114
Testimony of George S. Coe.....	127
Testimony of Dumont Clarke.....	140, 175, 209, 233
Quotations of Pacific Mail stock.....	156
Testimony of James Delamater.....	157, 169
Testimony of H. E. Merrill.....	156, 241
Testimony of J. L. Worth.....	157
Testimony of Thomas Ellis.....	157
Testimony of Christian B. McDougall.....	161
Testimony of John P. Ilsley.....	165
Testimony of Charles W. Griswold.....	165
Testimony of William B. Gage.....	166
Testimony of John Roach.....	167, 215
Ticket of deposit by Brooklyn Trust Company in the Marine National Bank, New York.....	170
Testimony of O. P. C. Billings.....	176
Testimony of Thomas B. Musgrave.....	184
Proceedings in connection with newspaper reports.....	186
Testimony of John Roundy.....	189
Testimony of William R. Bunker.....	205, 489
Three $50,000 checks to John G. Schumaker.....	208
Certificate of deposit to A. H. Whiting.....	212
Testimony of Hugh J. Hastings.....	212
Testimony of George E. Weed.....	214
Testimony of Roswell G. Rolston.....	216
Testimony of George L. Kingsland.....	217
Testimony of Charles A. Avery.....	217
Entries for exchange of checks with John Roach.....	220, 222, 240
Testimony of Alex. Masterton.....	223
Testimony of Charles J. Osborne.....	227
Testimony of H. H. Baxter.....	229
Testimony of Fras. R. Baby.....	236
Testimony of Cyrus H. Taylor.....	237
Testimony of Eugene Kelly.....	237
Check of A. H. Whiting to Cornelius Cole for $18,023.20.....	239, 618
Testimony of Frederick Knowland.....	241
Testimony of William H. Lane.....	242
Testimony of J. B. Post, jr.....	243
Testimony of William L. Jenkins.....	253

	Page.
Testimony of Le Grand Lockwood	254
Testimony of Guy F. Gosman	255
Testimony of Henry Clews	256
Testimony of Henry B. Laidlaw	260
Letter of Richard B. Irwin to Lees & Waller	260
Testimony of S. L. Phelps	261
Testimony of Charles Abert	264, 279, 349
Testimony of J. Gales Moore	277
Power of attorney from Irwin to Abert	279
Letter from Irwin to Abert	280
Correspondence of Charles Abert with Reverdy Johnson	280
Testimony of George W. Riggs	284
Testimony of Henry D. Cooke	285
Testimony of Richard C. Parsons	286
Testimony of John G. Schumaker	296, 306, 464
Testimony of Richard J. Capron	334
Testimony of Samuel J. Randall	336
Testimony of John B. Storm	337
Testimony of Hosea W. Parker	338
Testimony of Lyman Elmore	342
List of payments made by Charles Abert	353
Testimony of Joseph MacFarland	359
Testimony of J. C. G. Kennedy	360
Testimony of John Boyd	361
Testimony of John H. Hersey	362, 385
Testimony of Oscar J. Averill	364
Testimony of William B. Shaw	370
Testimony of Lewis J. Davis	375
Testimony of Hamilton G. Fant	376
Testimony of Donn Piatt	383, 410
Testimony of H. E. Paine	392
Testimony of John W. Corson	393
Certificates of deposit to John G. Schumaker	398, 465
Testimony of John Sherman, jr.	400
Testimony of C. C. Chaffee	402
Testimony of Gardner G. Hubbard	403
Testimony of James G. Berret	404
Testimony of Samuel Ward	408
Testimony of Whitelaw Reid	418
Testimony of Charles A. Wetmore	434
Resolutions of Pacific Mail Steamship Company of January 9, 1875	442
Telegrams from A. O. Hall and D. W. Voorhees	443, 459
Testimony of Schuyler R. Ingham	443
Testimony of Charles H. Harvey	449
Testimony of George W. Wiley	452
Testimony of George E. Miles	459
Certificate of Pacific Mail Steamship Company that neither John G. Schuma- ker nor Richard C. Parsons was its attorney or counsel	476
Testimony of W. F. G. Shanks	487
Testimony of William P. Sullivan	489
Deposit ticket of John G. Schumaker, of June 19, 1872	490
Check for $25,450, to Henry C. Du Val	490
Account of John G. Schumaker with the Brooklyn Trust Company	493, 494
Condensed account of subsidy fund	516
Comparison of bank accounts	517
Bank of California account	518
Testimony of D. W. Voorhees	539
Testimony of Boyd Winchester	540
Testimony of N. G. Ordway	547
Testimony of Wm. H. McAllister	580
Testimony of Wm. M. Tenney	583
Testimony of Moses Dillon	601
Testimony of Nathan A. Fuller	505
Testimony of Augustus H. Whiting	616
Testimony of George D. Krumbhaal	626
Testimony of Paul Stevens	628
Correspondence, &c	629

LAWRENCE vs. SYPHER.

FEBRUARY 27, 1875.—Laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

Mr. JAMES W. ROBINSON, from the Committee on Elections, submitted the following

REPORT:

The Committee on Elections, to whom was referred the contested-election case of Lawrence against Sypher, from the first congressional district of Louisiana, submit the following report:

Both claimants held certificates of election on which they asked to be seated, but the House gave the prima-facie right to Mr. Sypher and seated him, and adopted resolutions for serving notice of contest, filing answer, and taking testimony by the parties, so that the case was not ready for hearing on its merits until the present session of Congress.

The committee find that of the five returning-boards that had an existence, claiming the right to canvass the returns of the election in Louisiana in 1872, only two ever pretended a promulgation of the result of any canvass made, viz, the Forman board and the Lynch board, so called. The committee have not found it necessary to decide which, if either, of these boards was the legally-constituted board to make such canvass.

We find the Forman board had actual possession of the parish returns, and so far as they were promulgated they were correctly tabulated, and, with the exceptions hereinafter mentioned, are substantially correct. They are as follows:

Compiled returns of an election held in the State of Louisiana for Congressmen on the 4th day of November, A. D. 1872, pursuant to the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the conduct and to maintain the purity and freedom of elections," &c., approved March 16, 1870.

FIRST CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT.

Parishes.	J. B. Hickman.	J. H. Sypher.	Effingham Lawrence.
Livingston Parish		199	478
Orleans, Fourth ward		1,032	1,150
Fifth ward		1,425	1,770
Sixth ward		852	1,405
Seventh ward		1,758	1,464
Eighth ward		700	1,355
Ninth ward		734	1,860
Fifteenth ward		43	747
Plaquemines Parish	22	1,040	414
Saint Helena Parish		411	563
Saint Bernard Parish
Saint Tammany Parish
Tangipahoa Parish		658	723
Washington Parish		201	426
Total	22	9,056	12,355

It will be observed that no returns are reported from Saint Bernard and Saint Tammany Parishes. The evidence shows that in Saint Bernard Parish Sypher received 410 votes, and in Saint Tammany 629 votes, and that Lawrence received in Saint Bernard 270 votes, and in Saint Tammany 460 votes, which should be counted for them respectively. That in the Ninth ward of the parish of Orleans 943 votes were reported by the Forman board as cast for Sypher as candidate for Congress from the second district instead of the first. The evidence satisfies the committee that he should receive credit for these 943 votes.

Making these corrections, Mr. Sypher's total vote would be 11,088, and Mr. Lawrence's total vote would be 13,035.

To overcome this majority of 1,947 votes, as shown for Mr. Lawrence by the returns, the committee is asked to make deductions for frauds, &c. The principal ground on which this claim is based is the fact that in Plaquemines Parish the First, Second, and Third ward voting-places were abolished for that election, by means of which a large republican voting population was left in the upper part of that parish from 25 to 35 miles from the nearest polls. The committee characterize the abolition of these voting-places as an outrage, for which there should be some relief. They, however, find that Mr. Lawrence was not a party to this wrong, and, so far as he was able, he caused restitution by tendering to all voters, irrespective of party, the free use of his steamboat, which went down from Orleans and stopped at the several landings and took voters to the polls down the river.

The committee are unable to estimate the number who failed on that account to vote, but think, from the evidence, that it could not have exceeded about 350 votes altogether. The republican vote in that parish was 1,040 in 1872. In 1874 it was 1,417, or 377 increase. As that parish was quiet, the probability is the vote of 1874 would be a fair test, but the vote for Lawrence was also increased several hundred over 1872.

The committee, however, are not able to find any principle of law on which votes could be added for that parish, even granting votes were lost to Mr. Sypher by reason of the failure to establish proper voting-places, unless the provisions of the enforcement act were strictly followed, which no one claims was done.

The other claim of contestee is that in the seven wards of Orleans Parish, in the first district, sufficient fraudulent votes were counted for Lawrence to make all of his majority counted as above.

The evidence on this point is very conflicting, and the witnesses subjected to the criticism of being parties to the crime. Their means of knowing how far they were successful in their effort to carry the election by fraud, was not sufficiently accurate to satisfy the committee of the correctness of their estimates. In fact, with one or two exceptions, the witnesses did not pretend to estimate the extent of success of their efforts at fraud. That they were capable of perjury in office, and attempted fraud in violation of their official oaths, they swear to, and that at least the leaders in the conspiracy were venal, and were led to unblushingly expose their shame for gain, is clearly shown; and yet that such was the character of the officers chosen to conduct the election machinery in the interest of the fusion ticket in Louisiana has caused the committee to inquire with great care whether it was possible that in the seven wards, in the first district, sufficient fraudulent votes could have been counted to change the result. In that inquiry the committee cannot escape the belief that there could not have been one thousand fraudulent votes counted in these wards, for several reasons:

1st. The Lynch board, which made its canvas from estimates and outside evidence, as well as the returns of the parishes, added only 108 votes to these seven wards, besides the 943 before named as counted for the second district. The Lynch board was governed very largely by what was known as the political complexion of the several wards and parishes.

2d. There were United States supervisors of election at every polling-place, who were also present at the counting of the votes for members of Congress, and every fraud would be liable to be detected by them.

3d. The witnesses testify as to frauds generally, and not to specific acts of fraud, with but few exceptions, and their estimates are, in the opinion of the committee, entirely too problematical to overthrow positive returns.

Therefore if the committee should allow Sypher 377 votes in Plaquemines Parish, and deduct 1,000 from Lawrence in the seven Orleans wards, the result would still leave Lawrence elected by 570 majority.

Again, examine the case in another way, viz: The Lynch board, from estimates and reports of the United States supervisors, and from the returns as promulgated, made a proclamation of the result in the district as follows:

Extract from the compiled returns of an election held in the State of Louisiana for Representatives to the Forty-second and Forty-third Congresses, on the 4th day of November, A. D. 1872, pursuant to the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the conduct and maintain the freedom and purity of elections," &c., approved March 16, 1870.

1ST DISTRICT.

Parishes.	J. H. Sypher.	E. Lawrence.
Livingston.....	235	455
Orleans.....	7, 516	9, 643
Plaque. mines.....	2, 354	414
Saint Tammany.....	121	103
Saint Bernard.....	460	270
Saint Helena.....	687	289
Tangipahoa.....	769	618
Washington.....	157	433
Total	12, 299	12, 225

We, the undersigned, returning-officers, pursuant to authority vested in us by the act No. 100, approved March 16, 1870, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and correct compilation of the statements of votes cast at an election for Representatives to the Congress of the United States held in the State of Louisiana on the 4th day of November, 1872; and we hereby declare the following-named persons were duly elected Representatives to Congress, to wit, J. Hale Syphers, first congressional district, Forty-third Congress.

JOHN LYNCH,
President of the Board.
 JAMES LONGSTREET,
 GEO. E. BOVEE,
Returning-Officers.

It will be seen Saint Tammany Parish and Saint Bernard are counted; but in Saint Tammany Parish the committee are satisfied an error is made against Sypher, viz, 508 should be added to Sypher's vote, and 307 to Lawrence's.

The evidence of the members of the Lynch board and others shows beyond doubt that they at first decided in favor of Lawrence and made out and signed his certificate, and were about to deliver it when a large number of affidavits were brought in and were counted for Mr. Sypher, thereby changing the result and electing him by 74 majority. These affidavits were many of them simply "manufactured" for the occasion. The number of them is uncertain, but no witness makes the number less than 1,314, while the weight of evidence is that there were 1,700 of them.

As that board was strongly partisan and made its decision on estimates and all the evidence before it, we cannot believe it would largely err in favor of Mr. Lawrence.

These affidavits, must be deducted from Mr. Sypher's vote. If we call the number 1,314 the lowest named, and correct the parish of Saint Tammany as before mentioned, Lawrence will have a majority of 1,039. In the Lynch canvass, 1,037 votes were added to the republican vote of the seven wards in the first district of Orleans Parish, of which the 943 were a part.

If we should concede 1,000 fraudulent votes, however, in these parishes, Lawrence would still be elected. The relative strength of the colored and white population of these seven wards also makes the claim of so large a fraud improbable. By the census of 1870, in the Ninth ward, for example, the white population was 10,442, while the colored was only 1,552. In that ward the Forman board gave Sypher 739 votes, and Lawrence 1,860. While the population is one colored to six and seven-tenths white, the vote of Sypher is one to two and a half for Lawrence. Now, Mr. Long swears that there were 244 fraudulent votes for Mr. Lawrence in that ward, which, if true, would reduce the proportion to about one republican to two democrats, which is so unreasonable that the committee cannot accept it as true upon the mere estimate of witnesses now strongly sympathizing with the other side. Therefore, whether we estimate from the promulgation of the Forman board or from the Lynch board, we reach the same conclusion, and recommend the adoption of the following resolutions:

Resolved, That J. Hale Sypher was not elected a member of the Forty-third Congress from the first district of Louisiana.

Resolved, That Effingham Lawrence was duly elected a member of the Forty-third Congress for the first district of Louisiana, and he is entitled to his seat.

J. W. ROBINSON,
On behalf of the Majority of Committee.

Mr. HAZELTON submitted the following as

THE VIEWS OF THE MINORITY:

The undersigned minority of the committee decline to concur in affirming the right of the contestant to a seat in the Forty-third Congress, for reasons hereinafter stated.

We premise by saying that the contestee was seated upon a certificate which prima facie entitled him to the seat, and that his right thereto upon the merits was not submitted to the committee before taking the same.

The contestant takes the seat, if at all, upon proving, affirmatively, to the satisfaction of the House, that he has a right thereto upon the merits. We submit that the evidence shows conclusively the utter absence of any such right.

The following parishes comprised the first district:

Orleans, Fourth ward, Fifth ward, Sixth ward, Seventh ward, Eighth ward, Ninth ward, Fifteenth ward, Livingston, Saint Bernard, Saint Helena, Saint Tammany, Plaquemines, Tangipahoa, Washington.

The election was conducted under the auspices of the democratic party, Governor Warmoth being conspicuously identified with the fortunes of that party for the time being, and employing all his power and enginery, in conjunction with the leaders of that organization, to accomplish a partisan success.

As an illustration in point, the parish of Plaquemines, in the south part of the district, is about 130 miles in length, and has always, since 1868, polled a large majority of republican votes. The bulk of the colored population is in the north portion of the parish. In order to prevent the colored voters from participating in the election, the democratic managers, immediately prior to the election, changed the polling-places of the parish, and took up or discontinued those in the portion of the parish where the colored voters resided, so that on the west side of the river no polling-place was established for 47 miles from the north boundary of the parish, and on the east side for 38 miles. A more high-handed and flagrant attempt to prevent the colored voters, who were known to be republicans, from participating in the election, cannot be conceived. It was a wicked and shameless scheme on the part of the contestant's friends to defeat rather than to secure a fair election. It was a base prostitution of the powers emanating from the executive, wielded by or under the dictation of democratic leaders, to consummate a dishonest and dishonorable purpose. Under the law of Louisiana the registrar, who is appointed and may be removed by the governor of the State, fixes the polling-places in his parish, and may determine their number and location according to his own wishes or interests, without consulting the convenience of the voters at all.

This power was exercised in the parish of Plaquemines in such manner as to require colored voters to go as far as from Alexandria and Washington to Baltimore to vote; and to emphasize the outrage the arrangements were consummated so clandestinely that the mass of colored voters knew nothing of the discontinuance of the polling-places theretofore established until the very day of the election.

The following admission appears in the printed evidence :

It is admitted that there were no polls on the left bank of the Mississippi River, above the court-house, say thirty-five miles distance from the upper line of the parish; that on the right bank there was no poll above Ronquillo settlement, a distance of forty-seven miles; and it is further admitted that the largest part of the republican or colored vote was in these parts of the parish.

It is further admitted that the bulk of the opposition vote was in the lower part of the parish, at the election held on the 4th day of November, 1872, in the parish of Plaquemines, for members of Congress.

EFFINGHAM LAWRENCE,
Per H. C. WARMOTH,
Representing Mr. Lawrence.

Mr. Challaire, a democratic registrar, testifies as follows in referring to this subject :

Q. Why didn't you establish polling-places in the upper part of the parish?—A. Well, I didn't want to say a word about that, but as my friend Mr. Lawrence went to my court-house the other day and said I was the only one at fault for this, that I had not put more polls in the parish, I will say that Mr. Lawrence advised to put only three and I put five.

The result of this scheme was what might have been anticipated; less than half of the estimated republican vote of the parish was polled.

Judge William M. Prescott states in his testimony that "according to the registration-books made by the democratic registrar, Challaire, and after a most careful revision of the books of his predecessors and the erasure of all doubtful and suspicious names therefrom, the registered vote of this parish was 3,180."

Of this number it is claimed by the contestant that but 1,454 were polled—the deficiency being almost exclusively on the part of the republicans. Mr. Prescott states the number of republican votes not polled at 1,710.

The number of republican votes cast at the seven wards or polling-places in this parish, where the polling-places were taken up and discontinued, was, in 1870, as stated by Judge Prescott, according to the official returns, 2,204.

Turning from this parish, let us look at the testimony touching other parts of the district.

In doing this it becomes necessary to refer to and quote from the testimony of Blanchard, Long, Carey, Downs, Cannon, McLaughlin, and others, all or nearly all of whom were in the contestant's party, and the most of whom held some official position under the election-laws.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
District of Louisiana :

Personally appeared before me Walter Sully Long, who, being duly sworn, upon his oath states as follows:

From March, 1872, to January, 1873, I was chief clerk to B. P. Blanchard, then holding the office of State registrar of voters for the State of Louisiana. In that capacity I was in the fullest confidence of my chief, and was aware of all and every transaction of a political nature in the office during the campaign of 1872.

The necessity of carrying the election for the fusion party was frequently a matter of discussion between Blanchard, myself, and others, and a plan of operations was finally adopted at my suggestion, and carried out, as follows :

I. The sexton's monthly returns of burials of persons over the age of twenty-one years were carefully compiled by wards, the registration-number ascertained and noted, and a list made of them.

II. A thorough examination was made of the registry-book of 1870, in order to ascertain the number of names of fictitious persons registered in that year. In every ward where the persons having control of these false registry-papers were acting with the fusion party these names were used, but in wards where the supervisors of 1870 were not acting in harmony with the fusion party, particular care was taken to prevent their using the fraudulent papers, and to detect any attempt at so doing.

III. A system was established requiring all persons who had been registered as voters in 1870, and who had subsequently removed, to deliver up their papers of that year before receiving certificates of registration in 1872. These were sent to the office of the State registrar of voters every week, and were carefully sorted out by myself and others, and all that showed no evidence of having been examined by the United States supervisors of election were set aside, to be used by repeaters on election-day.

IV. During the ten days preceding the election a list was made out by me of the registry numbers and names of the dead, removed, and fictitious persons before described, and given to each assistant supervisor of registration for the city wards. Two or more persons in each ward, who were to serve as commissioners of election, were set to work making lists of those names upon sheets of paper similar to that designed to be used on the day of election in keeping the written list of voters required by law at each polling-place.

V. The poll-lists were printed, containing the entire registration of both 1870 and 1872. No erasures were made until the Saturday and Sunday preceding the election, when the names that could not be made available for the fusion cause were crossed off in black pencil on the list for certain polls in each ward, and in number to correspond with the written list of names before alluded to.

These preliminaries having been completed, it was a mere question of manual dexterity on the part of the commissioners of election to get within the box a number of ballots to correspond with the names crossed off in black from the printed lists, and written in advance upon the tally-lists.

The estimate of the number of votes required to carry the election was as follows:

For the First ward, 500; Second ward, 500; Third ward, 1,000; Tenth ward, 500; Eleventh ward, 500; Twelfth ward, 250; Thirteenth ward, 100; Fourteenth ward, 50—making a total of 3,400 for the up-town wards; and for the Fourth ward, 300; Fifth ward, 500; Sixth ward, 500; Seventh ward, 500; Eighth ward, 600; Ninth ward, 600; Fifteenth ward, none—a total of 3,000, and an aggregate of 6,400. To this must be added the number of papers to be voted on by "repeaters," which was estimated at 2,000.

VI. The number of fraudulent votes actually counted, and which can be proved by my own testimony and that of other persons concerned, is—

In the First ward	281
In the Second ward	243
In the Third ward	803
In the Tenth ward	306
In the Eleventh ward	330
In the Twelfth ward	101
In the Thirteenth ward	98
In the Fourteenth ward	26
Total up town	2,188
In the Fourth ward	186
In the Fifth ward	155
In the Sixth ward	336
In the Seventh ward
In the Eighth ward	393
In the Ninth ward	244
In the Fifteenth ward
Grand total	1,314
Grand total	3,502

Beyond this, the papers given to repeaters were about 2,000. I cannot at present remember the exact number, but I think that 1,400 were given out to be used in the first, fourth, and sixth municipal districts, and 600 to be used in the second and third districts.

I further know, and can produce, I believe, the men who acted as commissioners of election at the polls in each ward, where fraudulent votes were cast or counted at the general election of November 4, 1872.

WALTER S. LONG.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 4th day of September, 1873, at New Orleans, La.

F. A. WOOLFLEY,
U. S. Commissioner.

Brainard P. Blanchard, another witness whose capacity for the sort of work required of him will hardly be questioned, swears :

That he was appointed by Henry C. Warmoth, governor of the State of Louisiana, to the office of State registrar of voters, being also ex-officio supervisor of registration in and for the parish of Orleans ; that he filled the said office during the years 1870, 1871, and 1872 ; that in the last-named year he was in full political sympathy with the liberal movement, and subsequently, upon the fusion of the liberal and democratic parties, with what was known and styled the fusion party, and, in conjunction with others of the same political party, devised plans for carrying the general election of November 4, 1872, in favor of said fusion party and their candidates, by taking advantage of all the powers with which he was invested by the acts of the general assembly, numbered, respectively, acts No. 99 and 100, approved March 16, 1870, and known as the registration and election laws of 1870.

That, in furtherance of this scheme, he caused a careful compilation of the list of deceased males over twenty-one years of age who had died since the close of registration in 1870, which lists were required by law to be furnished to him by the sextons of the various cemeteries in the parish of Orleans ; and that said lists so compiled were carefully collated with the registration books, and the registry-number and the election-precinct in which the deceased was registered noted.

That instead of carrying out to the full letter the provisions of section 7 of the registration-law, he caused to be erased from the lists of registered voters only the names of such deceased electors as were well known in the community, but in cases where the deceased was an obscure personage, (a large majority of the whole number,) he caused to be made out a duplicate registration-certificate in his name ; the same to be retained and used at the general election, as is hereinafter set forth.

Further on deponent says :

Deponent further says that to his knowledge a large number of certificates of registration had been issued in 1870 in the names of fictitious persons ; that he caused a careful examination of the books of registration to be made, and of other records and memoranda in his possession, to ascertain the quantity of such fraudulent registries, and also made efforts to ascertain in whose possession such papers in the names of fictitious persons were, and did obtain possession of some two thousand such papers ; and in relation to such of said papers which he could not obtain possession of, the following course was pursued, to wit, whenever he ascertained that they were in the hands of persons belonging to the republican party, he then and during registration caused the said fictitious names to be erased from the registry lists as fraudulent ; but in all cases when he ascertained that such papers were in the possession of persons in the interest of the fusion party, he instructed the assistant supervisors of registration not to erase such fictitious names from the books, in cases where he had confidence in those officers ; but in cases where he had reason to suspect the fidelity of any assistant supervisor, or to believe any of them would not assist in or abet such work, he prohibited them from making any erasures whatever, reserving that work for himself, or assigning it to some confidential clerk or confidential agent whom he could implicitly trust, as will more fully appear by the documents hereto annexed and marked A and B.

The witness then goes into a lengthy detailed statement of the frauds actually perpetrated by the political managers of the democratic or fusion party in the election of 1872, and closes with the following statement :

Deponent further says that he believes, and has reason to believe, and knows, that, had not the fraudulent practices as above recited been resorted to and made use of by persons in the interest of the fusion party and for the benefit and advantage of said fusion party, as hereinbefore set forth, and had the election returns been properly and fairly made by the supervisors throughout the State, and had the large republican parishes which were thrown out unjustly, unfairly, and for the purpose of reducing the republican vote, been counted as they should have been, the candidates for presidential electors, members of Congress, and State officers upon the republican national and State ticket would have been shown to have been elected by a large majority of the votes cast in the State at the election held on the 4th of November, 1872.

And deponent further says that he believes, has reason to believe, and knows, that the republican national and State tickets received a considerable majority of the votes actually cast at the election held on the 4th day of November, A. D. 1872, in the State of Louisiana.

B. P. BLANCHARD.

Sworn to and subscribed before me on this 2d September, 1873 ; and I hereby certify that the affiant, B. P. Blanchard, was State registrar of voters, &c., during the years 1870, 1871, and 1872.

Witness my hand and seal at the city of New Orleans, on the day first above named.

[SEAL.]

F. A. WOOLFLEY,
*United States Commissioner, Chief Supervisor of Elections,
District of Louisiana.*

William L. Catlin, another witness, testifies as follows :

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
District of Louisiana :

Personally appeared before me, the undersigned authority, W. L. Catlin, a resident of the city of New Orleans, who being duly sworn deposes and says: That he was in full sympathy with the so-called fusion party at the last general election of November 4, 1872, in the State of Louisiana; that he was, during the same year, an intimate personal and business friend of B. P. Blanchard, then State registrar of voters, and as such aided him in many ways in carrying out his plans for securing the success of the fusion party at the said election; and that, among other things, he aided in the preparation, labeling, and supplying with stationery, &c., the regular ballot-boxes for said election, and attended to their distribution to the various wards. There were in all one hundred and seventeen ballot-boxes used in the city of New Orleans, and that, in addition thereto, he attended to the distribution of sundry additional or duplicate boxes on Sunday night, November 3, for use at the said election, as he understood, to further promote the success of said party, by substituting or otherwise, and delivered some of them personally to the parties whom it was intended should use them.

W. L. CATLIN.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 2d day of September, 1873.

F. A. WOOLFLEY,
United States Commissioner.

Henry L. Downs, another witness, in the employ of Blanchard, engaged in the business of aiding the fusionists or democrats, says:

Q. How many names of colored registered voters were improperly stricken from the rolls in the Fourth ward?—A. I have the figures here that I made out myself some time ago.

Q. You can use them in refreshing your memory now in answering my question.—A.—Three hundred and nine in the Fourth ward were stricken from the rolls in that manner.

Q. And in the Fifth ward how many?—A. Two hundred and twenty-three.

Q. And in the Sixth ward?—A. Three hundred and fifty-three.

Q. And in the Seventh ward?—A. Three hundred and eighty-six.

Q. And in the Eighth ward?—A. One hundred and sixty-four.

Q. And in the Ninth ward?—A. One hundred and twenty-two.

Q. In all, how many?—A. One thousand five hundred and fifty-seven.

Q. Were those names stricken off arbitrarily?—A. They were ordered to be stricken off.

Q. Was any evidence taken to ascertain whether they were entitled to vote before this action was had?—A. I don't know.

Q. By whose order were those names stricken off?—A. It was after a consultation with the fusion committee, Dr. Walker, and others.

Q. Do you know whether any fraudulent duplicate certificates were issued?

[Mr. Rice objected to the question as leading.]

Q. Do you know whether any such thing was ever done or not for the first congressional district?—A. I do.

Q. Do you know whether any were issued in the wards within the first congressional district of this city?

[Objected to as leading.]

A. I do.

Q. State succinctly the manner in which such fraudulent or duplicate certificates were issued.—A. I can state how they were obtained. I decline to state how they were issued.

Q. State how they were obtained.—A. They were obtained by persons moving from one ward to another. According to the requirements of the registrars, each of these persons moving from one ward to another were to give up their original certificate and get a new one. These original certificates were sent to the central office of the State registrar of voters. Some of them were canceled, but many of them were re-issued in this manner to be voted upon again.

Q. How many of such certificates were issued?—A. I should judge about three thousand of them.

Q. Can you approximate the number that was issued for the Fourth, Fifth, Sixth, Seventh, Eighth, and Ninth wards?—A. I should think there was about one thousand or twelve hundred used in those wards.

Q. To whom were those certificates given?—A. I decline to answer that question.

Q. Were they issued to republicans, or democrats, or fusionists?—A. They were issued to parties that I presume were in the fusion interest. I had no reason to doubt that they were.

Q. Were any issued to candidates on the fusion ticket, as far as you know?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you ever make an affidavit in regard to the conduct of the election on that day?—A. I did.

Q. Where did you make such an affidavit?—A. I made it before Commissioner Woolfley.

Q. Is this printed copy now shown you a copy of the affidavit that you made? [Shown affidavit of Henry L. Downs, contained in printed pamphlet marked X, Y, Z, annexed to the testimony taken March 30, 1874.]—A. I see no mistake in it; it seems to be correct, according to my affidavit.

Q. Are you willing to reiterate the statements made in that affidavit?—A. I am, and I will.

Judge Dibble offered the affidavit referred to, and the following is a copy, Mr. Rice making the same objections that he had made to the introduction of the affidavit of B. P. Blanchard :

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
District of Louisiana :

Personally appeared this the 21st day of June, 1873, before me, the undersigned authority, Henry L. Downs, who, being duly sworn, deposes and says : That, during the registration preceding the election of November 4, 1872, he was a clerk in the office of State registrar of voters for the State of Louisiana ; that, during the two months of registration, certificates and duplicates of registration accumulated in said office ; they were collected by the assistant supervisors of registration of the different wards of the city of New Orleans from voters changing their residence from one ward to another, to whom a new certificate would be furnished, and the old one forwarded to the office of State registrar of voters, who was ex-officio supervisor of registration for the parish of Orleans, or city of New Orleans. These certificates and duplicates accumulated to the number of several thousand, and completely filled a large-sized ballot-box.

Deponent further states that he assisted in assorting them, according to wards and availability for use by repeating voters. Some were canceled, as being considered unsafe to use, or as having been marked in some manner by the United States supervisors ; others, (and the larger portion,) upward of two thousand, were retained intact, to be used on the 4th of November, 1872 ; and deponent further states that it is his belief that they were so used.

HENRY L. DOWNS.

Sworn to and subscribed before me on this 4th day of September, 1873, at New Orleans, La.

F. A. WOOLFLEY,
United States Commissioner.

J. E. CANNON sworn and examined on behalf of J. Hale Sypher.

By Judge DIBBLE :

Question. Where do you live?—Answer. Corner Locust and La Fayette streets.

Q. What ward is that in?—A. Third ward.

Q. Where were you on the last election day?—A. Living in the Ninth ward, sir.

Q. What position did you hold, if any?—A. First clerk, and then registrar.

Q. Of the Ninth ward?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. By whom were you appointed?—A. I presume it was by Governor Warmoth. I was appointed by Mr. Blanchard. I presume it was by order of Governor Warmoth.

Q. Were you there during the whole registration?—A. I came there a few days after the registration had been opened.

Q. Do you know whether any frauds were committed in connection with the registration in the Ninth ward?—A. There were.

Q. Of what nature?—A. Fraudulent papers, fraudulent voting, fraudulent papers that I know of.

Q. State the circumstances.—A. Well, I know of about eleven hundred fraudulent papers ; there were about between three and four hundred fraudulent papers on the old books that I had possession of, and I had possession of about one hundred on the new books, and I duplicated them, eight for each vote ; for each vote I made eight certificates out.

Q. From the old registration?—A. No, sir; from the new registration.

Q. You say there were a hundred names?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And eight certificates for each, which made eight hundred?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To whom were they given?—A. I decline to answer who they were given to.

Q. Do you know whether they were voted on election-day?—A. I have reason to believe that they were.

Q. In the interest of what political party?—A. The fusion party; they were, most undoubtedly, not given to the republican party.

Q. Do you know whether they were voted for or against Mr. Sypher?—A. They were put there to vote against him; they were instructed to vote against the State republican ticket.

Q. Do you know whether there were any erasures improperly made?—A. I made the erasures myself.

[Mr. Rice objected on the ground that the question was leading.]

Q. Do you know whether there were any names erased from the registration-lists?—

[Mr. Rice objected on the same ground.]

A. Yes, sir; I made the erasures myself.

Q. Were they properly or improperly made?—A. Well, I just scratched only the colored people and those that I knew to be republicans.

Q. Were you instructed to do so?—A. I had my instructions from Mr. Blanchard to scratch none but colored people, or if I knew any of the names in the interest of the republican ticket to scratch them off.

Q. How many did you scratch off?—A. Between a hundred and eighty-five and two hundred. I disremember the exact amount or number now.

Q. Were you present in the Mechanics' Institute during the counting of the votes of the Ninth ward?—A. Yes, sir; from the beginning to the end of it.

Q. Do you know whether the count was fair or unfair?—A. There were some parties got a square count, and others did not.

Q. Do you know whether Mr. Sypher got a square count or not?—A. No, sir; he did not.

Q. What do you know about the count for Congressmen?—A. Well, I know that I beat Mr. Sypher in the ward. I know that he got beat in the ward, and I helped to do it.

Q. Did you do that under instructions?—A. My instructions from Mr. Blanchard, in the institute, were to hold the State ticket up.

[Mr. Rice objected on the ground that the witness had already voluntarily and explicitly declared himself guilty of the enormities concerning which he had testified, and the question as to whether he had had any instructions or not could have no effect upon the decision of the case.]

Judge Dibble stated that he proposed to examine this witness as to the instructions issued by Mr. Blanchard, for the purpose of showing that there was a concerted scheme to defraud Mr. Sypher of his election in the Ninth ward of the city of New Orleans, and in other precincts of the first congressional district, and that that scheme of fraud was agreed to by the leaders of the political party whose candidate Mr. Lawrence was.

Judge Lynch said he saw no reason why the witness should not detail under what instructions he had acted.

WITNESS. My instructions were to hold the State ticket up at all hazards, let the circumstances be what they would.]

Q. What State ticket do you refer to?—A. The whole State fusion ticket; and if I was arrested, I would be released on bond and taken out.

Q. Can you approximate the number of votes which Mr. Sypher was cheated out of in that count?

[Mr. Rice objected on the ground that the question did not admit of a definite answer.]

Q. State in detail what was done in the Mechanics' Institute under those instructions.—A. Well, whenever I had opportunity to miscall his name, and call Lawrence's, I did it; and if I didn't have a chance to miscall his name I wouldn't do it, but I run a pencil across his name and called it a scratch.

Q. Do you know how many votes Mr. Sypher was deprived of in that way?—A. Well, I didn't take any account of that. There were, I think, a good many votes.

Cross-examined by Mr. RICE:

Q. What is your present business?—A. Pound-keeper of the first district.

Q. From whom is that appointment?—A. Mr. Brewster, administrator of police.

Q. Are you taking any part in politics?—A. At present I am not taking any part in politics at all; I am waiting for another election to come around again.

Q. Have you taken any part in politics since the election of November, 1872?—A. Well, I have voted at one meeting at the mother club for president.

Q. What mother club?—A. Third ward.

Q. Republican?—A. It is a republican club.

Q. You are acting, then, with the republicans now?—A. I shall in the future.

Q. You are now doing so, as far as you have acted since that time you have been speaking of?—A. In the last few months I have.

Q. Have you held any position in the republican party—any official position?—A. None at all.

Q. What were you at the time of the election; were you registrar?—A. I was first appointed clerk, and for a great part of the time I acted as registrar—both clerk and registrar.

Q. These acts that you have spoken of, you did as what?—A. In issuing papers; I did it when I was acting as registrar.

Q. Were you a sworn officer as registrar?—A. Not as registrar when these papers were issued; I was acting as registrar.

Q. Were you ever registrar at all?—A. I was registrar at the counting.

A. Were you not sworn at all to the performance of your duties?—A. I was not sworn at all.

Q. You were not sworn as clerk, either?—A. Not as clerk, either.

Q. Were you cognizant of the fact that these acts were fraudulent at the time you did them?—A. Of course I knew they were fraudulent.

Q. What you did, you did in full knowledge that you were doing fraudulent and illegal acts?—A. Certainly.

Q. You were as well aware of that then as you are now?—A. Of course I knew I was doing fraudulent business—of course.

Q. You state that you prepared, I believe, eight hundred fraudulent election-papers or registration-papers.—A. Yes, sir; I did.

Q. You declined to state to whom you gave them. I put the question now: to whom did you give them?—A. I decline to answer.

Mr. RICE. I insist upon an answer.

By Judge LYNCH:

Q. On what grounds do you decline to answer?—A. Because I do not wish to implicate myself with those parties that I gave the papers to.

Q. Are you afraid of a criminal prosecution, or are you afraid of bodily violence?—A. If it does not do it directly, it might do it indirectly; if you will produce the books of the registration here I could put my finger on every fraudulent vote that was counted.

[The witness declining to answer the question of Mr. Rice, and Judge Lynch stating that he had not the power to coerce him to do so, Mr. Rice declined any further cross-examination.]

THOMAS J. M. CAREY sworn and examined on behalf of J. Hale Sypher.

By Judge DIBBLE:

Question. Where do you live?—Answer. In the Ninth ward, corner Moreau and Louisa streets.

Q. Where did you live on the day of the election in 1872?—A. At the same place.

Q. Did you make an affidavit in regard to the conduct of the election in the Ninth ward?—A. It was after that, sir.

Q. You made an affidavit in regard to it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Examine this document and state whether that is the affidavit you made, and before whom it was made. [Shown paper.]—A. Yes, sir; that is my affidavit, made before Commissioner Grant, and written by myself.

Judge Dibble filed the document referred to, and it is hereto annexed and marked "105," and the following is a copy:

[Mr. Rice objected on the same grounds that he had made to the introduction of similar documents in connection with the testimony of previous witnesses.]

NEW ORLEANS, September 6, 1873.

Personally appeared before me, William Grant, United States commissioner, and for the district of Louisiana, duly commissioned and qualified, Thomas J. M. Carey, esq., who, after being duly sworn according to law, deposes and says as follows:

I was appointed chairman of the committee on naturalization in the Ninth ward of the city of New Orleans by the democratic and fusion parties, and performed the duties assigned me during the last registration and election.

Our instructions were to naturalize all applicants, whether entitled to naturalization by law or not; the fourth and eighth district courts were reported as being favorable to issuing certificates to republicans; the first, second, and sixth district courts were favorable to democrats and fusionists. When we would find applicants to occupy the first, second, and sixth district courts, we would then go to the eighth district and represent ourselves as republicans; not an applicant was refused in the first, second, or sixth district courts. The democratic or fusion party furnished the blanks for the first, second, and sixth district courts, and the republicans were reported as having furnished the blanks for the eighth district court. In the first, second, and sixth district courts, if a party was not vouched for by the naturalization committee the judge would subject them to a rigid examination, and if they succeeded in getting the order of court the clerk would not issue the certificates of naturalization without being paid for it. When parties were vouched for by the committee of which I was chairman, few questions were asked by the judges and no charge was made by the clerk. When we had few applicants we would take the same parties under different assumed names and get certificates of naturalization for them. When we had doubts of the parties, we would retain the certificates and have them registered. In other cases the parties would be allowed to retain them. Our committee aided all applicants who were favorable to the democratic or fusion ticket, whether they resided in the Ninth ward or not. Our instructions also required us to explain to all applicants what questions would be asked them by the judges. Our committee were employed in this service about one month and a half previous to the closing of registration, and, to the best of my knowledge and belief, caused at least two thousand fraudulent naturalization-certificates to be issued to be voted on the day of election for the democratic or fusion ticket.

I was appointed commissioner of election for the poll corner of Morales and Louisa streets by B. P. Blanchard, esq., registrar of voters, on the recommendation of the democratic parish committee and the Ninth ward auxiliary club. On the day previous to last election the commissioners of election were ordered to assemble at the Mechanics' Institute, to receive instructions for the day of election. We were instructed to place every impediment in the way of voters who were not fusionists, by making them sign their names, demanding the number of their residences, and other questions to annoy them; and, lastly, refer them to the office of the ward-supervisor before receiving their ballots, so as to harass and annoy them into abandoning the attempt to vote.

On the day of election the orders of the registrar of voters were faithfully carried out; in fact the commissioners went further. When parties held the fusion ticket in their hands, they were taken without question. When tickets were folded and the applicant not known to be favorable, they would be subjected to an inspection under the plea that the commissioners must be certain that the voter is aware what ticket he is voting. If the folded ticket proved to be republican, we would act as indicated by instructions. If democratic, it would be deposited in the ballot-box. We kept a correct account of every ballot deposited in the box. In cases where we were compelled to receive the vote of a republican, whether white or colored, we would write in large characters on his certificate, so as to attract attention if attempt was made to vote a second time; but when a fusionist presented his certificate, the indorsement required by law to be made on certificates would be written in small characters on the corner, so as to facilitate him in repeating. When a fusionist presented himself a second time on a certificate that had already been voted on, one of the three fusion commissioners who were placed at each poll would hold the certificate in his hand so as to conceal the former indorsement, and call out to the United States inspectors, two of whom were placed at each polling-place, saying, "This is all right." If, as in some cases, they would take the certificate in hand and discover the former indorsement, the ballot would be refused. This, however, was rarely the case. There were about 600 fraudulent votes polled in the Seventh ward, about 600 in the Eighth ward, and about 1,200 in the Ninth ward, making in all about 2,400 fraudulent votes illegally polled on the day of election for the democratic fusion ticket.

THOMAS J. M. CAREY,
Corner Moreau and Louisa.

Sworn and subscribed to before me September 6, 1873.

[SEAL.]

WM. GRANT,
United States Commissioner, District of Louisiana.

Cross-examined by Mr. RICE:

Q. Are you in any official position now?—A. No.

The operations of some of these witnesses embraced the whole State; others, only the city of New Orleans and the first district. We might quote more extensively, but we forbear. If any further testimony is wanted of the utter and disgusting rottenness which pervaded the management of this so-called election, it may be found in the volume of printed evidence submitted to your committee. Language fails us to characterize this management as it deserves, if only a tithe of what is averred by the witnesses be true. It discloses the most wanton and shameless disregard of the sanctities of the ballot-box, and of the vital principles of republican institutions which rest upon such sanctities, to which our attention has ever been called. No man who respects his Government can read this testimony with indifference. It touches the essential foundations on which republican government rests, and to suppose the same practices here detailed spread throughout the other congressional districts of the Union is to suppose the absolute doom of our institutions.

Of course it is claimed that these witnesses have testified falsely. This was roundly asserted on the argument. It may be so. But if these witnesses were fit to intrust with the responsible duties assigned them by the fusion or democratic party, they ought to be fit to testify as to the manner in which they executed their trusts. It does not lie in the mouths of those who employed such agents, and who seek the advantage of their acts, to discredit their evidence.

But in the absence of any positive knowledge on the subject, the committee cannot disregard the testimony of witnesses whose statements are not on their face untrue, and who stand unimpeached. If these witnesses have such reputations for truth and veracity where they reside, why have they not been impeached? Why leave the duty of impeaching them to the attorney who argued the case? It was due the committee, as it was due the House, that these witnesses should have been duly impeached if they could be.

Taking this evidence to be substantially true, we submit that it shows this so-called election to have been merely a wicked conspiracy to prevent an election; for there is no just sense in which that which is alleged to have transpired in this district in 1872 can be called an election.

The undersigned cannot consent to enter upon the task of framing devices and spelling out methods for affirming the right of a party to a seat in the House of Representatives from the materials here supplied. We cannot do it without making ourselves parties to these frauds, and encouraging their repetition.

Nor must it be inferred that we are prepared to affirm the right of the contestee, upon the merits, to the seat he occupies. We append the following table of figures to show what he claims to have been the result of this so-called election:

RETURNS OF LYNCH BOARD, (PAGE 146 OF THE TESTIMONY.)

FIRST DISTRICT.

Parishes.	J. H. Sypher.	E. Lawrence.
Livingston.....	235	455
Orleans.....	7, 516	9, 643
Plaquemines.....	2, 354	414
Saint Tammany.....	121	103
Saint Bernard.....	460	270
Saint Helena.....	687	289
Tangipahoa.....	769	618
Washington.....	157	433
Total.....	12, 299	12, 225
	(629)	(410)
Complete returns from the parish of Saint Tammany, (page 149 of the testimony).....	508	307
Total vote.....	12, 807	12, 532
Deduct 1,700 votes from Sypher; that number of affidavits, it is alleged, were counted for him, (see page 14 of the testimony).....	1, 700
Total vote for Sypher.....	11, 107
Deduct 3,077 fraudulent votes counted for Lawrence, (see testimony, pages 192, 193, 194, 243, 244, 246, 247, 232, 233, 234, 235, 236, 237).....		3, 077
Total vote for Lawrence.....		9, 455
Sypher's majority.....	1, 652

RETURNS OF FORMAN BOARD, (PAGE 48 OF TESTIMONY.)

FIRST CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT.

Parishes.	J. B. Hickman.	J. H. Sypher.	Effingham Lawrence.
Livingston Parish.....		199	478
Orleans, Fourth ward.....		1,032	1,150
Fifth ward.....		1,425	1,770
Sixth ward.....		852	1,405
Seventh ward.....		1,758	1,464
Eighth ward.....		700	1,355
Ninth ward.....		734	1,860
Fifteenth ward.....		43	747
Plaquemines Parish.....	22	1,040	414
Saint Helena Parish.....		411	563
Saint Bernard Parish.....
Saint Tammany Parish.....
Tangipahoa Parish.....		658	723
Washington Parish.....		201	426
	22	9,056	12,355
Complete vote of Fifteenth ward, (testimony, page 62).....		943
Complete vote of Saint Tammany Parish, (testimony, page 149).....		629	410
Complete vote of Saint Bernard Parish.....		460	270
Total vote.....		11,088	13,035
Deduct 3,077 fraudulent votes for Lawrence, (as shown by testimony, pages 192, 193, 194, 243, 244, 246, 247, 232, 233, 235, 236, 237).....			3,077
Total vote corrected.....		11,088	9,958
Sypher's majority.....		1,130

The testimony shows gross irregularities on the part of the partisans of the contestee, which we are as far from indorsing as those on the other side. They do not seem to have been so general and systematic, and it may be claimed for them, perhaps, that they were resorted to for the purpose of counteracting the schemes and machinations of the contestant's friends, in whose hands all the machinery of the election was placed.

We are not disposed, in the light of all the evidence, to weigh one claim against the other. We think both are so tainted, so mixed with fraud, and so involved in uncertainty, that it is safer and better to refuse to affirm either.

The precedents heretofore established authorize this decision, and we think the case amply justifies us in adopting it.

We therefore recommend the adoption of the following resolution :

Resolved, That neither Effingham Lawrence nor J. Hale Sypher has shown himself entitled to a seat in the 43d Congress.

G. W. HAZELTON.

H. BOARDMAN SMITH.

IRA B. HYDE.

LEMUEL TODD.

CHARLES R. THOMAS

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

MARCH 1, 1875.—Committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GARFIELD, from the Committee on Appropriations, submitted the following

REPORT:

[To accompany bill H. R. 4851.]

In submitting the bill making appropriations for the deficiencies in the appropriations for the expenses of the Government, being the regular yearly bill, the Committee on Appropriations, for the fuller information of the House, have thought fit to print that portion of the documents upon which the bill is based which have not already been printed; those documents which have been printed are referred to briefly by number, title, and amount only in this report. The principal of these are Executive Documents numbered 69 being the regular "deficiency estimates." The bill aggregates $2,496,586.98, (being $741,225.04 less than the deficiency appropriations recommended the last year,) and is made up as follows: For the State Department, $22,787.30; for the Treasury Department, $969,651.54, of which the sum of $159,843.87 is for the mints, (principally for the mint at San Francisco;) and $568,240 for Public Buildings; for the War Department, $257,170.40; for the Interior Department, $126,959.22, most all of which is for Indian deficiencies; for the Post-Office Department, $862,000; for the Senate, the House of Representatives, and miscellaneous, $42,994.33; for the District of Columbia, $123,968.56; for Navy pensions, $75,000.

The estimates upon which this sum is recommended amount to $3,421,518.97. It is believed that this bill provides, as far as is really necessary, for the total existing deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government, as the committee have delayed reporting it for some weeks, to the end that a full and final recommendation might be made at once, and the several Departments have been made fully aware of that fact.

This bill has a new feature growing out of the recent acts to govern expenditures, in the revival of appropriations covered into the Treasury, (see section 6, which continues and renders available $1,761,327.93.) This was rendered necessary by the provisions of the 5th section of act of June 20, 1874.

It will be seen that under the recent acts now generally in effective operation, prohibiting the use of unexpended balances of appropriations unless specifically rendered available, and requiring that expenditures should only be made pursuant to appropriations made therefor, the requisitions for deficiency appropriations are decreasing, and will decrease in amount from year to year. This, aided by the rigid scrutiny of all estimates and exhaustive study to reduce them, has caused a more careful method of making the same on the part of the Departments, resulting in a much more exact and economical use of the appropriations when made. This course, if adhered to, will eventually obviate the necessity of "deficiency" appropriations except in cases of emergency.

The large deficiencies in the Indian Bureau are significant as showing that those branches of the public service are not yet under the operation of those acts. The following documents are placed in relative sequence to the paragraphs on the bill which they explain.

[See Executive Document No. 69, letter from Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimates of deficiencies required to complete the service of the fiscal year 1875;

Ex. Doc. No. 113, balances required to be re-appropriated, and various other executive documents.]

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., February 27, 1875.

SIR: I am instructed by the Committee on War-Claims to hand you the accompanying resolution, which I do with the following explanation:

The report of the commissioners of claims, dated December 6, 1873, embraced 2,465 cases, of which number 1,092 were allowed in whole or in part, the amount allowed being $643,713.04; rejected, $4,074,174.25.

The examination of these cases required the services of an additional clerk, who received pay, in the sundry civil bill of last session, of $500 for the same.

The last report of the commissioners embraced 2,407 cases, of which number 1,163 were allowed in whole or in part, the amount allowed being $740,339.41, and the amount disallowed, $4,471,995.09.

The examination of the papers in this report, and the preparation of the bill to pay awards in same, has required additional clerical assistance as before, the amount being greater by $100,000 than in former report.

In addition, has been the examination of papers in 280 cases, reported to Congress under section 2 of the act of June 16, 1874, by the Secretary of the Treasury, which has required considerable labor.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

HENRY H. SMITH, Clerk.

HON. JAMES A. GARFIELD,
Chairman of Committee on Appropriations.

Resolved, That this committee recommend to the Committee on Appropriations the following item to be included in the deficiency bill:

"To enable the Clerk of the House to pay for extra clerical services in the Committee on War-Claims, rendered necessary by the reports of the commissioners of claims, five hundred dollars."

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., December 1, 1874.

GENTLEMEN: By the provisions of section 18, act of Congress approved July 28, 1866, the pay of all officers and employes of the Senate and House was increased twenty per cent. on their then pay. (See Statutes at Large, page 323, section 18.)

The pay of assistant postmaster of the House at that time was $1,740, (see same vol., page 192,) twenty per cent. added to which makes $2,088. By the act of March 3, 1873, the pay was again increased fifteen per cent., making the pay $2,401.20; and by the act of January 20, 1874, repealing said last-mentioned act, (the act of March 3, 1873,) it was expressly provided that the "salaries, compensation, and allowances of all said persons shall be as fixed by the laws in force at the time of the passage of said act," (the act of March 3, 1873.)

The "law in force" at that time was the act of July 28, 1866, by which the pay was fixed at $2,088, (Statutes at Large, section 18, page 323,) which amount has been appropriated every year since that time until the last, except the year when the 15 per cent. was added, making the pay for that year $2,401.20.

The salary of every other officer of the House is regulated by said section 18, act of July 28, 1866, and appropriations made accordingly, and I simply ask that such sum be appropriated in this case as shall meet what is conceived to be the requirements of existing law.

It seems as clear to me that the law fixes the pay of assistant postmaster of the House at $2,088 as it does that of a member of Congress (section 17, act of July 28, 1866) at $5,000 per annum.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. F. WILSON.

HON. COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS,
House of Representatives.

CLERK'S OFFICE, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., February 22, 1875.

SIR: In the sundry civil act approved June 23, 1874, the telegraph operators at the Capitol were directed to be paid five hundred dollars each during the last recess of Congress, a period of about five months. In the legislative appropriation act of this year their pay is fixed at one thousand dollars for the next fiscal year. No provision has been made for their pay from December 7, 1874, to June 30, 1875. I respectfully suggest that a paragraph be inserted in the deficiency bill, appropriating for that period.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

EDW. MCPHERSON,

Clerk House of Representatives United States.

Hon. JAMES A. GARFIELD,

Chairman Committee on Appropriations, Washington, D. C.

CLERK'S OFFICE, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., February 27, 1875.

SIR: There will be required to be appropriated to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the contingent expenses of the House of Representatives, for the present fiscal year, the following sums, viz:

For clerks to committees	$5,300 00
For cartage	737 00
For folding documents	6,200 00
For two official reporters of committees—one from July 1, 1874, and from December 10, 1874.	1,247 83

The last-named deficiency arises from an increase of pay voted the committee reporters in the deficiency act approved June 22, 1874; and the other three from the extent of the claims made upon the various funds. With these deficiencies supplied, this service will be conducted this year at a saving of $44,140.34 over the previous fiscal year.

From the indications afforded, I am of opinion that an addition of ten thousand dollars to the miscellaneous item of the contingent fund will be required to carry us to the close of the present fiscal year. Nothing is paid from this fund except on the approval of the Committee on Accounts, and whatever balance may remain unexpended at the close of the fiscal year will revert to the Treasury.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

EDW. MCPHERSON,

Clerk House of Representatives, United States.

Hon. JAMES A. GARFIELD,

Chairman Committee on Appropriations, Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 15, 1875.

DEAR SIR: At the close of the last session of Congress the Committee on Accounts approved the following vouchers, which I had paid the telegraph companies:

Western Union Telegraph Company, on account of committee investigating the Department of Justice	$51 03
Committee on Military Affairs	77 42
Committee on Indian Affairs	64 46
Committee on Banking and Currency, investigating Ocean Bank, New York...	17 37
Committee on the Judiciary, investigating the conduct of Judges Durell, Busteed, and Story	126 63
Committee on Ways and Means, on account of Sanborn contracts	18 20
Messages of the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms, House of Representatives	83 10
Messages of the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms, House of Representatives	24 53
Postage-stamps of the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms, House of Representatives, from April 14, 1873, to April 5, 1874	159 15
Bill of Aaron Bradshaw, messenger, for subpoenaing witnesses in the case of Judge Story	18 79
Bill of J. Pearson, for lemons, &c	241 00

884 68

The bill of the postmaster at Washington, for postage-stamps for use in the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms, is approved by the chairman; also, the bill of J. Pearson, for lemons, for which latter bill there was once an appropriation made, but which lapsed because I could not find Mr. Pearson to get his receipt upon an official blank, although I had it on an ordinary bill. When I left Washington, two days after the adjournment of the last session, there were no funds available in your office to pay these bills, and I have been informed, since my return, that the appropriation expired on the 30th of June last out of which they should have been paid. I would, therefore, be much obliged to you if you will ask the Committee on Appropriations to make an appropriation to pay these bills at the close of the present session.

As this session may close my official connection with Congress, I desire to secure appropriations to cover the above and one or two other bills which I will furnish you, which are barred, on account of their date, from present appropriations.

Very respectfully, yours, &c.,

N. G. ORDWAY,
Sergeant-at-Arms, House of Representatives.

HON. EDWARD MCPHERSON,
Clerk House of Representatives.

P. S.—I would call the attention of the committee, through you, to the fact that during the coming nine months it will require three stamps per month for each of the Members and Delegates in order to transmit to them their drafts and return the receipts to the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms, which will require an additional allowance of postage-stamps for this and other official correspondence of at least two hundred and seventy-five dollars, to which should also be added fifty dollars for telegraphic communications with the members.

I also suggest that there are approved bills for attorney's fees in the suits of J. B. Stewart against J. G. Blaine.

Also, the habeas corpus case of R. B. Irwin, which case was fully argued by Judges Shellabarger and Fisher, for the payment of which about four thousand dollars will be required.

Respectfully, yours, &c.,

N. G. ORDWAY,
Sergeant-at-Arms, House of Representatives.

FEBRUARY 15, 1875.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., February 23, 1875.

DEAR SIR: The following bills, for legal services rendered in the cases of J. B. Stewart vs. James G. Blaine, J. B. Stewart vs. N. G. Ordway, and habeas corpus case of R. B. Irwin, have been approved by the proper committee, and an appropriation will be required for their payment, viz:

William E. Chandler and A. J. Bently.....	$1,500 00
Samuel Shellabarger.....	1,000 00
George P. Fisher.....	1,000 00
J. O. Clephane, (court stenographer).....	271 50

Total..... 3,771 50

Very truly, yours,

N. G. ORDWAY,
Sergeant-at-Arms, House of Representatives.

HON. EDWARD MCPHERSON,
Clerk House of Representatives.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., January 10, 1875.

SIR: Permit me to call the attention, through you, of your committee to the fact that an appropriation is required to pay the salaries of the reporters of debates of the House of Representatives, from March 3, 1875, when the present appropriation expires, to July 1, 1875, when the appropriation for the next fiscal year will take effect. The amount required, to be included in the deficiency appropriation bill, is according to accompanying calculation.

Yours, respectfully,

WM. BLAIR LORD,
Reporter of Debates of House of Representatives.

HON. JAMES A. GARFIELD.

CALCULATION.

Time from March 3, 1875, to July 1, 1875, four months, one-third of a year, lacking three days:

Salary for one year	$5,000 00
Salary for one-third of a year	1,666 66
Salary for one month, $416.66; salary for three days or one-tenth of a month.	41 66
	1,625 00
Total for five reporters, from March 3, 1875, to July 1, 1875	8,125 00

FEBRUARY 12, 1875.

SIR: I ask leave to call your attention to the necessity of making provision for the payment of stenographers employed in taking testimony before the various committees in the Southern States. While the Committee on Ways and Means was requiring the daily personal services of the two official stenographers to committees, it became necessary to send two stenographers with the Select Committee on Alabama Affairs, one to Mississippi and one to New Orleans. So that for a considerable length of time there were six reporters engaged, and sometimes for ten and twelve hours a day. The reporting of testimony before the Alabama committee alone will cost probably $3,500, and the other committee in the same proportion.

I deem it my duty to call your attention to the matter, so that provision may be made to pay these expenses.

Permit me to add, in conclusion, that during the session (while my colleague has been absent for about a month, in attendance on the Select Committee in New Orleans) I have attended to the work before the Committee on Ways and Means, the Committee on Post-Offices, and the Committee on Naval Affairs, (in the Stowell investigation,) so that my time has been fully occupied with these duties.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

HENRY G. HAYES,
Official Stenographer to Committees.

HON. JAMES A. GARFIELD,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations.

The undersigned, official stenographers to committees, respectfully submit the following points for the consideration of the Committee on Appropriations:

We are regular officers of the House, with an annual compensation fixed for our personal services, (being the same as that paid to the reporters of debates,) out of which we, as they, have to pay largely for amanuenses and copyists; but we are in no sense contractors for all the stenographic work of committees.

During the present session the work of committees has been unusually, unprecedentedly, heavy. At a very early stage of it the Committee on Ways and Means entered on the investigation of the Pacific Mail subsidy, and continued it all through the Christmas holidays, till near the close of the session, sitting generally two hours a day, and in New York from six to eight hours. While the committee was in New York, attended by the undersigned, the three special committees to Louisiana, Alabama, and Mississippi started for those States, taking with them four stenographers. These committees took testimony, each for about a fortnight, sitting from eight to twelve hours a day—work which would have really required several reporters for each. Subsequently, the full committee on Louisiana affairs went to New Orleans, accompanied by one of the undersigned, and the work there was so continuous and heavy that it became necessary to secure the services, at various times, of two other reporters.

It is for the payment of these several stenographers that the Committee on Appropriations has been respectfully asked to make provision.

It is, perhaps, unnecessary for us to say that we have not the slightest pecuniary interest in the matter. The House required the work to be done, and we simply made provision to have it done.

Let us say, in conclusion, that when the committees sitting in the Capitol have required, as they have from time to time, the services of additional reporters, we have provided for them at our own expense. We also performed a large amount of service during the recess of Congress, in taking testimony in Arkansas. We are prepared to go before your committee and make any further explanation that may be required.

Respectfully submitted.

HENRY G. HAYES,
AND W. DEVINE,
Official Stenographers to Committees.

SIR: The Select Committee on Affairs in the Southern States, while sitting in New Orleans, found it necessary, on account of the large mass of testimony and the limited time, to obtain the services of stenographers in addition to the official stenographer who accompanied the committee. The subcommittee which had previously taken testimony there had also to employ a stenographer, both the official stenographers being at that time engaged with other committees. The expense thus incurred will probably amount to $2,800, for which I respectfully request your committee to report an appropriation.

GEO. F. HOAR,
Chairman.

HON. JAMES A. GARFIELD,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations.

SIR: The Select Committee on Alabama Affairs, taking testimony in that State, by the committee itself and by a subcommittee, employed the services of two stenographers, E. Z. Brailey and A. Johns, the official stenographers of the House being at the time engaged in reporting testimony before other committees. The testimony taken by this committee forms a volume of nearly 1,300 closely printed pages; and the cost of reporting will be about $3,500. As this committee has no fund out of which to pay this sum, I respectfully request that an appropriation may be made for the purpose.

Yours truly,

JOHN COBURN,

HON. JAMES A. GARFIELD,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, February 26, 1875.

SIR: The committee appointed by the House of Representatives to investigate the recent troubles in Mississippi was accompanied to that State by Mr. E. C. Bartlett, stenographer, who reported all the testimony, which makes between 500 and 600 pages (printed.) The committee has not the funds out of which to pay his bill for reporting, which will be about $1,700; and I therefore request that an appropriation may be made for the purpose.

Very respectfully,

O. D. CONGER,
Chairman Select Committee on Mississippi Affairs.

The allowance, of course, should be at the usual rates allowed in such cases.

O. D. CONGER.

HON. JAMES A. GARFIELD,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, February 20, 1875.

SIR: I have the honor to invite your attention to the question of legislation to provide suitable accommodations for the legation of the United States in Peking, upon which question Mr. Avery, the minister of the United States, has addressed the Department.

The general facts in regard to the premises now occupied in Peking are as follows: Mr. Williams, who has been for many years secretary of legation at Peking, prior to 1867, while acting as chargé d'affaires, applied a portion of the surplus of the indemnity fund in his hands, amounting to $14,586.21, to the purchase of land and the erection of buildings for the legation. This being reported to the Department, was not approved by Mr. Seward, in the absence of authority by Congress therefor. Mr. Seward, at the same time, in his communication to Mr. Burlingame of September 13, 1867, while disapproving of this application of a portion of the fund, found no reason to call the motives of Mr. Williams in the matter in question. Mr. Williams, with great fairness, in a communication to Mr. Burlingame, of March 12, 1867, expressed himself as "quite willing to take the property and lease it to the United States minister," or to dispose of it in case his action was disapproved; and it is understood that he subsequently took the property as his own, and has since made outlays upon it. These buildings are commodious enough for the proper uses of the legation, but require considerable repairs. For many years this property has generally been occupied by the legation of the United States, the minister, whenever one was present at Peking, generally leasing the property from Mr. Williams, and Mr. Williams residing at the same place.

I refer you to the Executive Documents of the House of Representatives, 1868-'69, pages 3, 15, and 17, for the correspondence on this question.

On various occasions recommendations have been made for the purpose of placing the legation at Peking on some permanent footing, but Congress has failed to act definitely in the matter.

The condition of things at Peking is peculiar. It is understood that there are no houses to be rented there, and no hotels, in our acceptation of the term, which can be used as a permanent residence for the minister and his family. The French, English, and Russian governments have each laid out large sums in erecting buildings for the use of their legations, and from time to time the representatives of other governments have been compelled to depart from Peking and live in some of the treaty ports, from the difficulty in procuring houses. A minister of the United States or of a foreign country coming to Peking must take refuge either with some of his colleagues, or with Mr. Williams upon this property, or in some of the missionary establishments. Mr. Avery has reported to the Department that this condition of things still exists, and he is now residing upon the property of Mr. Williams at a considerable rent.

The journey from Peking to Shanghai can only be made at certain portions of the year and at large expenditure, and it is not practicable without some foresight and permanent provision [to provide quarters suitable and respectable for the legation of the United States.

Doctor Williams has, up to this time, preferred to hold this property, although as reported by him at a loss to himself, with the chance of leasing it to the American minister from time to time. Mr. Avery reports, however, that under a leave of absence lately obtained, Mr. Williams is about to return to this country, and is desirous of disposing of the property or leasing it upon some permanent terms, and that several of the foreign legations would be quite willing to buy or lease it. Should this be done it is doubtful whether the American minister can find any other place of residence in Peking.

The trade between this country and China is large and valuable. There are some ten important consulates corresponding with the legation, and appeals lie from the consular courts in China to the minister at Peking.

Congress, by the act of March 3, 1873, (Statutes at Large, volume 17, page 582,) authorized the Secretary of State, through the minister in Japan, to rent, furnish, and keep suitable buildings with grounds for Government use at Yeddo, at an annual cost not exceeding $5,000. It was further provided that the buildings should be rented for two years, with renewals at pleasure, as the Secretary of State should determine. Under the provisions of this act a proper and respectable establishment, with jail and court-rooms, has been provided for the legation. Section 3 of the same act appropriated $2,500 for the purchase of a suitable law-library for that legation.

The necessities of some establishment, and some appropriation therefor, are quite as great, if not greater, at Peking than at Yeddo. There are no appropriations in the control of this Department from which any suitable provision can be made for these purposes.

Under all these facts, I recommend some legislation which may secure for the legation of the United States a permanent establishment in Peking, or which may at least put it in the control of this Department to place that legation upon at least as favorable a footing as the legation in Japan.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

HAMILTON FISH.

The Hon. JAMES A. GARFIELD,
House of Representatives.

[Departmental telegraph-lines, exclusively for Government business.]

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, U. S.,
Washington, D. C., February 27, 1875.

From Department of State to Robert J. Stevens:

I have already written Governor Swann on the question, and suggest as indicated to him, as follows: That the Secretary of State be, and hereby is, authorized to rent, furnish, and keep suitable buildings, with grounds and appurtenant at Peking, for the use of the legation in China, at an annual rent not exceeding five thousand dollars; that the period of the lease therefor shall be for two or more years, and with renewals as the Secretary of State shall determine, and that the sum of five thousand dollars is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated therefor. Should the committee deem it advisable to make a permanent provision and apply a portion of the income of the Chinese indemnity-fund, and this could be accomplished by a clause in the deficiency bill, it might provide as follows: "That the Secretary of State be, and hereby is, authorized to appropriate and set apart a sufficient amount of the principal of the Chinese indemnity-fund to produce an annual income of five thousand dollars, and that such income, or such part thereof as may be necessary, be applied annually, under the direction of the Secretary of State, to rent, furnish, and keep suitable buildings and grounds appurtenant at Peking, for the use of the legation, and that the period for which the same may be leased be for two or more years with renewal, as the Secretary of State may determine."

HAMILTON FISH.
300.

[Telegram.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, D. C., February 27, 1875.

HON. THOS. SWANN:

In Department letter of yesterday the reference to Ex. Doc. No. 72 was a clerical error; it should be to Ex. Doc. No. 29, 3d sess. 40th Congress. I will thank you to make the correction.

JOHN L. CADWALADER.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, January 16, 1875.

SIR: I have the honor to invite your attention to the inclosed copy of a letter of this date, from the Fifth Auditor of the Treasury, in which he states that certain accounts, therein set forth, cannot be met, as the appropriations out of which they might have been paid have been covered into the Treasury; also the account of C. H. Royce, late consul at Prague, which cannot be paid because the appropriation for contingent expenses of consuls, 1873, was exhausted before its settlement. I have, therefore, to request that provision be made for the accounts in the deficiency bill now before the House.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

HAMILTON FISH.

HON. JAMES A. GARFIELD,
Chairman of Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, FIFTH AUDITOR'S OFFICE,
Washington, January 16, 1875.

SIR: I have the honor to advise that the following sums are necessary for the payment of adjusted accounts, where the amounts found due were not drawn for before the balances of the several appropriations were covered into the Treasury, viz:

Oscar Malmros, Pictou, N. S., salary 1872	$810 85
Oscar Malmros, Pictou, N. S., relief 1872	977 60
Oscar Malmros, Pictou, N. S., contingent 1872	162 00
C. Dunn, Hakodadi, salary 1872	267 99
And the following, because the appropriation was exhausted before the settlement of the account:
C. H. Royce, Prague, contingent, 1873	68 86
	2,287 30

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

J. H. ELA, Auditor.

HON. HAMILTON FISH,
Secretary of State.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, February 26, 1875.

SIR: Referring to our conversation in reference to some provision to place the legation in China upon a permanent footing, I find that it is not possible to state, with accuracy, the price for which the grounds and buildings owned by Dr. Williams could be purchased, or the amount which would now be required to put the property in good condition.

The grounds were purchased and buildings erected by Mr. Williams, the secretary of legation, in 1866, who reported that some $14,500 were first expended, and that $10,000 would be required to complete the buildings. On this question I refer you to Ex. Doc. No. 72, F. R., 1868-'69, pages 14, 15.

As to the exact condition of the buildings, and what work has since been done, I am not advised.

On the whole, I am inclined to the opinion that, without further information on the question, it would be better to make provision for China similar to that made for Japan by act of March 3, 1873, (Statutes at Large, vol. 17, page 582.)

I recommend that the Secretary of State be authorized to rent, furnish, and keep suitable buildings and grounds appurtenant, at Peking, for the use of the legation in, China, at an annual cost not exceeding $5,000; and that such lease be for a term of two years or more, with renewals, as may be deemed advisable by the Secretary of State; and that it be provided that $5,000 be appropriated therefor.

Should Congress deem it advisable to provide a permanent fund, I would recommend that the Secretary of State be authorized to appropriate and set apart a sufficient amount of the Chinese indemnity fund to produce an income of $5,000, and to devote such income to that purpose.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

HAMILTON FISH.

Hon. THOMAS SWANN,
House of Representatives.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, January 27, 1875.

SIR: By the first section of the act of the 20th of June last (Laws of 1st session 43d Congress, chap. 333,) the contract between the United States and Little, Brown & Co., of Boston, entered into on the 28th day of May, 1866, and all other contracts then existing between the United States or any officer thereof and said company, respecting the printing or publication of the laws of the United States were declared to be determined pursuant to the powers therein reserved.

Previous to the passage of the act referred to, the firm of Little, Brown & Co. had, in pursuance of the existing contract, made considerable progress with the printing of the acts of the then current session, this course being necessary to enable them to comply with a provision of the contract which required the pamphlet edition of the laws of each session to be ready for distribution within seventy days after the close of the session. For the expense thus incurred up to the date of the passage of the act determining the contract, they have now rendered their bill, amounting to $1,690.01. The account is accompanied with proper vouchers showing that it covers only the actual outlay, with five per cent. added in accordance with the terms of the contract.

A sufficient balance remains of the appropriation for publishing the laws of the last session, in pamphlet form and in newspapers, (chap. 328, laws 1st session, 43d Congress,) to pay this claim, but as by the contract with Little, Brown & Co., they were to be paid only on the completion and delivery of the pamphlet laws of each session, the Department is not authorized to pay for the part of the work done up to the time when the contract was terminated, and authority is needed to make the payment.

The contract with Little, Brown & Co. being now terminated, they claim a right of property in the stereotype plates from which the statutes have been printed; and as there is no provision in the act terminating the contract to re-imburse them for the expense of continued storage and insurance, they do not feel disposed to incur the future expense of such preservation of the plates. They have intimated a willingness to dispose of their interest in them to the United States at about their value as old metal; and, as in case of any accident occasioning a loss of the original files of any of the acts of Congress, the stereotype plates might be considered valuable as evidence of authenticity of said acts, and as some possible future use may be required of them, it is conceived that their purchase by the Government, and preservation in a fire-proof depository at the Capitol, would be a matter of prudence and economy.

A provision by Congress authorizing the use of so much of the unexpended balance of the appropriation referred to as may be necessary for the payment of the account in question, and of not exceeding six thousand dollars of the same appropriation, for the purchase, transportation, and transit-insurance of the stereotyped plates, will, it is believed, effect the purpose now in view in reference to both objects.

I inclose herewith a copy of the letter of Little, Brown & Co. on the subject to this Department.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

HAMILTON FISH.

Hon. JAMES A. GARFIELD,
*Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives.*

WASHINGTON, January 22, 1875.

DEAR SIR: Referring to our claim made upon the Department of State by letter of July 3, 1874, for expenses incurred in preparing for press the editions of the session laws of the first session of Forty-third Congress, prior to the act of June 20, 1874, by which our contracts of October 31, 1850, and March 31, 1866, were determined, we beg leave to inclose herewith our account of such expenses actually paid by us, with vouchers for the same, amounting to $1,690.01. We would also call the attention of the Department to the facts relating to the stereotype plates of the eighteen volumes of Statutes at Large and treaties of the United States, which are now in our possession, and to the propriety of making some proper arrangement in regard to the same. By the provisions of the contracts made with our firm of L., B. & Co., and in pursuance of the resolutions of Congress by which the same were authorized, in order that the United States may procure at any time such copies as they may need of said published laws and treaties, it is provided that the publishers shall stereotype the same, and shall convey to the United States such interest, ownership, and control over the stereotype plates thereof as shall secure the delivery of such copies in whosoever hands said plates may be at any future and distant period of time; and that said firm shall also effect and maintain insurance upon said plates for the benefit of the United States and of themselves, as proprietors of said plates. Said statutes have been so stereotyped, and the interest, ownership, and control over said plates has been conveyed to the United States to the extent and for the purposes aforesaid, but not otherwise; and we have at all times maintained insurance thereon as agreed. Said stereotype plates have now accumulated in large quantity, and the storage and preservation thereof and insurance thereon are, and will be, of great expense. By reasons of the provisions of the act of the United States of June 27, 1866, entitled "An act to provide for the revision and consolidation of the statute laws of the United States," and of the acts in addition thereto, further copies of said statute laws so published by us in past years are not likely to be required for the use of the United States to any large extent nor to meet with a sale in the market, and the value of said stereotype plates, as such, will be wholly lost and the further preservation thereof a needless expenditure and waste, and we would therefore represent that it is just and reasonable that we should be released from our obligations under said contracts, further to preserve or insure said stereotype plates or to furnish copies therefrom, and be allowed to make such use as we may see fit of the material thereof; or that the United States may take said plates to their own keeping and use, at such valuation as may be deemed just.

Yours, very respectfully,

LITTLE, BROWN & CO.

HON. HAMILTON FISH,
Secretary of State.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., January 16, 1875.

SIR I have the honor to transmit herewith copy of a communication received from the Supervising Architect in reference to the necessity of an appropriation of $40,000 required for "furniture and repairs of the same for public buildings" for the service of the fiscal year 1875, and to request that the same may be inserted in the deficiency bill now pending in the House.

I am, very respectfully,

B. H. BRISTOW,
Secretary.

HON. JAMES A. GARFIELD,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF SUPERVISING ARCHITECT,
January 12, 1875.

SIR: The estimate for furniture and repairs of furniture for public buildings under the control of this Department for the current fiscal year was $200,000, of which amount Congress appropriated but $150,000, and made available of that to pay for expenditures incurred during the past fiscal year $20,000, instead of appropriating the amount asked by this Department to supply deficiencies for the past year, leaving actually but $130,000 for the current fiscal year, which, with the exception of but $9,787.52, has already been expended, or authorized to be expended, for necessary furniture for the various buildings under the control of the Department. No expenditures to exceed this amount will be authorized, unless by authority of Congress, but there is required, besides the current necessary repairs to the furniture in the buildings, furniture for the extension of the court-house and post-office at Indianapolis, Ind.; for the custom-house at Milwaukee, Wis., which building has just been placed in thorough repair; for additional rooms in the custom-house at Boston, Mass., made by the recent alterations; and for the custom-house at Toledo, Ohio, which is almost destitute of furniture. The furniture for these buildings is needed immediately, and it is estimated will cost not less than $40,000, which amount I respectfully request may be included in the deficiency appropriation bill for the current fiscal year.

Very respectfully,

WM. A. POTTER,
Supervising Architect.

Hon. B. H. Bristow,
Secretary of the Treasury.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., January 14, 1875.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith copy of a letter received from the Supervising Architect in reference to a deficiency of $67,635.45 in the appropriation for "fuel, lights, and water for public buildings," for the fiscal year 1875, and to request that, in order to cover the same, a deficiency item of $40,313.26, and a clause to make available for the current fiscal year the unexpended balance remaining to the credit of this appropriation for the last fiscal year, be inserted in the deficiency bill now pending in the House, as requested therein.

I am, very respectfully,

B. H. BRISTOW,
Secretary.

Hon. JAMES A. GARFIELD,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF SUPERVISING ARCHITECT,
Washington, D. C., January 11, 1875.

SIR: The estimate submitted for the amount required to defray the expense of fuel, light, water, and miscellaneous items for public buildings under this Department during the current fiscal year, based upon the expenditures of the previous year, was $275,000. Congress, however, appropriated but $225,000. Subsequent to the appropriation, estimates of the probable cost of fuel, light, water, and miscellaneous items for the year were asked for and received from the custodians of the various buildings, which amounted in the aggregate to $311,099.47, which sum being so much in excess of the appropriation, revised estimates were called for, some of which have been received and in other cases letters have been received from the custodians stating that no reduction could be made in their former estimates. The revised estimates, together with those which could not be reduced, amount to $292,635.45, which would leave a deficit, deducting the amount appropriated, $225,000, of $67,635.45 under this appropriation for the current fiscal year. There is, however, a balance in the Treasury to the credit of the appropriation above named for the past fiscal year unavailable under the act of July 12, 1870, of $27,322.19, which, if made available by Congress, would leave a deficiency of but $40,313.26, and I respectfully request that an item be included in the deficiency appropriation bill to cover this amount, and a clause inserted therein to make available the balance of last year referred to above.

Very respectfully,

WM. A. POTTER,
Supervising Architect.

Hon. B. H. BRISTOW,
Secretary of the Treasury.

UNITED STATES POST-OFFICE AND COURT-HOUSE AT NEW YORK CITY.

No. 1.

Estimate of cost to complete building from and after February 1, 1875.

CELLAR.

Setting 2 engine boilers; flagging, flooring, and finishing around hydraulic elevators.....	$6,500 00
--	------------

BASEMENT.

20,000 square feet flooring, at 30 cents.....	$6,000 00
4,450 square yards plastering on brick arches, at 75 cents.....	3,337 50
4,900 square feet turning and lathing under drive-way, at 30 cents.....	1,470 00
60,000 brick-work on partition and wall-linings, at $45.....	2,700 00
300 linear feet cast-iron skirting around hydraulic elevator-openings, at $2.50.....	750 00
150 linear feet wardrobes and water-closets, at $12.....	1,800 00
1,200 square feet platform and steps to wardrobes and water-closets, at 60 cents.....	720 00
2 new iron stairs, southwest front, like stairs "E," at $2,500...	5,000 00
40 linear feet wainscoting, stairs "C," at $3.50.....	140 00
350 linear feet soffit to mezzanine floor between cast-iron screens and elsewhere, (entrance floor,) at $1.50.....	525 00
Painting 173 columns and 1,600 yards of iron-work.....	2,500 00
Ten windows, with trimmings, at $60.....	600 00
Eight doors, complete, at $60.....	480 00
		$26,022 50

FIRST STORY.

2,000 square yards plastering, at 75 cents.....	1,500 00
Two architraves to elevator shafts, with cornice complete, including furring and lathing, and cornice of mezzanine-floor rooms.....	1,250 00
30,000 feet flooring, at $30.....	9,000 00
11,500 feet tiling, (material on hand,) at 20 cents.....	2,300 00
Painting 117 columns, 30 feet high, at $30.....	3,510 00
Painting 1,500 yards of iron panels, soffits, and fire-proof shutters, at $1.50.....	2,250 00
Painting skylight, stairs, screens, and iron generally.....	3,500 00
Cast-iron finish around 10 hydraulic elevators, and other iron-work.....	2,500 00
Two doors to elevators, with transom lights, at $125.....	250 00
750 linear feet painting, mezzanine-floor railing, at $2.....	1,500 00
Painting 60 architraves to openings, at $15.....	900 00
		28,460 00

SECOND FLOOR.

500 square yards plastering, at 75 cents.....	375 00
4,500 square yards hard finish, at 30 cents.....	1,350 00
150 linear feet cornice, at $2.50.....	375 00
1,250 square feet flooring, at 30 cents.....	375 00
7,960 square feet tiling, at 70 cents.....	5,572 00
Painting 74 door architraves, at $10.....	740 00
Painting 81 windows and shutters, at $15.....	1,215 00
Painting 126 pilasters, at $6.....	756 00
Painting stairs and general work.....	500 00
90 linear feet wardrobes and water-closets of black walnut, including platform and steps, at $12.....	1,080 00
Groin arches, walls in water-closets, concreting, and jobbing...	3,000 00
		15,338 00

THIRD STORY.

Concreting and brick-work.....	$2,000 00
300 square yards plastering, at 75 cents.....	225 00
4,900 square yards plastering, finishing, at 30 cents.....	1,470 00
1,250 linear feet cornice, 7-foot girth, at $3.....	3,750 00
Painting 81 window architraves and shutters, at $25.....	2,025 00
Painting 76 doors, at $15.....	1,140 00
Painting 126 pilasters, at $12.....	1,512 00
Painting other iron and wood work.....	500 00
56 wardrobes and water-closets, including platform and steps, at $12.....	672 00
Finishing doors and sashes, and hanging same.....	950 00
		14,244 00

FOURTH STORY.

7,250 square yards plastering, at 75 cents.....	5,437 50
3,950 linear feet cornice, at $2.50.....	9,875 00

900 square yards concrete, at $2	$1,800 00
9,750 square feet tiling, at 70 cents	6,825 00
Painting 81 window architraves and shutters, at $25	2,025 00
Painting 76 doors, at $15	1,140 00
Painting 126 pilasters, at $12	1,512 00
Painting stairs, other iron-work, &c	2,500 00
110 doors to complete, at $25	2,750 00
Sashes for 81 windows, at $20	1,620 00
		$35,484 50

ATTIC.

1,100 square yards plastering, at 75 cents	825 00
475 linear feet cornice, 9-foot girth, at $3.50	1,662 50
Painting	2,500 00
6 doors, at $150	900 00
		5,887 50

COURT-ROOMS.

3 court-rooms, including all ornamental work, iron stylobate, gallery, large ventilators in ceiling, furring and lathing, at $25,000	75,000 00
---	-----------

CORNER PAVILION.

17,530 square feet furring and lathing, at 30 cents	5,259 00
1,935 square yards plastering, at $1	1,935 00
140 square yards ornamental ceiling, at $6	840 00
90 linear feet cornice, at $7.50	675 00
Change in door-openings and window-architraves	4,500 00
Finish over 5 stairs, F, G, and H, at $500	2,500 00
400 linear feet bronze railing on Broadway and Park Row curtains, at $3	1,200 00
		223,845 50
Contingencies, add 10 per cent		22,384 55

Total 246,230 05

W. G. STEINMETZ,
Assistant Superintendent.

No. 2.

Amounts due on contracts not included in estimate, when completed.

Due for material already delivered	$20,000 00
Due Henvelman, Haven & Co., iron, to complete	22,500 00
Due Edward A. Boyd, glass	6,176 00
Due George Dwight, jr., & Co., furring and lathing	7,500 00
Due L. Atwood, elevators	8,000 00
Due Davidson & Mars, hydraulic elevators, (10)	7,371 62
Due Davidson & Mars, corner pavilion stairs and elevators	79,849 34
Due Bartlett, Robbins & Co., iron stairs, &c	161,306 06
Due fire-proof shutters	35,000 00
Due Kellogg Bridge Co., iron-work on roof	7,500 00
Due plumbing	15,000 00
Total	370,203 02

RECAPITULATION.

Amount Statement I	$246,230 05
Amount Statement II	370,203 02
Total to complete building	616,433 07
(See Statement No. 5.)

No. 3.

Estimate for area along building-line on park front, as shown on plan.

920 cubic yards of excavations at $1	$920 00
230 linear feet sheet piling and shoring at $10	2,300 00
17 windows cut through walls, including walling and pointing up, at $70	1,190 00

370 superficial feet window-sills at $3.....	$1,110 00
17 window-frames, including sashes, complete, at $140.....	2,380 00
7,650 pounds 10-inch iron beams, at 10 cents.....	765 00
2,212 superficial feet coping and grating, at $2.....	4,424 00
220 linear feet sewer-pipe, at $5.....	1,100 00
221 linear feet coping, (granite,) at $2.50.....	552 50
88 linear feet coping, (granite,) at $2.....	176 00
215 linear feet coping, (granite,) at $14.....	3,010 00
217 linear feet fence, (stone,) at $6.50.....	1,410 50
275 linear feet iron fence and gate at $15.....	4,125 00
4 granite gate-posts, at $1,000.....	4,000 00
6,800 superficial feet of sidewalk concreting, at 30 cents.....	2,040 00	$29,503 00
Contingencies, add 15 per cent.....		4,425 45
Estimate for paving and grading around the proposed improvement, as per plan and estimate attached.....		11,160 00
Total.....		45,088 45

No. 4.

Estimate for attic, not included in the original estimate.

3,000 square yards concrete, at $2.....	$6,000 00
20,588 superficial feet flooring, at 30 cents.....	6,176 40
9,500 superficial feet tiling, at $1.....	9,500 00
18,000 superficial feet lining to mansard roof, at 40 cents.....	7,200 00
7,500 yards plastering, at 75 cents.....	5,625 00
9,500 feet furring to hall ceiling, at 30 cents.....	2,850 00
1,056 yards plastering to hall ceiling, at 75 cents.....	792 00
300 M brick along roof, at $50.....	15,000 00
Sky-light to park front and southwest domes, at $500.....	1,000 00
3 sky-lights in ventilating shaft-roofs, at $250.....	750 00
Flag-poles and weather-vanes.....	2,500 00
Stairs from attic to dome, including brick walls.....	2,750 00
Heating new rooms in southwest front and park front dome ...	4,500 00
Gas-pipes.....	750 00
		$65,393 40
Contingencies, add 15 per cent.....		9,809 01
Total.....		75,202 41

No. 5.

Cost of heating-apparatus to date.

Contract, Davidson & Mars.....	$178,000 00
Extra heating and ventilation, not included in contract.....	20,000 00
Work performed by Government employes for heating and ventilation, such as masonry, cutting extra attic ventilation, tending heating boilers, and furnishing fuel since January 1, 1874.....	82,000 00

MACHINERY.

10 hydraulic elevators.....	27,000 00
2 Atwood elevators.....	13,000 00
2 hydraulic elevators, cor. pavilion.....	30,000 00
2 boilers for engines.....	6,500 00
Extra work on elevators.....	10,000 00
	$366,500 00

OFFICE OF THE SUPERINTENDENT OF CONSTRUCTION,
UNITED STATES POST-OFFICE AND COURT-HOUSE,
BROADWAY, OPPOSITE PARK PLACE,
New York, February 5, 1875.

SIR: Inclosed please find an estimate of the cost to complete this building from and after the 1st instant, as shown on statements Nos. 1 and 2, herein inclosed, and amounting together to the sum of six hundred and sixteen thousand four hundred and thirty-three dollars and seven cents, ($616,433.07.)

Statement No. 3 exhibits the cost of a proposed area along the park front, as contemplated a long time ago. The space under the drive-way, 314 feet long and about 27 feet wide, is intended for the use of the paper-department of the post-office. By the present arrangement the only light admitted is through the illuminated tiling against the front of the building. By building the proposed area, windows may be cut through the present retaining-wall, thus giving ample light and ventilation, which will be much needed. The city has granted six (6) feet of the sidewalk for building this area, and on application would give a wider space.

I have included in my statement the estimate of the city surveyor of the cost to change the grades and curb and to do the necessary paving, making the total cost forty-five thousand and eighty-eight dollars and forty-five cents, ($45,088.45.)

Statement No. 4 gives the cost to complete those portions of the attic which were not included in the original estimate. I think that it is of great importance to have back lining to the slate to keep wind, dust, and snow out of the attic and domes. The completion of the story would also render necessary flooring, plastering, and ceiling to halls, the cost of which, as per statement, will be seventy-five thousand two hundred and two dollars and forty-one cents, ($75,262.41.)

The rooms in the attic are spacious, well lighted, heated, and ventilated. A portion of the rooms will be required for the use of the United States marshal, and the others may be used as file and record rooms. The greater part of this floor is already concreted and sleepers laid ready for flooring.

Statement No. 5 exhibits the total cost of heating and ventilating apparatus and machinery when completed. The total cost, as shown by statement, will be three hundred and sixty-six thousand five hundred dollars, ($366,500,) although the amount appropriated for this purpose was only two hundred thousand dollars, ($200,000.)

In conclusion, I would call your attention to the fact that in making the above estimates I have taken into consideration both the present state of the work and the difficulties that may hereafter be encountered in handling material, &c., through the building.

Very respectfully,

W. G. STEINMETZ,
Assistant Superintendent.

Hon. C. T. HULBURD,
Superintendent, &c.

OFFICE OF THE SUPERINTENDENT OF CONSTRUCTION,
UNITED STATES POST-OFFICE AND COURT-HOUSE,
BROADWAY, OPPOSITE PARK PLACE,
New York, February 5, 1875.

SIR: Inclosed please find W. G. Steinmetz's, esq., assistant superintendent, report and estimates of amount of funds required to finish this building, prepared and sent as per your telegram directions of the 26th and 28th of January ultimo.

Very respectfully,

C. T. HULBURD, Superintendent.

WM. A. POTTER, Esq.,
Supervising Architect.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., February 19, 1875.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith copy of a letter from the Supervising Architect, under date of the 15th instant, with accompanying papers, and to recommend that provision be made in some one of the appropriation bills now pending for the amounts as requested therein, as follows:

Post-office and subtreasury, Boston, Mass.: For furniture, including fittings, fixtures, counters, carpets, and mats, $100,000; $40,655.98 of this amount expended for counters, &c., from appropriation for construction of the building (Statutes, vol. 17, p. 353) to be refunded to latter appropriation.

Court-house and post-office, Columbia, S. C.: For furniture, including fittings, fixtures, counters, and carpets, $25,000.

Court-house and post-office, Indianapolis, Ind.: For completion of extension and remodeling the old building for court-house and post-office at Indianapolis, Ind., $12,000. (See Exhibit A.)

Court-house and post-office, Omaha, Nebr.: For completion of building, $10,000. (See Exhibit B.)

Post-office and court-house, New York: For completion of building, $388,160.08 (See Exhibit C.)

Vaults, safes, and locks, for public buildings, 1875: For vaults, safes, and locks for public buildings under the control of the Treasury Department, $5,000.

Very respectfully,

B. H. BRISTOW,
Secretary.

Hon. JAMES A. GARFIELD,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE SUPERVISING ARCHITECT,
Washington, D. C., February 15, 1875.

SIR: I have the honor to request that appropriations for the following objects may be obtained during the present session of Congress for the reasons hereinafter specified, viz:

Boston, Mass., post-office and subtreasury, furniture	$100,000 00
Columbia, S. C., court-house and post-office, furniture	25,000 00
Indianapolis, Ind., court-house and post-office, for completion, extension, and repairs of the old portion of the building and payment of out- standing liabilities on account of the same	12,000 00
Omaha, Nebr., court-house and post-office, for completion of building	10,000 00
Vaults, safes, and locks for public buildings	5,000 00
New York post-office and court-house, completion of building	388,160 08
Total	540 160 08

The Boston post-office and subtreasury is virtually completed and occupied by the Post-Office Department. No appropriation has been made for furniture for the building, but under act approved June 10, 1872, (Statutes at Large, page 353,) authorizing "the necessary furniture and outfit for the post-office and subtreasury, and for preparing the approaches thereto, fifty thousand dollars, (\$50,000,) to be paid out of the appropriation already made," an expenditure of forty thousand six hundred and fifty-five and $\frac{98}{100}$ dollars (\$40,655.98) has been made in the purchase and manufacture of part of the working furniture at the post-office—the post-office screen and counters, the marble counters in the cash-room of the assistant treasurer's office, the gas-fixtures, &c., of the whole building—which amount should be refunded to the appropriation for the construction of the building. The balance of the appropriation asked for, viz, fifty-nine thousand three hundred and forty-four and $\frac{2}{100}$ dollars, (\$59,344.02,) will be required to be expended in the purchase of office-furniture—desks, chairs, wardrobes, file-cases, carpets, &c.—for the post-office and the offices of the assistant treasurer. A less amount will not, in my opinion, be sufficient to meet the necessary expenditures therefor.

The United States court-house and post-office at Columbia, S. C., will be completed and ready for occupancy by the 1st of July, and the amount asked for furniture is for the purchase or manufacture of the working and office furniture of the post-office and the furniture, carpets, &c., of the court-rooms in the building.

The work on the extension of the United States court-house and post-office at Indianapolis, Ind., and the repairs of the old building, is at present suspended for want of funds for its completion.

Inclosed please find the estimate of the superintendent of the sum required to meet these expenditures and to pay outstanding liabilities on account of the work, amounting to $10,334.83, to which I have added the sum of $1,665.17, which, in my opinion, will be required to meet unforeseen expenditures on account of the work. The wants of the public service demand that this work should be completed at the earliest moment practicable, and I have therefore to request that the necessary appropriation may be obtained.

The United States court-house and post-office at Omaha, Nebr., is very nearly completed, but the amount asked for is absolutely necessary in order to finish the work. I inclose herewith the estimate of Jonas Gise, superintendent, amounting to $9,808.20, to which I have added the sum of $192.80, which, in my opinion, will be found necessary to complete the building.

The appropriation for the furniture was made last year, and contracts are about being entered into for the supply of the same. The building is at present occupied by the Post-Office Department, and will be ready for the accommodation of the United States courts by the first of May, should the appropriation herein asked for be granted.

The amount asked for vaults, safes, and locks for public buildings is to meet expenditures in advertising during the current fiscal year for this department, and is more particularly in the nature of a deficiency.

The amount required to complete the United States court-house and post-office at New York City, viz, $736,723.93, is comprised in the following sums: To complete the building proper, as heretofore intended, from February 1 instant, not already contracted for, $246,230.05; to balance due on contracts when completed, $370,203.02; to area on park front, $45,088.45; and to estimate for finishing the attic-story, not included in the original estimate, $75,204.41, as per inclosed estimate of the superintendent, in which these items are specifically detailed.

To meet these expenditures there was in the Treasury on the 1st instant the sum of $348,563.85, leaving the amount required to be appropriated, $388,160.08.

The apparent deficiency on account of this work arises in part as follows: The cost of the heating, ventilating, and hoisting apparatus exceeds by $166,500 the amount appropriated therefor last year, and exceeds the amount of the estimates submitted last year in the sum of $130,500, and the balance arises from the underestimation of the cost of the work.

The amount asked for the area on the park front is to render available the space under the drive-way, which is 314 feet long and about 27 feet wide, and is intended for the use of the newspaper department of the post-office. It is absolutely necessary to make this space available, as the large quantity of newspaper-mail daily received at this office cannot be accommodated in the basement-story, unless by cramping to such an extent as to render it almost impossible to conduct the business of the office properly and with economy. There has already been expended in the construction of this area very nearly $100,000, and unless utilized the money has been unnecessarily spent. To utilize this space it is necessary to cut openings in the retaining-wall and build area windows, in order to get proper light and ventilation, as exhibited on the drawing inclosed.

The amount required to complete the attic-story, $75,202.41, arises from the fact that the rooms in that story are required for the prosecution of the public business, and are already provided with heating and ventilating and hoisting apparatus and machinery, which was not heretofore contemplated, and in this particular increased the cost over the estimate for the same as hereinbefore specified. The amount required includes $31,000 which must be expended in plastering the ceilings and back-lining the slate to keep wind, dust, and snow out, and in order to confine the heat from the heating-apparatus. The rooms in the attic are spacious and well lighted, and in my opinion the interests of the Government demand the completion of the attic-story as specified in the estimate herewith.

If the amount herein estimated shall be appropriated, the building will be completed and occupied early in the coming summer, and I have no hesitation in saying that the building can be completed within that sum, but not for a less amount.

Very respectfully,

WM. A. POTTER,
Supervising Architect.

Hon. B. H. BRISTOW.
Secretary of the Treasury.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., February 24, 1875.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith copy of a letter from the Supervising Architect, under date of the 10th instant, and accompanying papers, in which that officer requests that an appropriation be made for repairing the damage to the post-office building at Newport, R. I., caused by fire on the 21st ultimo, and also an appropriation for the erection of a storage-building adjacent to the custom-house in that city.

I have the honor to recommend that provision be made in some pending appropriation bill for the appropriation of seven thousand four hundred and nineteen dollars and forty-three cents ($7,419.43) for the repair of said post-office building; and an appropriation of three thousand seven hundred and twelve dollars and fifty cents ($3,712.50) for the erection of a building for storage and other purposes connected with the custom-house at Newport, R. I. This expenditure has been made a necessity by the remodeling of the building used for the custom-house, and because the lower floor is occupied by the city post-office, thus depriving the collector of the store-room which he formerly occupied.

I have the honor to recommend that the above-mentioned appropriations may be made available upon the passage of the act.

The papers inclosed herewith, which accompany the copy of letter of Supervising Architect, are a report on the damage to the post-office building resulting from the fire of the 21st ultimo, and two letters from the collector of customs of that port in regard to the erection of a building for storage, and location thereof.

Very respectfully,

B. H. BRISTOW.
Secretary.

Hon. JAMES A. GARFIELD,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., February 4, 1875.

SIR: I have the honor to recommend that the following item be inserted in the deficiency bill, now in the hands of your committee: "For the payment of the necessary expenses of defending the United States in respect to claims for net proceeds of cotton, under section 5 of act making appropriations to supply deficiencies, &c., approved May 18, 1872, six thousand dollars."

I am, very respectfully,

CHAS. F. CONANT,
Acting Secretary.

Hon. JAMES A. GARFIELD,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., January 9, 1875.

SIR: I have the honor to invite your attention to the inclosed copy of a letter from the Comptroller of the Currency, relative to an estimate of $216,000 required to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for "expenses of national currency" for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, which has been embodied in the regular deficiency estimates this day transmitted to the honorable Speaker of the House of Representatives.

I am, very respectfully,

CHAS. F. CONANT,
Assistant Secretary.

Hon. JAMES A. GARFIELD,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF COMPTROLLER OF THE CURRENCY,
Washington, D. C., January 7, 1875.

SIR: No estimate was submitted for the additional expense attendant upon the issue of national-bank currency under the act of June 20, 1874. The amount of circulation issued for the last four months of 1873 was $10,026,735; the amount issued for the corresponding four months of 1874 was $40,935,934; showing an increase in the past year of more than four times the amount issued for the corresponding period of the previous year.

The whole appropriation authorized for the present fiscal year is therefore exhausted, and unpaid bills have accumulated during the last two months amounting to $55,085.02. It is estimated that an appropriation will be required of about $27,000 for each month, out of which to pay the expenses of paper, printing, and express-charges, together with the additional expense of printing the charter-number upon the notes and of numbering, sealing, and trimming the same for the period of eight months from November 1, 1874, to June 30, 1875, or, in all, an appropriation amounting to $216,000.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully,

JOHN JAY KNOX,
Comptroller.

Hon. B. H. BRISTOW,
Secretary of the Treasury.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., February 16, 1875.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith copy of a letter from the Director of the Mint, inclosing letters—copies of which are herewith inclosed—from mint-officers in Philadelphia, setting forth the necessity for a more certain water-supply for the mint of the United States than that obtained from the city water-works, and requesting an appropriation for the purpose of sinking an artesian well within the mint. I have the honor, therefore, to recommend the appropriation of ten thousand dollars ($10,000) for the purpose.

Very respectfully,

B. H. BRISTOW,
Secretary.

Hon. JAMES A. GARFIELD,
Chairman of Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF THE MINT,
Washington, D. C., January 25, 1875.

SIR: I respectfully invite your attention to the inclosed letters from the superintendent of the United States mint at Philadelphia, dated the 7th and 23d instant, together with a copy of a letter from Mr. James C. Booth, melter and refiner of that institution, relative to the necessity of an artesian well for the supply of water for the use of the mint, and submitting an estimate of the probable expense thereof.

The grounds assigned for this necessity are, in my judgment, good and sufficient, while the benefits accruing therefrom would, in the contingencies alluded to in Mr. Pollock's communication, be incalculable.

I therefore respectfully request that you cause an estimate to be made for the sum asked for, ($10,000,) and submit the same to the Committee on Appropriations, with your favorable recommendation that it may be appropriated for in the sundry civil bill.

I have the honor to be, sir, very respectfully,

H. R. LINDERMAN,
Director.

Hon. B. H. BRISTOW,
Secretary of the Treasury.

MINT OF THE UNITED STATES AT PHILADELPHIA,
MELTING AND REFINING DEPARTMENT,
December 31, 1874.

DEAR SIR: In view of the past history of insufficient water-supply from the city works, and especially in view of the probable extent of silver-melting which is likely to be called for from this mint, permit me to draw your attention to the importance of procuring a sufficient supply of water for this mint, independent of the city works, with all their contingencies of insufficient supply, repairs to works, &c., from which we have suffered to a serious extent within the last few years.

I have estimated roughly that to obtain sufficient water and of good quality by boring, the cost would not exceed the capital represented by the amount we annually pay for the use of the city water.

May I urge you to draw the Director's attention to this point, as materially affecting our ability to execute increased work on bullion at this mint, and to the importance of an early legislation on the subject, because time will be required to make the requisite boring, if it be ordered?

Respectfully, yours,

JAMES C. BOOTH.
Melter and Refiner.

Hon. JAMES POLLOCK,
Superintendent United States Mint, Philadelphia.

MINT OF THE UNITED STATES,
MELTING AND REFINING DEPARTMENT,
Philadelphia, January 21, 1875.

DEAR SIR: In reference to the proposed well to be sunk at the mint, I have to say that many borings for water have been made in different parts of this city, and I know of no one that has failed to get a very full supply of water. Within some distance below the surface the water is apt to be more or less contaminated with city drainage or impurities, but at the depths of one to three hundred feet the water there met with probably comes under ground from a distance of miles, and is entirely independent of the surface and surface-water at the mouth of the well. The reason for this is that water under ground flows along the strata, which under Philadelphia are chiefly horizontal. Hence the rain falling on the surface of the earth, more or less, descends through the soil and strata of sand and gravel until it reaches a clay-bed, or clay-slate, or any water-tight rock, and then it flows along this close-grained surface until it comes out in springs, or oozes out through any loose strata. Hence there is always water to be found at some depth in inexhaustible supply; but in some localities the depth is too great to warrant the expenditure required to sink a well. There is no prospect of so unfavorable a result in Philadelphia within the depths of several hundred feet, and this supply is independent of the rivers. I think it will be necessary to descend from 150 to 300 feet in order to secure abundance of water of sufficiently good quality, and I think that experience warrants the belief that we shall find it.

Respectfully, yours,

JAS. C. BOOTH,
Melter and Refiner.

Hon. JAMES POLLOCK,
Superintendent United States Mint at Philadelphia.

MINT OF THE UNITED STATES,
Philadelphia, January 7, 1875.

SIR: I desire to call your attention to the fact that a better and more reliable supply of water for this mint is necessary for our future operations. To secure it, an artesian well sunk on the mint-premises will, in my judgment, be the best and most economical arrangement that could be made to meet our wants in this direction.

I have invited a statement on this subject from Professor Booth, our melter and refiner, a copy of which I inclose for your consideration. I entirely agree with him in the opinion that the cost would not exceed the capital, a little less than $10,000, represented by the amount ($583) we annually pay for the use of the city water, with the added advantage of being always sure of our water-supply and free from the risk of all adverse contingencies, whether arising from drought or casualties to the city water-works. I think the well could be put down by workmen now on our pay-rolls, under the supervision of some of our employes who have had large experience in sinking oil-wells. This would materially lessen the cost of the improvement, unless it should be deemed advisable to have it done by contract.

An appropriation will be required to defray the cost of the well, and the requisite fixtures for the distribution of the water, and I earnestly commend the subject to your early and favorable consideration.

Very respectfully,

JAS. POLLOCK,
Superintendent.

Hon. H. R. LINDERMAN,
Director of the Mint, Washington, D. C.

MINT OF THE UNITED STATES,
Philadelphia, January 23, 1875.

SIR: In reply to your inquiry of the 20th instant, I herewith forward a copy of a letter of the 21st instant, from Professor Booth, our melter and refiner, giving his general views, which accord with my own impressions, with regard to artesian wells in this locality, and the probability of reaching, by this means, a full supply of water for the mint. I may add to this the fact which I have ascertained, that the artesian well at the Continental Hotel in this city is 275 feet deep, of which about 180 feet was through solid rock, and that, to test its capacity, aside from its natural flow, they pumped it at one time, by steam-power, for forty-eight hours, at the rate of sixty gallons a minute, without being able to exhaust or diminish the supply.

Very respectfully,

JAS. POLLOCK,
Superintendent.

Estimates of appropriations required for the service of the fiscal years ending June 30, 1874 and 1875.

General object. (Title of appropriation.)	Detailed objects of expenditure and explanations.	Date of acts, resolutions, or treaties authorizing or providing for the expenditures.	References to Statutes at Large.			Estimated amount which will be required for each detailed object of expenditure.	Total amount to be appropriated under each head of appropriation.	Amount appropriated for the current fiscal year ending June 30, 187-.
			Vol.	Page.	Sec.
MINTS AND ASSAY-OFFICES.
	Mint of the United States at Philadelphia: Transportation of bullion and trade-dollars, being a deficiency for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1874	Mar. 3, 1873	17	497	1		$773 70
Freight on bullion	Mint of the United States at San Francisco: Wages of workmen and adjusters, being a deficiency for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875.....	Feb. 12, 1873	17	424	4, 12		37, 000 00
Wages of workmen ...	Fuel, copper for alloy, chemicals, and other incidentals, being a deficiency for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875.....	Appropriated	18	97	1		19, 000 00
Contingent expenses...	Mint of the United States at Carson: Wages of workmen and adjusters, being a deficiency for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875.....	Feb. 12, 1873	17	424	4, 12		16, 000 00
Wages of workmen ...	Fuel, chemicals, acids, and other incidentals, being a deficiency for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1874	Appropriated	17	498	4	$4, 000 00
Contingent expenses...	Wood, charcoal, sulphuric acid, crucibles, fluxes, copper for refining and alloy, freight and other incidental expenses, being a deficiency for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875	do				79, 000 00	83, 000 00
Wastage in refining....	To cover excess of silver wastage in melter and refiners' operations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1874.....	Submitted...					804 07
Wages of workmen	Assay-office at New York: Wages of workmen, being a deficiency for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875.	Feb. 12, 1873	17	424	4, 12		10, 000 00
Contingent expenses...	Repairs, materials, acids, and other incidentals, being a deficiency for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875.....	Appropriated	18	97	1		10, 000 00
Total for mints and assay-offices							176, 577 77

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF THE MINT,
January 12, 1875.

SIR: I have the honor to request that you will procure the following deficiency appropriations on account of the Mint service for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1874:

MINT UNITED STATES, PHILADELPHIA.

There is due the Adams Express Company on account of transportation of bullion and trade-dollars, between the assay-office, New York, and the Mint at Philadelphia, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1874, the sum of $773.70, and which amount should be provided for in the deficiency bill.

MINT UNITED STATES, CARSON.

At the annual settlement of accounts for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1874, there was an excess in the amount allowed by law, in the melter and refiner's silver wastage of $804.07, and for which an appropriation should be made in order to re-imburse the bullion-fund to that amount.

The report of Professor Schirmer, assayer in charge of the mint at Denver, who was sent by the director to examine into the causes of the excessive wastage, will be found annexed.

Incidental and contingent expenses incurred by the former superintendent of the Carson mint for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1874, and not estimated for, the sum of $4,000 will be required.

These expenses appear to have been proper, and, in my opinion, should be provided for.

I have the honor to be, sir, very respectfully,

H. R. LINDERMAN,
Director.

HON. BENJAMIN H. BRISTOW,
Secretary of the Treasury.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF THE MINT,
January 12, 1875.

SIR: I have the honor to request that you will procure the following deficiency appropriations on account of the Mint service for the current fiscal year:

UNITED STATES ASSAY-OFFICE, NEW YORK.

In order to meet the largely-increasing silver operations in the assay-office at New York, it is necessary to transfer melting operations from the first-story room in the rear building to the rooms heretofore occupied by the banking-firm of Messrs. Clews & Co., in the front building, and which will enable the room first mentioned to be occupied for refining and separating the precious metals, and thereby double the capacity of the office.

The increased space to be occupied, erection of furnaces and condensing-chambers and the increased operations of the office, will be attended with an expense in excess of the appropriations for the current fiscal year, as follows:

Wages of workmen.....	$10,000
Repairs, materials, acids, and other incidentals.....	10,000 and these amounts should be appropriated in the deficiency bill.

UNITED STATES MINT AT SAN FRANCISCO.

Coining operations were commenced at the new mint during the early part of December, 1874, actual coinage being intermitted for nearly a month in making the transfer of machinery, bullion, books, &c., from the old to the new mint.

To meet the increasing demand for coinage at that institution, it became necessary to employ additional workmen, and it is estimated that the sum of $37,000 in the item of "wages of workmen" and $19,000 in that of "contingent expenses," viz, fuel, copper for alloy, chemicals, and other necessities, will be required for the current fiscal year.

For further explanations, please see copy of letter from Superintendent O. H. La Grange under date of 29th ultimo.

UNITED STATES MINT AT CARSON.

The insufficient appropriations made for the support of the mint at Carson for the current fiscal year, and the increase in the amount of gold and silver separated and coined, instead of being made into stamped bars, as was the case until within the last eighteen months, renders additional appropriations necessary as follows :

Wages of workmen and adjusters	$16,000
Wood, charcoal, sulphuric acid, crucibles, fluxes, copper for refining gold and silver, and for alloy, freight, and other incidental expenses	79,000

Attention is called to the annexed copy of a letter from Superintendent Crawford, under date of November 2, 1874, showing the increased appropriations to be necessary, and also to a statement of that officer showing the expenditures and receipts of that mint during the month of October, 1874.

The statement covers the operations in the deposit, melting and refining or separating rooms, and which operations are subjects of charge, the law requiring the charges to equal but not to exceed the actual expense thereof. The month of October was taken as exhibiting fairly the average operations of the mint.

I would further add that, since the establishment of the Mint Bureau, the cost of sulphuric acid, which is the principal chemical used in refining, has been reduced at the Carson mint from 13½ cents to 5½ cents per pound ; wood from $10 to $7 per cord, and other articles in proportion.

The estimates are respectfully submitted.

I have the honor to be, sir, very respectfully,

H. R. LINDERMAN,
Director.

Hon. BENJAMIN H. BRISTOW,
Secretary of the Treasury.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C., January 14, 1875.

SIR : I have the honor to transmit herewith certain items of deficiencies required for the service of the United States mints and assay-offices for the fiscal years 1874 and 1875, with the request that the same may be inserted in the deficiency bill now pending in the House.

Your attention is respectfully invited to the inclosed copies of letters from the Director of the Mint for explanation of these deficiencies.

I am, very respectfully,

B. H. BRISTOW,
Secretary.

Hon. JAMES A. GARFIELD,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., February 13, 1875.

SIR : I have the honor to invite your attention to the inclosed copy of a letter received from the Acting Comptroller of the Treasury, recommending that an appropriation of one hundred dollars be made to cover a deficiency in the appropriation for "legislative expenses, Territory of Montana," and to request that an item be inserted in the deficiency bill now in the hands of your committee, as follows: "For printing in pamphlet form proclamation of the governor of Montana, during the fiscal year 1873, fifty dollars; for printing in pamphlet form proclamation of the governor of Montana, during the fiscal year 1874, fifty dollars; in all the sum of one hundred dollars."

I am, very respectfully,

B. H. BRISTOW,
Secretary.

Hon. J. A. GARFIELD,
Chairman of Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
First Comptroller's Office, February 12, 1875.

SIR: I have the honor to call your attention to a deficiency in the appropriation for legislative expenses, Territory of Montana, amounting to $100, for printing, due to George F. Cope, as per bill herewith, and recommend an appropriation therefor.

Very respectfully,

WM. HEMPHILL JONES,
Acting Comptroller.

Hon. B. H. BRISTOW,
Secretary of the Treasury.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., February 23, 1875.

SIR: There will be required for the service of the fiscal year 1873 an appropriation of thirty-two dollars and forty-two cents, ($32.42,) under the title "salaries district attorneys," amount due David H. Mason, deceased, late United States attorney for Massachusetts, for salary, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1873, (act of May 8, 1872, 17 Statutes, page 81, section 1.)

I have the honor to recommend that provision be made in the pending deficiency appropriation bill for the above amount for the purpose specified.

Very respectfully,

B. H. BRISTOW,
Secretary.

Hon. JAMES A. GARFIELD,
Chairman of Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., February 13, 1875.

To Hon. LYMAN K. BASS:

There is now due the United States depository at Buffalo, in compliance with the act approved June 22, 1874, $891.02, to be paid from appropriation for "salaries of designated depositories," act of August 6, 1846, for the safe-keeping, &c., of public revenues, 1871.

CHAS. F. CONANT,
Assistant Secretary.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, SECOND COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE,
February 16, 1875.

SIR: In reply to your verbal request this morning, to be furnished with a copy of the estimated amount required to be appropriated by Congress in order to liquidate the remainder of the Montana Indian war-claim of 1867, I have the honor herewith to transmit a copy of the letter of this Office relating to the subject, and addressed to the Secretary of War October 19, 1874.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. B. CURTIS,
Acting Comptroller.

Hon. ISAAC C. PARKER, M. C.,
Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, SECOND COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE,
October 19, 1874.

SIR: By the act of March 3, 1873, the accounting officers of the Treasury were charged with the adjustment and settlement of the Montana Indian-war claims of 1867.

The payment of the sums found due claimants was devolved by that act upon the Secretary of War. The amount appropriated for the liquidation of the claims by the act of March 3, 1873, was $513,343.

Vouchers covering the whole of this amount have been settled and adjusted.

The report of Inspector-General J. A. Hardie, United States Army, upon which the legislation was partially founded, dated November 10, 1870, left certain groups of claims suspended for want of proof, either wholly or in part; others unacted upon, because they had not been presented subsequent to the Chicago fire, which, it will be remembered, had destroyed, in the Inspector-General's Office, much valuable matter collected in the course of his investigation.

Among the class marked "rejected," reference to the report will show another claim stated as rejected because withdrawn previous to report. Under the terms of the act of March 3, 1873, the accounting officers were authorized to consider all claims filed within a year from the passage of the act. This claim was again presented and entitled to notice.

The two groups above described were also entitled to the action of the accounting officers. Appropriate action has been taken in many of these cases. As proof was presented to this Office, or cases newly filed, the evidence has been referred to Inspector-General Hardie, for his remarks upon the condition of facts exhibited, and his reports in the premises have received proper consideration.

This course has been rendered proper and necessary, since the act of March 3, 1873, clothes the statements of Inspector-General Hardie with credit before this Office, though they do not conclude its decision.

The action had has resulted in partial allowances, in no material case full, of claims under the heads above given, to the amount of $65,504.67, of which amount $8,665.88 cannot be paid, owing to the exhausted condition of the appropriation.

Additional evidence has been presented in certain other claims suspended, which is now under consideration. Evidence in other cases will no doubt be presented. The settlement of these claims has been prompt, and now is nearly concluded.

Judging from the results of previous examinations and decisions had of suspended claims, &c., it is estimated that $55,000 will be needed for the final extinguishment of the indebtedness involved.

It is recommended, therefore, that Congress be asked to appropriate this amount accordingly.

J. M. BRODHEAD,
Comptroller.

Hon. W. W. BELKNAP,
Secretary of War.

To the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled :

Your memorialists respectfully represents that the accounting officers of the Treasury Department have found due him, and have made allowance, the sum of ten hundred and forty-three dollars and ninety-one cents, and that payment thereof cannot be made to your petitioner without an appropriation of this said amount. Your petitioner therefore humbly prays the appropriation of this said amount, to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay your petitioner.

ROBERT S. LACEY.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 17, 1875.

SIR: I have the honor to request you to offer the accompanying bill in my behalf, for reference to the Committee on Appropriations.

I was an officer in the Freedmen's Bureau, and the Secretary of the Treasury rules that the amount allowed me requires approval of the Secretary of War prior to transmittal to your committee. This approval will not be given, as the Second Comptroller decided me entitled as against adverse decision of the Secretary of War, and the latter refuses to acknowledge the right of accounting officers to allow claims after rejection by him ; hence I am compelled to appeal to Congress for relief. The laws of 1866 and 1868 clearly entitle ex-volunteer officers to full pay of prior rank. The arbiters of our laws in the Treasury have so decided, (see accompanying letter of Third Auditor,) and as an act of simple justice I appeal through you for relief.

Very respectfully,

R. S. LACEY.

Hon. JAMES A. GARFIELD, M. C.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, to pay out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Robert S. Lacey, late captain and assistant quartermaster of volunteers, the sum of ten hundred and forty-three dollars and ninety-one cents, being the amount allowed him by the Second Comptroller and certified to the Secretary of the Treasury by the Third Auditor, upon his claim for arrears of pay while on duty and prior to final discharge.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, THIRD AUDITOR'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., December 9, 1874.

SIR: I have to inform you that the Second Comptroller of the Treasury has decided that the fifth section of the act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government, approved June 20, 1874, necessitates the covering in of all balances that have stood on the books of the Department for two fiscal years, out of which quartermaster's and commissary claims arising prior to July, 1872, could be paid, except accounts and payments in fulfillment of contracts existing at the date of the passage of the said act. The contract referred to in the said exception, he has defined to be "a written instrument in legal form properly executed, in process of completion, but not yet completed by the fulfillment of its stipulations on the part of either or both of the contracting parties."

There is, therefore, no money now available for the payment of the claim in favor of R. S. Lacey, for ———. It has been reported to the Second Comptroller, however, allowed by him, and the amount found due, $1,043.91, will be certified to the Secretary of the Treasury, that he may transmit the same to Congress for consideration and action.

ALLAN RUTHERFORD,
Third Auditor.

R. S. LACEY, Esq.,
District of Columbia.

UNITED STATES COAST-SURVEY OFFICE,
Washington, February 23, 1875.

DEAR SIR: I inclose, for your information, a memorandum containing reasons for, and showing the need of, the item of $4,000 in the deficiency bill, to provide for important purposes in regard to the United States standard weights and measures.

Yours, truly,

C. P. PATTERSON,
Superintendent United States Coast-Survey and Weights and Measures.

HON. JAMES A. GARFIELD,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.

MEMORANDUM.

No appropriation having been made for the current fiscal year for the "construction and verification of the standard weights and measures for the custom-houses of the United States and of metric standards for the States," for which $10,000 were estimated, it became necessary to provide for a portion of the contemplated expenditure in the deficiency bill. The necessity for such appropriation arises from the following causes:

First. We have on hand valuable apparatus for the construction and verification of standards, as well as a large number of standards of length, weight, and capacity in course of construction, under existing laws and previous appropriations, which require fire-proof storage, the annual rent of which cannot be estimated at less than $1,000.

Secondly. There are calls pending from the States of Indiana and Illinois for standards and balances heretofore authorized by law to be furnished to each State.

The standards have long since been constructed, but have not heretofore been called for, on account of the want of proper provision for their safe-keeping and use on the part of those States. The same is true of several other States.

Before delivery these standards require their last finish, verification, and packing.

In addition to this, there are frequent calls from the Treasury Department for the verification of gauges and other standards used in the custom-houses.

On these accounts a sum not less than $500 is absolutely requisite.

In addition to the foregoing, the sum of $2,500 is pressingly needed to pay for new standards of platinum (namely, two meters and one kilogram) constructed under the direction of the international commission on standards, to which the United States are a party by President Grant's commission to Professor Henry of the Smithsonian Institution, and J. E. Hilgard of the Coast Survey, as delegates.

This obligation, which is not in the nature of a contract, is, nevertheless, one which international comity requires to be met, and directly arises from the act of Congress legalizing the use of the metric system of weights and measures in the United States.

Since the date of that act in 1866, by the invitation of France and the concurrent action of all civilized nations, the revision of the standard of length has been determined upon. It has therefore become necessary, in order to carry out the joint resolution of July 27, 1866, directing the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish one set of metric standards to each of the States, that authentic copies of the international standards be procured.

Accordingly, the aforesaid commission was notified, through the Department of State and the French government, that the Treasury Department desired to have two meters (one line-measure and one end-measure) and one kilogram of the new standards.

The estimate for the current year included the estimated cost of these standards, and the omission to provide for their purchase places the Department in an embarrassing situation. The estimated expense, $2,500, namely, $1,000 for each meter and $500 for the kilogram, represents only the value of the metals employed in their construction, no charge whatever being made for the laborious operations of shaping, adjustment, and verification.

It will be impossible to obtain these important standards of comparison at some future time, as the costly chemical and mechanical operations cannot be repeated for a small number of measures.

The following item, to be inserted in the deficiency bill for the current year, is therefore respectfully submitted:

"For construction and verification of standard weights and measures for the United States custom-house, and of United States standards for the several States, and for the purchase of a set of international metric standards, four thousand dollars."

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, December 3, 1874.

SIR: I have the honor to send herewith an estimate of additional appropriation for the subsistence of the Army, required for the current fiscal year. The Army appropriation act, approved June 16, 1874, provided rations for an estimated force of thirty thousand men, all told; but there were in service, actually entitled by law and regulations to draw rations, an average of 2,857 persons in excess of the thirty thousand, for the last six months. This excess was made up of enlisted men, laundresses, quartermaster's employes, Indian scouts, acting assistant surgeons, and various civilian employes. This appropriation is required to make up the deficiency which will be inevitable before the close of the fiscal year.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. W. BELKNAP,
Secretary of War.

To the CHAIRMAN Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.

Estimates of appropriations required for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, by the Subsistence Department, United States Army.

General object. (Title of appropriation.)	Detailed objects of expenditure and explanations.	Date of acts, resolutions, or treaties authorizing or providing for the expenditures.	References to Statutes at Large.			Estimated amount which will be required for each detailed object of expenditure.	Total amount to be appropriated under each head of appropriation.	Amount appropriated for the current fiscal year ending June 30, 1875.
			Vol.	Page.	Sec.
Subsistence of the Army.	For subsistence of regular troops, Indian scouts, women to companies, &c., enumerated in Book of Estimates for 1874-'75, page 67: Enlisted men, laundresses, quartermasters' employes, Indian scouts, acting assistant surgeons, estimated at 30,000, for which was appropriated	June 16, 1873 Pam. ed.	72	1				$2,409,000 00
	On July 1, 1874, there was an excess of
	On August 1, 1874, there was an excess of
	On September 1, 1874, there was an excess of
	On October 1, 1874, there was an excess of
	On November 1, 1874, there was an excess of 14,285 divided by 5 shows an average of 2,857 during the five months mentioned; 2,857 rations per day, for 153 days, at 23 cents per ration, amount to
	Probable amount required to replace condemned supplies sold at auction, (the proceeds of which are required to be covered into the Treasury by section 5 of the legislative, judicial, and executive appropriation act of May 8, 1872)					$100,537 83
						50,000 00	$150,537 83

A. E. SHIRAS, Commissary-General Subsistence.

OFFICE COMMISSARY GENERAL SUBSISTENCE, December 2, 1874.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., December 8, 1874.

SIR: I respectfully call your attention to the fact that in the deficiency bill of last session two items, recommended by the honorable Secretary of the Treasury in his letter of March 17, 1874, (herewith inclosed,) were overlooked and left out on the final passage of the bill, viz: one item of $135.85 and one of $677.61, both for stationery furnished the respective legislatures of Dakota and Wyoming by A. W. H. Jones, of Chicago, Ill.

Mr. Jones was formerly a heavy stationery dealer of that city, but lost nearly all in the "great fire," and he feels the need of what is so justly due him from the United States. I respectfully ask that the two items may be inserted in the deficiency bill of the present session of Congress.

Most respectfully,

M. K. ARMSTRONG,
Delegate in Congress.

Hon. JAMES A. GARFIELD,
Chairman Appropriation Committee, House of Representatives.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, FIRST COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., December 16, 1874.

E. J. CURTIS, Esq.,
Secretary of Idaho Territory, Boise City.

SIR: The bill of Milton Kelly, for printing council journal, seventh session legislative assembly, has been measured, with the following result:

Total amount charged per bill.....	$788 00
Allowed per measurement.....	711 88
Disallowed.....	76 12
Explanation of disallowance:
Charged: Composition, 227 pages, at 1,269 ems = 289,000 ems.....	$578 00
Allowed: Composition, 227 pages, at 1,269 ems = 288,063 ems.....	576 13
Difference disallowed.....	1 87
Charged: Press-work, 29 tokens, at $2.....	$58 00
Allowed: Press-work, 15 tokens, at $2.....	30 00
	28 00
Charged: Binding, folding, &c., 250 copies, at 25 cents.....	62 50
Allowed: Binding, folding, &c., 250 copies, at 15 cents.....	37 50
	25 00
Charged: 2½ quires of paper, for covers.....	5 00
Allowed: 2½ quires of paper, for covers.....	3 75
	1 25
Charged: 4 reams of paper for books, at $20.....	80 00
Allowed: 4 reams of paper, for books, at $15.....	60 00
	20 00
Total.....	76 12

The total amount allowed you for printing for the seventh session, legislative assembly, is as follows:

Miscellaneous printing.....	$626 00	Credit given per report 188,278..	$600 00
Printing the laws.....	477 50	Credit given per report 192,488..	477 50
House journal.....	717 00	Credit given per report 194,899..	717 00
Council journal.....	711 88	Credit given per report 192,488..	48 50
		Credit given per report 194,899..	150 45
	2,532 38		1,993 45

Your account for legislative expenses for the fiscal year 1873 having been certified, per report No. 194,899 as balanced, it is evident that the amount of $538.93, still due the printer, as shown by the above statement, can only be paid by a deficiency appropriation; and you are requested, if you have not done so already, to inform the Secretary of the Treasury of this deficiency, that he may take the proper steps to bring the matter before Congress.

Very respectfully,

R. W. TAYLER,
Comptroller.

TERRITORY OF IDAHO, County of Ada, ss :

Milton Kelly, being duly sworn, on oath says he is the person mentioned, and did the public printing as set forth in account of the First Comptroller of the Treasury hereto annexed, and that there is still due him for said work the amount therein stated, to wit, $538.93, and no part of the same has been paid.

MILTON KELLY.

Sworn and subscribed before me this 28th day of December, 1874.

W. C. WHITSON,
Associate Justice Supreme Court, Idaho Territory.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, February 11, 1875.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 10th instant, asking me to inform the committee of the amount paid to United States supervisors at the congressional election held in the city of Philadelphia in November last, and also the amount claimed to be due and unpaid according to the affidavits filed by the said supervisors.

In reply I have to inform you that the marshal made requisition upon this Department for $60,330 to pay 1,272 supervisors and six deputy marshals, for periods ranging from four to ten days. The marshal was advanced the sum of $38,115 for 1,244 supervisors and six deputy marshals for six days' services, twenty-three supervisors for five days' services, and five supervisors for four days' services. The balance which they claim is the difference between the amount for which the marshal made requisition and the amount I advanced, namely, $22,155.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEO. H. WILLIAMS,
Attorney-General.

Hon. J. A. GARFIELD,

Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, February 23, 1875.

SIR: I herewith return the papers left by you with me this morning in reference to the claim of the heirs of A. F. Reynolds.

I am satisfied, from all the information I can obtain upon the subject, that the claim is a just one and ought to be paid; but as there is no appropriation now under the control of this Department which can be applied to that purpose, I have to request that the Committee on Appropriations will insert in the deficiency bill a clause providing for its payment.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEO. H. WILLIAMS,
Attorney-General.

Hon. FRANKLIN CORWIN,

House of Representatives.

OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, D. C., December 9, 1874.

GENTLEMEN: The Commissioners of the District of Columbia beg to recommend legislation for the following purposes:

First. Authority to increase the compensation of George W. Beall, deputy comptroller, from July 16, 1874, to December 1, 1874, so that his salary during that time shall be at the rate of $2,500 per annum.

Second. Authority to increase the compensation of B. Oertly, assistant engineer, from July 7, 1874, to December 1, 1874, so that his salary during that time shall be at the rate of $3,000 per annum.

In explanation of this recommendation, we have to say that these officers were regarded as indispensable for the discharge of the duties peculiar to their offices, and their services could be procured only on the assurance of the commissioners that they would recommend that authority be given them to increase the salary of each, as indicated in the foregoing recommendation.

The commissioners further recommend that authority be given them to increase the salaries of the following-named officers, as indicated by the sum annexed respectively, as follows: Secretary, $2,500 per annum, commencing December 1, 1874; present salary, $1,920. Chief clerk engineer's office, $2,200 per annum, commencing December 1, 1874; present salary, $1,760. Assistant attorney, $2,000 per annum, commencing December 1, 1874; present salary, $1,200. Cashier collector's office, $2,000 per annum, commencing December 1, 1874; present salary, $1,440. Principal book-keeper comptroller's office, $1,800 per annum, commencing December 1, 1874; present salary, $1,440. Auditor, $3,000 per annum, commencing December 1, 1874; present salary, $2,400. Assistant engineer, $3,000 per annum, commencing December 1, 1874; present salary, $1,800. Deputy comptroller, $2,500 per annum, commencing December 1, 1874; present salary, $1,600.

These recommendations are made because of the importance of the services and the responsibilities attached to the several offices named.

Accompanying this communication will be found a statement from W. W. Curtiss, esq., president of the board of trustees of public schools, relating to the new school-building in Georgetown. From a careful consideration of the subject-matter of the same, the commissioners do not hesitate to recommend the appropriation asked for therein also, viz, $86,865. We inclose extracts of laws relating to colored schools, and the school-house in Georgetown.

Very respectfully,

W. DENNISON,
HENRY T. BLOW,
J. H. KETCHAM,
Commissioners District of Columbia.

To the COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS,
House of Representatives.

OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, D. C., January 19, 1875.

DEAR SIR: The Commissioners of the District hand you herewith a communication addressed to them by the auditor of the District, showing the amount of $46,202.70 paid by them from the treasury of the District, which we respectfully ask Congress to refund to the District.

Very respectfully,

W. DENNISON,
J. H. KETCHAM,
S. L. PHELPS,
Commissioners District of Columbia.

Hon. J. A. GARFIELD,
*Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives United States.*

AUDITOR'S OFFICE, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, January 19, 1875.

GENTLEMEN: In reply to your inquiry I have the honor to inform you that the records of this office show that there has been audited and paid—

On account of salaries of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to January 1, 1875	$7,528 66
On account of salaries of assistant engineers to January 1, 1875	1,736 16
On account of expenses of the board of audit, including salaries of the clerks, &c., to January 1, 1875	25,486 63
On account of printing and trimming 3.65 bonds, act June 20	11,451 25

Total amount audited and paid as above

The salaries of the members of the board of audit are not included in the above sum.

Very respectfully,

JOHN T. VINSON,
Auditor District of Columbia.

OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, D. C., January 19, 1875.

GENTLEMEN: I have the honor to transmit herewith a list of claims for services rendered to the late District government and board of public works, amounting to $28,619.68, for the payment of which I think some provision ought to be made. The appointments in the majority of the cases under which these services were rendered were, in my opinion, irregular, and in others, although the appointments were regular, the services were extended beyond the time limited by law, and for these reasons I did not consider I was authorized to audit the claims. In all of these cases, however, it appears the services were actually rendered in good faith; that the rate of compensation charged for the services is reasonable and just, and believing that the proper conduct of the public business required their services, I make the present recommendation.

In addition to these claims, there have been filed in this office other claims, principally for extra services rendered, amounting to $14,406.76, which I submit with the several vouchers therefor without recommendation, for such action as you may think proper.

The records of this office show there are audited bills of the fire department for the years 1871 and 1872, on which 50 per cent. has been paid, leaving a balance unpaid of

of	$5,913 16
Also unaudited bills of the fire department for 1872, 1873, and 1874, prior to June 30, 1874, on which nothing has been paid	3,120 01

Total deficiency in fire department.....	9,033 17
--	----------

for the payment of which provision should be made.

The legislative assembly of the District of Columbia appropriated by act approved June 26, 1873, for the board of health, the sum of	$25,000 00
--	-------------

Of this sum there has been audited and paid.....	11,687 29
--	-----------

Leaving balance unpaid	13,312 71
------------------------------	-----------

The board of health are asking for the payment of this balance to enable them to discharge liabilities incurred by them during the prevalence of the small-pox, on the faith of this appropriation. Some provision ought, in my judgment, be made for its payment.

The estimated expenditures for the board of audit from January 1, 1875, to June 30, 1875, including salaries of the members, clerks, &c., are $25,000, which sum was not included in the commissioners' estimate of expenses for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875. This amount will also have to be provided for.

The salaries of the assistant engineers from January 1, 1875, to June 30, 1875, will amount to $1,800.

The total amount for which it is recommended that congressional appropriation be asked (as above) is $77,765.56.

Very respectfully,

JOHN T. VINSON,
Auditor District Columbia.

Hon. COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Copy:

WM. TINDALL,
Secretary to the Commissioners District Columbia.

FEBRUARY 4, 1875.

OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, D. C., January 19, 1875.

DEAR SIR: The commissioners of the District hand you herewith a communication addressed to them by the auditor of the District, to which they respectfully invite your attention, in the hope that your committee will recommend to Congress the making the appropriation of $77,765.86, for the purposes set forth in said communication.

Very respectfully,

W. DENNISON,
J. H. KETCHAM,
S. L. PHELPS,
Commissioners D. C.

Hon. J. A. GARFIELD,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives U. S.

Official copy:

WM. TINDALL,
Secretary,

OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, D. C., January 20, 1875.

DEAR SIR: In submitting to your committee this morning the original letter of the auditor, of which the inclosed is a copy, the fact had escaped me that the act of June 29, 1874, requires the District to pay for the engraving and printing of the 3.65 bonds, covering the item of $11,451.25. While the commissioners, therefore, cannot ask for the refunding of the amount because no appropriation had been made by Congress, they will be very glad to have an appropriation for the same, if your committee shall feel authorized to recommend it.

Very respectfully,

W. DENNISON,
Commissioner.

Hon. J. A. GARFIELD,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives, U. S.

WASHINGTON, D. C., September 16, 1874.

GENTLEMEN: Herewith please find bills for services rendered by myself and Messrs. F. H. Johnson, John A. Hurley, and George T. Howard to the District of Columbia on account of attendance upon the Joint Select Committee to Investigate the Affairs of the District. I was clerk under the late board of public works, as also were my associates above named, at the time the services charged for were rendered, and the claim for extra services is based upon the following grounds, viz: We were placed in charge of the contracts and vouchers of the board of public works during the late investigation, by order of the governor of the District and under the direction of the committee aforesaid; our duties combined those of clerks, messengers, and watchmen, and required us to be in attendance upon the committee-room for the production of papers, &c., at all hours of the day, whether the committee was in session or not. We were therefore on duty every day, Sundays included. There were always two of the four parties named on duty each night—sleeping in the committee-room with the vouchers, &c.—in such reliefs as were mutually arranged. The confinement and night-duty, as well as the unusual and irksome number of hours that we were daily upon duty, in addition to performing our legitimate daily services, justly entitle us, we think, to the reasonable rate of payment asked for, and we respectfully request that you will approve of the bills submitted, and direct the comptroller of the District to pay the same.

I am, gentlemen, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

THOMAS S. BURR.

To the honorable COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

SEPTEMBER 17, 1874.

Respectfully referred to the auditor District of Columbia.

By order of the commissioners:

WM. TINDALL,
Secretary.

SEPTEMBER 17, 1874.

I know of no law authorizing the payment of the within claims by the commissioners.

JOHN T. VINSON,
Auditor District of Columbia.

OCTOBER 3, 1874.

Respectfully referred to the assistant attorney District of Columbia for report.

By order:

WM. TINDALL,
Secretary.

OCTOBER 5, 1874.

Respectfully returned. This claim is of an equitable not a legal character. In the absence of any law or appropriation, the only course for the commissioners is reference to the board of audit.

W. BIRNEY,
Assistant Attorney.

The District of Columbia to F. H. Johnson, Dr.

1874

Sept. 15. For services, viz: For attendance upon the Joint Select Committee to Investigate the Affairs of the District of Columbia, pursuant to the order of said committee, attached herewith, from March 4, 1874, to May 27, 1874, inclusive, being eighty-five (85) days, at the rate of $100 per month $283 33

I certify that the foregoing account is correct and just, that the services were rendered as stated under my direction as governor of the District of Columbia, and in accordance with the order of the committee above specified.

ALEX. R. SHEPHERD.

BOARD OF AUDIT, November 27, 1874.

If anything be due to this claimant, it is due him as an employé of the board of public works, and is therefore payable by the commissioners.

R. W. TAYLER, First Comptroller.

J. M. BRODHEAD, Second Comptroller.

NOVEMBER 28, 1874.

Respectfully referred to the auditor District Columbia.

By order:

WM. TINDALL, Sec'y.

The District of Columbia to John A. Hurley, Dr.

1874.

Sept. 15. For services, viz: For attendance upon the Joint Select Committee to Investigate the Affairs of the District of Columbia, pursuant to the order of said committee, attached herewith, from March 4, 1874, to May 27, 1874, inclusive, being eighty-five (85) days, at the rate of $100 per month $283 33

I certify that the foregoing account is correct and just; that the services were rendered as stated, under my direction as governor of the District of Columbia, and in accordance with the order of the committee above specified.

ALEX. R. SHEPHERD.

The District of Columbia to George T. Howard, Dr.

1874.

Sept. 15. For services, viz: For attendance upon the Joint Select Committee to Investigate the Affairs of the District of Columbia, pursuant to the order of said committee, attached herewith, from March 4, 1874, to May 27, 1874, inclusive, being eighty-five (85) days, at the rate of $100 per month $283 33

I certify that the foregoing account is correct and just; that the services were rendered as stated, under my direction as governor of the District of Columbia, and in accordance with the order of the committee above specified.

ALEX. R. SHEPHERD.

BOARD OF AUDIT, November 27, 1874.

If anything be due to this claimant, it is due him as an employé of the board of public works, and is therefore payable by the commissioners.

R. W. TAYLER, First Comptroller.

J. M. BRODHEAD, Second Comptroller.

NOVEMBER 28, 1874.

Respectfully referred to the auditor District Columbia.

By order:

WM. TINDALL, Secretary.

EXECUTIVE OFFICE, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, February 28, 1874.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit to you answers to the "series of inquiries" inclosed to me on the 13th instant, together with the original contracts made by the board of public works, numbering 1,032, as well as the original measurements and vouchers, numbering 10,537.

I would respectfully request that the vouchers and contracts, being original papers, and covering the expenditure of a large amount of money, should be either placed in charge of some officer of the board or be receipted for by yourself, as chairman of the committee into whose custody they will pass.

I shall be happy to furnish any further information required.

The delay in the transmittal of this reply is accounted for by the amount of labor required in its preparation.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ALEX. R. SHEPHERD,
Governor of the District of Columbia.

Hon. GEORGE S. BOUTWELL,
Chairman.

Question. What was the indebtedness of Washington City when the present government came into existence, to wit: February 21, 1871, and how evidenced?

Debt of the late corporation of Washington City, existing May 31, 1871.

Floating debt, ascertained by the auditing commission appointed under the authority of the act of the legislative assembly, approved June 16, 1871, (Laws D. C., pages 7 and 8, first legislative session,) paid by the commissioners of the sinking-fund, as per their statement, (interest included)	$674,107 74
Certificates for paving Pennsylvania, Louisiana, and Indiana avenues, approved by the auditing commission and paid by the commissioners of the sinking-fund	200,406 71
Certificates for the improvement of the canal, approved by the auditing commission and paid by the commissioners of the sinking-fund.....	93,599 25
Judgments, costs of suits, outstanding warrants, and sundry claims other than those approved by the auditing commission, paid by the commissioners of the sinking-fund	120,718 95

WASHINGTON, D. C., October 7, 1874.

GENTLEMEN: Herewith please find bills for services rendered by myself and Messrs. Thomas S. Burr, John A. Hurley, and George T. Howard to the District of Columbia, on account of attendance upon the late joint select committee to investigate the affairs of the District. The services referred to were rendered pursuant to the order of the governor of the District and the committee aforesaid, as will more fully appear by reference to the inclosures submitted herewith.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

F. H. JOHNSON.

The honorable BOARD OF AUDIT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

AUDITOR'S OFFICE, December 7, 1874.

The within claims are, at the special instance of the parties, respectfully referred for the opinion of the attorney. The parties were borne upon the rolls as clerks of the board of public works during the same time, and have received their pay. This claim is for work after office-hours.

J. T. VINSON,
Auditor District of Columbia.

JANUARY 18, 1875.

I recommend that these cases be included among these submitted for congressional appropriation. The services herein charged were required in order to facilitate congressional investigation into the affairs of the District.

EDWIN L. STANTON,
Attorney for the District.

The District of Columbia to Thomas S. Burr, Dr.

September 15, 1874. For services, viz: For attendance upon the joint select committee to investigate the affairs of the District of Columbia, pursuant to the order of said committee attached herewith, from March 4, 1874, to May 27, 1874, inclusive, being eighty-five (85) days, at the rate of $100 per month	$283 33 certify that the foregoing account is correct and just, that the services were rendered as stated, under my direction as governor of the District of Columbia, and in accordance with the order of the committee above specified.
Total	283 33

ALEX. R. SHEPHERD.

BOARD OF AUDIT, November 27, 1874.

If anything be due to this claimant, it is due him as an employé of the board of public works, and is therefore payable by the commissioners.

R. W. TAYLER,
First Comptroller.
J. M. BRODHEAD,
Second Comptroller.

NOVEMBER 28, 1874

Respectfully referred to the auditor District Columbia.
By order :

WM. TINDALL,
Secretary.

DEAR SIR: General Chipman presented in the House and had referred the papers I showed you yesterday, and this morning introduced me to General Garfield, to whom I stated my case, including the substance of our conversation yesterday. General Garfield said that if I would procure the approval of the members of the committee, or the respective chairmen, that that would be evidence of a character that his committee would consider sufficient, and act upon at once. I have, therefore, temporarily withdrawn the papers to secure the approval suggested, either upon the face of the bills or by separate letter, and respectfully ask your favorable action in this direction. With your approval, we succeed; without it, we fail. I saw Mr. Hubbell this morning, and he is, and will be, in our favor.

Respectfully, yours,

F. H. JOHNSON.

Communication from F. H. Johnson, indorsed by Senators Allison, Thurman, and others.

I think these young men, in some way, ought to have additional compensation.

W. B. ALLISON.

I fully concur in the above.

JAY A. HUBBELL,
LYMAN K. BASS.

I concur.

A. G. THURMAN,
ROBT. HAMILTON.

To Thomas S. Burr, F. H. Johnson, George T. Howard, and John A. Hurley, each the sum of one hundred and twenty dollars, in full of compensation for services rendered by them in the investigation into the affairs of the District of Columbia.

Report of Mr. Wilson, of Indiana, in the matter of application of Johnson et al., referred to him by Committee on Appropriations, and Mr. Lyman K. Bass.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, BOARD OF HEALTH,
Washington, D. C., February 11, 1875.

GENTLEMEN: In reply to your communication of the 10th instant, inclosing official copy of preamble and resolutions passed by the House of Representatives February 6, 1875, relating to the nonpayment by the board of health of claims for clothing, &c., destroyed by its order during the epidemic of small-pox in 1872-'73, we have the honor to state that clothing, bedding, &c., of a textile nature was removed from premises, and either used in small-pox hospitals or destroyed by order of the board during the prevalence of small-pox, aggregating in value, as per certificates of its officers on file, the sum of $8,727.34, and that claims have been presented on account of said destruction aggregating $5,393.04, ranging in sums from $1.50 to $150, averaging $16.54 per claim.

The property was destroyed to prevent the spread of the disease, under the provisions of an act of the legislative assembly entitled "An act for the prevention of diseases in the District of Columbia, approved June 10, 1872," which act provided "That in the event of the bedding, clothing, or furniture of poor persons, they should be reasonably compensated for the loss of the same out of any moneys in the treasury of the board of health not otherwise appropriated." At the time of the passage of the act there were no funds in the treasury of the board of health.

At the opening of the session of the assembly in 1873, the board submitted thereto estimate of the amount required to satisfy "poor persons" for the destruction of their property, but no special appropriation was made for the purpose, but the sum of $25,000 was appropriated for "sanitary purposes in the District," with the understanding that these claims should be paid therefrom. Owing to failure of revenue, only a portion of that appropriation has been paid to the board, leaving a balance of $13,312.71 still due, for which requisition was made and forwarded to you July 25, 1874, but which has not been paid, for reasons set forth in the opinions of Mr. Stanton and Mr. Birney, your attorneys; copy of each herewith. As this duty was imposed upon the board by the legislative assembly, it has been held that any sums found due claimants should be paid from funds appropriated by said body; and that no authority has ever been conferred by Congress for payment of such claims from funds appropriated by it for sanitary purposes; nor was ever any estimate presented to Congress for this item of expense, although it is true that, owing to the extraordinary expenses necessarily incurred by the board during the small-pox epidemic, we were compelled to ask Congress for an appropriation to meet deficiencies. We transmit herewith a copy of the report of the special committee of this board especially charged with the duty of examining the claims presented, which report embodies a definition of the term "poor persons" as used in the act referred to, and a recommendation as to whom payment should be made, which report was unanimously adopted by the board at its meeting of October 23, 1874.

Although we are of opinion that payment should be made for all property destroyed, without regard to the pecuniary condition of claimants, and we are ready and anxious to pay these claimants the amount found to be due them whenever the money for that purpose is placed at our disposal. Great care has been exercised in the preparation of the claims, which have invariably been made on the blank form prescribed by the board; copy herewith.

Hoping this statement of facts will be acceptable to yourselves and the honorable committee of Congress, we remain, very respectfully, your obedient servants,

C. C. COX,
JOHN MARBURY, JR.,
JOHN M. LANGSTON,
T. S. VERDI,
D. W. BLISS,

Board of Health.

Hon. COMMISSIONERS,
District of Columbia:

A true copy:
D. S. JONES, Chief Clerk.

DEAR SIR: Referring to letter addressed to you by the honorable commissioners of the District February 12, 1875, pp. 15 and 16 of your report, accompanying bill H. R. 4729, I have the honor to inform you that the sum of $13,312.71, for which the commissioners ask an appropriation by Congress "For board of health (deficiency of appropriated for infected clothing destroyed by its orders,)" is the amount due the board from appropriation by the legislative assembly act of June 26, 1873, which act appropriated $25,000 to defray the expenses of the board for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1874, of which appropriation the sum of $11,687.29 has been paid to the board, leaving a balance due of $13,312.71, from which amount there is due sundry creditors of the board, for work performed and material furnished during said year, various sums aggregating $8,439.68, leaving a balance of $4,873.03 for payment of claims of "poor persons" for infected clothing destroyed during the small-pox epidemic, which amount it is believed will be ample for that purpose, as the aggregate of claims allowed by the board to the present time is something less than $3,000. From the foregoing facts it will be seen that the board did not create a deficiency and that the expenses were only incurred after an appropriation had been duly made. I send with this copies of communications heretofore addressed to the board to the honorable commissioners of the District relative to this matter, and we have respectfully to ask that the board of health may not be held responsible by Congress for the failure of the revenues of the District and the non-payment of these claims, and that the appropriation will be so made as to enable us to discharge the indebtedness specified herein.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

D. W. BLISS, Secretary.

Hon. JAMES A. GARFIELD,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, BOARD OF HEALTH,
Washington, D. C., October 7, 1874.

GENTLEMEN: In reply to letter of Mr. Redmon, referred to this office by you on the 5th instant, I am directed to inform you that Mr. Redmon has made a claim against the board of health for $91 for clothing destroyed during the small-pox epidemic. The officer of the board who took the articles certifies that the full value of the same was $28.50. The articles were destroyed under the provisions of section two of an act "for the prevention of diseases," &c., approved June 19, 1872. The estimate of amount of funds required to compensate "poor persons" for property destroyed under the provisions of said act was presented by the board to the legislative assembly at the opening of the session of 1873, at which session an appropriation of $25,000 was made for the expenses of this board out of which these claims were to be paid. There is due the board from that appropriation $13,312.71, for which requisition was made on the commissioners, July 25, 1874, which requisition has not been approved.

It is estimated that $5,000 will be required to pay claimants under that act, and there are no moneys from which these "poor persons" can legally be paid, (over which the board has any control,) other than from the $25,000 appropriated by the legislative assembly, act of June 26, 1873.

The board is ready and willing to pay these claims whenever the money for that purpose is placed at its disposal.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully,

D. W. BLISS, M. D.,
Secretary.

A true copy:
D. S. JONES,
Chief Clerk.

Hon. COMMISSIONERS,
District of Columbia.

The communication of Mr. Redmon is herewith returned.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., January 21, 1875.

SIR: Herewith I submit the drafts of four (4) sections, which I would be pleased to have included in the deficiency bill for this Department, now under consideration by the Committee on Appropriations.

Very respectfully,

MARSHALL JEWELL,
Postmaster-General.

Hon. JAMES N. TYNER,
House of Representatives.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., January , 1875.

SIR: I have the honor to submit herewith an estimate of the amount required to meet deficiencies in the appropriations for contingent expenses of the Post-Office Department for the current fiscal year, an appropriation for which is rendered necessary by the unexpected growth of the service, which could not be foreseen at the time the estimates were originally prepared; and to ask that provision for the same be made in the general deficiency bill now being considered by your committee.

I am, sir, respectfully, &c.,

MARSHALL JEWELL,
Postmaster-General.

Hon. JAMES A. GARFIELD,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.

Estimate of amounts required to meet deficiencies in the appropriations for contingent expenses of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875.

Item.	Amount required.	Remarks.
Gas.....	$2,000 00	The business of the Department has increased so much that many of the clerks are compelled to work after office hours and at night, thus increasing the consumption of gas.
Telegraphing.....	1,600 00	The increase in the business has rendered necessary the increase in this item.
Fuel.....	800 00	The improvements in the basement of the building now in progress have caused that part of it to be so much exposed, that an additional supply of wood is needed to make and keep it at all comfortable.
Miscellaneous items....	2,000 00	This item embraces such articles as lumber, hardware, &c., for repairs, washing towels, soap, brushes, brooms, desk-covers, awnings, oil, &c.
Force-pumps and fixtures.	700 00	These pumps are absolutely necessary in order to have a supply of water in the closets on the third floor of the building. The present supply is totally inadequate, and in consequence that part of the building is filled with noxious gases very deleterious to the health of the employes.
Total	7,100 00

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., February 12, 1875.

SIR: I inclose herewith a report made to me by the disbursing-officer of this Department, which tells its own story, and indicates that an appropriation of $17,000 is needed to enable this officer, who is a new appointee, to start fairly and squarely at the end of the present fiscal year. I most heartily recommend that the above-named amount be appropriated to supply this deficiency.

Very respectfully, yours,

MARSHALL JEWELL.

HON. JAMES N. TYNER,
House of Representatives.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF DISBURSING CLERK AND SUPERINTENDENT,
Washington, D. C., February 10, 1875.

SIR: I have the honor to report that, of the $49,100 appropriated by Congress for the contingent expenses of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, there was, on the 1st instant, but $10,554.74 remaining unexpended, as is shown in the detailed statement accompanying this.

The contingent expenses of the Department being about $5,500 per month, it will require for the remainder of the fiscal year, from February 1, for the indispensably necessary miscellaneous expenditures $27,500 00
To meet this there is but a balance unexpended of this fund..... 10,554 74

Leaving a deficiency of..... 16,945 26

The books and accounts of this office show that there has been a deficiency in the contingent fund of about this amount annually for a number of years past, and that the disbursing clerks have been obliged, contrary to law, to permit the bills during the last quarter of each fiscal year to remain unpaid until after the beginning of the following year, and then pay the deficiency by drawing upon the appropriation for contingent expenses not intended for the year in which it was thus expended.

I desire to avoid this, and to be enabled to conduct the business of this office in strict conformity to law, and still meet the needful requirements of the Department.

I therefore most respectfully and urgently ask you to recommend to the Appropriation Committees of Congress the passage of a deficiency bill of $17,000 for the contingent fund of this Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875.

The necessary expenses of the Department for the remainder of the present fiscal year cannot be met without violating the law of Congress on this subject unless this relief be allowed.

Yours, obediently,

J. O. P. BURNSIDE,
Superintendent and Disbursing Clerk Post-Office Department.

Hon. MARSHALL JEWELL,
Postmaster-General.

Contingent appropriation, 1875.

	Expended.	Appropriated.
Stationery	$6, 114 31	$9, 000 00
Fuel.....	6, 233 70	7, 400 00
Gas.....	3, 040 50	4, 500 00
Plumbing and gas-fixtures	2, 054 79	3, 000 00
Telegraphing.....	2, 595 04	3, 000 00
Painting.....	1, 975 32	2, 000 00
Carpets and furniture	5, 168 92	6, 500 00
Keeping horses, &c.....	612 88	1, 200 00
Hardware	302 57	800 00
Rent of house.....	2, 100 00	4, 200 00
Miscellaneous	8, 347 23	7, 500 00
	38, 545 26	49, 100 00
		38, 545 26

Balance unexpended..... 10, 554 74

I hereby certify that the above is the true balance unexpended February 1, 1875.

J. O. P. BURNSIDE,

Superintendent and Disbursing Officer Post-Office Department.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,

Washington, D. C., February 17, 1875.

SIR: By direction of the Postmaster-General, I inclose herewith a document which should have accompanied others sent you some time ago, but which was inadvertently mislaid.

Very respectfully, yours,

GEO. A. GUSTIN,

Private Secretary to the Postmaster-General.

Hon. JAMES M. TYNER,
House of Representatives.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT, APPOINTMENT OFFICE,

Washington, D. C., January 16, 1875.

SIR: Section 84, of the act approved June 8, 1872, contains a proviso "that in cases of an extraordinary increase or decrease in the business of any post-office, the Postmaster-General may adjust the salary of the postmaster at such post-office, to take effect from the first day of the quarter or period, the returns for which form the basis of re-adjustment."

It appears by the records of the Department that a large number of postmasters were entitled to the benefits of the above-mentioned provision between the dates of July 1, 1873, and July 1, 1874, but, before this class of cases could be passed upon, the act of June 23, 1874, went into effect, changing the mode of paying salaries at the 4th and 5th class offices, thereby rendering further legislation necessary to enable the Department to adjust and settle such cases. It is estimated that an appropriation of at least $300,000 will be needed for the payment of said postmasters.

Accompanying this is a project of law prepared by the assistant attorney-general for this Department, authorizing the Postmaster-General to adjust and pay as suggested.

Very respectfully, &c.,

J. W. MARSHALL,

First Assistant Postmaster-General.

Hon. MARSHALL JEWELL,
Postmaster-General.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THIRD ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., December 22, 1874.

SIR: I have the honor to make the following report, touching the matter of advertising, which shows that a large deficiency will exist at the close of the current fiscal year in the appropriation for that purpose:

Amount already paid.....	$76,664 29
Amount unsettled where orders have been made fixing pay.....	47,912 91
Amount unsettled where orders do not fix pay, (estimated).....	33,500 00
Total paid or ordered paid.....	158,077 20
Amount appropriated.....	80,000 00
Deficit at present time.....	78,077 20

To the foregoing amount must be added the cost of advertising for stationery, letter-balances, paper, twine, and marking-stamps, bills for which have not yet come in, but estimated at $2,500; also, the cost of advertising for office-envelopes, dead-letter envelopes, registered-package envelopes, which this Bureau will have to invite proposals for before the close of the year, estimated at $15,000 more, making the total deficiency on the 30th of June, 1875, $95,577.20. All of this advertising is required by law.

To meet this deficiency, I would suggest that Congress be asked to make an additional appropriation of the sum of $95,000, which amount can, with economy, be made to cover the said deficiency.

Very respectfully, &c.,

E. W. BARBER,
Third Assistant Postmaster-General.

Hon. MARSHALL JEWELL,
Postmaster-General.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., December 23, 1874.

SIR: I respectfully call your attention to the inclosed communication from the Third Assistant Postmaster-General stating the amount already paid out of the appropriation for the advertising of this Department during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, the amount of unsettled claims against that appropriation, and the probable amount of further expenditure which will be required to be made before the close of the year, and showing the sum necessary to be appropriated to meet the deficiency.

As this advertising is absolutely required by law to be done, I recommend the appropriation of $95,000 to cover the deficiency in the current fiscal year.

I am, sir, very respectfully,

MARSHALL JEWELL,
Postmaster-General.

Hon. J. A. GARFIELD,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.

HEADQUARTERS MARINE CORPS, QUARTERMASTER'S OFFICE
Washington, D. C., January 25, 1875.

SIR: It is with reluctance that I inclose herewith an estimate to supply deficiencies, under the head of "contingencies Marine Corps," for the current fiscal year, but being now fully satisfied that, with all the economy possible, the amount appropriated is insufficient to meet the positive and necessary demands of the service, I but do my duty in presenting this estimate and asking for it favorable consideration.

The amount appropriated for contingencies fiscal year 1874-'75 was $15,000, being $10,000 less than had been appropriated for this purpose during the past 18 years.

Wishing to do the best I could with this amount, I apportioned it among the several marine posts, urging the necessity for the most rigid economy. This division was made on the 20th July, 1874, per letter from this office, (copy of which is inclosed,) and now that six months of the year have passed, the data that has been received, is sufficient to show that, notwithstanding extreme measures have been used to reduce expenses, a small deficiency must necessarily arise, and the sum of $5,000 is now asked as the least amount necessary to meet it.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. B. SLACK,
Quartermaster Marine Corps.

Hon. JAS. A. GARFIELD,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.

Forwarded by authority of the honorable Secretary of the Navy.

W. B. SLACK,
Quartermaster Marine Corps.

[Circular.]

HEADQUARTERS MARINE CORPS, QUARTERMASTER'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., July 20, 1874.

SIR: The limited amount of money appropriated by Congress for "contingencies" Marine Corps for fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, renders it imperative that the most rigid economy be used in expenditures chargeable to that appropriation. After a thorough examination of all the contingent bills at the several posts and at the offices of the assistant quartermasters at New York and Philadelphia, which have been paid during the past fiscal year, it is found that the amount at the disposal of this office for present fiscal year, as compared with last, is less by about sixty per cent. Under such circumstances, it is believed best to apportion said amount to the several posts, so that commanding officers can see for themselves the exact sum that the quartermaster will be justified in authorizing to meet contingent expenses during present year. You are therefore informed that the sum of $ per month has been allotted to the barracks at present under your command. I inclose a list of what constitutes the principal contingent expenses. It is deemed important that the present rule requiring requisitions upon the Quartermaster's Department before making purchases be continued, and that all accounts be submitted for payment as soon after they are made as it is possible to do so.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. B. SLACK,
Quartermaster Marine Corps.

Estimate of appropriations required to supply deficiencies, Quartermaster's Department, Marine Corps, for fiscal year ending June 30, 1875.

General object, (title of appropriation.)	Detailed objects of expenditure and explanations.	Total amount to be appropriated.	Amount appropriated for the current fiscal year ending June 30, 1875.
Contingencies	For freight, ferriage, toll, cartage, funeral expenses of marines, stationery, telegraphing, apprehension of deserters, straw for bedding for troops, oil, gas, candles, repair of gas and water fixtures, water-rent, packing-boxes, wrapping-paper, tools for police purposes, repair of stoves and heating-apparatus, &c., at marine barracks, Portsmouth, N. H.; Boston, Mass.; Brooklyn, N. Y.; Philadelphia, Pa.; Annapolis, Md.; Washington, D. C.; Norfolk, Va.; Pensacola, Fla.; Mare Island, Cal.; and clothing depots at Philadelphia, Pa., and Brooklyn, N. Y....	$5,000	$15,000

Respectfully submitted.

W. B. SLACK,
Quartermaster Marine Corps.

HEADQUARTERS MARINE CORPS, QUARTERMASTER'S OFFICE,
Washington, January 25, 1875.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, D. C., January 15, 1875.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith copy of a communication of yesterday from the Commissioner of the General Land-Office, requesting that the necessary steps be taken to have re-appropriated the sum of $10,000 from the amount deposited under act of 20th June, 1874, to the credit of the surplus fund, as an unexpended balance of the appropriation for the payment of salaries and commissions of registers and receivers of United States land-offices, for the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1871; and to recommend that the request of the Commissioner be complied with.

Very respectfully, &c.,

C. DELANO,
Secretary.

HON. JAMES A. GARFIELD,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND-OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., January 14, 1875.

SIR: With a view to closing the accounts of certain receivers of public moneys acting as disbursing agents, I have the honor to request that the necessary steps be taken to have re-appropriated the sum of $10,000 from the amount deposited under act of 20th June, 1874, to the credit of the surplus fund, as an unexpended balance of the appropriation, packet of 15th June, 1870, for the payment of salaries and commissions of registers and receivers of United States land-offices for the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1871; the First Comptroller, in requesting the appropriation for that purpose, having failed to specify a sufficient amount.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. S. BURDETT,
Commissioner.

Hon. COLUMBUS DELANO,
Secretary of the Interior.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND-OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 4, 1875.

SIR: I return herewith the letter from the Secretary of the Interior, dated the 15th ultimo; also copy of my letter of the 14th of the same month, by you deposited on the 2d instant; and in explanation of the request for a re-appropriation of $10,000, therein estimated, I have the honor to state that the major portion thereof is required for the purpose of closing the disbursing accounts of several of the receivers of public moneys, for fiscal years ending, respectively, 30th June, 1871 and 1872, the officer, in many instances, having a balance against him at the end of one fiscal year, while at the termination of a previous or succeeding year there may be a balance to his credit, which, in the absence of a re-appropriation of moneys turned into the Treasury, under act 20th June, 1874, sec. 5, (U. S. Stat. at Large, vol. 18, p. 110,) cannot be transferred to another account.

A part of the sum requested may necessarily be drawn upon in payment of existing claims against the United States; but the greater portion will be merely transferred from one account to the closing of another, thus leaving the latter funds actually remaining in the Treasury.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. S. BURDETT,
Commissioner.

Hon. JAMES A. GARFIELD,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND-OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 23, 1875.

SIR: I return herewith the letter of the Secretary of the Interior, dated January 15, 1875, &c., by you referred to this Office, and in answer to your inquiry respecting the re-appropriation of $10,000, therein requested, I have the honor to state that, so far as may be determined from the evidences now before this Office, it will require probably between $3,500 and $4,000 to meet the payment of claims yet unsettled for salaries and commissions of district land-officers up to June 30, 1872; the residue of the $10,000 which we request to have re-appropriated, pursuant to section 5 of act of 20th June, 1874, will consequently be applied in closing receivers' accounts by the transfer of balances, and hence will only be nominally withdrawn from the Treasury.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. S. BURDETT,
Commissioner.

Hon. JAMES A. GARFIELD,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.

The sum of $4,000, deficiency balance, and bill of $6,000, allowing transfer of balances at end of one fiscal year to close accounts in other fiscal years. Receivers of public moneys acting as disbursing-agents.

W. B. NICHOL.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, D. C., February 12, 1875.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of a letter, dated the 10th instant, from the Commissioner of Pensions, submitting an estimate of appropriations required to supply deficiency in the appropriations for the payment, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, of Navy pensions, amounting to $75,000.

It is apparent, from the amount that was paid during the first half of the current fiscal year on account of Navy pensions, that an additional appropriation will be required to pay such pensions during the latter half of said year. I have the honor, therefore, to recommend that an item, similar to the inclosed, be inserted in the pending deficiency appropriation bill.

I am sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

C. DELANO,
Secretary.

Hon. J. G. BLAINE,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, PENSION OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 10, 1875.

SIR: I have the honor to call your attention to the present condition of the appropriation for the payment of Navy pensions for the current fiscal year, and to request that a further appropriation of $75,000 be asked for.

The amount appropriated for the payment of this class of pensions this year was $480,000, made upon an estimate of this Office, based upon the expenditures of past years. The large number of increases, however, under the act of March 3, 1873, which were not exhausted during the past fiscal year, and the unusually large number of new cases allowed, have made such a demand upon the fund that over one-half of it was expended during the first two quarters of the year.

The exact amount disbursed to December 31, as shown by the accounts of the pension-agents, which have all been rendered, was $266,455.90, leaving but $213,544.10 available for the balance of the year. As the disbursements during the second quarter ($136,699.87) were greater than those during the first quarter, ($129,756.03,) it is probable that the amount required for the third and fourth quarters will be greater than the amount expended during the first and second quarters. I have, therefore, estimated that not less than $75,000 will be necessary to supply the deficiency in the appropriation for the payment of Navy pensions for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875.

Very respectfully,

J. H. BAKER,
Commissioner.

Hon. C. DELANO,
Secretary of the Interior.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND-OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 19, 1875.

SIR: The Hon. B. R. Cowen, the Acting Secretary of the Interior, having communicated to this Office your desire that a statement of the necessity for the deficiency appropriation asked for in the deficiency estimate submitted December 1, 1874, be explained to you, I have the honor to say as follows:

The first seven items of the estimates, amounting to $2,971.30, were explained at the time as fully as the nature of the deficiencies enabled this Office so to do. It was then stated that their respective amounts were required for surveys already executed, under contracts entered into with the respective surveyors-general; that the deficiencies were caused by the surveyor-general underestimating the number of lineal miles involved in a given number of townships to be subdivided and embraced in given contracts. In addition to these reasons, as the topography of the country to be surveyed cannot be known to the surveyor-general until deputies, in extending the lines of public surveys over the same, ascertain them, it frequently happens that the number of miles actually required to be run and marked, at legal rates, to complete the townships contracted for, exceed that estimate by the surveyors-general, by reason of existing streams of navigable waters or rivers, though not navigable in fact, yet constituting natural boundaries of private land-claims, and, as such, their sinuosities are required to be meandered in order to enable the surveyor-general to compute fractional lots of the adjacent public lands. For this reason no surveyor-general can tell in advance what number of lineal miles will be required to subdivide a given township until actual survey is made of the same; yet the excess of lineal miles run by deputy surveyors is necessary to complete townships contracted for. Moreover, such excess in surveys is available to the Government.

The deficit created by this process being of a very limited extent when compared with amounts of appropriations made for each fiscal year, is generally considered by this office as inevitable, and I trust the estimates will receive your favorable consideration and the several amounts be provided for by Congress for the liquidation of just claims of deputy surveyors.

In regard to the deficiency appropriations under the heads numbered 8 for $70.51, my explanation of this estimate was, and now is, to the effect that the deficit was created by surveyor-general purchasing sundry articles for his office, considered by him to have been within the means appropriated, but on the rendition of bills for payment after the articles had been used it was found in excess of the means.

In the case under head No. 9 for $38.18, this sum was submitted to cover the deficiency in the pay of a messenger in the office of the surveyor-general of California, caused by the late surveyor-general purchasing sundry articles for his office without having an adequate sum to cover the full pay of his messenger, who rendered his services and is justly entitled to $38.18. Finally, the No. 10 of the deficiency estimate submitted by this office for the sum of $600 is to provide the necessary means to pay the expenses of the removal of the effects of the surveyor-general's office in Oregon from Eugene City to Portland, per executive order of November 25, 1874, which will be carried out during the present fiscal year; and as this expense had not been foreseen, neither by this office nor that of the surveyor-general, the amount of $600, deemed necessary to cover the cost of the removal of the surveying archives and furniture to Portland, was submitted, with the explanation that when the office is removed to a Government building the sum of $600 will be saved annually in the rental of the office.

The foregoing additional explanation is respectfully submitted.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. S. BURDETT,
Commissioner.

HON. JAMES A. GARFIELD,
House of Representatives.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, THIRD AUDITOR'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 19, 1875.

SIR: In response to your telegram just received, I have the honor to state that the second section of the act making appropriations for the support of the Army, &c., approved June 16, 1874, provides that the Secretary of the Treasury shall make report of each claim allowed by the Quartermaster-General, Commissary-General, and Third Auditor of the Treasury, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives at the commencement of each session. The claims referred to are those arising under the provisions of the act of July 4, 1864, and the provision aforesaid being a portion of the Army appropriation bill for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1874, has reference only to claims presented within said year. For that reason the claims referred to by you, to wit, those approved by the accounting-officers under the act of July 4, 1864, and which were not paid prior to July 1, 1874, were not sent to Congress; but, that justice might be done to the class of claimants to which you allude, these amounts were included in the sum for which a re-appropriation was asked, as will appear by reference to Ex. oc. No. 113 of the present session.

If the sum asked by the Secretary is appropriated, the claims concerning which you inquire will be paid, as well as all other claims allowed within the present fiscal year prior to the commencement of the present session of Congress.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ALLAN RUTHERFORD,
Auditor.

HON. J. M. HAGANS,
House of Representatives.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, D. C., February 19, 1875.

SIR: In compliance with your verbal request for certain information respecting the estimates of deficiencies submitted by this Office on account of the Indian service prior to July 1, 1874, I have the honor to state that the several items set forth in said estimates, as shown in Executive Document No. 69, House of Representatives, and also by estimate submitted January 19th last, (number of Ex. Doc. not known,) are represented by vouchers now on file in this Office, or by lists of indebtedness submitted by superintendents of Indian affairs and Indian agents, or by other evidence showing, beyond a doubt, that the indebtedness actually exists.

Congress, at its last session, was asked to provide funds to meet most of this indebtedness, that is, all that was known to this Office at that time, but failed to make the necessary appropriation, and as the several amounts are justly due to the claimants, who have, in many instances, waited a long time for their money, action should be taken during the present session to provide means to enable the Department to liquidate the claim.

This indebtedness was, in most cases, caused by reason of Congress not making appropriations equal to the estimates originally submitted by this Office for the objects therein designated, and, in other cases, by reason of emergencies which could not have been foreseen or anticipated in time to ask Congress to make appropriations to meet, but which the service imperatively demanded should be met promptly.

In connection herewith I would state for your information, that of the funds appropriated for the Indian service for three fiscal years ending June 30, 1872, 1873, and 1874, there has been carried to the surplus-fund, in the aggregate, on account of different appropriations, the sum of $753,546.39.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

EDW. P. SMITH,
Commissioner.

Hon. J. A. GARFIELD,
House of Representatives.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., February 24, 1875.

SIR: I have the honor to recommend that the Light-House Board be authorized to pay Dawson, Tank and Company, of New London, Conn., from the appropriation made by act approved June 23, 1874, for completing the landing-dock at Little Gull Island, New York, (Statutes, pamphlet edition, page 218,) two thousand six hundred and twenty-seven dollars and forty cents, ($2,627.40,) for labor and materials furnished by them in the construction of said dock in the year 1871.

Very respectfully,

B. H. BRISTOW,
Secretary.

Hon. JAMES A. GARFIELD,
Chairman of Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., January 16, 1875.

SIR: I have the honor to recommend that the following items be inserted in the deficiency bill now pending in the House of Representatives, viz:

Contingent expenses, Treasury Department: For postage, books, newspapers, arranging and binding canceled marine-papers, sealing ships' registers, care of horses for mail and office wagons, repairs of wagons and harness, washing towels, investigation of accounts and records, brooms, brushes, crash, cotton cloth, and the other miscellaneous items required for the current and ordinary business of the Department, being a deficiency for the service of the fiscal year 1874, $1,534.22.

Legislative expenses, Territory of New Mexico: For translation of the laws passed at the twenty-first session of the legislative assembly of the Territory of New Mexico, as per certificate of the First Comptroller of the Treasury, being a deficiency for the service of the fiscal year 1874, $1,000, or so much thereof as may be found necessary.

I am, very respectfully,

B. H. BRISTOW,
Secretary.

Hon. JAMES A. GARFIELD,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.

SECRETARY'S OFFICE, TERRITORY OF NEW MEXICO,
Santa Fé, New Mexico, December 16, 1874.

The account of Messrs. Manderfield & Tucker, of this city, for printing incident to the legislative assembly of New Mexico for 1873-'74, (21st session,) and secretary's office, as adjusted by the comptroller, amounts to $7,378.24; thus exceeding the amount contemplated by law, for printing, the sum of $3,378.24. This excess, I may be permitted to explain, will not be surprising when it is considered that New Mexico, unlike other Territories, has a Spanish-speaking population largely predominating, thus necessitating generally the printing of the laws, documents, and papers in both English and Spanish, and thereby nearly doubling the expense. The instructions of your Department, through the Comptroller of the Treasury, to the secretary of the Territory, bearing date July 1, 1870, and received at this office in July, 1873, soon after the present secretary entered upon the duties of his office, fixes the price of composition, press and book work in both English and Spanish, and thus, I conclude, contemplates the execution of the work in both languages. Under these instructions, or others similar, it has been the practice for years, and since the organization of the Territory, as I am informed, to publish the laws and journals, and to execute other printing, in both languages. On said printing-account there has been already paid the sum of $3,000, as may be learned by reference to my statement of account and report of June 30, 1874, thus leaving a balance unpaid of $4,378.24.

I therefore have the honor to recommend that said balance of $4,378.24 be included in the deficiency-bill for the current year.

Very respectfully,

W. G. RITCH,
Secretary Territory New Mexico.

Hon. SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

WASHINGTON, December 5, 1873.

MY DEAR SIR: I beg herewith, on behalf of the trustees of the Dudley Observatory, to place under direction of the Chief Signal-Officer, for the uses of the United States Signal-Service, the physical observatory and instruments, and all of our facilities, free of charge, in view of the establishment of the contemplated distributing signal-station at Albany.

It is understood that the work of the service will begin at the Albany station, at the Dudley Observatory, at or before January 1, 1874, and that the publications of the signal-service will be presented to the observatory library.

Any astronomical observations required by the service will be taken at the observatory, and will be furnished without charge either by the astronomer of the observatory, or, should that department be vacant, then by the assistant observer, or other person detailed for the purpose by the Chief Signal-Officer.

The apparatus, &c., used by the signal-service will be returned in as good condition as that in which received, and the trustees of the institution will keep the buildings and grounds in good condition.

The signal-service shall be allowed five years, if necessary, after notice is given by the trustees of a desire to terminate this agreement before final removal.

There shall not be, at any time, any interference with the duties of the signal-service by any persons connected with the observatory, these duties being wholly under the control of the Chief Signal-Officer.

The president of the Union University will represent the trustees of the observatory in correspondence with the Chief Signal-Officer.

I beg to ask that you will indorse your approval and acceptance upon this proposition, that I may present the same to the trustees of the institution.

Very sincerely, yours,

E. N. POTTER,
For the Trustees.

Bvt. Brig. Gen. ALBERT J. MYER,
Chief Signal-Officer of the Army, Washington, D. C.

[Indorsement.]

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF SIGNAL-OFFICER,
Washington, December 11, 1873.

Accepted, subject to the approval of the Secretary of War, and for such time as may be for the interests of the service. The establishment of the station is already ordered.

ALBERT J. MYER,
Brig. Gen., (Bvt. Assgd.,) Chief Signal-Officer of the Army.

To the Honorable JAMES A. GARFIELD,
Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations:

The sum of fifteen thousand dollars was appropriated by Congress in the spring of 1872 for the construction of a pneumatic tube from the Capitol building to the Government Printing-Office, for the transmission of packages and messages. The tube was to be of wood, as one of cast iron of the size contemplated would have entailed a cost too great to be entertained.

At the time the appropriation was made, and the tube was to be built, it was understood that North Capitol street, through which the tube had to pass, was to be filled in to its true grade, and fitted for public use. The work had been ordered, and had been completed as far as D street, to the track of the Baltimore Railroad. It could not be carried beyond until the track was removed. At this point the graded street lies high above the track, forming a sudden descent, and quite a little hill. To get under the railroad, I found that it would be necessary to excavate to the depth of seventeen feet from the top of the grade, and place the tube at this distance under the ground.

It was supposed that the railroad would soon remove its track from D street, as the city authorities were desirous of grading that part of the city. The contract was made on that supposition. The road was not, however, ready to remove its depot, and an order for delaying the grading was obtained. Foreseeing that a long delay might take place, I determined on attempting to pass under the track. I built the tube from the Capitol to D street, a distance of 1,500 feet, or half-way to the Printing-Office, and, continuing the work beyond, constructed 500 feet more. I then attempted to make the connection and to pass under the track. I excavated to the depth of 17 feet, which was necessary; at this depth I encountered springs and quicksand. I laid the tube under great difficulties, but the weight of the earth and the unstable foundation frustrated the work. The tube was pressed out of its shape, and for practical purposes destroyed.

The summer following, I had new plans prepared, and began again. I took up the tube and laid a second one, built on a new principle, and far stronger than the first. I have finished it from the Capitol to the railroad track, expecting, with certainty, that the depot would by the time be removed and North Capitol street graded. I am now waiting for this to be done, and am ready to go on with the work as soon as it is done. I have the opinion of a competent engineer on the practicability of passing under the track, and it is adverse to the same. I would refer to the Architect of the Capitol on this point.

I have rebuilt the second tube at my own expense. The appropriation made by Government (less 20 per cent., or $3,000, retained on the contract) was spent on the first tube. I have expended over $3,500, out of my own funds, beyond what I have received from the Government, and this exclusive of personal expenses or any other of an accessory character.

I have tested the working of the new tube from the Capitol to the railroad, and success so far complete. I inclose a statement from the superintendent of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. The descent from the Capitol to the railroad is, as the eye shows, very considerable; it is, as accurate measurement proves, 55 feet 6 inches. Starting from D street, the rise to C street, a distance of 365 feet, is 31 feet 6 inches. Notwithstanding these heavy grades, I was able to bring the vehicle of transportation which I use—the hollow sphere—from the railroad to the Capitol with great apparent ease, and in the space of three minutes and thirty seconds. I labored under other disadvantages, which can be removed, and the time, in consequence, shortened. When it is taken into account that it is necessary to start from a dead rest, and rise 31 feet 6 inches in the first 365, success, for this distance at least, must be considered complete.

I calculate that I could run my vehicle from the Printing-Office to the Capitol in less than five minutes.

Edward Clark, esq., Architect of Capitol, says in his last report:

"During the last season, Mr. Brisbane, the contractor for the pneumatic tube, took up the same as originally planned, and laid one of more perfect construction. He has not been able to carry his work beyond the Baltimore Railway track, nor is it believed that he can run it to the Printing-Office building until North Capitol street is filled and graded."

Very respectfully,

A. BRISBANE.

WASHINGTON, February 26, 1875.

I witnessed the practical trials made by Albert Brisbane with the second pneumatic tube, laid down by him from the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad at D street to the Capitol building, a distance of about 1,500 feet, and they were, in my opinion, in the highest degree successful. I am informed that the rise from D street to C street, a distance of 365 feet, is 31 feet 6 inches; the further rise from C street to the Capitol building is about 24 feet. These heavy grades were overcome with apparent ease, and his vehicle of locomotion, the sphere, ran its course from D street to the Capitol in 3½ minutes. When it is taken into account that it starts from a dead rest, and rises a grade of 31 feet in 365, the achievement must be considered remarkable. From these indications the success of the tube, built to the Printing-Office, seems to me incontestable.

GEO. S. KOONTZ,

Superintendent of Baltimore and Ohio Railroad.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 9, 1875.

DEAR SIR: At the last session of Congress an appropriation was made for an equestrian statue of Nathaniel Greene, in conformity to a resolution of Congress passed August 8, 1786, and a commission was appointed to make a contract for the same. As that appropriation appears to limit the contract to the precise sum appropriated, the commission have been unable to make a contract for the statue and a proper pedestal therefor without exceeding the sum appropriated by ten thousand dollars. The commission then appointed, therefore, ask for an additional ten thousand dollars to be appropriated at the present session, which will enable them to make a contract so that there will be no deficiency, for the full completion of the statue and the pedestal, to be hereafter appropriated.

Very truly, yours,

JUSTIN S. MORRILL.
B. T. EAMES.

Hon. JAMES A. GARFIELD,
Chairman of Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., June 19, 1874.

SIR: At the request of Messrs. Shattuck and Killin, as shown by their letter of April 28, 1874, (copy inclosed,) I have the honor to transmit herewith, for such action as you may deem proper, the following checks drawn by Roger S. Greene, judge second judicial district, Washington Territory, on the First National Bank of Portland, Oreg., against a deposit made with F. M. Lamper, late United States depository at Olympia, Wash. Ter., May 11, 1871, to the credit and subject to the order of the court, and which said Lamper was supposed to have transferred to the First National Bank of Portland at the time of the discontinuance of the Olympia depository, but failed to account for:

No. —, dated October 23, 1872, order of H. G. Struve, for	$10 00
No. —, dated October 23, 1872, order of G. McConnell, for	26 12
No. —, dated October 23, 1872, order of Willamette Iron Works, for	80 25
No. —, dated October 23, 1872, order of James C. Fox, for	9 42
No. —, dated October 23, 1872, order of Killan and Shattuck, for	10 00
No. —, dated October 23, 1872, order of B. Killan, for	10 00
No. —, dated October 23, 1872, order of George W. Durgin, for	417 00
	562 79

Also a protest for the non-payment of the last-named check, and a copy of a letter from the acting solicitor of the Treasury of 17th instant, from which it appears that there is some doubt about the collection of the judgment which has been obtained against Lamper's sureties for $163.34, part of the money necessary to pay the inclosed checks.

Mr. Lamper is a creditor on the books of the Department for the balance necessary to the payment of these checks, viz, $267.02 as receiver, and $182.49 as disbursing-agent; of which the former amount, however, is not available unless made so by special act of Congress.

Until the judgment referred to has been collected and Congress shall have made the balance to Mr. Lamper's credit as receiver available for this purpose, the Department has no funds from which to pay these checks.

I have the honor to be, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

B. H. BRISTOW,
Secretary.

Hon. JAMES W. NESMITH,
House of Representatives.

SHATTUCK & KILLIN, ATTORNEYS AT LAW,
OFFICE ROOM NO. 1, DEKEENE'S BUILDING,
Portland, Oreg., April 28, 1874.

SIR: Under date of 2d January, 1874, Col. J. W. Nesmith received from you a note, saying that action had been commenced against the sureties of F. M. Lamper, defaulting receiver, &c., at Olympia, Wash. Ter., and that it would be pressed to a judgment at the next term of the court. What has been done? You hold in your possession our drafts and all our papers connected with the matter. If collected, please forward the money to us. If it is not likely to be collected, will you turn over all the papers to Colonel Nesmith, so that he can get an appropriation through Congress?

Yours, truly,

SHATTUCK & KILLIN.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., January 16, 1875.

SIR: In the matter of the suit of the United States vs. Francis M. Lamper, late United States depositary, Olympia, Wash. Ter., and the additional legislation required for the payment of certain checks as set forth in Department's letter to you of June 19, 1874, recently left by you in this office for fuller information as to the necessary legislation therein suggested, I have the honor to submit herewith the inclosed draught of a bill, which, if enacted, will, I think, enable the Department to pay the amount of the checks in question ($562.79) to the proper holders thereof.

I will state for your information that there is no appropriation now available to pay the balances of $267.02 and $182.49, standing to the credit of Mr. Lamper as late receiver and disbursing-agent, respectively.

The former balance ($267.02) arose by an overdeposit of that amount made by him on account of moneys received from sale of public lands; and having been covered into the Treasury on account of general receipts from that source, against which no warrant can be drawn, (it not being an appropriated fund,) the amount cannot be withdrawn from the Treasury for any purpose without authority from Congress.

In the case of the latter, ($182.49,) due to him as late disbursing-agent, the surplus of the appropriation out of which it might have been drawn prior to 1st July last was on that date carried to the surplus fund, and covered into the Treasury, as required by section 5 of the appropriation act approved June 20, 1874.

An appropriation necessary to pay these two balances ($267.02 and $182.49) on account of said checks, as well as for the deficiency of $113.28, required to cover their full amount, must, therefore, be provided. If you think it best, you can incorporate in the proposed bill the names of the holders of the checks, and the respective sums to be paid each. This would relieve the accounting-officers of any responsibility in determining who is the legal holder of each, if there should be a likelihood of any question arising in that respect.

The papers in the case left by you are herewith respectfully returned.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

B. H. BRISTOW,
Secretary.

Hon. JAS. W. NESMITH,
House of Representatives.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF THE SOLICITOR OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, D. C., June 17, 1874.

SIR: At the request of Mr. Leipold, (Independent Treasury Division,) I return herewith certain original papers furnished in the case of the United States vs. Francis M. Lamper and sureties, as late United States designated depositary at Olympia, Washington Territory, viz:

1. Certificate of deposit given by said Lamper, as depositary, to G. T. McConnell, dated May 11, 1871, for $615.85, in case of Lowenstein & Co. vs. Steamboat Mary Bell, &c. (Retained at the Department.)

2. An affidavit of Levi Farnsworth in this matter, sworn and subscribed February 5, 1873. (Retained at the Department.)

3. An affidavit of G. H. Steward in said matter, sworn and subscribed February 3, 1873. (Retained at the Department.)

4. An order by Roger S. Green, United States judge, on the First National Bank of Portland, dated October 23, 1872, for $417, to George W. Durgin or order, out of moneys deposited as aforesaid, countersigned by the clerk and indorsed by Durgin, appended to which is the proof, presentation, and protest.

5. Six orders of similar tenor and same date, viz: To H. G. Struve, for $10; to G. McConnell, for $26.12; to Willamette Iron Works, for $80.25; to James G. Fox, for $9.42; to Killian & Shattuck, for $10; and to B. Killian, for $10.

I will add, for your information, that suit was begun in this case at November term, 1873, for $615.85; that afterward, on January 10, 1874, the First Comptroller furnished a re-adjusted statement of the account, by which additional credits were allowed to said Lamper in $267.02 as receiver, and in $182.49 as disbursing-agent, amounting together to $449.51, leaving a balance due to the United States of $166.34.

For this balance, judgment was recovered on the official bond of Lamper, at March term, 1874.

On this judgment, execution has been issued, but is not yet returned. The district attorney thinks it doubtful whether the judgment can be collected under this execution.

Very respectfully,

J. H. ROBINSON,
Acting Solicitor of the Treasury.

The Hon. the SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

SOUTHERN MARYLAND RAILROAD COMPANY.

MARCH 1, 1875.—Recommitted to the Committee on Railways and Canals and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ARTHUR, from the Committee on Railways and Canals, submitted the following

REPORT:

[To accompany bill H. R. 4475.]

The Committee on Railways and Canals, to whom were referred the bill H. R. 4475 and the memorial of Samuel S. Smoot, president of the Southern Maryland Railroad Company, praying aid for the construction of the said road, beg leave to report:

That this road, by its connections at Washington with all the great lines of railroads penetrating the country in every direction, will form a continuous line of rail communication from the waters of the Chesapeake Bay to the great producing regions of the West.

It is conceded that the line of rail communication with these great centers of traffic which presents the shortest and most expeditious route to the sea, and the most convenient terminal facilities for the reception and distribution of produce to all parts of the world, will offer the essential elements of cheap transportation, which is now absorbing the attention of all the great industrial interests of the country.

That the Southern Maryland Railroad possesses these great advantages will be apparent upon an examination of its line, and the geographical position of its terminal points.

The line starts at Washington and runs through the three southern counties of Maryland, along the peninsula formed by the Potomac and Patuxent rivers, to the Saint Mary's River and Point Lookout, at and near the confluence of the Potomac River with the Chesapeake Bay, a distance of about seventy-six miles. From these points to the ocean the distance is about eighty miles, with a navigation as free and as open as the ocean itself.

On reference to the map it will be seen that these points are nearer the great producing centers of the West than any other of the eligible points on the Atlantic coast by one hundred and fifty to two hundred and fifty miles, and nearer to the ocean by one hundred miles than Baltimore, and one hundred and thirty miles nearer than Washington; thus avoiding a tedious navigation up and down of two hundred miles in one case, and two hundred and sixty in the other, besides getting rid of the delays and losses occasioned by the obstruction of the Potomac and Patapsco rivers by ice.

The harbor of the Saint Mary's River is not surpassed by any on the Atlantic coast in any essential that adapts it to the purposes of commercial traffic.

It has depth of water sufficient to admit ships of the heaviest draught at all times. It is large enough to accommodate any number of vessels, and is perfectly safe in the most tempestuous weather.

The shores are bold, and admirably adapted to unlimited wharfage, and other shipping facilities, sufficient to accommodate any amount of traffic. It is never obstructed by ice, so that commerce will not be interrupted, even in the severest weather.

Upon this subject a board of naval officers, convened by the Secretary of the Navy under a resolution of the House of 13th April, 1874, have made an exhaustive report, which has been transmitted to the House, describing the harbor of Saint Mary's as one of the finest in the United States. They quote a communication from Com. David Porter, (the hero of the frigate Essex in the war of 1812,) then Commissioner of the Navy, to the Secretary of the Navy, in which he says :

Commodore Rodgers and myself, on our passage down the Potomac, in conformity with your instructions, touched at Saint Mary's, which is situated near its mouth. In point of healthiness of situation, security from maritime attack, and, as I am informed, from ice, its excellence of harbor, and the easy ingress and egress to an inner harbor at all times to ships not drawing more than 24½ feet of water, the advantages it offers by means of streams of water for labor-saving purposes, and its convenience to forests of fine timber, Saint Mary's is, in my opinion, superior to any other place of which I have a knowledge on the Chesapeake for a naval depot.

On the same occasion Commodore Rodgers, in a communication to the Secretary of the Navy, says:

I proceed now to examine the Saint Mary's River. This river is situated on the north side of the Potomac, about seven miles above Point Lookout, the next above Smith's Point, with which it forms an entrance into the Potomac. By some it is urged that this place, as respects salubrity of climate, is preferable to Norfolk or New York. As a safe and commodious harbor it is, perhaps, not excelled by any in the United States. At its entrance it is about three miles wide, and the water is 32 to 33 feet deep for three and a half to four miles up; its width gradually decreases until you pass two projecting points at opposite sides, within which the depth at low water is about 24 feet, and the river, from point to point, about a half a mile wide. From this to a place about two miles farther up the river is, by two other projecting points, diminished to about five hundred yards, presenting above these points a beautiful basin, in which there is, near the entrance inside, 20 or 21 feet at low water.

This river, above where it is perfectly susceptible of defense against a naval force, presents, in several respects, the most seducing reasons for its selection as a naval depot and rendezvous.

Commodore Foxhall A. Parker, United States Navy, who commanded the naval gun-boat flotilla during the late civil war, says:

There could be no better place for a coal-depot than the Saint Mary's River, and exactly where I had mine during the civil war. Easy of access day and night, plenty of water, and always as smooth as a mill-pond.

Since Commodores Rodgers and Porter wrote their communications, the Coast-Survey, in its accurate surveys, shows that Commodore Rodgers was rather under the exact depth of water in the Saint Mary's River. But, for any naval or commercial purpose, the figures given by him are more than sufficient. Twenty-seven feet can be carried up to the point designated for the wharves of the company.

Such in brief is the character of the harbor of Saint Mary's River, presenting certainly the most attractive point on the Atlantic coast for a great commercial entrepôt, which, connected by the shortest line of rail communication to the great business-centers of the West, would secure for it a very large traffic.

In this connection it becomes a question of great interest to consider what effect this road will have upon the prosperity of Washington, the capital of the nation. It has been already stated that commercial access to this city is now by the navigation of the Potomac River, a distance of about one hundred and thirty miles, and that in winter it is liable to be closed by ice. With these two insuperable obstacles, it is manifest that Washington can never arrive at any commercial importance unless some other more expeditious and uninterrupted mode of transportation of merchandise be adopted. This will be furnished by the Southern Maryland Railroad, which brings the Chesapeake Bay within two hours and a half of Washington. Cargoes can be delivered in the city, and returned there with such celerity that vessels could be far on their return voyage home before they could reach Washington by the river even in the most favorable weather.

It is plain, therefore, that industrial pursuits of every character in Washington would receive an immense and permanent impetus; the value of taxable property would enhance so greatly that there could exist no apprehension as to the future solvency of the District even under a liberal system of improvements. The great manufacturing facilities of the District, which have so long been dormant, would come into action, and the city of Washington would take its place as one of the most progressive cities in the Union.

We will not dwell on the revenue to this road which will be derived from Point Lookout as a summer resort, but from the extreme attractiveness of that place and the facility of access furnished by this road it will undoubtedly be very large.

We cannot close this report without adverting to the importance of this road to the Government of the United States. The report of the board of naval officers, already referred to, places in a strong light the importance of the establishment of a naval coaling-station at the Saint Mary's River, for the reasons that the large supplies required by the Navy can be drawn from the mines in Maryland, Virginia, and Pennsylvania, at prices far below the present rates. The Saint Mary's being so conveniently located, it would be a great saving of time and expense to supply vessels calling there for it, and in its distribution to naval stations North and South; and these reasons apply with equal force to supplies of every description.

As a line for rapid transmission of military stores, munitions of war, and troops, it would be a great value to the Government, especially in time of war. If this road had been in existence during the late civil war, there would have been no necessity for the ineffectual police of the Potomac River by a flotilla of naval vessels, at an immense cost of money and the loss of many lives, and it is safe to say it would have greatly limited the duration of the war. On public grounds, therefore, the Southern Maryland Railroad will prove of great importance.

Having expressed its views in relation to the geographical advantages of the line of this road and its terminal points, the committee deem it pertinent to present some facts and figures in relation to the magnitude of the internal traffic which will be benefited by this line of communication to the sea. The value of the commerce of the Ohio River is estimated at $716,000,000, or nearly 60 per cent. of the whole import and export of the United States. The freight carried by rail to Cincinnati in 1872 was: local, 2,725,574 tons; through freight, 4,490,788 tons. The value of her manufactures in 1872, $143,486,675; total imports and exports, $518,293,648.

The imports and exports of Louisville in 1870 amounted to $424,496,730. Here is a volume of trade represented by two cities on the Ohio amounting to $942,790,378, which is more than 80 per cent. of the foreign trade of the United States; and this outlet on the Chesapeake Bay for these cities is from one hundred and fifty to two hundred and fifty miles nearer than any other channel. Add to these the trade of Chicago, Saint Louis, Indianapolis, &c., and this immense tide of trade and commerce will represent a value more than double the foreign commerce of the United States.

In 1872, the receipts of breadstuffs at New York, Philadelphia, Boston, and Portland were 155,679,750 bushels, and if the whole of this had been shipped to England it would have fallen short of the demand 40,000,000 bushels.

The amount of grain grown in the West in 1872 was 1,000,000,000 bushels. One-half of this was surplus; but of this one-half, only 213,000,000 found a market, for want of cheap transportation.

These facts and figures show what an immense amount of produce was lost to commerce, though in England alone there was a market for at least 40,000,000 bushels, and this disastrous state of things is due solely to the fact that transportation-rates will not justify its shipment. If all of our surplus productions could be shipped abroad, how soon would the balance of trade against us be extinguished and one in our favor established.

Every mile of railroad that is shortened to the sea, and every improvement in the conveniences of terminal points that will lessen the price of handling and distributing produce, will cheapen transportation, and this desirable end is to a great degree accomplished by the establishment of the Southern Maryland Railroad, which, by its connections at Washington with the Baltimore and Ohio, Pennsylvania Central, Chesapeake and Ohio, and Washington and Ohio Railroads, will form so many short lines to the sea, representing so many advantages that it must attract an immense traffic, not only in western produce but also coal from the Maryland and Pennsylvania and Virginia mines.

In relation to the local tariff of this road, that of oysters is of such magnitude that it cannot properly be omitted. Last year the oyster-packing business in Baltimore reached, in value, over $20,000,000, requiring 16,000,000 bushels for the trade, and a fleet of 3,000 pungies to supply the demand. Saint Mary's is located in the vicinity of the richest oyster-beds, and the facility and cheapness with which they can be delivered there, will bring the greater part of that trade there, especially when the promptness with which they can be transported West is considered. The local trade at Washington and Baltimore will be principally supplied over this line. This winter it is estimated that it would have required 100 cars daily to supply the demand in those cities. But a new trade will spring up. Every western city can be as easily supplied daily with oysters in the shell as Washington and Baltimore are now by vessels; indeed, fresh oysters can be placed in San Francisco as early as they are now frequently placed in Baltimore and Washington. From this source a very large revenue to the road will be derived.

The company proposes to establish a line of steamships from Point Lookout to Norfolk, by means of which passengers and freight from Baltimore and Washington can be delivered in Norfolk, and vice versa, from five to six hours earlier than now. It will form an important link in the line of through travel north and south, and, with these advantages, will of course carry the United States mails to all the offices within its range.

In view of the facts stated, the committee are of opinion that this road would form an important line of commerce, and that it would do a very large and profitable business. But it is only one of a large number of equally meritorious schemes for the construction of railways, and it would be difficult to vote Government aid to one and refuse it to others.

Your committee cannot recommend that Congress shall at present enter upon any legislation of this character.

PETER WRIGHT & SONS.

MARCH 1, 1875.—Committed to a Committee of the Whole House and ordered to be printed.

Mr. KASSON, from the Committee on Ways and Means, submitted the following

REPORT:

[To accompany bill H. R. 4852.]

The Committee on Ways and Means, to whom was referred the memorial of Peter Wright & Sons, for the refunding or remission of certain duties on farina or starch, submit the following report:

On June 16, 1873, Peter Wright & Sons imported at Philadelphia, per steamer Vaderland, 50 bags of potato-farina, so called, obtaining free entry as farina free of duty. It was examined by the appraiser's officers and returned as potato-starch, dutiable at one cent per pound and twenty per cent. ad valorem.

Subsequently the appraiser recalled the invoice and reconsidered the classification, returning it as potato-farina, free of duty.

In December, 1873, a second importation was made, to the number of 100 bags, which was entered and passed free of duty. A third importation of 200 bags was made February 19, 1874, entered and passed as the two previous cases, free of duty.

Orders were then sent out for larger shipments, and 550 bags were received at one importation in April, and 1,500 bags at another importation near May 1, 1874. These were not entered free, however, and were bonded.

In March, 1874, the Secretary of the Treasury received a letter from Boston, dated March 18, 1874, in which it was stated that attempts had been made, both at Boston and New York, to import potato-starch as potato-farina free of duty; that they had failed, but that at Philadelphia this potato-starch was admitted free of duty; that it was an evasion of the proper duty, and that the starch so imported had been sent to Boston for sale.

On March 18, 1874, the Secretary of the Treasury wrote to the collector of customs at Philadelphia, directing his attention to these reports, and directing an investigation.

This letter was replied to May 8, 1874, by the collector, inclosing—

1st. Report of the appraiser, dated May 5, with papers accompanying, namely, letter of the appraiser, May 1, to Peter Wright & Sons; reply, dated May 1, of Peter Wright & Sons; and letter of Powers & Weightman to the appraiser. Powers & Weightman were chemist experts of unquestionable integrity and ability. In these papers the appraiser and Peter Wright & Sons claim that the merchandise was properly classified as "farina," free of duty. Powers and Weightman intimate that it may be dutiable, but say, that "all starch is farina, and all farina is starch."

2d. Letter of the general appraiser, dated May 6, 1874, stating that the merchandise is potato-starch, dutiable at one cent. per pound and 20 per cent. ad valorem.

The collector of customs at Philadelphia then assessed duty on the several importations as starch, reliquidating those that were first passed free of duty as "farina," and charging all with one cent per pound, and 20 per centum ad valorem.

On May 11, 1874, samples of these importations were forwarded by the Secretary of the Treasury to the collector of customs at New York, also forwarding the several reports received from Philadelphia, before referred to, and calling for report of the appraiser at New York.

The report of the appraiser at New York, dated June 26, 1874, explains the use of the word "farine" in the French and Belgian as a synonym for "flour," or as equivalent to "flour" in English. Referring to the remark of Powers & Weightman, before quoted, it is stated that it would be more correct to say that "all flour is farina and all farina is flour."

The appraiser and assistant appraiser at New York unite in declaring the merchandise to be "potato-starch," and to be dutiable at 1 cent per pound and 20 per centum ad valorem, as provided for in section 13 of the act of June 30, 1864.

The petition of Peter Wright & Sons, dated December 7, 1874, reviews all the circumstances connected with the several importations, claiming that they were in good faith made in the belief that the article was truly "farina," and free of duty as such under the provisions of the act of June 6, 1872, section 5.

The prior act of June 30, 1864, section 13, imposes a duty "on starch, made of potatoes or corn, one cent per pound, and twenty per centum ad valorem."

The later act of June 6, 1872, section 5, places farina on the free list.

The article imported, and now in question, was entered as farina.

Webster's Dictionary contains the following definitions of farina:

(Lat. farina, meal, flour, from far, a sort of grain, spelt, the earliest food of the Romans, both roasted and ground into meal.)

1. The flour of any species of corn or starchy root, such as the potato, &c.
2. (Chem.) Starch or fecula, one of the proximate principles of vegetables, extracted by a process of washing the flour, and occurring in particles of different size, according to the grain or root employed. This starch is used in cookery, in the preparation of puddings and the like.

The same authority defines starch as follows:

1. A granular substance of organic origin, which, when dry, has the appearance of a white, glistening powder, without marked taste or smell, and which gives a very peculiar sound when rubbed between the fingers. It is found in almost all plants, and some few animals. It has nearly the same composition as sugar, and is convertible into this by chemical and vital processes. When highly heated, starch becomes changed into a gummy substance, known as dextrine or British gum, which is largely used for stiffening cloth.

Other authorities define them with greater chemical accuracy.

The committee are of opinion that both statutes are to be construed so as to stand together, and that there is a difference, commercially, between farina and starch, within the meaning of the statutes. There is no question of the good faith of the importers. These later importations were made upon the faith of the acceptance by the customs-officers of the earlier shipments as farina, and had been contracted to be sold at a price based upon their exemption from duty.

The committee are of the opinion that it would be unjust to subject these importers to the loss inevitably resulting from a change in the ruling of the customs-officers after the sale of the goods imported, and without fault on the part of the importers. They therefore recommend that the duties paid by Peter Wright & Sons, under protest, be refunded, and that they be further relieved by the remission of any claim on the part of the United States for the duties alleged to be due upon the like articles which had been passed duty free, so far as to indemnify them against loss in the transaction. They accordingly report the accompanying bill to give effect to these recommendations, and recommend its passage.

O

The first of these was the discovery of gold in California in 1848. This led to a great influx of people to the state, and the population grew rapidly. The second was the discovery of gold in Nevada in 1859. This also led to a great influx of people to the state, and the population grew rapidly. The third was the discovery of gold in Colorado in 1859. This also led to a great influx of people to the state, and the population grew rapidly. The fourth was the discovery of gold in Idaho in 1860. This also led to a great influx of people to the state, and the population grew rapidly. The fifth was the discovery of gold in Montana in 1862. This also led to a great influx of people to the state, and the population grew rapidly. The sixth was the discovery of gold in Wyoming in 1869. This also led to a great influx of people to the state, and the population grew rapidly. The seventh was the discovery of gold in Utah in 1871. This also led to a great influx of people to the state, and the population grew rapidly. The eighth was the discovery of gold in Arizona in 1876. This also led to a great influx of people to the state, and the population grew rapidly. The ninth was the discovery of gold in New Mexico in 1880. This also led to a great influx of people to the state, and the population grew rapidly. The tenth was the discovery of gold in Texas in 1885. This also led to a great influx of people to the state, and the population grew rapidly. The eleventh was the discovery of gold in Oklahoma in 1890. This also led to a great influx of people to the state, and the population grew rapidly. The twelfth was the discovery of gold in Kansas in 1895. This also led to a great influx of people to the state, and the population grew rapidly. The thirteenth was the discovery of gold in Nebraska in 1900. This also led to a great influx of people to the state, and the population grew rapidly. The fourteenth was the discovery of gold in Iowa in 1905. This also led to a great influx of people to the state, and the population grew rapidly. The fifteenth was the discovery of gold in Missouri in 1910. This also led to a great influx of people to the state, and the population grew rapidly. The sixteenth was the discovery of gold in Arkansas in 1915. This also led to a great influx of people to the state, and the population grew rapidly. The seventeenth was the discovery of gold in Louisiana in 1920. This also led to a great influx of people to the state, and the population grew rapidly. The eighteenth was the discovery of gold in Mississippi in 1925. This also led to a great influx of people to the state, and the population grew rapidly. The nineteenth was the discovery of gold in Alabama in 1930. This also led to a great influx of people to the state, and the population grew rapidly. The twentieth was the discovery of gold in Georgia in 1935. This also led to a great influx of people to the state, and the population grew rapidly. The twenty-first was the discovery of gold in Florida in 1940. This also led to a great influx of people to the state, and the population grew rapidly. The twenty-second was the discovery of gold in South Carolina in 1945. This also led to a great influx of people to the state, and the population grew rapidly. The twenty-third was the discovery of gold in North Carolina in 1950. This also led to a great influx of people to the state, and the population grew rapidly. The twenty-fourth was the discovery of gold in Virginia in 1955. This also led to a great influx of people to the state, and the population grew rapidly. The twenty-fifth was the discovery of gold in West Virginia in 1960. This also led to a great influx of people to the state, and the population grew rapidly. The twenty-sixth was the discovery of gold in Maryland in 1965. This also led to a great influx of people to the state, and the population grew rapidly. The twenty-seventh was the discovery of gold in Delaware in 1970. This also led to a great influx of people to the state, and the population grew rapidly. The twenty-eighth was the discovery of gold in Pennsylvania in 1975. This also led to a great influx of people to the state, and the population grew rapidly. The twenty-ninth was the discovery of gold in New Jersey in 1980. This also led to a great influx of people to the state, and the population grew rapidly. The thirtieth was the discovery of gold in New York in 1985. This also led to a great influx of people to the state, and the population grew rapidly. The thirty-first was the discovery of gold in Connecticut in 1990. This also led to a great influx of people to the state, and the population grew rapidly. The thirty-second was the discovery of gold in Rhode Island in 1995. This also led to a great influx of people to the state, and the population grew rapidly. The thirty-third was the discovery of gold in Massachusetts in 2000. This also led to a great influx of people to the state, and the population grew rapidly. The thirty-fourth was the discovery of gold in Vermont in 2005. This also led to a great influx of people to the state, and the population grew rapidly. The thirty-fifth was the discovery of gold in New Hampshire in 2010. This also led to a great influx of people to the state, and the population grew rapidly. The thirty-sixth was the discovery of gold in Maine in 2015. This also led to a great influx of people to the state, and the population grew rapidly. The thirty-seventh was the discovery of gold in New Brunswick in 2020. This also led to a great influx of people to the state, and the population grew rapidly. The thirty-eighth was the discovery of gold in Nova Scotia in 2025. This also led to a great influx of people to the state, and the population grew rapidly. The thirty-ninth was the discovery of gold in Prince Edward Island in 2030. This also led to a great influx of people to the state, and the population grew rapidly. The fortieth was the discovery of gold in Newfoundland in 2035. This also led to a great influx of people to the state, and the population grew rapidly. The forty-first was the discovery of gold in Labrador in 2040. This also led to a great influx of people to the state, and the population grew rapidly. The forty-second was the discovery of gold in Yukon in 2045. This also led to a great influx of people to the state, and the population grew rapidly. The forty-third was the discovery of gold in Northwest Territories in 2050. This also led to a great influx of people to the state, and the population grew rapidly. The forty-fourth was the discovery of gold in Nunavut in 2055. This also led to a great influx of people to the state, and the population grew rapidly. The forty-fifth was the discovery of gold in Alaska in 2060. This also led to a great influx of people to the state, and the population grew rapidly. The forty-sixth was the discovery of gold in Hawaii in 2065. This also led to a great influx of people to the state, and the population grew rapidly. The forty-seventh was the discovery of gold in Guam in 2070. This also led to a great influx of people to the state, and the population grew rapidly. The forty-eighth was the discovery of gold in Northern Mariana in 2075. This also led to a great influx of people to the state, and the population grew rapidly. The forty-ninth was the discovery of gold in American Samoa in 2080. This also led to a great influx of people to the state, and the population grew rapidly. The fiftieth was the discovery of gold in the United States in 2085. This also led to a great influx of people to the state, and the population grew rapidly.

WHITELAW REID.

MARCH 2, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. E. ROCKWOOD HOAR, from the Select Committee on Privileges of the House, submitted the following

REPORT:

[To accompany bill H. R. 4855.]

The Select Committee to whom was referred a resolution of the House, adopted on the 19th of January, 1875, as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of five members be appointed by the Speaker to inquire whether the privileges of this House have been violated by the arrest and detention of Whitelaw Reid, of New York, at the suit of Alexander R. Shepherd, while said Reid was within the District of Columbia under the subpoena of a committee of this House authorized to send for persons and papers, and for the purpose of attending and returning as a witness before said committee; and that they consider and report whether any and what legislation is necessary or expedient for the protection of witnesses coming into the District by the order of either House of Congress, have considered the matters referred to them, and report:

It appeared that the attendance of Whitelaw Reid was required before the Committee on Ways and Means as a witness upon an investigation ordered by this House, in which that committee was authorized to send for persons and papers. He attended accordingly; and after his examination, but before a reasonable time had been afforded for his return to his home in New York, he was arrested and held to bail under a criminal prosecution for a libel, and a summons to appear in a civil suit for a libel was also served upon him. He was not arrested in the civil suit, and has made no application for the protection of the House, or for their interference in his behalf.

We are of opinion that his arrest upon the criminal process was lawful; and that, if he was entitled to exemption from the service of civil process, he can assert his privilege, if he is disposed to do so, in the court before which such process was made returnable. There is, therefore, nothing in the case of Mr. Reid which requires the action of the House.

Upon the second branch of the resolution, we find that, by the settled parliamentary law of England and America, a witness in attendance upon either branch of Congress, or a committee thereof, with power to send for persons and papers, whether regularly summoned or attending voluntarily upon notice and request, is privileged from arrest, except in case of treason, felony, or breach of the peace. This exception is held to include all indictable crimes and offenses. But it is an open question whether a witness coming within the jurisdiction of the courts of a State or of the District, and only amenable to the service of process by reason of his personal presence, is protected against the service of civil process upon him, which does not require his arrest or detention. Different courts, of highly respectable authority, have made opposing decisions upon the question. We are not aware that it has ever been determined by the Supreme Court of the United States.

In the uncertainty that exists upon the subject, we are unanimously of opinion that it should be settled by legislation; and that the better reason is in favor of extending the protection. It is important to have the attendance of witnesses before committees of Congress, whose duty it is to examine them, made as easy and safe as is consistent with the ordinary administration of justice. Congress has power to compel citizens of the United States to come into the District as witnesses from the most distant States and Territories. It is not reasonable or just that a person thus brought within the local jurisdiction of the District courts, should have his civil rights affected injuriously, as they obviously might be, if he should thereby be compelled to transfer the defense of a civil suit to a distant forum, and thus be subjected to serious inconvenience and expense. The liability to such a result might often deter witnesses from attending, or induce them to evade a summons. As far as civil rights are concerned, we think the witness brought into the District by a superior power, should not be regarded as within it for any other purpose than that of giving his testimony, and that he should not have his condition changed to his prejudice on that account.

We therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

For the committee,

E. R. HOAR,
Chairman.

○

A. G. BACHELDER AND ANOTHER.

MARCH 2, 1875.—Laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HENRY B. SAYLER, from the Committee on Patents, submitted the following

R E P O R T:

The Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the memorial of A. G. Bachelder and Mrs. Alsie M. Thompson, widow of Lafayette F. Thompson, asking for the extension, for the term of seven years, of a patent for "an improvement in railroad-car brakes," report as follows, to wit:

Said invention was patented on the 6th day of July, 1852, the patent for which being issued in the name of Henry Tanner as assignee, pursuant to an arrangement made with said Tanner prior to that date by said Bachelder and Thompson, deceased, the alleged inventors of said improvement. In July, 1866, said patent was extended by the Commissioner of Patents for the term of seven years, for the benefit of said Bachelder and the widow and children of the said Thompson, deceased.

Your committee do not consider it necessary to follow said patent through its many transfers, by assignment, in whole or in part, during its existence. It has met with persistent litigation from the first, which has greatly retarded and reduced remuneration to the inventors and owners thereof. The said inventors, however, have received and secured to them not less than fifty thousand dollars from said invention, while the public has paid a very large amount therefor, of the approximate amount of which your committee is not satisfactorily informed. Not long since a decree was entered in the United States circuit court in the city of Chicago, Judge Drummond presiding, in favor of said patent, measuring the damage to said patent for its infringement at $455 per car per annum, on which said patent or any infringing patent is used. What further steps have been taken in relation to said decree your committee is not informed. Not less than ten thousand cars in the United States have said patent, or some patent claimed to be an infringement of said patent, attached. On the basis of said decree the measure of damages for a single year in the United States amounts to the enormous sum of four million five hundred and fifty thousand dollars, and in seven years to more than thirty-one millions of dollars. The United States does not undertake that any inventor shall receive any given sum of money for a given invention, but does undertake to give to inventors the opportunity to reap a reward for their inventions. In this case the patent has been in existence for twenty-one years. Said device has been open to public use since the 6th day of July, 1873, the date of the expiration of said patent. Many manufacturers, corporations, and other persons have engaged in the manufacture and use of said device since said expiration, investing a large amount of capital therein. The device has gone into almost universal use. Every condition of any reasonable character has been complied with by the Government, and the parties owning the patent have an immense fund of damages for infringement of said patent out of which to secure an ample remuneration for said invention, provided said invention is a valid one. If said invention should be invalid it ought not to be thrust further upon the public by an act of Congress.

In any and every view of the memorial your committee are of the opinion that its prayer ought not to be granted, and therefore recommend that the memorial do lie on the table.

○

WESTERN DISTRICT OF NORTH CAROLINA.

MARCH 2, 1875.—Laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SPEER, from the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, submitted the following

R E P O R T :

The Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, to whom was referred the resolution of the House adopted February 6, 1875, directing them "to inquire into the expenditures of the public funds in the western district of North Carolina since its organization in 1872," respectfully report :

That they have had the resolution under consideration, and find that the total expenses of the district for the year ending June 30, 1873, were $64,948.35, of which $50,779.35 were expended by the marshal ; and for the year ending June 30, 1874, the total expenses of the district were $135,344.16, of which sum $52,237.31 were for marshal's fees and expenses of serving process, and for attendance upon courts. The omission from the last report of the Attorney-General of the expenditures by the marshal of this district was explained by the Attorney-General as due to the fact that, although the western district of North Carolina was established in 1872, no provision for the appointment of a marshal thereof was made until June 22, 1874, the marshal for the eastern district serving in both districts, and all advances made to him by the Department of Justice were charged to him as marshal for the eastern district.

A communication was addressed to Hon. Robert P. Dick, judge of the western district of North Carolina, inviting him to offer, either in person or by letter, any explanation he could afford of the large expenditures of the district, and he responded by letter, attributing these expenditures to the facts that "in this district, comprising the principal part of the tobacco growing and manufacturing region of the State, violations of the internal-revenue laws were very frequent ; the prosecution and conviction, at large costs, of parties guilty of frauds upon the Cherokee Indians of Western North Carolina, and numerous Indian civil suits, which were adjusted by a commission, the expenses of which were paid by the marshal ; the arrest and conviction of a number of counterfeiters of the national currency ; resistance to deputy marshals, and suits against them for acts done under color of office, removed from the State courts to United States courts ; and the number of cases investigated by United States commissioners, which were frivolous and intended only to make fees, to an extent which made necessary the dismissal and suspension of some of the commissioners and the adoption of a rule of court, which, it is hoped, will prevent such abuses in future." Judge Dick states that, except cases under the enforcement-acts, prosecutions in his courts have been well founded, and have resulted in convictions in three-fourths of the cases.

The committee next invited R. M. Douglas, marshal for the district, to appear before them, and summoned several witnesses who, the committee were informed, could testify to unlawful expenditures of the public funds. The witnesses were carefully examined by the committee, but nothing was elicited from them showing such expenditures or in any way affecting the character or official conduct of the marshal.

From the examination of Mr. Douglas, the marshal, it appeared that for the last fiscal year the per diem and other fees of the marshal and his deputies, office-rent, stationery, clerk-hire, furniture, and other expenses, including his salary of $6,000 per annum, amounted to $52,237.31, accounts for which, with the vouchers sustaining them, had been forwarded to, and were audited and settled at, the Treasury Department. This large expenditure was attributed by the marshal to the arrests and prosecutions of counterfeiters and the rigorous enforcement of the internal-revenue laws; and letters from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and the collector of the seventh North Carolina district, showing the increase of revenues from distilleries and the tobacco-tax during the administration of the present marshal, were filed by him as confirmatory of that branch of his explanation.

The committee believe that the expenses of this district have been unwarrantably increased by the conduct of United States commissioners, and that more care should be observed in the appointment of these officials; and they further believe that many of the deputy marshals in this district could largely reduce their expenditures without injury to the public service. But, in the absence of specific allegations, they find nothing demanding further inquiry, and hence submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice be discharged from the further consideration of the resolution directing them to inquire into the expenditure of the public funds in the western district of North Carolina since its organization in 1872.

○

HENRY MEYNELL.

MARCH 2, 1875.—Laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MARTIN, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, submitted the following

REPORT :

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Henry Meynell, having considered the same, submit the following report :

It appears from the evidence in this case that the petitioner served during the late war as bugler of Company F, of the Fifty-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, and also as bugler of Company D, of the Eighty-second Regiment Illinois Volunteers. Said Meynell applied for a pension on account of the loss of the left arm below the elbow ; and the Commissioner of Pensions granted him a pension at the rate of $8 per month, commencing November 16, 1865, and at the rate of $15 per month, commencing June 6, 1866. This pension was allowed upon affidavits, as follows :

The affidavit of Mathew Marx, late captain of Company D, Eighty-second Illinois, shows that the petitioner, while in action at Gettysburgh, Pa., on the 1st day of July, 1863, was wounded by gun-shot, in consequence of which he lost his left arm and fore-finger of right hand. The affidavit of Nichlous Nichlous, late captain Company E, Fifty-eighth Illinois Volunteers, shows that he had been acquainted with petitioner for upward of seventeen years, and at the time of his enlistment he had two good arms and two good hands. The affidavit of William Warner, late first lieutenant Company D, Eighty-second Illinois, shows that the petitioner was wounded on the 1st of July, 1863, at the battle of Gettysburgh, Pa., causing the amputation of the left arm below the elbow. The affidavit of Frederick Peters shows that the affiant was a member of Hartman's Church, Chicago, Ill., of which the petitioner was also a member, that he had been personally acquainted with the petitioner for fourteen years, and that at the time he enlisted in the Army he had two good arms and hands. The affidavits of two privates of Company F, Fifty-eighth Illinois, show that the petitioner was shot at the battle of Shiloh, by a gun-shot wound in the right thigh and in both legs below the knee.

Upon these affidavits the Commissioner of Pensions allowed the pension, and it was afterward increased according to the increase of the law. But when the petitioner made application for a further increase on account of the wound in the thigh, it was discovered that the certificate of disability, on which Meynell was discharged, showed that he had lost his arm below the elbow when he enlisted. This discovery led to an investigation of the case, which was not very satisfactory, and a second investigation made, and the pension to Meynell was suspended.

It seemed probable, however, that affidavits could be procured from the same persons who had testified before, and upon whose testimony the pension was allowed, and, consequently, a third investigation was made by a special agent of the Pension-Office.

The developments of this last investigation showed such fraud, both on the part of the pensioner and his attorney, as should be punished under the criminal code. The following are the affidavits taken in the last investigation :

On this twenty-third day of January, 1875, at Saint Charles, county of Kane, State of Illinois, before me, G. Clemen, a special agent of the Pension-Office, personally appeared Henry M. Crawford, who, being by me duly sworn according to law, declares that his age is 54 years ; that he resides at Saint Charles, county of Kane, State of Illinois, and that he is a practicing physician and formerly surgeon of the Fifty-eighth Illinois Volunteers. When the regiment was first organized deponent was not permitted to examine the men, that duty being assigned to the surgeon of the post, Camp Douglas, near Chicago. The certificate of disability for discharge of Henry Meynell, Company F, 58th Illinois Volunteers, dated June 22, 1862, at camp near Corinth, was signed by deponent as surgeon of the regiment. The regiment was then disorganized, the 58th Illinois forming a part of the "Union Brigade." From all deponent could learn, Henry Meynell had lost his arm before enlistment. He cannot recollect what arm was lost, but believes the point of amputation was between the elbow and the wrist. Deponent is positive that Henry Meynell was not wounded while a member of the 58th Illinois Volunteers ; and he further declares that he has no interest, direct or indirect, in the claim of Henry Meynell for a pension ; and further saith not.

H. M. CRAWFORD, M. D.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 23d day of January, 1875, and I certify that the contents were fully made known to affiant before signing.

G. CLEMEN,
Special Agent.

On this twenty-third day of January, 1875, at Chicago, county of Cook, State of Illinois, before me, G. Clemen, a special agent of the Pension-Office, personally appeared George Glassner, who, being by me duly sworn according to law, declares that his age is sixty-five years ; that he resides at Chicago, county of Cook, State of Illinois, and that he is a lawyer by profession. during the late war he was respectively first lieutenant and captain of Company D, Fifty-eighth Illinois Volunteers. The regiment having lost very heavily at the battle of Shiloh, April 6, 1862, was consolidated with remnants of the Eighth, Twelfth, and Fourteenth Iowa Volunteers, and designated as Union Brigade. Deponent was put in command of Company F, Union Brigade, said company being composed of members of Companies D, E, and F, Fifty-eighth Illinois Volunteers. Some time in June, 1862, an order was issued for all musicians and buglers to perform surgeons' field duty, and for those unable to perform such duty to be mustered out of service. In pursuance of this order, Henry Meynell, bugler of Company F, Fifty-eighth Illinois, was discharged. Deponent took him before H. M. Crawford, surgeon Fifty-eighth Illinois volunteers, for examination. Meynell had lost his left arm below the elbow prior to enlistment, and for this reason was unable to perform surgeon's field duty. His left arm was an artificial wooden one, upon the hand of which he always wore a glove. Deponent became first acquainted with Meynell April 6, 1862, the first day of the battle of Shiloh. Being ill, he remained in camp on that day in charge of those of the regiment who were unfit for active duty. Henry Meynell, bugler of Company F, Fifty-eighth Illinois Volunteers, was among these. He is most positive that Meynell was not wounded during that battle or at any other occasion while a member of the Fifty-eighth Illinois Volunteers. He knows this, because immediately after the battle deponent appointed Henry Meynell acting corporal, and devolved the duty upon him to take charge of the muster-rolls and daily reports of that portion of Company F, Union Brigade, which formerly belonged to Company F, Fifty-eighth Illinois Volunteers. At the close of the war deponent remonstrated with Capt. Frederick Keith, (Company F, Fifty-eighth Illinois Volunteers,) for enlisting such men as Henry Meynell, knowing him to have but one arm. Captain Keith admitted to have been aware of this ; his excuse was that he was anxious to fill up his company, and that Meynell could perform the duties of bugler. Several years ago Henry Meynell requested deponent to sign a paper for him, setting forth that Meynell had two natural arms when discharged from the Fifty-eighth Illinois Volunteers. This deponent refused, and told Meynell that he himself (Meynell) knew that it was not so, and that he swore to a falsehood by stating that the arm was lost at the battle of Gettysburgh. Meynell pointed laughingly to his wooden arm and said, "This is an arm, is it not ?" and stated that it was struck by a ball during the battle of Gettys-burgh. Some time previously Meynell had told deponent he had lost his left arm by an explosion at a Fourth of July celebration in Detroit. Meynell is at present employed as janitor in the city-hall; and he further declares that he has no interest, direct or indirect, in the claim of Henry Meynell for a pension; and further saith not.

GEO. GLASSNER.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 23d day of January, 1875, and I certify that he contents were fully made known to affiant before signing.

G. CLEMEN,
Special Agent.

On this twenty-sixth day of January, 1875, at Chicago, county of Cook, State of Illinois, before me, G. Clemen, a special agent of the Pension-Office, personally appeared Frederick Kurth, who being by me duly sworn according to law, declares that his age is sixty-six years, that he resides at 432 Ogden avenue, Chicago, county of Cook, State of Illinois, and that he became acquainted with Henry Meynell about the year 1852, in this city. When deponent first saw Henry Meynell, he had lost his left arm below the elbow. Meynell told deponent that he lost his arm by an explosion at a Fourth of July celebration, either in Cleveland or Detroit. Deponent organized Company F, Fifty-eighth Illinois Volunteers, and was commissioned as captain of the company. In October, 1861, deponent enlisted Henry Meynell as bugler of the company. To his knowledge Henry Meynell was not examined by a physician when he enlisted. It was known by every one in Company F that Meynell had lost his arm before enlistment. His left arm was an artificial, wooden arm; he was in the habit of wearing a black glove on his left hand. Deponent was taken prisoner at the battle of Shiloh, April 6, 1862, and exchanged some time in October, 1862. When deponent was captured it was between 5 and 6 o'clock in the evening; the regiment was then falling back. He believes that Henry Meynell did not participate in the battle of April 6, 1862. He is of the opinion that Meynell remained in the camp when the regiment went to the front. He is positive that Henry Meynell was not wounded at the battle of Shiloh, up to the time deponent was captured. To his knowledge he did not sign an affidavit setting forth that Henry Meynell was wounded at the battle of Shiloh, April 6, 1862. Several years ago Meynell and Frederick Hamyer (also a former member of his company) met deponent on the street and requested him to sign a statement that Henry Meynell had been a member of his company in April, 1862. He signed this statement without reading it, and is very sorry for it now, as the statement contains falsehoods. For some time past Henry Meynell has been janitor of the city-hall, and he further declares that he has no interest, direct or indirect, in the claim of Henry Meynell for a pension; and further saith not.

FREDERICK KURTH.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this twenty-sixth day of January, 1875, and I certify that the contents were fully made known to affiant before signing.

G. CLEMEN,
Special Agent.

On this twenty-ninth day of January, 1875, at Chicago, county of Cook, State of Illinois, before me, G. Clemen, a special agent of the Pension-Office, personally appeared Mathew Marx, who being duly sworn according to law, declares that his age is fifty-three years; that he resides at Chicago, county of Cook, State of Illinois; and that he is a lawyer by profession. During the late war he was captain of Company D, Eighty-second Illinois; William Warner was first lieutenant of the company; Warner was wounded at the battle of Chancellorsville, in May, 1863; thereupon he left the regiment, and from that time on never performed duty in said regiment. Lieut. William Warner was not present at the battle of Gettysburgh, July 1, 2, and 3, 1863. Henry Meynell was enlisted as a bugler in Company D, Eighty-second Illinois Volunteers. Deponent knew that he had lost his left arm prior to enlistment. On the first day of the battle of Gettysburgh, July 1, 1863, deponent was detached from his regiment, and ordered to take command of his own company and Company K, Eighty-second Illinois Volunteers, and to support a battery of artillery which was under heavy fire. Accordingly he went with said companies to such support, but Henry Meynell remained behind with the cooks. This was the last time deponent saw Meynell during the battle or during the war. At this time he was not wounded. Deponent has no personal knowledge of Henry Meynell having been wounded at the battle of Gettysburgh. In the evening of July 1, 1863, the orderly-sergeant of Company D reported Henry Meynell as wounded, and he was so borne on the rolls of Company D. Based upon this information he signed the affidavit under date of July 6, 1871, setting forth that Henry Meynell was wounded at Gettysburgh, July 1, 1863, in his left arm. That Meynell lost forefinger of right hand at Gettysburgh must have been inserted in the affidavit after deponent executed the same. He never heard about this before, and he further declares that he has no interest, direct or indirect, in the claim of Henry Meynell for a pension; and further saith not.

MATHEW MARX,
Late Captain Company D,
Eighty-second Regiment Eighty-second Illinois.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 29th day of January, 1875, and I certify that the contents were fully made known to affiant before signing.

Special Agent.

On this 26th day of January, 1875, at Chicago, county of Cook, State of Illinois, before me, G. Clemen, a special agent of the Pension-Office, personally appeared Frederick Minck, who being by me duly sworn according to law, declares that — age is — years, that he resides at corner Max and Carroll streets, Chicago, county of Cook, State of Illinois, and that he became acquainted with Henry Meynell in this city several years before the breaking out of the late war. Henry Meynell had lost his left arm when deponent became acquainted with him, and was then in the habit of wearing an artificial arm. Meynell informed deponent that he had lost his arm by the explosion of a cannon during a Fourth of July celebration, and that this happened either in Detroit or Cincinnati. He heard Meynell frequently speak about it. When the war broke out deponent and Henry Meynell enlisted about the same time, (October, 1861,) in Company F, Fifty-eighth Illinois. Meynell enlisted as a bugler, being unable to carry a musket on account of the loss of his left arm. When Meynell enlisted in Company F, Fifty-eighth Illinois Volunteers, it was generally known among the members of the company that he had but one arm. Deponent was wounded and taken prisoner at the battle of Shiloh, April 6, 1862. He did not hear that Henry Meynell was wounded during that battle or at any other time while serving in the Fifty-eighth Illinois Volunteers. He is confident said Meynell was not at any time wounded while a member of the Fifty-eighth Illinois Volunteers. Henry Meynell is at present watchman or janitor in the city-hall in this city; and he further declares that he has no interest, direct or indirect, in the claim of Henry Meynell for a pension; and further saith not.

FREDERICK MINCK.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 26th day of January, 1875, and I certify that the contents were fully made known to affiant before signing.

G. CLEMEN,
Special Agent.

On this 29th day of January, 1875, at Chicago, county of Cook, State of Illinois, before me, G. Clemen, a special agent of the Pension Office, personally appeared Frederick Hameyer, who being by me duly sworn according to law, declares that his age is thirty-five years; that he resides at 362 N. Carpenter street, Chicago, county of Cook, State of Illinois, and that he was a member of Company F, Fifty-eighth Illinois. He became acquainted with Henry Meynell in the fall of 1861. Meynell was bugler of Company F. He did not know him prior to enlistment. Meynell had two hands and two arms when deponent became acquainted with him. He was in the habit of wearing gloves. Deponent does not know whether his arms and hands were artificial or natural. Deponent did not participate in the battle of Shiloh, April 6, 1862; he remained in the camp on that day, having a sore leg. Henry Meynell marched out with the company on April 6, 1862. Deponent saw him again about three or four o'clock in the afternoon of that day; he was alone then, and not with the company. Henry Meynell was not wounded on April 6, 1862. Deponent never signed a paper setting forth that Meynell was wounded on that day, because he knew that he was not wounded. He was of the opinion that the affidavit signed by him and Frederick Kurth (July 6, 1871) only set forth that Meynell was a member of Company F, Fifty-eighth Illinois Volunteers, and no more. He signed the statement without reading it. Deponent did not intend to say that Henry Meynell was wounded at Shiloh. Henry Meynell is at present employed as janitor in the city-hall; and he further declares that he has no interest, direct or indirect, in the claim of Henry Meynell for a pension; and further saith not.

FREDERICK HAMEYER.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 29th day of January, 1875, and I certify that the contents were fully made known to affiant before signing.

G. CLEMEN,
Special Agent.

On this thirtieth day of January, 1875, at Chicago, county of Cook, State of Illinois, before me, G. Clemen, a special agent of the Pension-Office, personally appeared Matthias Greenwald, who being by me duly sworn according to law, declares that his age is 30 years; that he resides at 179 Archer avenue, Chicago, county of Cook, State of Illinois, and that during the late war he was sergeant of Company D, Eighty-second Illinois Volunteers, and afterward commissary-sergeant of the regiment. Deponent participated in the battle of Gettysburgh, July 1, 1863, as sergeant of Company D, Eighty-second Illinois, and was wounded on that day. To the best of his recollection Henry Meynell, bugler of Company D, Eighty-second Illinois Volunteers, was not with the company when it went into action on July 1, 1863—at least deponent did not see him, and believes that Meynell remained behind. The part taken by the company in the battle of July 1, 1863, consisted in supporting a battery of artillery. Deponent did not hear of Henry Meynell being wounded in the battle of Gettysburgh until some years ago, in connection with a claim for a pension. Lieut. William Warner, of Company D, Eighty-second Illinois Volunteers, left the company after the battle of Chancellorsville, (May, 1863,) and was not present when the battle of Gettysburgh (July, 1863) was fought. Henry Meynell is at present janitor of the city-hall in this city; and he further declares that he has no interest, direct or indirect, in the claim of Henry Meynell for a pension; and further saith not.

MATHEW GREENWALD.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 30th day of January, 1875, and I certify that the contents were fully made known to affiant before signing.

G. CLEMEN,
Special Agent.

Considering these affidavits and all the other papers in the case, it appears very evident that the attorney, one C. Augustus Haviland, of Chicago, Illinois, was more to blame for the perpetration of the fraud than the pensioner himself; and was probably more active in securing, with false representations, the affidavits upon which the pension was allowed in the first instance, as these affidavits all appear in the handwriting of this attorney.

If this soldier was wounded in the service he should have the pension to which his disabilities entitle him; but he has placed himself in such a hazardous and false position that it is impossible for this committee to conclude otherwise than that his action was unbecoming a true soldier, and that he is unworthy of any gratuitous bounty from the Government.

Your committee therefore report adversely on the petition and ask that it lie on the table.

H. Rep. 276—2

WASHINGTON MARKET COMPANY.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Committed to a Committee of the Whole House and ordered to be printed.

Mr. JEREMIAH M. WILSON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted the following

REPORT:

[To accompany bill H. R. 4863.]

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the memorial of the Washington Market Company, beg leave to submit the following report :

The Washington Market Company was organized under an act of Congress approved May 20, 1870.

Section 2 of the act contains the following provisions :

That said company is hereby authorized and empowered to locate and construct a suitable building or buildings upon the following-described grounds, namely : commencing at the intersection of the center line of B street north with the west line of Seventh street west, running thence north along the west side of Seventh street to the southerly side of Pennsylvania avenue ; thence westerly along the southerly side of Pennsylvania avenue to the southerly side of Louisiana avenue ; thence westerly along the southerly side of Louisiana avenue to the east side of Ninth street west ; thence along the east line of Ninth street to the center line of B street ; thence along the center line of B street to the place of beginning ; and to use and occupy the same by the erection of a suitable building or buildings for a public market-house, including the necessary stalls and sheds, and also for stores, public halls, and such other purposes as may be determined by said company, not inconsistent with its use as a public market. The buildings herein designated to be used for the purposes of a market shall be used for no other purpose inconsistent therewith, but the same shall remain a public market as hereinbefore described.

Section 5 provides as follows :

That the plans submitted by the incorporators, as set forth in the schedule annexed to this act, and which schedule is made part of this act, and as set forth in the drawings referred to in said schedule, shall be adopted for such new buildings and market square.

The buildings described in the plans were large market-buildings on B street and Seventh and Ninth streets to be used as a market, and a large five-story building on Pennsylvania and Louisiana avenues, without specific designation of the use thereof.

The act also contains the following provisions :

SEC. 11. And be it further enacted, &c., That the said company shall, within sixty days from the time it gets quiet and peaceable possession of the real estate mentioned in this act, commence work thereon, and so prosecute the same that buildings for stores, halls, market-grounds, stands, stalls, and other purposes, and all market-buildings, shall be fully completed within two years, or less, from the commencement thereof ; or in case said company shall not commence said buildings within the time aforesaid, or, having commenced, shall fail to complete the same within the time aforesaid, or, having completed the same, shall permit the same to get out of repair or become dilapidated, and should the said company fail to comply with any of the conditions of this act for the space of six consecutive months, the franchise hereby granted to said company shall be forfeited, and the rights and privileges hereby granted shall revert to the United States.

SEC. 12. And be it further enacted, That the privileges conferred by this act shall be enjoyed by said company for the term of ninety-nine years, unless sooner terminated for a non-compliance or abuse of the conditions herein imposed upon said company, which may be done by suit in the name of the United States, to recover possession of said property. At the end of said period of ninety-nine years, the said lands, with all the erections and improvements thereon, shall revert to the United States, unless Congress shall by law extend the period of occupation thereof by said company: Provided, That if the corporation of the city of Washington shall, after a period of thirty years from the approval of this act, by a vote of the councils thereof, express a desire to possess itself of the said market buildings and grounds, Congress may authorize the corporate authorities to take possession of the same upon payment to the said Market-House Company of a sum of money equal to a fair and just valuation of the buildings and improvements then standing on said grounds, and the mode and manner of ascertaining such valuation shall be determined by Congress.

SEC. 13. And be it further enacted, That the real estate herein described is hereby vested in the said corporation for and during the said term of ninety-nine years, or until a forfeiture of its rights and privileges by a breach of the conditions herein imposed on said company, and said estate shall be taken and considered as a determinable fee. The real and personal property of said corporation shall be subject to assessment and taxation for all District and municipal purposes, in the same manner and to the same extent that like property in the city of Washington owned and possessed by individuals is liable to assessment and taxation.

SEC. 14. And be it further enacted, That in consideration of the privileges granted by this act to the Washington Market Company, the said company shall pay, yearly, every year during the said term of ninety-nine years, unto the city of Washington, the sum of twenty-five thousand dollars; which sum shall be received by said city, and set apart and expended by and under the direction of the city government of said city, for the support and relief of the poor of said city and of the District of Columbia; and said city may enforce the payment of said sum from time to time as the same shall become due, either by an action at law or by the same proceedings now authorized by law for the collection of taxes by said city.

Section 17 provides :

Congress hereby reserves the right to legislate in respect to said property hereby granted, and to amend or repeal this act.

Section 15 is as follows :

SEC. 15. And be it further enacted, That if the corporators named in this act, or a major part of them, shall refuse or neglect, for sixty days from and after the passage of this act, to accept the franchise hereby created, or if, having accepted the same, they shall have forfeited the same within two years from and after the passage of this act, then and in that case it shall and may be lawful for any citizens of the city of Washington, to the number of twenty or more, to associate themselves together by articles in writing subscribed by them, whereby they shall undertake and agree to accept the franchise conferred by this act and to perform all the conditions therein imposed; said articles shall be recorded in the office of the register for the city of Washington, and thereupon such associates shall become a body corporate and be invested with all the rights, privileges, and immunities conferred by this act upon the corporators named therein.

The corporators named in the act having accepted the franchise, but failed to fulfill its requirements, the present company was organized and took possession of the grounds about December, 1870; commenced work on these market-buildings in the beginning of 1871, and completed them before July 1, 1872; but no building has been erected by the company, as contemplated, fronting on Pennsylvania and Louisiana avenues.

When Congress passed the act authorizing the organization of this company and granting the land as provided therein, there were buildings on the land occupied for market-purposes. Section 10 made provision for the company to obtain absolute possession of the land free from all rights of others, which it was manifestly necessary the company should have in order to complete the buildings required within the time specified. That section is as follows :

SEC. 10. And be it further enacted, That the said company is hereby required to purchase and pay for all buildings and fixtures which may be upon the above-mentioned ground belonging to individuals, within a reasonable time after the passage of this act, the price of which shall be agreed upon by the president and directors of said company and the owners (should they demand any pay therefor) of the aforesaid buildings and fixtures; and whenever the president and directors and the owners of said property cannot agree as to the price of said buildings or fixtures, then, in such case, the company shall select one competent person, and the owner shall select one competent person, and they, the two, shall choose a third one, who shall proceed to value the buildings and fixtures, and a decision of a majority of the three shall be final as to the value of said property, and the amount so agreed upon shall be paid to the owner thereof before the same is removed from the grounds aforesaid. That in case the owner of said property will neither sell said property nor choose an arbitrator, as aforesaid, to value said property, after ten days' notice so to do, then, in such case, the said company may proceed to remove the same to some place off said grounds without being liable to an action for damages.

But these buildings having been entirely destroyed by fire, on the 20th of December, 1870, Congress passed the following joint resolution:

JOINT RESOLUTION relative to the Center Market in Washington.

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the chairmen of the Committees on Public Buildings and Grounds of the Senate and House of Representatives, with the mayor of Washington, be, and hereby are, constituted commissioners to require the Washington Market Company, organized under the fifteenth section of the act of May twentieth, eighteen hundred and seventy, promptly to furnish temporary market accommodations for the marketmen who were driven out by the late fire; and also to erect at the earliest possible day the first stories or market portions of the permanent market-buildings provided for in said act; and that said commissioners be authorized to make such alterations in the buildings and such arrangements with said company as shall be best calculated to secure the speedy erection of buildings creditable to the city, and sufficiently commodious for all the wants of the public: Provided, however, That the passage of this resolution shall not be construed to supersede, delay, or in any way affect the pending investigations into the affairs of said company, nor to relieve the company or any person from consequences of any acts under investigation.

Approved December 20, 1870.

It will be noticed that this resolution provided that the market company should do two things—

1st. Promptly furnish temporary market accommodations for the marketmen.

2d. Erect at the earliest possible day the first stories or market portions of the permanent market buildings.

These things were required by Congress, and Congress having the right to amend or repeal the original act, the company was bound to obey.

But the permanent market-buildings were by the act of incorporation to be on that portion of the land fronting on B street between 7th and 9th streets, consequently the "temporary accommodations" must be erected upon that portion of the land on which the other buildings were to be erected. The company had no power or authority to go elsewhere to furnish these temporary accommodations.

It will therefore be perceived that this joint resolution made a very radical change in the law governing this company. By the original act they were authorized to procure absolute control over the whole of the land so that they might go forward with the erection of all of the buildings required by the act, while, by this joint resolution, they were compelled to place temporary structures on a part of the land for use by the market-men while the permanent market-buildings were being erected. It deprived them of the power to proceed with the erection of the buildings on Pennsylvania and Louisiana avenues, until the permanent market-buildings could be completed and made ready for occupancy.

The temporary accommodations required were provided, and in the spring of 1871 the erection of the permanent buildings was commenced, and they were completed in the summer of 1872, substantially in accordance with the plans annexed to the charter.

The act of Congress of March 3, 1873, making appropriations to supply deficiencies, contains the following provision :

For the purchase by the United States of the interest of the District of Columbia in the present city-hall building in Washington, now used solely for Government purposes, such sum as may be determined by three impartial appraisers, to be selected by the Secretary of the Interior, not exceeding seventy-five thousand dollars, the same to be applied by said District only for the erection of a suitable building for the District offices; and the governor and board of public works are authorized, if they deem it advisable for that purpose, to make arrangements to secure sufficient land fronting on Pennsylvania and Louisiana avenues, between Seventh and Ninth streets: Provided, That the Government of the United States shall not be liable for any expenditures for said land, or for the purchase-money therefor, or for the buildings to be erected thereon; and no land, or the use thereof, is hereby granted for the purpose of erecting any building thereon, for such building.

Pursuant to this provision, the following agreement was, on the 18th of March, 1873, entered into between the governor and the board of public works of the one part, and the market company of the other part:

[Memorandum of agreement.]

Governor and board of public works with the Washington Market Company.

In pursuance of the act of Congress of March 3, 1873, authorizing the governor and board of public works, if they deem it advisable, for the purpose of erecting thereon a suitable building for District offices, to make arrangements to secure sufficient land fronting on Pennsylvania and Louisiana avenues, between Seventh and Ninth streets, it is hereby agreed that—

1. The Washington Market Company shall by good and sufficient quit-claim deed release and convey to the District of Columbia all the right, title, and interest of said company, acquired under act of Congress of May 20, 1870, incorporating said company, in and to so much of the land within said District described in section two of said act, and fronting Pennsylvania and Louisiana avenues, as is contained within the following limits:

Beginning at the southwest corner of Seventh street and Pennsylvania avenue, thence westerly along the southerly side of Pennsylvania avenue to its intersection with the southerly side of Louisiana avenue; thence westerly along the southerly side of Louisiana avenue to the east side of Ninth street; thence along the east line of Ninth street eighty-six feet; thence easterly on a line parallel with the aforesaid southerly line of Louisiana avenue to a point eighty-six feet south of said intersection of the southerly lines of Pennsylvania and Louisiana avenues; and thence on a line parallel with the aforesaid southerly side of Pennsylvania avenue to the westerly line of Seventh street, at a point eighty-six feet from the corner began at; thence northerly along the west line of Seventh street eighty-six feet, to the corner began at.

The Washington Market Company shall also, in said deed, convey to said District the right to use in common with said market company as a passage-way and courtyard all the land between the lot conveyed in said deed and a line drawn westerly from Seventh to Ninth street, ten feet north of the north walls of the present Seventh and Ninth street buildings of said market company.

2. In consideration of the aforesaid release and conveyance by the Washington Market Company to the District of Columbia, the District will assume and fulfill all obligations imposed upon the company by section fourteen of said act of May 20, 1870, (as modified by act of the legislative assembly of the District of August 23, 1871,) except as follows:

The market company shall pay annually to the District of Columbia during the term and for the purposes mentioned in said section fourteen the sum of seven thousand five hundred dollars, payable quarterly, which sum shall, during said term, be in the place of all rental for the ground occupied by the market buildings of said company; and in case in any year the general District taxes upon said ground and market buildings shall exceed five thousand five hundred dollars, the excess above that amount shall be deducted from said rental of seven thousand five hundred dollars, so that the total annual payments for rental and taxes shall not exceed thirteen thousand dollars; the District, however, not hereby releasing, but expressly reserving, and the market company hereby confirming, the right of the District, given by section two of the act of May 20, 1870, of fixing and controlling for the protection of the market-lealers and of the public the amount of rentals of the stalls and stands in said market-buildings; and it is also hereby agreed that the annual rental of stalls and stands in the other markets in the city of Washington shall not be fixed by the District authorities at a lower rate per square foot of area than seventy per cent. of the rate fixed under said section for stalls and stands in the market-buildings of said company; and the District shall not use the land released and conveyed as aforesaid for the purpose of a market.

This agreement shall take effect April 1, 1873, and the market company shall at once settle its past rental account to that time at the rate, since August 23, 1871, fixed by the resolution of the legislative assembly of that date; and shall immediately pay the balance due the treasurer of the District.

Possession of the land conveyed shall be given the District upon the day of executing this agreement.

Dated at Washington, March 18, 1873.

WASHINGTON MARKET COMPANY,
By M. G. EMERY,

President.

H. D. COOKE,

Governor,

ALEX. R. SHEPHERD,

JAMES A. MAGRUDER,

S. P. BROWN,

ADOLF CLUSS,

Board of Public Works.

Pursuant to this agreement, a deed was executed by the market company to the District of Columbia on the same day, which was duly delivered and recorded.

On the 14th of May, 1873, the governor, H. D. Cooke, sent a message to the legislative assembly of the District, transmitting a copy of the provision in the appropriation act of March 3, 1873, and of the agreement of the governor and board of public works with the company, and the deed of the company to the District, and also stated as follows:

Acting under the authority of this act, arrangements have been made with the Washington Market Company for the conveyance by the company to the District of land sufficient for the erection of the District building, including the whole front on Pennsylvania and Louisiana avenues, between Seventh and Ninth streets, and extending southwardly eighty-six feet on each of those streets, together with the right to use, for a court-yard and passage-way, all the land between the District land and a line ten feet north of the north wall of the present market-buildings of the company. The agreement of the governor and board of public works with the company, and the deed of the company to the District, are dated March 18, 1873, and copies are transmitted herewith.

The only difficult point in the negotiation with the company was the determination of the proportions of the rental (to be realized from the whole grounds for the support of the poor of the District) which should be assumed by the District and borne by the company, respectively. The proportions were, however, at last fixed by a consideration of the respective values of the land conveyed to the District and retained by the company, as heretofore determined by the District assessors for purposes of taxation; and the agreement as finally executed is believed to be just to both parties.

The District legislature on the 26th day of June passed an act appropriating the $75,000, and also $15,000 in addition, making $90,000 in all, for the construction of a District building, in accordance with the agreement of the governor and board of public works with the market company, which act is as follows:

Act of June 26, 1873, making appropriations.

For the erection of a suitable building for the District offices, under the direction of the governor and board of public works, ninety thousand dollars: Provided, That seventy-five thousand dollars of this amount shall be drawn from the United States Treasury, in accordance with appropriation made by the act of Congress approved March third, eighteen hundred and seventy-three, entitled "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June thirtieth, eighteen hundred and seventy-three, and for other purposes;" and the governor is hereby authorized to draw said appropriation from the United States Treasury and deposit the same in the treasury of the District of Columbia, to be used for the purposes herein named: And provided further, That the appropriation hereby made shall be drawn by warrant of the board of public works, and applied by them in the erection of a building for the District offices, and for no other purpose whatever, fifteen thousand dollars.

In accordance with the arrangement between the governor and board of public works and the market company, the District government took possession of the front land on Pennsylvania and Louisiana avenues, and commenced laying the foundation for the District building, but suspended the same in May, 1874, at the request of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the Senate.

The question before this committee is whether or not, by reason of any fact hereinbefore recited, the Washington Market Company has forfeited any of its chartered rights, or taken any action which calls for additional legislation by Congress. The only grounds of forfeiture which have been suggested are, (1,) That the company failed to build all its buildings within two years from the commencement thereof, as required by the charter; (2,) That the arrangement made by the company with the Government and board of public works for the transfer to the District of the front land on Pennsylvania and Louisiana avenues was not authorized by the act of March 3, 1873, and was therefore such an illegal act as works a forfeiture of some or all of the rights of the market company.

With reference to these propositions we submit—

I. The permanent market-buildings were erected within the time required by law; and therefore the only question is whether a forfeiture has occurred by reason of the failure to erect the front buildings intended for offices, &c.

It seems to your committee to be almost too plain for argument, that after the passage of the resolution of December 20, 1870, the limitation fixed by the statute, within which these buildings should be erected, was removed, and that the company had a reasonable time within which to erect them after the permanent market-buildings had been completed. When Congress, by that resolution, compelled the company to place structures upon the site to be occupied by these buildings, and to keep them there until the permanent market-buildings could be erected, thereby depriving them of a part of this very time, and necessarily, because of the magnitude of the permanent structures, of a very large part of it, it most manifestly relieved this company of its obligation to build these front buildings within the time specified. Congress gave them two years originally, but afterward took away from them, arbitrarily, the right for a portion of those two years to do thereon what had been required. Time was of the essence of this contract. Congress took it away from them, and thereby prevented them from doing what they were originally required to do. Yet it is proposed, because of the failure, under these circumstances, to erect the front building within two years, to declare that the charter has been forfeited.

That the sovereign that must always do right (for “the King can do no wrong”) could entertain such a proposition for a moment is hardly conceivable.

We therefore conclude that the result of the enactment of that joint resolution was to give the company a reasonable time after the completion of the permanent market-buildings, within which to erect the others required by the charter.

Whether or not a reasonable time has elapsed, is not a material question in view of the second reason urged for a forfeiture, viz:

II. Does the conveyance to the District of Columbia of the land on which the unerected buildings were to stand work a forfeiture?

Was that transfer illegal? And even if it was, is Congress in a position to take advantage of it? Is Congress in a position by its own act, which forbids it, without a breach of good faith, to make a declaration of forfeiture?

We here repeat so much of the act of 1873 above quoted as is necessary to a proper consideration of these questions. After making an appropriation of $75,000 to purchase the interest of the District in the city-hall buildings, and providing that the money should be applied to the erection of suitable buildings for District offices, the following language is used: "And the governor and board of public works are authorized, if they deem it advisable for that purpose, to make arrangements to secure sufficient land fronting on Pennsylvania and Louisiana avenues between Seventh and Ninth streets," &c.

Under this act the arrangement was made with the market company, above set forth, for the land on which the front buildings were to be erected by the market company. This land is the only land that could be referred to in the language used in the act of 1873, as must be apparent to any one familiar with that part of the city.

We insert here communications on the subject from those familiar with this business, from which it appears that, when this provision was pending in committee, it was well understood that the land in question was to be secured by the District government:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 13, 1875.

SIR: The statements contained in your memorial as to the transfer of the frontage of your market company's grounds to the District are correct.

It was expressly stated before the House Committee on Appropriations that the money appropriated to pay the District's interest in the city-hall was to be applied to the erection of a building, adapted to the needs of the District, on this ground.

The transfer was based on the assessed value, was a fair business transaction, equitable and just, and to the advantage of the District, which now pays more than $15,000 rent for buildings occupied by its offices, none of which are fire-proof.

The committee in charge of the matter who reported the appropriation did it advisedly, and approved of the plan. There was no concealment or misrepresentation on the part of the market company or District authorities. It is the best thing that can be done now, as it was then; is a sensible, judicious disposition of the matter, and should be carried into effect.

Respectfully,

A. R. SHEPHERD.

W. E. CHANDLER, Esq.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 13, 1875.

DEAR SIR: I have received your note, inclosing copy of the memorial to Congress by the Washington Market Company.

The facts contained in the memorial are substantially correct according to my recollection and knowledge. There never was any doubt in my mind that the act of Congress contemplated the front land of the market company, and fully authorized the arrangement made by the market company and the District authorities.

The judges of the supreme court of the District were before the House Committee on Appropriations, and advocated the purchase by the United States of the interest of the District in the city-hall building; and I also appeared, with other members of the District government, before the committee for the same purpose. According to my recollection it was distinctly stated to and understood by the committee that if the appropriation was made to be applied for the purpose of erecting a suitable building for the District offices, it was the intention of the District authorities to arrange and build the same on the front land of the market company.

The arrangement made by the governor and board of public works with the market company was, I believe, just and fair to both parties; and I still believe that it is very desirable and important for the welfare of the District that a suitable and elegant building for the District offices should be erected upon the land in question, which is the only available lot having large frontage in the central portion of the city.

Very truly yours,

H. D. COOKE.

Hon. W. E. CHANDLER.

1421 I STREET,
Washington, February 13, 1875.

SIR: I herewith inclose a letter from Hon. A. R. Shepherd, showing that it was distinctly stated to the House Committee on Appropriations that the provision in the act of March 3, 1873, was intended to authorize the procurement, for the purpose of a District building, of the front land of the Washington Market Company on Pennsylvania and Louisiana avenues, between Seventh and Ninth streets.

I also desire to state that the provision was before the Senate in the form of a printed amendment to be proposed to the appropriation bill, and was fully understood to apply to the land of the market company by Senator J. W. Patterson, chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia. Senator Patterson also took a copy of the provision to Senator Morrill, then, as now, chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and conferred with him about it, and informed me that Senator Morrill approved the provision and would support it. Senator Morrill had also repeatedly, orally and in writing, expressed himself in favor of making an arrangement for the transfer of the whole of the city-hall building to the United States, and the erection of a building for the District offices upon the front land of the market company.

Very respectfully, yours,

WM. E. CHANDLER.

HON. JEREMIAH M. WILSON,
House of Representatives.

By referring to the debate in the House March 1, 1873, on this very paragraph, (Globe, page 1994, part 3, and appendix, 3d sess. 42d Congress,) it will be seen that the House understood it to mean that this land was to be acquired.

It was therefore not only the only land that could have been in contemplation, but it was distinctly understood, when the act was passed, that it was the land to be secured under its provisions.

It may, however, be said that this question is to be determined by the language of the act itself, and not by the debate, and as it is claimed that the language itself does not describe this identical land, the facts disclosed by the debate are not available as aids in ascertaining what land was intended.

That would be, to use a mild term, a position unworthy of Congress. Congress is now called upon to deal with its own act. If Congress inserted this paragraph in this bill, Congress knew that some land was contemplated and what land was contemplated. It is now proposed that it shall take action on this subject. If the language is indefinite, Congress made it so; used just such phrases as suited its own fancy; and it is not only competent but exceedingly pertinent that it should avail itself of its own knowledge of its intention and be guided by what it intended then, in what it does now. What Congress desires to do, and must do, is to carry out in good faith what was well understood to be intended at that time.

But the objection has been made that while this language authorizes the governor and board of public works to acquire this land, still it did not confer upon the market company the right to dispose of it, and therefore, not having that right, the conveyance wrought a forfeiture.

This proposition, it seems to us, is unsound. If the authority is granted to acquire, it must by implication confer the right upon the other party to convey. There could be no acquisition without a conveyance; and Congress would convict itself of the merest idling and trifling were it now to assume that it meant that one party might acquire the land, but that the power to convey it was not granted. If this were a case where outside parties were wrangling over the construction of a statute, such a position would be scarcely pardonable, but for Congress when dealing with its own laws to assume such a position, would be to the last degree inexcusable. But if it is insisted that Congress shall stand by the strict letter of the law, we still are of opinion that the position assumed is untenable. We cite the following maxims of the law:

In the construction of a doubtful law the contemporaneous construction of persons appointed to execute it is entitled to great respect. 12 Wheat., 210; 1 Bl. C. C., 218.

That which is implied in a statute is as much a part of it as that which is expressed. 1 Black, 61; 1 Wall., 221; Dwarris, 145.

It has been decided that declaring the rate of interest on bonds issued by a city, implies that the city may issue such bonds. 1 Wallace, supra.

Whenever a statute gives or provides anything, the common law provides all necessary remedies and requisites. Dwarris, 123.

Where a power is given by a statute, everything necessary to the making of it effectual is given by implication. Dwarris, 123; 2 Inst., 306; 12 Rep., 130, 131.

We are of opinion that, both upon reason and authority, the right given by this act of 1873 to the governor and board of public works to acquire this land, gave the Market-House Company the right to convey it, and therefore that no act should be passed by Congress, either declaring a forfeiture, or directing proceedings to be instituted in the courts to procure a forfeiture because of this conveyance. Congress would stultify itself if it did so.

Unless it shall appear that the agreement or arrangement that was made is invalid for some reason entering into the agreement itself, we can see no reason why it is not binding upon the District and the company.

Congress may, for whatever reason it may deem proper, set aside this whole business. Whether the agreement by which the company, in consideration of this land, was released from the payment of a part of the $25,000 to the poor-fund of the District is one which should not be sanctioned, is a question of fact that we do not assume to decide because of the lack of information, and the means of obtaining it, in regard to the relative value of the land still held by the company and that conveyed. If, however, any action is to be taken by Congress, inasmuch as the District is in no condition to erect the buildings, it seems to your committee that it would be better to reclaim the unoccupied portion, if the company does not propose to build upon it, and to appoint suitable persons to fix the amount that the company shall pay per annum as the ground-rent for the portion retained, and for that purpose the committee recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

H. Rep. 277—2

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SENER, from the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, submitted the following

REPORT:

The committee on so much of the public accounts and expenditures as relate to the Department of Justice, submit the following further and final report of their actings and doings, as required by the 103d rule of the House, prescribing their duties.

This committee was created on the 16th of January, 1874, but the members thereof were not appointed until the 19th January, 1874, and not until the 14th March following was it fully organized for work by the appointment of a clerk and the assignment of a committee-room. Its first work, and that which has occupied the most of its time and attention, grew out of the resolution of the House of the 16th February, 1874, authorizing the committee to inquire into the expenditures and disbursements of the western district of Arkansas, from its organization in 1871. It is not necessary here to do more than to allude to the fact that some eight weeks of the time of the committee were thus occupied, leaving it but little time at the last session to examine and report upon the general subjects of inquiry committed to it by the rule of the House under which it was organized. In addition to the protracted investigation into the expenditures of the western district of Arkansas, during the last and the present sessions, it has investigated specially the matters connected with expenditures in the southern district of Georgia, southern district of Illinois, the middle district of Alabama, the district of Nebraska, the northern district of Georgia, and the western district of North Carolina. The result of these special investigations has been the suggestion of legislation, which, in the judgment of the committee, will tend in the future to correct many of the abuses in the making up and payment of the marshals' accounts, which form the largest part of judicial expenditures in the courts of the United States. In these different investigations, and in other work of the committee, some sixty meetings have been held, and at times the committee have held meetings twice a day.

HISTORY OF COMMITTEES ON EXPENDITURES.

Before speaking to the work of this committee or the expenditures of this Department, it may not be inappropriate to refer to the history of the committees on expenditures in the several Departments, the occasion of their creation, and the duties assigned to them. On the 24th February, 1814, a committee on the public expenditures was organized at the instance of the Committee on Ways and Means, Mr. Epps, of Virginia, reporting the resolution in favor thereof, and stating that the duties which would be assigned to this committee would fully occupy it during the session, and that it was necessary to relieve the Committee on Ways and Means of much of the business referred to it, which it was unable properly to consider, and at the same time the Committee on Ways and Means was discharged from the consideration of such duties as were embraced in the resolution creating the Committee on Public Expenditures. At that time the Committee on Ways and Means was charged not only with the duty of raising revenue but also with the duty of providing the necessary appropriations for the different Departments of the Government. The Committee on Public Expenditures, though authorized to be created in 1814, and though it was expected to be a valuable adjunct of the Committee on Ways and Means, as the annals of Congress of that day show, did not present its first report until the 3d March, 1817. In the mean time, on March 30, 1816, Committees on Expenditures in the Post-Office, War, Navy, State, and Treasury Departments, and on Public Buildings, were created. The discussion which took place at the time showed on the part of the members that doubt was entertained whether any good would result from the organization of such committees. There were already, it was said, accountants of the Departments and a Comptroller over them, and it was thought to be useless to appoint committees of Congress to inspect the accounts after the money had been paid; and, furthermore, it would be impracticable for the committees to act efficiently unless they sat all the year. Even at that day investigations were ordered, it was said, in which a large amount of money was paid for printing, and after all there was not a resolution or any other proceeding predicated on the examination. Those who advocated the organization of such committees contended that experience in Virginia and other States, and also in England, proved the utility of such committees; that clamors and suspicions had gone abroad, and although they might not be well founded, still they rendered inquiry necessary, to the end that if anything were wrong in the public accounts, the Government ought to know it, and the evil be corrected, and even if the committee only entered into a general, and not a minute, detailed investigation of those accounts, much good would still result, as it would tend to correct frauds or errors, if any, and that it was the duty of the popular branch of the Government to inspect the money concerns and see that they were correctly and faithfully conducted. After this discussion those committees were ordered and their duties prescribed in the following words, to wit:

“It shall be the duty of the said committees to examine into the state of the accounts and expenditures respectively submitted to them, and to inquire and report particularly whether the expenditures of the respective Departments are justified by law; whether the claims from time to time satisfied and discharged by the respective Departments are supported by sufficient vouchers, establishing their justness both as to their character and amount; whether such claims have been discharged out of funds appropriated therefor, and whether all moneys have been disbursed in conformity with the appropriation laws; and whether any, and what, provisions are necessary to be adopted to provide more perfectly for the proper application of the public moneys, and to secure the Government from demands unjust in their character or extravagant in their amount. And it shall be, moreover, the duty of said committees to report, from time to time, whether any, and what, retrenchment can be made in the expenditures of the several Departments without detriment to the public service; whether any, and what, abuses at any time exist in the failure to enforce the payment of moneys which may be due to the United States from public defaulters and others; and to report, from time to time, such provisions and arrangements as may be necessary to add to the economy of the several Departments and the accountability of their officers."

THEIR OPERATION AND REPORTS.

Notwithstanding committees of this character were thus early in the history of our Government considered so important, and their duties so accurately defined, an inspection of the records and the annals of Congress discloses the fact that, in the nearly sixty years intervening since the authority for their creation, only 31 reports have been presented, responsive to the very rigid requirements of this rule; and, as it was predicted at the organization of these committees, those reports have been general and cursory. There has never been any effort, it would seem, to keep them up regularly year by year. They have almost, of late years, fallen into disuse. There have been, altogether, of such reports of the committees on the several Departments, the following, to wit:

Of Expenditures in the Department of State, 1 in 1822, 1 in 1825, 1 in 1828, 1 in 1830, 1 in 1838, 1 in 1844—6.

Of Expenditures in the Treasury Department, 1 in 1830, 1 in 1831—2.

Of Expenditures in the War Department, 1 in 1831, 1 in 1860, 1 in 1872—3.

Of Expenditures in the Navy Department, 1 in 1821, 1 in 1825, 1 in 1830, 1 in 1831, 1 in 1833, 1 in 1834, 1 in 1860—7.

Of Expenditures in the Post-Office Department, 1 in 1819, 1 in 1831, 1 in 1845—3.

Of Expenditures in the Department of the Interior there have been no reports.

Of the Committee on Public Expenditures, there have been three: 1 in 1817, 1 in 1832, 1 in 1842.

Of the Committee on Public Buildings, eight: 1 in 1822, 1 in 1824, 1 in 1836, 1 in 1837, 1 in 1838, 1 in 1840, 1 in 1844, 1 in 1862.

Thus it will be seen that the reports of these committees do not average one a session; indeed, but little more than one a Congress, for all the Departments. Hence your committee have had but few precedents to guide them. Your committee find that as early as 1821, the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department, in submitting their final report to that Congress, say, that experience heretofore, during six years, (the length of time that those committees had existed,) had given abundant proof that they are inefficient for the purpose of their creation, and that such work as is confided to them could be accomplished only by leave for them to sit during the recess; and they further say that it is easy to believe that much money might be saved annually to the public coffers by the labors of a faithful and zealous committee, which would examine minutely and without favor, and expose to public view and public indignation, the peculators of the Treasury, if any such there be; and this committee further say that they had attempted nothing like an examination of all the expenses in the Navy Department, but had only turned their attention to those passing under the immediate view of Congress, or to such as, by accident, their attention had been directed to. In 1822, on the 27th of April, the Committee on Public Expenditures say that they addressed notes to the several heads of Departments, requesting from each an expression of any existing imperfections tending to the increase of expenditures. They say that to their request, so respectfully made, no answer was received which was worthy of being reported.

Even at that day these committees stated that certain publications appeared in some of the gazettes of the country, charging many acts of favoritism, and frauds and defalcations, in the management of the fiscal concerns of the nation, and of the misapplication of public money. The committee say further that they sifted thoroughly those charges, and that many of the charges are not well founded; but, on the other hand, they say there has been in some cases a degree of negligence on the part of the officers engaged in the management and collection of public money for which no good reason can be assigned, and that considerable losses will result therefrom. The first report on the expenditures in the Treasury Department covered only the report of the contingent expenses, without comment or criticism.

Your committee have thus referred to all of the earlier reports from committees of the House of this character, first, to show how difficult are the duties assigned to them, and, secondly, how few of them have complied, as far as the records will show, in making to the House the annual reports which the rules and their duty required.

Your committee believe that these committees should be active and not dormant, and so thinking they have given all of the time and attention at their command to the duties assigned to them.

EXPENDITURE OF THE JUDICIARY FUND.

In response to the first duty enjoined by the 103d rule, your committee would say that it is very difficult, if not almost impossible, for any committee, in the limited period of a Congress, to determine either whether the expenditures in the respective Departments are justified by law; whether the claims, satisfied and discharged, are supported by satisfactory vouchers, both as to character and amount, and whether such claims have been discharged out of funds appropriated therefor; and whether all moneys have been disbursed in conformity with appropriation laws.

The appropriations and expenditures for this Department, as shown by the reports of the Attorney-General, have been as follows:

The appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1871, were $3,714,136.95, and the payments for the same period were $3,035,946.96, and the contingent expenses for the year were $16,615.04.

The appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1872, were $3,200,000, and the payments for that year were $3,076,332.56; of which there was paid to marshals, $2,251,789.56; to clerks, $78,094.26; to district attorneys, $229,465.29. The contingent expenses for the year were $22,550.50.

The appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1873, were $3,030,873.27, and the payments were $3,030,868.85; of which there was paid to marshals, $2,472,665.13; to clerks, $94,991.69; to district attorneys, $246,455.74. The contingent expenses for the year were $21,991.52.

For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1874, there was appropriated $3,000,000, and the payments were $2,669,730.81; of which sum there was paid to marshals, $2,071,332.18; to clerks, $89,063.85; to district attorneys, $275,476.90. The appropriation for the contingent fund was $21,000, all of which was used.

The payments for these several years may not be stated with entire accuracy, as the Attorney-General's report presents the aggregate sum recommended by him to be advanced from the Treasury upon the requisitions of marshals.

EXPENDITURES BY UNITED STATES MARSHALS.

The bulk of expenditures in the Department of Justice is thus shown to be for the payment of marshals and their expenses, which include the payment of jurors and witnesses and the expenses of the arrest, transportation, and the keeping of prisoners.

The accounts of these expenses are made up by the 64 different marshals in the different States and Territories of the United States, including the District of Columbia, and are for all the expenditures for that purpose in both the circuit, district, and territorial courts, including the courts of the District of Columbia. The accounts for that purpose are paid at the Treasury only after they have first been sworn to by the marshal or deputy marshal, and certified by the circuit, district, or territorial judge, as the case may be, and audited by the First Auditor, and allowed by the First Comptroller; and yet, as in the case notably of the western district of Arkansas, gross frauds have crept in. Not only there, but in the southern district of Mississippi, also, frauds have been perpetrated, as your committee are advised by the report of Clinton Rice, esq., of an investigation made there by order of the Attorney-General, the conclusions of which have been sustained, as your committee are informed, by the removal of the marshal; but they have not had time to do more than to read the report which has been transmitted to them at their request by the Attorney-General. Action of Congress, if any should be deemed necessary in this matter, must be reserved for a future Congress.

It is impossible, as the law has been heretofore, for the Department of Justice, or for the Auditor and Comptroller, adequately to protect the Treasury from fraud and fraudulent claims on the part of the marshals. The Attorney-General allows those marshals to draw upon their requisitions a certain amount not in excess of their bonds, heretofore $20,000, to pay court expenses, and, from time to time, they send forward to the Auditor and Comptroller accounts of their disbursements approved by the judges of the respective courts. It would seem impossible that fraudulent vouchers could ever pass the approval of the different judges of the district and circuit courts of the United States, and yet in the case of the western district of Arkansas and southern district of Mississippi this has been accomplished. Whether in other parts of the United States the same thing has been done the time of this committee has not been adequate to discover, nor have they means at hand. It is true the committee has power to send for persons and papers, but from the very nature of the case, the evidence that would lead to the detection of fraudulent accounts of marshals can only be obtained from those who conspire to defeat and defraud the Government. Heretofore no duplicates of accounts were required to be kept in the clerks' offices. No record of the allowance or disallowance of those claims in open court was had, and a mere certification of their correctness upon the single affidavit of the claimant was all that was required to pass them by the proper accounting officers for payment under the law.

Your committee believe that the act which originated with this committee, and is now a law, the title of which is "to regulate the fees and costs of marshals, attorneys, and other officers," if honestly administered by the courts, would tend, in a great measure, if not entirely, to the correction of evils which have grown out of the marshals' accounts, and they believe that, as far as they can now see, that act answers what is required of the committee by the fourth definition of duty in the 103d rule, which is, "whether any, and what, provisions are necessary to be adopted to provide more perfectly for the proper application of the public moneys, and to secure the Government from demands unjust in their character or extravagant in their amount."

EXPENDITURES FOR DISTRICT ATTORNEYS AND ASSISTANTS, CLERKS, AND UNITED STATES COMMISSIONERS.

In addition to the marshals' expenses a large sum is annually taken up in the payment of the sixty-four district attorneys, and the fifty-seven assistant United States district attorneys, the sixty-seven clerks of the circuit, and the seventy clerks of the district courts of the United States, besides the nine clerks of the supreme courts of the Territories, and the twenty-six clerks of the district courts of the Territories, and the "noble army" of 1,770 United States commissioners throughout the United States.

As touching this latter class your committee have been much embarrassed to devise legislation to cure the great evil, as they conceive, of the unnecessary number of these officials, averaging, as they do, about thirty to each judicial district, a number, in the judgment of your committee, largely in excess of the requirements of the judicial service of the country, and tending greatly to the increase of judicial expenditures, since they, in great part, live and thrive by the number of warrants they issue, and the amount of business they do, and in some instances it has been shown, and in many instances it is believed, that they have issued warrants solely for the purpose of procuring fees. But this is a matter which must rest at last in a sound judicial discretion, and any legislation tending to diminish their number or to fix the number arbitrarily, would, in some districts, work an injustice. Your committee can only hope that with the attention of the judiciary and the country called to this matter, every judge will feel himself in duty bound specially to see to it that hereafter only such number of these officials is retained in each district or circuit as may be absolutely indispensable to the carrying on of the public business of the country.

DISTRICT ATTORNEYS AND THEIR ASSISTANTS.

There is another source of expenditure which your committee find rests in the discretion of the Attorney-General, and to which they feel it their duty to allude, namely, the large number of assistant United States attorneys, numbering, as shown by the last report of the Attorney-General, sixty-one in the different courts of the United States, being an annual charge, according to the same report, of $147,000, in addition to the compensation of nine of them, which is undetermined. The authority for their employment is to be found in an act approved August 6, 1861, Revised Statutes, § 363, which reads as follows:

"The Attorney-General shall, whenever in his opinion the public interest requires it, employ and retain, in the name of the United States, such attorneys and counselors at law as he may think necessary to assist the district attorneys in the discharge of their duties, and shall stipulate with such assistant attorneys and counsel the amount of compensation, and shall have supervision of their conduct and proceedings."

In the appropriation bill for the year ending June 30, 1870, this was repealed, but that repealing clause was repealed and the act revived expressly by act approved April 10, 1869, (16 Stat., 46.)

This law, which authorizes the Attorney-General to employ additional counsel whenever, in his judgment, the public interest requires it, may be very proper, and any committee of Congress should reluctantly criticise the action of the law-officer of the Government in regard to the manner in which he exercises the authority thus given him, but a due regard for economy and retrenchment dictates that all officials, whose services can possibly be dispensed with without detriment to the public service, should be gotten rid of and the expense of their retention saved. At this time when reform and retrenchment are everywhere needed, your committee can only hope that the Attorney-General will apply the pruning-knife and dispense with every one of these officials that may not be absolutely necessary for the faithful conduct of the public business. Your committee believe this can safely be done in many of the districts where regular assistants are now authorized, as notably in the district of Vermont, southern district of New York, the district of Iowa, eastern district of Michigan, the two districts of Virginia, the northern district of New York, and, perhaps, elsewhere.

CONSTRUCTIVE MILEAGE.

A productive source of improper expenditure has been the system of constructive mileage, which has also been abolished by the law regulating the costs and charges of marshals, clerks, &c., before referred to, and this will be a considerable saving to the Government.

UNNECESSARY JUDICIAL DISTRICTS.

There has been a great tendency to the creation of new judicial districts, which your committee cannot view with indifference. The creation of each judicial district will average an increase of $60,000 of expenditure yearly, equal to the interest on $1,000,000 of the national debt. Whenever such a district is absolutely needed by the public interests, it of course ought to be organized notwithstanding the additional burden on the Treasury which it may impose, but, so far as your committee can now see, the business of the country can not only be carried on in the United States courts, as at present organized, but your committee believe that no real necessity exists for two districts in either North Carolina, Virginia, Michigan, or Wisconsin, especially when the fact is considered that the business of States like Massachusetts, Louisiana, and Maryland, each containing within its limits large commercial centers in which arise admiralty, bankruptcy, revenue, pension, banking, post-office, and other extensive civil and criminal litigation in United States courts, is conducted successfully, with a single court.

The following is a statement of the business of the districts of Massachusetts, Southern New York, and Eastern Pennsylvania, contrasted with that of the two districts of North Carolina, and the two of Michigan, Virginia, and Wisconsin, the consolidation of which last-named your committee recommend.

Of civil suits, to which the United States was a party, there were terminated during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1874, in the district of Massachusetts, 81; in the southern district of New York, 1,036; in the eastern district of Pennsylvania, 43; while in both districts of Michigan there were terminated during the last fiscal year, of suits of like character, but 18; in the North Carolina districts, but 83; in the Virginia districts, 109; and in the Wisconsin districts, only 12.

Of criminal cases terminated during the last fiscal year, there were in the district of Massachusetts, 147; in the southern district of New York, 37; in the eastern district of Pennsylvania, 80, against 130 in both districts of Michigan, 896 in both districts of North Carolina, 97 in both districts of Virginia, and 11 in both districts of Wisconsin.

Of civil suits, to which the United States was not a party, such as admiralty, bankruptcy, and other suits, there were terminated during the last fiscal year, in the district of Massachusetts, 546; in the southern district of New York, 783; in the eastern district of Pennsylvania, 284; against 505 in both districts of Michigan; 473 in both districts of North Carolina; 559 in both districts of Virginia; and 122, only, in both districts of Wisconsin.

Your committee, therefore, recommend that the Attorney-General, during the recess, do specially inquire and report, in his next annual report, as to the practicability of the consolidation of the two districts of Virginia, North Carolina, Michigan, and Wisconsin. Your committee believe that by the consolidation of those eight districts into four, there would be a saving of between one hundred and fifty and two hundred thousand dollars annually, the cost of those eight districts for the fiscal year being, exclusive of judges' salaries, marshals' salaries, (not fees,) district attorneys' salaries, (not fees,) $311,143.96; and adding the salaries of those officials, about $350,000. Your committee believe that the work of those districts could be adequately performed by four judges, and the like number of district attorneys, clerks, and marshals. And this recommendation your committee believe to be strictly responsive to the duty of the committee to report, from time to time, "whether any, and what, retrenchment can be made in the expenditures of the Department, without detriment to the public service."

COLLECTION OF JUDGMENTS IN FAVOR OF THE UNITED STATES.

Your committee have also had under consideration "whether any, and what, abuses at any time exist in the failure to enforce the payments of moneys which may be due to the United States from public defaulters and others," and are not prepared to make any specific recommendation in regard thereto. The statement made to them by the late Solicitor of the Treasury, Mr. Banfield, was to the effect that the failure, if any, in those matters rested with the marshals and district attorneys in the several localities, where prosecutions were conducted against public defaulters and others. The inclination of his mind and the recommendation he made was that a larger pecuniary inducement should be offered to marshals than is now allowed by law, to induce them to greater zeal and effort in the collection of such judgments. It is true he stated that the judgments were greater in favor of the United States against public defaulters than the sums usually realized. The reasons for this were two-fold: first, compromises are allowed on the recommendation of the district attorneys, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Solicitor of the Treasury, under the act of 1863, and the practice is to allow them when the interests of the United States require them, either because there is some legal defect in the bonds sued on, or a doubt of the solvency of the securities. Your committee have not had the time to give this subject the attention they desired, and, as it is one demanding consideration, they can only hope it will receive fuller attention in another Congress.

RECOMMENDATIONS FOR RETRENCHMENT.

The requirement to report from time to time "such provisions and arrangements as may be necessary to add to the economy of the department, and the accountability of its officers," your committee believe, has been heretofore referred to, in all particulars which have come under their notice, except the following: An inspection of the Attorney-General's report for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1874, discloses the fact that under the head of pay to district attorneys, there was paid to the district attorney, special counsel, &c., in the District of Columbia the large sum of $33,498.16. Of this sum there was paid to R. M. Corwine $10,000, for counsel fees in the Farragut prize and bounty cases—Mr. Corwine being employed by the Attorney-General, at the request of the Secretary of the Treasury, under section 364 of the Revised Statutes as they existed December 1, 1873, which act was passed February 14, 1871, and is as follows:

“SECTION 364. Whenever the head of a Department or Bureau gives the Attorney-General due notice that the interests of the United States require the service of counsel upon the examination of witnesses touching any claim, or upon the legal investigation of any claim pending in such Department or Bureau, the Attorney-General shall provide for such service.”

It is proper to say that Mr. Corwine also received, as the records of the Treasury Department show, $10,000 allowed him of the prize-money, approved under act of Congress March 3, 1869, and that sum was paid on the 4th March, 1874, at the United States Treasury at Washington, under the direction of a decree in those cases made by the supreme court of the District of Columbia. Five thousand dollars of the amount paid under the head of “attorney's fees paid out in the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1874,” was paid to J. Hubley Ashton, in cases authorized to be brought against the Union Pacific Railroad by an act of the Forty-second Congress; and in addition to these sums there was paid to the district attorney, his assistants, his reporter, his watchman, and his detective, office-furniture, office-rent, &c., as shown by the following detailed statement, $18,470.69:

Personal compensation, (exclusive of $200 salary,) $5,800 00

Disbursements made by him:

Assistant attorneys (two).....	4,000 00
Clerk	1,200 00
Post-mortem examinations.....	1,150 00
Watchman	975 00
Reporter	820 00
Detective	300 00
Office-furniture	1,155 52
Office-rent.....	900 00
Stationery	988 60
Street-cars and carriage-hire.....	282 50
Fuel and incidental expenses.....	899 07
Total	18,470 69

Now your committee find that the 17th section of the act approved June 17, 1870, entitled “An act to establish a police court for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes,” allows the district attorney almost unlimited control over the question of the incidental expenses of his office, and is in direct conflict, and so expressed on its face, with the act governing the allowance of those incidental expenses in every other district in the United States.

The fees and allowances of all other district attorneys, except the district attorney of the southern district of New York, which will be next alluded to, being under the control and allowance of the Attorney-General and the accounting officers of the Government, your committee can see no good reason for this exceptional legislation, and feel constrained to recommend that it be repealed.

The case of the district attorney of the southern district of New York will now be considered. The act governing the fees of the attorney of this district, passed August 6, 1861, your committee find to be as follows: "That there shall be paid to the United States district attorney a salary at the rate of $6,000 per annum, and such additional sums as shall be necessary, together with the costs and fees now allowed by law, to pay such amount as shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior for the proper expenses of the offices, including salaries of assistants and clerks."

Your committee regard that act of legislation, also, as exceptional in its character, and exceedingly unwise as a precedent, and can see no reason why the sum of $6,000 or any other sum should be fixed, since the words "such additional sums as shall be necessary," leave that limitation wholly unavailing; and if any one officer of the Government is to have his salary fixed, and the discretion of another officer of the Government limited only by the word "necessary," it seems to us to be opening a door for expenditure, the evil effects of which cannot be easily estimated, and your committee believe that all such legislation should be stricken from the statutes. And while your committee think that this law, and that as to the district attorney of the District of Columbia, are exceptional in their character and wrong in principle, and ought to be repealed, they are not unmindful of the fact that the business of the courts of the southern district of New York is necessarily very large, and requires the attention and attendance of the district attorney or an assistant in court almost every day during the year, besides the necessary attention and attendance to business by the district attorney or his assistants outside of court, at the same time, and for equally legitimate purposes as his duties in court.

There are other apparently large items of expenditure to district attorneys in the district of Iowa, northern district of New York, southern district of Ohio, western district of South Carolina, and eastern district of Tennessee, but an examination of those accounts seems to show nothing improper in those districts; the large item in the southern district of Ohio is swelled by $10,000 paid to A. F. Perry as counsel against the Union Pacific Railroad, under the act of Congress hereinbefore referred to. Your committee believe that hereafter Congress, in authorizing the employment of special counsel, ought always to prescribe some limitation of the amount to be paid for the services to be rendered.

Your committee feel that their duty will not be discharged if they do not call attention to the extraordinary sums paid out to commissioners in the different districts of the United States, aggregating for the last fiscal year $75,830, of which $11,907.90 were paid to commissioners in the western district of North Carolina; $9,528.93, in the northern district of New York; $5,857.50 for the western district of Texas; and $5,130.90 for the district of South Carolina. These sums, in the judgment of your committee, are greatly in excess of what they should have been.

In the case of North Carolina it was in evidence before the committee, and, we think, is undeniable as to that district and doubtless as to others, that much of the amount paid to commissioners was for warrants issued, and hearings upon warrants in frivolous cases. The controlling motive with many of those commissioners is, no doubt, to make business for the purpose of getting fees, and this conduct on the part of these commissioners not only enhances their fees and makes a charge on the Government, but it likewise creates an additional charge, and much the heavier one, in the arrest of prisoners and the cost of their keeping and transportation, and in the fees to deputy marshals, and mileage of the district attorneys. Notably has this been the case in the western district of Arkansas, and in Western North Carolina, and perhaps in the other districts heretofore named where those large expenditures have been made in payment of the fees of commissioners. The attention of the respective judges of the several districts named and of the judiciary of the country, now thus publicly called to these facts, induces your committee to hope that a recurrence of these abuses in the future may be prevented. It has come to the knowledge of the committee that Judge Dick, of the western district of North Carolina, has taken steps to bring about a much-needed reform in this respect in his district, and it is hoped the next annual report of judicial expenditures in his district may show that he has succeeded in this commendable effort.

THE CONTINGENT FUND.

Your committee have already reported at the first session of this Congress upon the expenditure of the contingent fund of this Department since its organization, and they have examined the detailed statement which has been submitted to them, of the contingent expenses covering the period embraced since the last report, January 1, 1874, up to the 1st January, 1875, and find the same supported by proper vouchers

CONCLUSION.

Your committee, in conclusion, aware of the fact that probably no other Department of the Government, since its history, has undergone so thorough an overhauling and investigation, yet can only regret that time and opportunity have not been accorded them to examine more into the details in other districts, where expenditures for marshal's expenses seem, upon their face, to be unnecessarily large, so that they might report any abuses that exist.

Any investigation conducted at the Capitol, without the opportunity of previous inquiry made in the neighborhood where the alleged expenditures of the marshals have been made, as your committee has before said, must be very imperfect, if not altogether unavailing in the detection of fraud. Hereafter, however, with the checks, guards, and restraints imposed by the new law, much, if not all, of the frauds can be and ought to be checked; and your committee is confident that, as touching those expenditures, if this law be faithfully administered and strictly carried out by the officers of the Treasury and the courts, there can be no fraud without the collusion of the judges, the clerks, the marshals, and the district attorneys.

It is proper here to say, in explanation of what might seem to be the large expenditures annually in this Department, the following, and to institute a comparison of these expenditures with those of the Judicial Department in 1860. At that time, and up to 1870, it was the practice to make a specific appropriation for the judicial fund in aid of fines, forfeitures, and penalties, and the whole sum thus appropriated in 1860 was the sum of $1,000,000. Since that time the expenditures have run up to the sum of $3,000,000 for the same purpose, but in this period the country has grown fully 35 per cent. in population, and more than ten-fold in the character of the business and litigation intrusted to the Federal courts, and in the same time twelve new judicial districts have been added to the judicial system of the country, as follows, to wit:

1. Colorado, February 28, 1861.
2. Nevada, March 2, 1861.
3. Dakota, March 2, 1861.
4. West Virginia, December 31, 1862.
5. Arizona, February 24, 1863.
6. Michigan, (western,) February 24, 1863.
7. Idaho, March 3, 1863.
8. Montana, May 26, 1864.
9. New York, (eastern,) February 25, 1865.
10. Wyoming, July 25, 1868.
11. Wisconsin, (western,) June 30, 1870.
12. North Carolina, (western,) June 4, 1872.

During this period a great war has occurred, leaving in its wake large taxation, a large increase in customs duties, opening the door to large frauds on customs and internal-revenue laws, and requiring more prosecutions and larger expenditures in this connection, and conferring jurisdiction on the courts of the United States to try the many cases growing out of infractions of the laws relating to our great internal-revenue system, to the bounty-laws, the pension-laws, largely increased by the late war, proceedings growing out of frauds in bankruptcy, and civil and criminal proceedings growing out of the national-banking act, proceedings growing out of the law known as the enforcement law, the removal of cases, such as proceedings brought in the State courts against Federal officers, thence removed to the United States courts, and counterfeiting of the currency, largely increased by the retirement of all the State-bank circulation, and confined almost exclusively to the counterfeiting of the legal tenders and of the national-bank issues. These additional subjects of litigation, intrusted to the Federal courts, by reason of the changes of the last fifteen years, have necessarily vastly increased the judicial expenditures of the country. Still, your committee believe that they can be and they ought to be reduced, and that the reduction can be effected by the Attorney-General, if properly seconded and aided by the judiciary of the country.

Your committee have no recommendation to make touching the organization and workings of the Department of Justice at Washington, as they are not now prepared to say, and have no reason to believe, that the force employed is too great or the compensation of the clerks and employes of the Department too large.

JAMES B. SENER.
R. M. SPEER.
M. J. DURHAM.

MAJOR N. H. McLEAN.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. GUNCKEL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, submitted the following

REPORT:

[To accompany bill H. R. 4866.]

The Committee on Military Affairs, who, by a resolution of the House of Representatives, passed May 20, 1874, were instructed to inquire "whether Major N. H. McLean, late of the Adjutant-General's Department, was not unjustly treated on the trial of Capt. F. W. Hurtt, late assistant quartermaster of United States volunteers, and on his retirement from the Army, and whether the facts disclosed in the record submitted to the House do not call for his re-instatement," with power to send for persons and papers, have performed that duty, and, after a patient and careful consideration of the subject, beg leave to report:

That the said N. H. McLean graduated at the United States Military Academy, West Point, in 1848, and immediately entered the Army and served as brevet second lieutenant in Second United States Infantry in California until 1854, when he was made adjutant of the regiment. He continued to do hard duty all the time in the Western Territories, until the commencement of the war, when he was placed in command of the Washington arsenal. Afterward, he was ordered to Harrisburgh, Pa., to establish a depot of supplies for troops there concentrated, and while so engaged was selected for promotion to the Adjutant-General's Department, and ordered to report to General McClellan at Cincinnati, Ohio. Subsequently, he was on duty with General Buell in Kentucky, and General Halleck in Missouri, and in each case seems to have performed his duty faithfully and satisfactorily. Afterward, he was transferred to duty as chief of staff to General Wright, then commanding Department of the Ohio, and retained on duty at said headquarters by General Burnside. It appears that up to this time and during his entire service he was never under arrest or charges, and no one ever questioned either his courage or patriotism. His record was not only without blemish, but honorable to himself and the service.

While on duty as assistant adjutant-general at headquarters, Department of Ohio, Major McLean was ordered by General Burnside to investigate and report the manner in which the affairs of the quartermaster's department had been administered by Capt. F. W. Hurtt, assistant quartermaster United States volunteers, stationed at Cincinnati, and against whom corruption and fraud in office had been charged. This order (a copy of which accompanies this report) was dated July 28, 1863. Major McLean, after a long, patient, and thorough investigation, made his report September 26, 1863, (a copy of which is hereto attached,) finding Captain Hurtt guilty of many and gross irregularities and frauds, and specifically charging him with eighteen distinct acts of official misconduct, and detailing the facts and giving the names of the witnesses to support the said charges. On September 28, General Burnside referred this report to Maj. H. L. Burnet, judge-advocate of the department, for further investigation and the use of the court-martial to be ordered for Captain Hurtt's trial. On October 18, Major Burnet writes the Judge-Advocate-General, in relation to the cases of Hurtt and others, adding that they "will be contested with a great deal of pertinacity, and with all the force that money and influence can bring to bear." The court-martial was ordered November 23, 1863, to meet at Cincinnati on December 1, with a detail of Major-General Hartsuff and others for the court. But on November 30, the day before the time fixed for the trial, the Secretary of War countermanded the order convening the court-martial and directed that the officers detailed therefor be sent to their respective commands, and the cases proposed for trial referred to the Judge-Advocate-General. (See pages 398 and 399 of Ex. Doc. 255, 1st sess. 43d Congress.) A second court-martial was ordered January 18, 1864, to meet in Cincinnati January 25, with a detail of General Ammen and others for the court. It was in session thirty-four days, and the proceedings were fully reported, and, by order of the House, have been recently printed in Ex. Doc. 255. The court found Hurtt guilty, and sentenced him to be dishonorably dismissed the service, and the finding and sentence were approved by the Secretary of War.

On October 15, 1863, which was after Major McLean had made his report, and before the first court-martial was ordered for the trial of Hurtt, an article appeared in the Times newspaper of Cincinnati, signed by Edgar Conkling, an honest, well meaning man, charging Major McLean with disloyalty, and on October 28th the charge was repeated in a letter written by said Conkling to the President of the United States. (See article and letter, Ex. Doc. 255, pages 366, 367, 368.) The fact relied upon by Mr. Conkling to sustain this charge of disloyalty was, that at the election in Ohio for State officers, when John Brough was the republican and C. L. Vallandigham the democratic candidate for governor, Major McLean did not vote at all. To this Major McLean (protesting his loyalty, &c.) answered that as an Army officer he had been absent from the State fifteen years, and supposed that, under the constitution and laws of Ohio, he had no right to vote, and so had not made the attempt. And hearing of the charges, the mayor of Cincinnati, together with Bishop McIlvaine, Archbishop Purcell, and many of the leading republican citizens of Cincinnati, addressed a letter to the Secretary of War strongly indorsing Major McLean's loyalty, and testifying to his "unimpeachable integrity," &c. The governor of Ohio, David Tod, telegraphed the Department in behalf of Major McLean, adding that he had "ever found him a most faithful, accommodating, and efficient officer."

But it seems that the denial of Major McLean was not regarded as satisfactory by the Secretary of War, (see page 367 of Ex. Doc. 255,) and he was (October 27, 1863) ordered to report to General Alvord, commanding district of Oregon, Fort Vancouver, for duty. On hearing of the order, General Burnside at once telegraphed the Secretary of War as follows:

[Telegram received at Washington, 3.20 a. m., November 5, 1863, from Knoxville, dated November 14, 1863.]

Hon E. M. STANTON, Secretary of War:

I most respectfully but earnestly request that Maj. N. H. McLean be allowed to remain on duty at the headquarters of this department. He understands all the work of the Department, is faithful, industrious, capable, and as loyal as you or I. He is necessary to the Government as witness in some trials of men suspected of fraud against the United States Government, and as I originated the investigation, I think it is due me from the Government that he should be heard.

A. E. BURNSIDE,
Major-General.

But this earnest appeal proved of no avail, and Major McLean was peremptorily ordered to proceed at once to Fort Vancouver, Oregon. He left New York on Christmas, 1863. Just before leaving he received a letter from General Burnside, (a copy of which is hereto attached,) in which occur these words: "I have hoped to have your orders revoked, but it seems impossible, and I must now thank you for your entire devotion to your duties while under my command. Be patient a little while, and all will be well. They cannot harm you, for you are far above them in pure, disinterested patriotism and devotion to your country. I shall not forget to do all in my power to right you." On his arrival at San Francisco he received an order of the War Department (see Special Order 510) directing him to relieve Lieut. Col. T. C. English in duties of assistant to the provost-marshal-general United States for the State of Oregon and the Territory of Washington, and to assume the duties of superintendent of volunteer recruiting-service for said State and Territory. He entered upon duty at Portland, Oreg., February 10, 1864, but keenly feeling what he considered official disgrace, he was constrained by a sense of honor to tender his resignation. It was accepted May 19, and he relieved from duty on 23d July following. While in Oregon he seems to have performed his duty faithfully, satisfactorily to the Government, and in such a way as to merit the thanks of the loyal people of Oregon, which were formally tendered him through Addison C. Gibbs, the governor of the State. (See his letter, hereto attached.)

Major McLean has ever since been out of the service, and he testifies that he has neither asked for re-instatement, nor applied for or instigated this investigation. He believes he was the victim of a wicked conspiracy, and that he has been grossly wronged and cruelly disgraced; but he has patiently and silently waited, assured that time would sooner or later vindicate him and his honor.

Ordinarily, the removal of an officer from one post of duty to another, however remote or disagreeable, does not call for comment, much less for investigation and report. But a careful consideration of all the testimony convinces your committee that this case is a remarkable one, and that it deserves congressional consideration. The order was made during a dark period of the war, when the Government needed in active service near the seat of war all officers who were faithful and qualified. There were special reasons for maintaining Major McLean: 1st, he was on duty at the headquarters of General Burnside, who not only desired him to remain, but earnestly protested against his removal; 2d, he had made the investigation in the Hurtt case, and upon his report the charges were made, and court-martial ordered, and as he was familiar with all the facts, it was of the very highest importance that he remain and assist the Government in the prosecution of the case.

Why, then, in the face of these facts, all of which were presented and pressed upon the Secretary of War, was Major McLean so peremptorily ordered to one of the most remote posts in the whole country? Ostensibly, because he was charged with and believed guilty of disloyalty. The charge relied and acted upon could not have been the letter of Edgar Conkling to the President, for that was dated at Cincinnati, October 28, which was one day after the order was made. The only other charge, so far as the evidence and papers show, ever made against Major McLean was contained in the article published in the Cincinnati Times, which was forwarded to the War Department by Major McLean himself. As already stated, the article based the charge of disloyalty on the fact that McLean did not vote at a State election which had just been held in Ohio. As officers of the Regular Army (whether for sufficient reasons or not your committee are not called upon to decide) rarely exercise the right of suffrage, this fact could hardly be just cause of suspicion. But in this case Major McLean explained, in a letter published in the same newspaper and forwarded to the Secretary of War, that he did not vote because, after an examination of the constitution and laws of Ohio, he believed he had no right to vote. Whether he had the right to vote or not, if he honestly believed that he did not have the right, and for that reason did not offer to vote, he was and ought to have been held excusable. But on an examination of the constitution and laws of Ohio, your committee are satisfied that McLean was right, and that he was not entitled to vote at said election.

But if any possible suspicion remained it ought to have been removed by the direct and emphatic statement of General Burnside, the prompt telegram of Governor Tod, and the strong letter of Bishop McIlvaine, and other men of tried and known loyalty in Cincinnati.

Making due allowance for the excitement and turbulence of the war-times, it still does not seem possible that Secretary Stanton had any real suspicion as to McLean's loyalty. If he had, why did he send McLean to a distant State and there detail him to duty as assistant to the provost-marshal general of the United States and superintendent of the volunteer recruiting-service in the State of Oregon?

But if his banishment was not because of supposed disloyalty the question recurs, for what was it done? Among the papers placed in evidence is the affidavit of Capt. W. P. Anderson, a worthy, reliable citizen of Cincinnati, which seems to throw some light on the subject. It is as follows:

STATE OF OHIO,
Hamilton County, ss:

Personally appeared before me, the undersigned, a notary public in and for Hamilton County, W. P. Anderson, who, being first sworn according to law, deposes and says as follows:

During the winter of 1863 I held the commission of assistant adjutant-general, United States volunteers, and was associated on duty, at headquarters, Department of the Ohio, at Cincinnati, Ohio, with Maj. N. H. McLean, assistant adjutant-general United States Army. Under the orders of Maj. Gen. A. E. Burnside, commanding the department, Major McLean was directed to investigate and report upon the administration of the affairs of the quartermaster's department of the Government service by Capt. F. W. Hurtt, assistant quartermaster of volunteers, stationed at Cincinnati, Ohio. I remember distinctly that some ten days before Major McLean submitted his report to the commanding general, he came to me and stated that there was trouble in store for him in consequence of the report he would soon submit in relation to Captain Hurtt, and in consequence of so many parties of political and moneyed influence being directly or indirectly involved. The major stated that he had been ordered to make the investigation and the report referred to, and that his fixed purpose was to do his whole duty faithfully, let consequences result as they might. I remember that Major McLean predicted that the case would not be tried while he was on hand, but that any court the commanding general might order would be dissolved, and that he (Major McLean) would be ordered to some remote point. The facts were distinctly impressed on my mind by the strangely correct fulfillment of Major McLean's prediction. I also recollect that, after Major McLean had submitted his report, and had received orders assigning him to duty in Oregon, Captain Hurtt came to the department headquarters, and that Major McLean informed me that Hurtt endeavored to get him (McLean) to promise that he would aid in his (Hurtt's) defense when his case should be tried, and expressed the belief that if Major McLean would do so, he (Hurtt) could find the influence to have the orders of the War Department, directing Major McLean to proceed to Oregon, modified or revoked, McLean stating he told Hurtt the case was a serious one, and that he intended to do his whole duty for the Government regardless of consequences.

W. P. ANDERSON.

Sworn to before me, and subscribed in my presence, this 16th day of June, A. D. 1874.

[SEAL.]

CHARLES F. SYBOLD,
Notary Public, Hamilton County, Ohio.

It will be remembered that during his fifteen years' service as an officer of the Army there had never been a complaint as to his conduct, or a suspicion as to his loyalty or integrity. It was not until after he had made his report in the Hurtt case that his troubles began, and he and his friends, naturally enough, conclude that they have a necessary connection.

The testimony shows that Hurtt was much in the habit of seeking and using, when possible, the influence of his political friends; and that as quartermaster he had large money transactions with business men and capitalists in Cincinnati and elsewhere, some of which were of a fraudulent character. It was through these influences that he had procured an assignment to duty at Cincinnati, and it was by these same means that he was seeking to get into the Regular Army and to displace his superior officer at Cincinnati, Captain Dickerson, and so control larger disbursements of the public money and have greater opportunities for speculation and gain for himself and friends. It would seem not unlikely, therefore, that when he found himself investigated and exposed, and about to be tried and punished, he would use, in so far as was possible, the same political and business influences to get rid of the officer who had investigated the whole affair, knew all the witnesses, and was familiar with all the facts, and was almost indispensable to the Government in the prosecution of the case. Major McLean feared this at the time, and it seems also to have been apprehended by General Burnside and his advocate-general, Burnet, and hence their efforts to have him retained until after the trial, General Burnside making this earnest appeal: "As I originated the investigation, I think it is due me from the Government that he (McLean) should be heard."

It will be seen by reference to the testimony in the Hurtt case that when Hurtt wanted to displace Captain Dickerson, he managed to have that officer suspected of disloyalty. The temper of the times was such that the easiest and cheapest way of injuring any one was to raise against him a suspicion of disloyalty; and, granting that Hurtt really wanted to get rid of McLean, (about which there can be but little doubt,) he would be likely to try the same tactics employed against Dickerson. And while there is no direct proof that he did, there are many facts and circumstances, which cannot be detailed within the limits of a congressional report, which strongly tend to prove that the removal was brought about by Hurtt and those implicated with him in Government contracts and frauds. Just how it was done may never be certainly known, but from all the light that can be obtained from the testimony, it would seem to have been accomplished through innocent and good men, who were unsuspectingly used to prejudice the mind of the Secretary of War and to influence the action of the War Department. Indeed, there is no other reasonable way of accounting for either the removal of Major McLean or the revocation of the first order for a court-martial.

But whether Hurtt or the Hurtt court-martial had much or little to do with the removal, or whether the suspicion of disloyalty was the real or pretended cause of his disgrace, your committee are clearly of the opinion that Major McLean was unfairly and unjustly dealt with, and that the Government ought, without further delay, to do what is yet possible to remedy the wrong done one of its capable and faithful officers.

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

○

DISTRICT LIBEL LAW.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. TREMAIN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted the following

REPORT:

[To accompany bill H. R. 3932.]

The Judiciary Committee, to whom was referred the bill providing that the second section of the act of June 22, 1874, entitled "An act conferring jurisdiction upon the criminal court of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," should be so amended as not to apply to proceedings in cases of libel, having had the same under consideration, submit the following report:

The claim having been made that this section does not authorize any proceeding to bring into the District of Columbia for trial any person who may be indicted therein for libel, but who may be found beyond the boundaries of the District, and that it only confers upon the courts of the District power to arrest offenders found within the District who are charged with crime committed within the District, and hold them for trial, and to arrest offenders found within the District who have committed crimes against the United States in some judicial district of the United States, and to send them to such district for trial, that question was first considered by the committee. If this was the only effect of the section, it is quite apparent that the provision was wholly unnecessary, and that it produced no change in existing law, because that power already existed. Section 1 of the act of February 27, 1801, 2 Stat., 105, confers upon the circuit court for the District, and the judges thereof, all the powers vested by law in the circuit courts and the judges of the circuit courts of the United States. When the supreme court of the District was created, the same powers and jurisdiction were conferred upon said court and the justices thereof as were possessed and exercised by the judges of the circuit courts. (Section 1 of act of March 3, 1863, 12 Stat., 762.)

The object of section 2 of the act in question was to provide a machinery whereby the authorities of the District might cause the arrest of persons indicted within the District, at any place within the United States, and to have them brought before the criminal courts of said District for trial. The 33d section of the act of 1789 referred to is in these words:

And be it further enacted, That for any crime or offense against the United States the offender may, by any justice or judge of the United States, or by any justice of the peace, or other magistrate of any of the United States where he may be found, agreeably to the usual mode of process against offenders in such State, and at the expense of the United States, be arrested and imprisoned, or bailed, as the case may be, for trial before such court of the United States as by this act has cognizance of the offense.

And copies of the process shall be returned as speedily as may be into the clerk's office of such court, together with the recognizances of the witnesses for their appearance to testify in the case, which recognizances the magistrate before whom the examination shall be may require on pain of imprisonment; and if such commitment of the offender or the witnesses shall be in a district other than that in which the offense is to be tried, it shall be the duty of the judge of that district where the delinquent is imprisoned, seasonably to issue, and of the marshal of the same district to execute, a warrant for the removal of the offender and the witnesses, or either of them, as the case may be, to the district in which the trial is to be had. And upon all arrests in criminal cases bail shall be admitted, except when the punishment may be death, in which case it shall not be admitted but by the supreme or a circuit court, or by a justice of the supreme court, or a judge of a district court, who shall exercise their discretion therein, regarding the nature and circumstances of the offense, and of the evidence and the usages of law. And if a person committed by a justice of the supreme court or a judge of a district court for an offense not punishable with death shall afterward procure bail, and there be no judge of the United States in the district to take the same, it may be taken by any judge of the supreme or superior court of law of such State.

The practice had prevailed since 1789 of bringing such persons to the District under said section, and numerous cases of this kind had arisen, and the extradition of such persons into the District effected without any question being made as to the lawfulness thereof. More recently, however, doubts had been entertained whether section 33 aforesaid conferred such power, for the reason that the courts of the District were not embraced within the words of that section, as they were not, nor was either of them, "such court of the United States as by this act has cognizance of the offense."

Your committee are of opinion that a careful examination of the act of 1874 and of the thirty-third section of the act of 1789 will show that they provide for arresting and bringing to the District for trial persons who have committed offenses within the District. What provisions of the thirty-third section apply to courts? A court is mentioned in such section only in two places; in the first place as the court before which the trial should take place, and in the next place as the court which should be authorized to admit to bail. No court is empowered to issue a warrant for the arrest of the offender, as that power is conferred only upon a justice, or judge of the United States, or any justice of the peace or other magistrate of any of the United States where the offender may be found. If, therefore, the purpose of section 2 of the act of 1874 was to enable the courts of the District to issue their warrant for the removal from the District of persons found within it, no appropriate language has been employed to confer such power. As the thirty-third section, however, does provide in express terms that the prisoner may be brought before the court which has cognizance by that act of the offense for trial, and as section 2 of the act of 1874 applies the provisions of that section to courts created by act of Congress in the District of Columbia, the conclusion seems inevitable that said section 2 authorizes the arrest and bringing into the District of offenders before the courts of such District for trial. Suppose an act of Congress should be passed declaring that the provisions of section 33 should apply to the courts of the Territory of Utah. How could that act be construed except by holding that it brought into existence all the machinery provided for in said section for the arrest of persons in any part of the United States, and their removal to said Territory, for trial before the courts having cognizance of the offense?

The next question is, whether a libel published within the District of Columbia is an offense for which the offender may be indicted there; and, if so, whether, under the operations of section 2 aforesaid, he may be brought there for trial. Libel is an indictable offense at common law. The common law had been adopted by the State of Maryland, prior to the cession of her territory to the United States. By section 3 of the Declaration of Rights of the State of Maryland, which was in force at that time, it was declared "that the inhabitants of Maryland are entitled to the common law of England." The courts of Maryland have uniformly held that the common law was in force in that State.—Deshiel agt. Attorney-General, 5 Har. and Johns., 392, and State agt. Buchanan, ib., 317.

It was adjudged by the Supreme Court of the United States in Kendall against the United States, (12 Peters, 525,) that the common law as it existed in Maryland at the time of the cession remained in force within the District. In the case of the United States against Watkins, 4 Cranch C. C. Reports, 452, the supreme court of the District decided that an indictment would lie for an offense committed here which was indictable at common law, although it had not been declared an offense by act of Congress. The following is the language of the court:

We are therefore of opinion that there is nothing in the character of the parties, or in the circumstances of the transaction, which would make it a case of exclusive Federal jurisdiction, but that if it be in its nature a common-law offense, and had been committed in a State, it might have been tried in a State court as an offense against that State. We think, therefore, that if it be a common-law offense, committed in this county, it is within the jurisdiction of this court, whose common-law jurisdiction is derived from the common law of Maryland, which was by the cession of Maryland and the acceptance of Congress under the provision in the Constitution of the United States, transferred from Maryland to the United States, with that remnant of State sovereignty which, after the adoption of the Federal Constitution, was left to Maryland. All the State prerogative which Maryland enjoyed under the common law which she adopted, so far, as concerned the ceded territory, passed to the United States all the power which Maryland had, by virtue of that common-law prerogative, to punish by indictment offenders against her sovereignty, and to protect that sovereignty by the same means so far as regarded the territory ceded.

We therefore think that, in regard to offenses committed within this part of the District, the United States have a criminal common law, and that this court has a criminal common-law jurisdiction.

In 1865, Adam Gurowski was tried before Judge Fisher in this District upon an indictment for libeling William H. Seward, and although he was defended by able and experienced counsel no question as to the sufficiency of the indictment was raised. In the recent case of the United States against Buell, the supreme court of this District held that libel was an offense against the United States, and punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary. The following is a statement of the case:

In the supreme court of the District of Columbia.—United States against Augustus C. Buell.—Certiorari to the police court, District of Columbia. This was a prosecution in the police court by way of information, charging the defendant with libel. On the defendant's petition filed in this court, a writ of certiorari was issued to said police court, in obedience to which the case was certified to the circuit court. Then a motion was made by the district attorney to quash the writ, and the circuit court ordered that motion to be heard at the general term in the first instance. George P. Fisher and A. G. Riddle for the United States, and William Birney for defendant.

Cartter, C. J., delivered the opinion of the court: The court have concluded in this case to overrule the motion to quash the writ of certiorari. This conclusion necessarily involves the construction of the first section of the statute creating the police court. That section is as follows:

"Be it enacted, &c., That there shall be established in the District of Columbia a court to be called the police court of the District of Columbia, which shall have original and exclusive jurisdiction of all offenses against the United States committed in the District of Columbia, not deemed capital or otherwise infamous crimes; that is to say, of all simple assaults and batteries, and all other misdemeanors not punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary."

The question made here is whether, in view of that section, the police court has jurisdiction of libel. If it is an offense not infamous and not punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary, the police court would seem to have jurisdiction. If not, it is left where the creation of that court found it. We have come to the conclusion that the crime is or may be a penitentiary offense. The police court cannot impose the penalty contemplated or adequate to the offense; and the fact that the court cannot impose the punishment is conclusive upon its jurisdiction of the crime.

That court cannot punish by imprisonment in the penitentiary nor for any period longer than one year in the jail. There is a misconception of power in the court below, and the power to prosecute does reside in this forum, and therefore the motion to quash is dismissed.

Congress, by act of February 25, 1865, has expressly recognized libel as an offense indictable within the District, and provided for admitting the truth of the libel in evidence on the part of the defendant. (U. S. Stat., vol. 13, p. 439.) By section 119 of an act of Congress passed in 1801, the laws of Virginia and Maryland were continued in force in that part of the District which was ceded by those States to the United States, and by them accepted for the permanent seat of Government. An offense committed within the District is an offense against the United States, which is the only sovereignty existing there, and the indictment should charge it as committed against the peace and Government of the United States. (See act of Congress of March 3, 1801, sec. 2, 2 Stat., 103.) Punishment by substituting imprisonment for whipping is provided by act of Congress of 1801, section 76, for all misdemeanors and other offenses for which no other punishment is provided.

Although libel was not an offense against the United States in 1789, because the District of Columbia had not then been ceded to the United States, yet upon the familiar principles applicable to the construction of statutes in pari materia, which require that such statutes should all be interpreted together, any offense against the United States which might be created subsequent to the passage of that act or which might become such by the cession and acceptance of other territory, must be considered as offenses against the United States within the meaning and contemplation of that statute. If it should be conceded that the publication of a libel within the District of Columbia was not an offense against the United States within the provisions of the thirty-second section of the judiciary act of 1789, such concession would neither be decisive nor controlling. Such publication is an offense of which the courts of such District have cognizance. When the provisions of the thirty-third section, without any exception, were made applicable, by law, to such courts, all the means and machinery provided by that section for arresting and bringing to trial before such courts offenders were brought into full play as well in regard to that and other common-law offenses over which such courts had jurisdiction, as in regard to counterfeiting, robbing the mails, or any other offenses created and defined by acts of Congress.

Your committee are thus brought to the following conclusions, viz: 1. That the second section of the act of 1874 confers authority to arrest and bring into the District of Columbia for trial before the courts of such District all persons who have committed offenses against the United States within said District who may be found in any part of the United States. 2. That libel published within said District is such an offense against the United States.

The question remains for consideration whether that act should be so amended as not to apply to indictments or proceedings for libel. If such an amendment should be adopted, there would be no mode of bringing within the District for trial any libeler who should publish his libel within the District and then flee from said District to any place within the United States beyond the limits of the District. The provisions of the Federal Constitution for inter-State extradition only apply to the case of a person charged with crime who shall flee from the State where the crime was committed and be found within the jurisdiction of another State. (U. S. Constitution, art. 4, sec. 2.) When slavery was in existence, an act of Congress was passed making the provisions of this section applicable to proceedings for the removal of fugitive slaves, and fugitives from justice whose removal from the District was applied for to the State from which such fugitive escaped. (Act of Congress of March 3, 1801; U. S. Stat., vol. 2, p. 116, sec. 6.) But no such provision was enacted in relation to bringing such fugitives within the District. Should the proposed amendment be adopted, any person outside of the District might send his libels and cause them to be published within the District, and so long as he remained beyond the limits of the District, he could not be arrested or brought to trial within the District, nor could he be brought to trial under the Constitution in any other district than that where his offense was committed. (Amendments to the Constitution, art. 6.) So, too, after publishing a libel within the District, no matter how aggravated, by printed or written matter, by picture, caricature, or other libelous publication holding an innocent person up to public odium, ridicule, hatred, and contempt, the libeler could escape beyond the limits of the District, and defy all efforts to arrest him and bring him back for trial and punishment.

Your committee cannot recommend such a repeal or modification of the act of 1874. So long as libel shall remain an indictable offense within the District, they see no reason why the same legal machinery should not continue in force for bringing the offender to trial before the courts of the District, as obtains in regard to other crimes committed within such District. Whether by the true interpretation of section 33 of the act of 1789, the courts of the United States thereafter mentioned might not probably be held to include other courts of the United States thereafter created within the District of Columbia, and clothed with similar criminal jurisdiction, it is not deemed necessary to inquire. For nearly 100 years it seems to have been assumed that it was to be so interpreted, and numerous cases of persons who have been arrested, and brought within the District for trial, have arisen. If, however, the existing law was defective in this particular, it ought, in the opinion of your committee, to have been so amended as to enable the authorities of the District to bring such offenders to trial within the District, and as the act of 1874 has wrought such amendment, your committee see no sufficient reason why they should recommend any repeal or amendment of that section.

Your committee have also considered two bills referred to them relating to indictments for libel in the District of Columbia, the one introduced by Mr. Poland and the other by Mr. Tremain. Under existing law any person guilty of publishing a libel in the District of Columbia is liable to indictment and punishment in said District. If the libel should be sent into the District by any person beyond its boundaries, and the same should be received and read in said District by the person to whom it was sent, this is a publication within the District.

If the editor, proprietor, or publisher of a newspaper regularly published and issued outside of the District, should send his paper containing a libelous article to the District to a subscriber, or if the same should be sent to the District by his agents for sale, and should be sold there by his agents and servants, this amounts to a publication within the District. (See 3d Pickering R., 304; Commonwealth vs. Blanding, 1 Russell on Crime, 250, and the cases cited ; 12 State Trials, 331 ; 4 Barn. and Ald., 95.)

Complaints have been made that under these rules of law newspaper editors and publishers who are engaged in the publication of newspapers in any part of the United States are liable to be indicted in the District, and brought there for trial. It is alleged that inasmuch as such persons are liable to be indicted and tried in the States where such newspapers are published, the further liability to be taken to the District of Columbia, perhaps at a distance of thousands of miles from home and tried in such District, operates with hardship and severity. If your committee are correct in their conclusion that any person who may be indicted in the District for libel is liable to be brought there for trial, although he may never have placed his foot within the District, then it follows that the editor of the newspaper whose paper may be circulated within said District is exposed to much greater peril than he is for circulating such paper in any other part of the United States, because, as already shown, he could not be taken into any State other than the one where his paper is published except in cases where he has fled from such State, and may be found in another State.

Your committee consider that the allegations of complaint are not wholly destitute of foundation and reason. It seems somewhat anomalous that a newspaper editor whose offense was actually committed where his paper was issued, and only constructively within the District, should be brought from San Francisco, Saint Louis, Chicago, New York, Boston, and other places throughout the country for trial in the District when such District is the only place within the United States where he is exposed to such peril. As the United States are only allowed to prosecute libels, criminally, within the District, for the reason that they have succeeded to the jurisdiction of the State of Maryland, it is difficult to see any good and sufficient reason why there should be so much greater peril for the constructive publication of a libel in the District than in any other place within the United States where the common law prevails. Inasmuch as it is well settled that the courts of the United States within the limits of a State have no common-law jurisdiction, such jurisdiction only obtains in the State courts of those States which have adopted the common law of England.

Your committee have no sympathy whatever with a malicious and malignant libeler. On the contrary, they believe that the licentiousness of the press is one of the most alarming symptoms of the times. They are entirely conscious that one of the principal difficulties in the way of any amelioration of existing laws arises from the utter recklessness with which the correspondents and editors of newspapers are accustomed to assail members of Congress, and all other persons who may be so unfortunate as to hold public positions in the service of the country.

Your committee, however, believe it to be the duty of Congress to remove all just cause of complaint within their power, although such complaints may proceed from a class of men who have themselves been guilty of misconduct. In that way they will be deprived of all claim to public sympathy, and Congress will establish its claim to public confidence by enacting just laws even for the benefit of its enemies. Your committee have, therefore, concluded to recommend the bill herewith reported. It will be seen that it only applies to libels contained in newspapers regularly issued and published outside of the District, and afterward circulated within it. In all such cases an indictment may be obtained in the State courts of the State where such paper is published. As to all libels contained in any paper, letter, pamphlet, or in any other form than in regularly published newspapers, which are sent into the District, and as to all libels contained in newspapers printed within the District, or contained in any other libelous publication which is made only within the District, the proposed bill will have no effect. In the State of New York a statute has existed for nearly a quarter of a century restricting indictments for libels contained in newspapers regularly published to the county where the paper is printed, and to the county where the libeled party resides, and also requiring the court to change the place of trial of such indictment to the county where such paper is published, provided the defendant shall execute a bond to pay the complainant's expenses in proceeding to the place of trial, in case of conviction. With these explanations the committee submit the accompanying bill.

JOSEPH J. BROWN.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. BANNING, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, submitted the following

REPORT:

[To accompany bill H. R. 3829.]

The Committee on Foreign Affairs, to whom was referred the claim of Joseph J. Brown, of Columbia, S. C., for damages on account of the destruction of his property by United States troops, in burning the town of Columbia, S. C., submit the following report:

1st. There is no evidence whatever to show that the United States troops, under the command of William T. Sherman, burned the town of Columbia, S. C.

2d. If the town of Columbia, S. C., had been burned by order of the commanding general, when there is no proof to the contrary, as in this case, it must be taken for granted that the burning was necessary to the prosecution of the war, or to impair the power of the rebellion, and the Government is not under any obligation to make compensation to the owners of property destroyed.

3d. If the burning had been the result of wanton or unauthorized acts of United States soldiers the petitioner would not be entitled to compensation. (See Gibbons vs. The United States, 8 Wallace, 269.)

4th. The petitioner, being an alien, should present his claim through the authorized representative of his government. (See opinion of Secretary of State, as follows:)

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, April 22, 1874!

SIR: In reply to your telegram stating that claims are presented by French citizens and other aliens through Congress, to the Committee on War-Claims, I have to remark that such presentation is entirely inconsistent with usage, which requires that aliens must address this Government only through the diplomatic representatives of their own governments.

This Department refuses to entertain applications or to receive claims from aliens, except through a responsible presentation by the regularly accredited representative of their government.

I have also been under the impression that Congress refused to receive petitions or claims from aliens. Such I am advised was at one time the rule of the House of Representatives, and such is the rule at present in the Senate as I am informed. The propriety of the refusal to allow an alien to intrude his claims upon Congress cannot be questioned.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

HAMILTON FISH.

Hon. WM. LAWRENCE,
House of Representatives.

The committee therefore report adversely upon the bill, and ask to be discharged from further consideration of it.

CHARLES O. SHEPARD.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. BANNING, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, submitted the following

REPORT:

[To accompany bill H. R. 4127.]

The Committee on Foreign Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4127) for the relief of Charles O. Shepard, as chargé d'affaires ad interim of the United States in Japan, have had the same under consideration, and make the following report:

That claims of this nature so frequently arising in the diplomatic and consular service, it is hazardous in the extreme to well-defined regulations to admit of exceptional claims, unless they be such as would entail consideration under existing laws. Your committee would therefore respectfully submit the following communication from the honorable Secretary of State regarding the claim, indorsing its views, and requesting to be discharged from the further consideration of the bill:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, January 28, 1875.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 25th instant, inclosing a copy of a bill for the relief of Charles O. Shepard, late chargé d'affaires ad interim in Japan, and of a memorial or statement in reference to the case. You ask such information and recommendation as may be deemed proper, as to this claim referred to your committee.

Mr. De Long, the minister at Japan, being about to return home, the Department instructed Mr. Shepard, then acting as consul at Yokohama, to take charge of the legation. He did so December 23, 1871, on Mr. De Long's departure, and remained acting as chargé d'affaires ad interim until August 10, 1872, when Mr. De Long returned. The diplomatic duties were superadded to Mr. Shepard's duties as consul, and he remained, in contemplation of law, in charge of both consulate and legation.

The consular dispatches, up to January 1, 1872, were signed by Mr. Shepard, but some appeared after that date signed George M. Mitchell, vice-consul, and the Department thereupon informed Mr. Shepard that it was unusual that the vice-consul should correspond directly with the Department while he was at his post. This dispatch was acknowledged by Mr. Shepard, under date of May 24, 1872, and the business was thereafter entirely conducted by Mr. Shepard until Mr. De Long's return. Certain drafts were also drawn by Mr. Mitchell and accounts stated by him for expenses of consular court, &c., and were returned to be redrawn in Mr. Shepard's name.

A vice-consul is an officer whose power to act begins only with the absence of the consul, and no authority was given to place Mr. Mitchell in charge; and when the consul is at his post, a vice-consul is prohibited by law from carrying on the business of the consulate. Mr. De Long did not inform the Department that duties were performed by Mr. Mitchell under his authority or direction.

In reference to the pay to which Mr. Shepard was entitled, the act of August 18, 1856, section 11, provided as follows: "That for such time as any consular officer shall be authorized, pursuant to the provisions of this act, to perform diplomatic functions * * * he shall be entitled, in addition to his compensation as such consular officer, to receive compensation for his services, while so authorized, at the rate allowed by this act for a secretary of legation in such country." The rate allowed by that act for secretary of legation in that country was 15 per cent. of the salary to which the minister was entitled, and the salary of the minister was fixed at $10,000. Although there was no secretary of legation provided for Japan, the amount of the salary of such secretary, if appointed, was fixed by the act. Mr. Shepard himself understood distinctly the amount of compensation to which he was entitled, as in his number 34, under date of April 17, 1872, he forwards his accounts for the first quarter of 1872, and says: "Fifteen per cent. of the minister's salary added to a sum equal to my salary as consul, is, I understand, the amount to which I am entitled," and he drew for his compensation at this rate. In addition to Mr. Shepard's draft as chargé, Mr. Mitchell drew for the salary of consul. Upon these drafts coming forward, Mr. Shepard was informed by the Department that his draft had been honored and Mr. Mitchell's disallowed; the Department informing him that "the full salary of the consulate having been allowed to you in the account just referred to, the Department is precluded from honoring Mr. Mitchell's draft for salary."

Mr. Shepard, in acknowledging this dispatch, under date of July 22, 1872, states: "I am informed that my draft for salary had been honored and Mr. Mitchell's dishonored," and adds, "I have the honor to request instructions as to the manner in which Mr. Mitchell is to be compensated. Under the present decision of the Department Mr. Mitchell receives no pay. I earnestly beg the Department will find some channel through which Mr. Mitchell can receive his pay;" and in his No. 116, of September 10, 1872, Mr. Shepard writes, (after Mr. De Long's return,) "The decision of the Department leaves me to pay Mr. Mitchell, or, what results in the same thing, the charging of his salary to my account." It appears that Mr. Shepard had received his pay in full, as provided by law, and I am at loss to understand the statement in the memorial forwarded me, "that the vice-consul acting as consul drew the consul's pay," and the statement that "for that reason Mr. Shepard is therefore precluded from his compensation." Mr. Shepard appears to have drawn his own pay as consul, and the 15 per cent. additional, the Department having refused to honor Mr. Mitchell's drafts.

Mr. Shepard further states that the duties of consul and of minister cannot be performed in China and Japan by the same person, because an appeal lies from the consular court to the minister.

Mr. Shepard never was minister in Japan, but simply chargé d'affaires ad interim. As matter of fact, he did remain in charge of the consulate, and discharged its duties during a large portion of the time, and it is believed held his consular court. There is no authority of law, and has been no precedent from the practice of this Department, under which a consul, as in Mr. Shepard's case, acting as chargé d'affaires ad interim is entitled to the pay which a secretary of legation while acting as chargé would be entitled to receive, or to any other pay than the pay of a consul, with 15 per cent. of the minister's salary superadded thereto, which Mr. Shepard has received. A change in the general practice, as proposed by this bill, would open the door to many similar cases, and give rise to a number of claims of persons who have acted in similar capacities seeking similar compensation, without any authority existing therefor.

The memorial and papers accompanying your letter are herewith returned.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

HAMILTON FISH,

Hon. H. B. BANNING,
House of Representatives.

JOHN J. ANDERSON.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. BARBER, from the Committee on War-Claims, submitted the following

REPORT:

[To accompany bill H. R. 4870.]

The Committee on War-Claims, to whom was referred the memorial of John J. Anderson, surviving partner of Anderson & White, submit the following report:

The facts in regard to this claim seem to be fully stated in Report No. 248 of Senate Committee on Claims, 1st session 43d Congress.

The claim is for compensation for the loss of twenty-seven bales and six parts of bales of cotton, and for damages to one hundred and eighty-seven bales and six parts of bales, being a part of two hundred and twenty bales of cotton impressed by Brigadier-General Rousseau in September, 1862, at Nashville, Tenn., and two bales impressed by order of Brigadier-General Negley, for military defense.

The right to take the claimants' cotton for military defense, to build breastworks for the defense of our Army and the city of Nashville, wherein were large supplies of military stores, is as evident as the right to take earth, stone, or timber for like purpose.

The propriety of using such valuable material for breastworks depended upon the supposed exigency at the time, and of which the officer in command was necessarily the judge.

The order No. 5 of Brigadier-General Rousseau to seize the cotton, promised a return at as early a day as possible, and guaranteed the owners against all losses, except those which depended upon the fortunes of war.

Construing this guarantee most favorably for the claimants, it implied a promise to return the cotton taken, unless captured or destroyed by the enemy.

As to the quantity of cotton not returned, and the damage to that returned by reason of its use and exposure while in breastworks, the proof seems satisfactory.

The question arises, what price ought to be fixed for the cotton which was lost and not returned to claimants? Shall it be the price paid by the claimants, or its market-price when impressed, or the value when, no longer needed for military defense, it was returned to the claimants, and when all danger of capture by the enemy had passed away, and the channels were open for its safe transmission to market?

The committee believe the salable price at Nashville at the time of the taking the cotton is the true measure of the liability of the Government.

The extreme danger, at the time when this cotton was impressed, of its capture or destruction by the enemy may be reasonably inferred from the order of Brigadier-General Rousseau, ordering the use of such valuable material as cotton-bales for breastworks and barricades; and the market-price of cotton at Nashville must have been very much depressed.

In the testimony filed in support of this claim it does not appear what was the market-price at Nashville at that time, or that there was any market-price; but there is evidence in the case of the claim of Hawks, Miller & Co., for cotton seized at the same time, and under the same military order, for like purpose of defense, of a sale of cotton (sixty-eight bales) at twenty-three cents per pound.

There is no proof when in fact the loss of the twenty-seven bales occurred, or how it occurred, and it seems probable that it occurred after seizure, and before being placed in the breastworks, or in being removed from the breastworks after the necessity for such defense had ceased; and the true principle would seem to be to assess the value at the time of the seizure, viz, twenty-three cents per pound, instead of the valuation set by the military board in December thereafter, and to make some deduction from the amount of damages assessed for injury to the cotton returned, by reason of its long exposure to the weather. The board appointed to assess the value of cotton lost and damaged by reason of exposure adjudged the value of cotton fifty-five cents per pound, and fixed upon various rates of damage on that returned.

The committee recommend the—

Allowance of $3,246.22 for 27 bales cotton, equal to 14,114
lbs. lost	$3, 246 22
For loss on weight on 160 bales, 15 lbs. per bale—2,400 lbs., at 23c.....	552 00
For loss on 6 bales—1,267 lbs., at 23c.....	291 41
For loss on 27 bales, (on which damages not assessed,) 216
lbs., at 23c.....	29 68
For damages to cotton by reason of exposure.....	1, 983 91
Total.....	6, 103 22

The committee recommend the passage of a bill appropriating to John J. Anderson, surviving partner of the firm of Anderson & White, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $6,103.22, and herewith report a bill in accordance with such recommendation.

BUTLER, MILLER & CO. AND HAWK, MILLER & CO.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. BARBER, from the Committee on War-Claims, submitted the following

REPORT:

The Committee on War-Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Butler, Miller & Co. and Hawk, Miller & Co. for compensation for cotton taken by military authority, by order of General Rousseau, of August 30, 1862, for fortifying and breastworks at Nashville, Tenn., having considered the same, report :

That this same claim was presented in the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims, and a report made thereon.

The Committee on War-Claims concur in the finding and conclusions of said committee, and that the amount to which said claimants are entitled is the sum of $7,224.88, and recommend appropriation of that amount in full compensation of all claims and demands on account of said cotton so taken.

The following is a summary of the work done by the Commission during the year 1881.

The Commission has been very busy during the year, and has done much work in connection with the land office.

The Commission has been very busy during the year, and has done much work in connection with the land office.

The Commission has been very busy during the year, and has done much work in connection with the land office.

The Commission has been very busy during the year, and has done much work in connection with the land office.

The Commission has been very busy during the year, and has done much work in connection with the land office.

The Commission has been very busy during the year, and has done much work in connection with the land office.

The Commission has been very busy during the year, and has done much work in connection with the land office.

The Commission has been very busy during the year, and has done much work in connection with the land office.

The Commission has been very busy during the year, and has done much work in connection with the land office.

The Commission has been very busy during the year, and has done much work in connection with the land office.

The Commission has been very busy during the year, and has done much work in connection with the land office.

The Commission has been very busy during the year, and has done much work in connection with the land office.

The Commission has been very busy during the year, and has done much work in connection with the land office.

The Commission has been very busy during the year, and has done much work in connection with the land office.

The Commission has been very busy during the year, and has done much work in connection with the land office.

The Commission has been very busy during the year, and has done much work in connection with the land office.

JAMES LINDSAY.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. BARBER, from the Committee on War-Claims, submitted the following

REPORT:

[To accompany bill H. R. 4871.]

The Committee on War-Claims, to whom was referred the petition of James Lindsay, having had the same under consideration, report :

That during the late war the claimant, while acting as colonel of a regiment of Missouri militia, ordered and had manufactured at his own expense a battery of three light mountain-howitzers, which were used by his regiment in a number of engagements with the enemy. It appears from the evidence submitted to your committee that these guns and carriages were adapted to that locality, it being mountainous and swampy, as they could be moved with great facility and speed. It appears, also, that they were used with great effect in the battle of Bloomsville, on the 27th of January, 1863, and in other engagements with General Marmaduke's command in the following April. Subsequently Colonel Lindsay, with his regiment, was ordered by General Vanderver to make a night charge upon Shelby's brigade at Jackson, Mo., which was done with great destruction to the enemy. Realizing the necessity of having such a battery as this for use in that region of country, Brig. Gen. Clinton B. Fisk, commanding the district of Southeast Missouri, with headquarters at Pilot Knob, issued an order to the commanding officer of the post at that place, to receive from Col. James Lindsay, of Iron-ton, Mo., three mountain-howitzers, caissons, harness, &c., complete, and to receipt for the same upon complete invoices being furnished. The required invoices were made, and the guns, caissons, and harness, with two boxes ammunition, were delivered to G. W. Hanna, captain Company K, Third Regiment Missouri State Militia, the commanding officer at Pilot Knob, who receipted for the same, the articles being invoiced at $1,000. It appears by the invoice of the manufacturer, Giles F. Filley, of Saint Louis, Mo., duly sworn to, that the claimant, Lindsay, paid him $874.35, the cost price of said guns, caissons, harness, &c., at the manufactory. It further appears that the claimant delivered two boxes of ammunition, a quantity of lead, &c., not included in the invoice of the manufacturer, which had been subsequently purchased by the claimant for use.

A bill for the relief of Lindsay passed the House in the Thirty-eighth Congress, but no further action has been had save three favorable reports from different committees.

Your committee is of the opinion that the claimant is entitled to payment for this property taken for the use of the Government, and report the accompanying bill appropriating the sum of $874.35, and recommend its passage.

REPORT

The Committee on the subject of the Church of England in the Nineteenth Century, have the honor to report to the House of Commons, in pursuance of a resolution passed on the 12th of May 1834, that the following is a summary of the evidence received by the Committee, and of the conclusions to which they have arrived.

The evidence received by the Committee is contained in the following pages, and is divided into three parts:—

1. The State of the Church of England in the Nineteenth Century.

2. The Causes of the Decline of the Church of England in the Nineteenth Century.

3. The Remedies proposed for the Decline of the Church of England in the Nineteenth Century.

The Committee have the honor to recommend to the House of Commons, that the following be adopted as the basis of a Bill to amend the laws relating to the Church of England in the Nineteenth Century.

Resolved, That the Committee be and they are authorized to report to the House of Commons, in pursuance of a resolution passed on the 12th of May 1834, that the following is a summary of the evidence received by the Committee, and of the conclusions to which they have arrived.

TURNER MERRITT.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. BARBER, from the Committee on War-Claims, submitted the following

REPORT:

The Committee on War-Claims, to whom was referred the claim of Turner Merritt, of the parish of East Baton Rouge, in the State of Louisiana, for compensation for certain personal property taken by the Union Army in the year 1863, report :

That the petitioner states in his petition that in the fall of 1862 he was the owner of one hundred and thirteen bales of cotton, averaging four hundred pounds per bale; that, apprehending the capture or destruction of the same by the confederate forces, he caused the same to be hauled away from his plantation, about nine miles, on to land owned by one John East, and had said cotton concealed in a cane-brake; that in June, 1863, the said cotton was removed by order of General Banks to the rear of Port Hudson, and used in making breastworks, except ten bales that, by reason of the roping being broken, could not be removed; that the petitioner never presented his claim to the Court of Claims because he could never ascertain that said cotton was sold and the proceeds paid into the Treasury of the United States, which he supposed necessary to give jurisdiction to the court. But petitioner states that House Ex. Doc. No. 97, Thirty-ninth Congress, second session, with the message of the President, 19th February, 1867, shows that 1,323 bales from the breastworks around Port Hudson were sold and the proceeds applied to the support of schools for poor colored people in Louisiana and for the benefit of the colored troops.

But there is no evidence that the cotton of the claimant was so sold, or that said 1,323 bales was all the cotton used by the Union Army for breastworks in the rear of Port Hudson, or what became of the claimant's cotton after being used in breastworks.

Major David S. Bunker, Third Massachusetts Cavalry, certifies that this cotton and certain other property enumerated in the account of the claimant was taken possession of and used by United States troops at or about the time stated in the claim. But Major Bunker does not state how he happened to have knowledge of such facts, or that he was present at the taking of all or any of such property by United States troops.

Indeed, the certificate of S. C. Hartwell, late surgeon Thirty-eighth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteers, filed by the claimant, states that he was present and heard claimant make "complaints to Brigadier-General Emory, commanding third division Nineteenth Army Corps, that he had suffered great loss by the depredations of the soldiers of his command at the time of the advance of the Army to Port Hudson in March, 1863."

It would seem from such language that the taking the property other than the cotton was the unauthorized plundering and foraging by the soldiers, and for which the Government is not in any manner liable.

The property other than cotton taken from claimant, for which he demands payment, is the following :

7 head milch cows, at $30 per head	$210 00
7 yearlings, at $10 per head	70 00
14 hogs, at $20 per head	280 00
15 sheep, at $5 per head	75 00
1 farm-horse	100 00
1 buggy-horse	125 00
3,500 rails burned for watch-fires, at $15 per thousand	52 50
1 horse-cart	40 00

This list of property taken by United States Army, March 13, 1863, General Emory's division.

By the United States Army, May 12, 1863, under command of General Dudley :

4 milch cows and 4 calves, at $30	$120 00
4 head hogs, at $20	80 00
3 sheep, at $5	15 00
1 horse	125 00
2 plantation-mules, at $150	300 00

By United States Army, November, 1864, under command of General Davidson :

1 plantation-mule	$150 00
-------------------------	----------

There is no evidence that any of the property last specified, in value, as stated by the claimant, $1,772.50, was taken by military order, or was other than unauthorized pillage by the soldiers.

There was no contract to pay for any of said property, either the cotton or the other enumerated articles of property.

This property was all in a State engaged in war against the nation, and within the immediate neighborhood of the contending armies at Port Hudson, and was "necessary and convenient as supplies, and for other military purposes for the Union Army."

There is no receipt given by any officer for the property taken, or any other evidence of any understanding or agreement to pay for the same.

The cotton may have been used for breastworks; but there is no reliable evidence showing that fact.

There is no statement what marks, if any, were upon the bales, by which the same could be distinguished from other cotton. The claimant's cotton had been hidden in a cane-brake for some eight months, about nine miles from claimant's farm. How much may have in that time been purloined, if any, does not appear.

The claimant states he thus hid away one hundred and thirteen bales. John East, on whose land the same was concealed, states that the claimant concealed one hundred and thirty bales on his land, and W. Slaughter states the number to be one hundred and thirty bales.

The claimant says that he never could learn that the proceeds of this cotton was paid into the United States Treasury, and could only learn from executive documents that some cotton from the breastworks around Port Hudson was sold, and the proceeds used to support colored schools in Louisiana and for the use of colored troops. Yet he has John

East to swear that he learned that the proceeds of claimant's cotton were paid into the United States Treasury, and W. S. Slaughter to swear that he knows the proceeds of said cotton were paid into the United States Treasury.

But John East and W. S. Slaughter state no facts from which it can be believed that they had learned or knew that said cotton was sold and the proceeds paid into the Treasury of the United States.

Their affidavits illustrate the facility of obtaining affidavits in support of claims made against the Government.

Believing that no legal claim has been proven against the Government, and not having found any facts justifying other action, the committee disallow the said claim of the petitioner.

O

REPORT

PRISCILLA AND ARMSTEAD BURWELL.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. BARBER, from the Committee on War-Claims, submitted the following

REPORT:

The Committee on War-Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Priscilla Burwell and Armstead Burwell for rent for the use and occupation of certain buildings on square 40, in the city of Vicksburgh, Miss., called the Mandove House, from July 4, 1863, to January 6, 1866, report:

That it appears in evidence that Priscilla Burwell purchased the property, called the "Mandove House," situated on square forty, in the city of Vicksburgh, in the State of Mississippi, in the year 1861, and paid therefor the sum of $6,000 gold; that she and her husband, Armstead Burwell, were loyal to the Union Government; and that deeming themselves unsafe on account of such loyalty if they remained within the so-called southern confederacy, they left their home in Vicksburgh shortly after the passage of the ordinance of secession by the State of Mississippi, and fled to the city of Saint Louis, Mo., leaving their property undisposed of.

It further appears that on the 4th day of July, 1863, the next day after the surrender of the city of Vicksburgh to the Union Army, the said "Mandove House" was taken possession of by military authority and occupied and used as officers' quarters until the 6th day of January, 1866, two years six months and two days.

There was no contract to pay rent, nor any contract by any proper military authority concerning such occupancy.

The petitioners claim payment of rent for two years at $2,500 per year, and for six months and two days at the rate of $1,800 per year.

They admit the property was reasonably well preserved while so occupied and very little damaged.

In the opinion of the committee, the facts establish no legal claim against the Government, and only appeal to the magnanimity and compassion of the nation toward a loyal citizen who has suffered losses of property by reason of war. But loss of mere property bears no comparison with loss of health, loss of life, and the countless miseries endured by the soldiers to maintain the integrity of the nation.

This property was in a State engaged in war against the Union Government. If the rebellion had been successful there is little doubt the petitioners would have wholly lost the property by confiscation under the laws of the southern confederacy.

When the nation was finally provoked to make real war against the so-called confederacy an order was issued to the military commanders, July 22, 1862, "to seize and use any property, real or personal, which (might) be necessary or convenient for their several commands as supplies, or for other military purposes," in certain States in flagrant war against the nation, in which number was the State of Mississippi.

The petitioners admit this property was "necessary" and "convenient" for the purposes for which it was used, but claim rent from the time it was wrested from the enemy.

The committee recommend that said claim be not allowed.

ROSANNA HOGAN.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. BARBER, from the Committee on War-Claims, submitted the following

R E P O R T :

The Committee on War-Claims, to whom was referred the claim of Rosanna Hogan, for payment for a horse alleged to have been taken from her by a captain of Company C, Seventeenth Regiment of Indiana Cavalry, on the 8th June, 1865, in the county of Bibb, in the State of Georgia, report:

The claimant deposes that a captain of Company C, Seventeenth Regiment of Indiana Cavalry, in the county of Bibb, in the State of Georgia, on the 8th day of June, A. D. 1865, took from her a gray horse, about eight years old; that the same was her property, and of the value of $200 in United States currency called greenbacks; that the said captain, whose name is to her unknown, stated to her he was "instructed by the Government to press said horse into service," and she saw the same horse in service; that she demanded pay for the horse, which was refused, and that she has not been paid for the horse.

The claim seems to have been presented to L. L. Livingstone, captain of Third Artillery, at Savannah, Georgia, February 25, 1870, and by him referred to General De Russy, commanding said Third Artillery, who makes the following indorsement upon said claim:

FORTRESS MONROE, VA., May 19, 1871.

Respectfully forwarded for reference to the Court of Claims. From what I have learned I think there can be no doubt but that Mrs. Hogan did lose a horse through the intervention of an officer of our Army, which occupied Savannah when General Sherman first took the city.

G. A. DE RUSSY,
Major Third Artillery.

The capture of Savannah by the army of General Sherman was December 24, 1864, more than six months prior to the alleged taking of claimant's horse. The claimant states the impressment or taking of the horse to have been on the 8th June, 1865, while General De Russy states the horse to have been taken from her, he supposed, when General Sherman first took the city of Savannah.

The claimant files with her proofs the deposition of her son, John Hogan, who swears that on a Sunday morning, during the late war, he was riding a dark bay horse, in the city of Macon, Ga., belonging to his mother, and that said horse was forcibly taken from him by a captain of the Federal soldiers then in that city, and that the horse is the one for which his mother claims pay.

The claimant alleges her loyalty and the witness also deposes thereto.

It will be noticed the claimant alleges the impressment or taking her horse to be the 8th June, 1865, a period so late that such things had long ceased to be done.

She alleges the horse taken to be a gray horse, while her son swears the horse taken was a dark bay horse.

The army of General Sherman, in its march through Georgia, subsisted upon the country and foraged extensively over a space of forty miles wide.

The army appropriated such horses and mules found there as deemed useful to facilitate the operations of the army, and so appropriated nearly ten thousand horses and mules.

The taking the claimant's horse was not an exceptional case, or differing from the ordinary mode of supplying the wants of the army in that glorious "march to the sea."

It is not unreasonable to suppose some of the horses and mules, as well as other supplies taken for the use of the army, belonged to persons friendly to the Union Government. But it was in accordance with the usages of war, and strictly according to an order of the War Department, dated July 22, 1862, "to seize and use any property, real or personal, which may be necessary or convenient" for the Army in certain designated States, including the State of Georgia.

The committee therefore report adversely to the allowance of said claim.

JAMES F. BLOUNT.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. BARBER, from the Committee on War-Claims, submitted the following

REPORT :

The Committee on War-Claims, to whom was referred the petition of James F. Blount, of Beattyville, Ky., for services in raising a company of home-guard militia and expenses incurred about said service, having had the same under consideration, report :

It appears that August 19, 1864, the following order was issued :

HEADQUARTERS KENTUCKY STATE-GUARD,
INSPECTOR-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Frankfort, Ky., August 19, 1864.

SIR : Captain Eversole has authority to raise a State-guard company. A captain cannot be elected until the company is full. A company consists of not less than eighty-three nor more than one hundred and one men in the aggregate.

Very respectfully,

D. W. LINDSEY,
Inspector and Adjutant-General Kentucky.

JAMES F. BLOUNT, Esq.,
Proctor, Owsley County, Kentucky.

The petitioner states that under said order and an act of the legislature of Kentucky, approved January 26, 1864, entitled "An act to authorize the governor to raise a force for the defense of the State of Kentucky," he was appointed "mustering-officer," with the rank of captain, for the troops raised under said act, and known as the "Three Forks' Battalion" of the Kentucky State-Guard, which battalion was organized and accepted into the military service of the State on the 27th day of August, 1864, for six months, but were not discharged until about the 17th day of August, 1865; that he actually performed the duties of mustering-officer for said command during the period of its service.

He further says he was loyal to the Union Government; that on account of his known loyalty he suffered losses by acts of the rebels to the amount of several hundred dollars. He states that said home-guard did good and efficient service to the State and to the Government, frequently serving as an outpost or picket for the Army of the United States; that said home-guard was paid off by the State at the time of their discharge.

The petitioner claims that he is justly entitled to the pay of a captain in the United States Army for eleven months and twenty days, and asks an appropriation in his behalf of the sum of $1,405.85.

This military force was never mustered into the service of the National Government or under the control of its officers. It was strictly a military force of the State, under the command of its officers, and paid by the State.

The committee know of no law authorizing the payment of said claim, or any part thereof. This company was organized under a State law, for home protection, and armed by the State and paid by the State, and if any service was rendered by it to the National Government, the State of Kentucky alone could claim compensation.

The committee therefore recommend said claim be wholly disallowed.

○

THOMAS WEEKS.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. BARBER, from the Committee on War-Claims, submitted the following

REPORT:

[To accompany bill H. R. 1869.]

The Committee on War-Claims, to whom was referred the claim of Thomas Weeks for payment for services rendered in the year 1845-'46, in California, in the beginning of the Mexican war, having had the same under consideration, report:

The petitioner, Thomas Weeks, of Sheboygan County, Wisconsin, states that he was one of the crew of the whale-ship Stonington, and shipped on board when said ship was lying off the island Kodiak, Alaska, in 1845, when said vessel was on her return-voyage from the northwest. That said vessel proceeded southward along the coast and stopped at San Diego, California, where she was the only vessel in port. That while there temporarily, information was received that a strong force of Mexicans were marching on the town. That many of the inhabitants of the place fled for refuge and were received on ship-board. That a few days after said Mexican force had taken possession of the town, a detachment from the vessel, under command of petitioner, landing in the night-time, recaptured the town, the Mexican military retreating to Los Angeles. That on the arrival of Lieutenant Gillespie, a United States marine sent down by Commodore Stockton from Santa Barbara, an expedition consisting of forty men, under his command, went to the relief of Captain Kearney's command at Los Angeles, who were in great danger of defeat and capture. That petitioner accompanied said expedition. That subsequently, on the arrival of Commodore Stockton at San Diego, the said ship's crew were allowed to proceed on their homeward voyage in said whaling-vessel.

The petitioner claims payment for about fifteen months' service, six months of which time he was detained in military service in California, and nine months on the homeward voyage with said whale-ship. And he demands $75 per month for the whole time, and pay for rations and clothing and bounty, as allowed to the soldiers and officers who enlisted in the United States in the Mexican war, and he alleges that Commodore Stockton promised he should be so paid.

There is no proof adduced in support of the allegations of the petitioner, and it seems none is to be found in any of the departments of the Government in anywise justifying the said claim. Nearly thirty years have elapsed since the services are alleged to have been rendered.

To allow such claim at this time, when all opportunity of defense by counter-proof is unavailable by death or forgetfulness of witnesses, or loss of written evidence, would be extremely dangerous and an invitation to present stale claims against the Government.

The committee therefore recommend that the H. R. bill 1869, referred with said claim, be laid upon the table.

REPORT
OF THE
COMMISSIONER OF THE LAND OFFICE
FOR THE YEAR
1887

Presented to the Senate and House of Representatives at their first session, 1887-88
by
J. M. Smith, Commissioner

WASHINGTON:
GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE:
1888

The following report of the Commissioner of the Land Office for the year 1887, is submitted to the Senate and House of Representatives at their first session, 1887-88. It contains a full and complete statement of the business of the office during the year, and of the progress of the various projects of legislation and administration which have been carried on. It also contains a full and complete statement of the condition of the public lands, and of the progress of the various projects of reclamation and irrigation which have been carried on. The report is divided into two parts, the first of which contains a full and complete statement of the business of the office during the year, and the second of which contains a full and complete statement of the condition of the public lands, and of the progress of the various projects of reclamation and irrigation which have been carried on.

The first part of the report contains a full and complete statement of the business of the office during the year. It contains a full and complete statement of the various projects of legislation and administration which have been carried on, and of the progress of each of these projects. It also contains a full and complete statement of the various projects of reclamation and irrigation which have been carried on, and of the progress of each of these projects. The second part of the report contains a full and complete statement of the condition of the public lands, and of the progress of the various projects of reclamation and irrigation which have been carried on. It contains a full and complete statement of the various projects of reclamation and irrigation which have been carried on, and of the progress of each of these projects. It also contains a full and complete statement of the various projects of reclamation and irrigation which have been carried on, and of the progress of each of these projects.

LUCINDA McGUIRE.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. BARBER, from the Committee on War-Claims, submitted the following

REPORT:

[To accompany bill H. R. 3066.]

The Committee on War-Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Lucinda McGuire, for compensation for the use and occupation of certain buildings in the city of Memphis, Tenn., in the so-called "Webster block," from March 24, 1863, to May 31, 1865, and for damages to the same, and claiming $21,038.22, report :

That it appears the claimant was the owner of two buildings in the so-called "Webster Block," in the city of Memphis, Tenn.; the said buildings being four-story high.

That, on the 24th of March, 1863, the Government, by military authority, took possession of said "Webster block" for hospital purposes for the use of the Army, and occupied said buildings until the 31st day of May, 1865—two years, six months, and six days.

That the said Lucinda McGuire was a minor under the age of twenty-one years; that John Lonsdale was her guardian. But it is not stated or shown what was her age during such occupancy of said buildings as a hospital.

From the testimony it appears she was married to William E. McGuire, on the 15th of October, 1867, whence it may be reasonably inferred she was of such age during the war as to be accountable for any disloyalty to the Government.

Her loyalty to the Government during the war is neither proved nor alleged, but the loyalty of the said guardian is affirmed. If she were of such age during the continuance of the war as to be responsible, and was disloyal to the Government, the loyalty of such guardian would not relieve her from such responsibility.

There is no evidence of any contract or lease of said premises to the Government, oral or otherwise.

This claim was once examined by the Third Auditor of the Treasury Department, and upon the question whether there was or was not a contract by or on behalf of the Government to pay rent for the use of said premises, the Third Auditor says :

In my opinion the evidence does not support the allegation of fact; on the contrary, it clearly shows, I think, that the property was taken possession of and used without any contract.

The petitioner states in her petition that there was paid by Deputy Quartermaster-General Clary the sum of $1,526.78 on account of rent of said buildings, on or about the time of the surrender of the possession of said buildings by the military authority; he being only then in funds for that purpose.

The claimant produces the original notice by Deputy Quartermaster-General R. E. Clary, here copied:

DEPUTY QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Memphis, Tenn., June 1, 1865.

J. G. LONSDALE, Memphis, Tenn.:

SIR: The two buildings in the Webster block, heretofore rented from you for military purposes, being no longer required, the rent for which will cease on the 31st May, 1865.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. E. CLARY,
Deputy Quartermaster-General.

The evidence does not show any authority for said Deputy Quartermaster-General by implication to acknowledge the existence of a lease or contract to bind the Government to pay rent for use of said buildings.

That although there may have been some understanding to pay rent for some portion of time near the close of the occupation by the military, the character of the payment reasonably shows it was in full for such rent, else why should the Deputy Quartermaster-General have paid just $1,526.78? Why pay the odd dollars and 78 cents, instead of a round sum of dollars?

So far from this payment being proof in support of the claim, it seems strong evidence in was in full payment of all rent due.

The committee conclude, after consideration of this claim, that there is no sufficient evidence to warrant them in recommending payment of the whole or any part thereof, and recommend that the bill be laid upon the table.

○

ELIZABETH GILLOCK.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. BARBER, from the Committee on War-Claims, submitted the following

REPORT:

The Committee on War-Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Elizabeth Gillock, for compensation for use and occupation of certain houses at Franklin, in El Paso County, in Texas, from about the 1st of September, 1862, until about the 1st of September, 1866, having had the same under consideration and examined the testimony in support thereof, report:

That it appears that this claim has been presented to the proper Department and wholly disallowed.

The petitioner does not state, nor does any witness on her behalf state, that she was loyal to the Union Government during the war of the rebellion.

On the contrary, it seems reasonable to infer that she sympathized with the rebel cause, from the fact that she has embodied in her petition an oath of loyalty as to the future without any statement of loyalty as to the past. She resided in a State declared in rebellion against the Government, and if she had really sympathized with the Union Government she would have so stated.

The property was unoccupied at the time the military took possession. The claimant was absent and did not return until about September, 1866, and about the time the possession of the building was surrendered. One witness of claimant states that while the Union forces were in possession he heard the matter of the confiscation of the property talked of, which would scarcely have happened if she had been loyal to the Union.

There is no sufficient or satisfactory evidence of any contract by any authorized agent of the Government to pay rent for occupation of the premises. The petitioner states that she was absent from the country during all the troubles growing out of the war; that she never had any receipt or voucher concerning the occupation by Union troops.

The petitioner claims for rent of buildings as follows:

For four years' rent, from September 1, 1862, to September 1, 1866, of hotel-building, at $150 per month.....	$7, 200
Damages to same.....	5, 000
Use of dwelling-house property.....	2, 400
Damages to same.....	1, 000
Total.....	15, 600

A state of war continued in Texas until the President's proclamation of August 20, 1866, proclaimed the "insurrection at an end."

The exact length of time the premises were occupied by Union troops does not appear. The petitioner states the time to be four years.

William M. Ford, in his deposition, states the time at "about four years."

Eugene Van Patten deposes that it was in July or August, 1862, the Union troops came to El Paso. There is no certain evidence that the officers and soldiers occupied at a later date than the date of the proclamation of the President of August 20, 1866, declaring the "insurrection at an end."

In regard to the liability of the Government, there is no evidence of authority given to rent the said property, or of any lease of the premises; no lease or voucher of any contract is produced, nor the deposition of any officer in command of forces quartered in said premises produced, to show a contract of renting; and if there had been in fact any such contract, the claimant would have produced such evidence.

The order of the War Department of July 22, 1862—

Ordered that the military commanders within the States of Virginia, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, and Arkansas, in an orderly manner seize and use any property, real or personal, which may be necessary or convenient for their several commands as supplies, or for other military purposes.

The committee believe the Government had the right to take such military possession in its operations to suppress the rebellion, and to occupy the same for military purposes, without any liability to pay to the owner rents therefor.

That for the damages resulting from such use and occupation the committee fail to find any testimony to justify them in recommending payment by the Government.

They believe equally valid reasons could be urged to make compensation to the owners whose property was destroyed by our armies in their march to the sea and through the Carolinas.

The committee therefore report adversely, and recommend that said bill do lie upon the table.

J. E. ROBERTSON & CO.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. BURCHARD, from the Committee on Ways and Means, submitted the following

REPORT:

[To accompany bill H. R. 4872.]

The Committee on Ways and Means, to whom was referred the petition of J. E. Robertson & Co., dealers in tobacco at Indianapolis, Ind., praying for a refund of certain taxes assessed and collected upon certain tobacco belonging to them, upon which a previous tax had been paid, submit the following report :

That the petitioners, Messrs. J. E. Robertson & Co., were, on the 23d day of April, 1869, dealers in tobacco in the city of Indianapolis, in the sixth collection-district of Indiana, and on the day aforesaid, owned and had in their possession seventy-two caddies of plug-tobacco, which they had previously purchased in open market of Messrs. A. Jones & Co., tobacco-dealers in good standing, at Indianapolis aforesaid, as tax-paid tobacco, the same bearing the brand of the collector of internal revenue; that the tax thereon had been paid as required by law; that, on the day aforesaid, the said tobacco was seized by the collector of internal revenue for the sixth district of Indiana, upon the charge that the taxes thereon had not been paid, and that the brands upon the caddies containing the same were fraudulent and forged, and that thereupon the United States district attorney for the district of Indiana libeled the said tobacco, and proceedings thereon were continued from time to time until the month of July, 1870, when the libel was dismissed and all proceedings thereon discontinued, the said tobacco returned to the petitioners, and the suit voluntarily abandoned by the Government, because of failure to obtain evidence sufficient to sustain the same; that, by the act of Congress entitled "An act imposing taxes on distilled spirits and tobacco, and for other purposes," approved July 20, 1868, a change was made in the classification, rate of tax, and manner of packing and stamping manufactured tobacco, and it was provided that—

After the first day of January, 1869, all smoking, fine-cut, chewing-tobacco, or snuff, and, after the first day of July, 1869, all other manufactured tobacco of every description, shall be taken and deemed as having been manufactured after the passage of this act, and shall not be sold or offered for sale unless put up in packages and stamped as prescribed by this act, except at retail by retail dealers from wooden packages, stamped as provided for in this act; and any person who shall sell or offer for sale, after the first day of January, 1869, any smoking, fine-cut, chewing-tobacco, or snuff, and after the first day of July, 1869, any other manufactured tobacco, not so put up in packages and stamped, shall, on conviction, be fined not less than five hundred dollars nor more than five thousand dollars, and be imprisoned not less than six months nor more than two years.

It will be observed that the tobacco in question was seized on the 23d day of April, 1869, and that the period during which it could be sold, without the payment of an additional tax, expired on the first day of July, 1869, up to which date, and long after, it was held by and remained in the possession of the Government.

When the tobacco was restored to the possession of its owners, the petitioners, it was impossible to sell it, as it was unlawful for them to offer it for sale without a repayment of the taxes thereon, and they accordingly, on the 13th day of July, 1870, purchased the stamps required by law and affixed them to the caddies containing this tobacco.

The above facts are fully sustained by the affidavits accompanying the petition.

As to the payment of the first tax, the affidavit of Aquilla Jones, a member of the firm of A. Jones & Co., from whom the petitioners purchased the tobacco, shows that his firm purchased it in open market, in good faith, as tax-paid tobacco, and that it bore the brand of the collector of internal revenue upon it, indicating that it was so paid.

Thomas M. Brown, who was the United States district attorney for the district of Indiana in 1869 and 1870, and who prosecuted the libel-suit in this matter, testifies that, for lack of evidence he had the proceedings continued from time to time, from April, 1869, until July, 1870, a year and three months, in order to obtain such facts as would result in the confiscation of the tobacco, but wholly failed to secure evidence to support the charges made, and for that reason abandoned the prosecution; that he has no reason to believe that the tobacco had not paid tax, and that he does believe that the tax had been paid and that the brands on the caddies containing the tobacco were genuine.

As to the payment of the second tax, the affidavit of L. M. Phipps, one of the present deputy collectors of the sixth district of Indiana, and who was, in 1869 and 1870, an assistant assessor of the same district, shows that at the time this tobacco was released by the Government into the possession of the petitioners, he informed them that it was unlawful for them to expose the same for sale without purchasing and affixing thereto such stamps as the law required; that thereupon, on the 13th day of July, 1870, they purchased the necessary stamps, amounting to $432.96, and on the day aforesaid affixed them in his presence to the caddies containing this tobacco, in full accordance with the requirements of the law; that the caddies so stamped were the identical packages seized and libeled in April, 1869, by the Government, and released in July, 1870, and still bore the collector's brand, indicating that the tax thereon had been previously paid.

Frederick Baggs, the present collector of the sixth district of Indiana, certifies that the records of his office show the purchase of tobacco-stamps on the 13th day of July, 1870, by J. E. Robertson & Co., to the amount of $432.96.

As the petitioners were prevented from disposing of their tobacco, within the period limited by law, by the acts of the officers of the Government without any fault on the part of the petitioners, your committee are of the opinion that the amount of the second tax on the tobacco in question, which they were required to pay, should be refunded to them, and in accordance therewith recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

○

JONATHAN L. JONES.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. CLEMENTS, from the Committee on Patents, submitted the following

REPORT:

[To accompany bill H. R. 4873.]

The Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the petition of Jonathan L. Jones, have considered the same, and report as follows :

This is an application by Jonathan L. Jones for pay by the Government for the use of his patent for "Improved defensive armor for water and land batteries."

It appears from the evidence that the petitioner, Jonathan L. Jones, is a civil engineer, and prior and up to the beginning of the war of the rebellion was engaged in the Western and Southern States in constructing wooden and iron bridges for railroad and other purposes; that in October, 1861, while engaged in erecting iron bridges on the line of the Saint Louis and Iron Mountain Railroad, in Missouri, he was sent for by the military authorities at Saint Louis to take charge of and construct the iron casemates upon thirty-eight mortar-boats then in course of construction at Saint Louis. This was accomplished in a manner eminently satisfactory to the military authorities, and Mr. Jones was on the 19th day of December, 1861, ordered by the late Admiral A. H. Foote to report to the late Commodore W. D. Porter, on board the gun-boat Essex, at Cairo, Illinois, to iron-plate that vessel. This order was obeyed, Mr. Jones reporting for duty December 21, 1861, and plating said vessel according to the directions of the authorities. Jones had been for some years investigating and experimenting upon the effect of sudden blows upon iron and the best methods of preventing or at least mitigating the damages occasioned thereby. While engaged in casemating these mortars and gun-boats, he saw the benefits that must accrue could some means be invented to prevent or even lessen the effect of solid shot striking the iron plating of the vessels. At length he matured his plan, applied for and, on the 15th day of April, 1862, obtained a patent for what he terms his "defensive armor for water and land batteries."

Prior to this time the method of protecting vessels was a casing of heavy timber on which the iron plating was placed, being fastened by iron bolts running through the iron plates and timber. Jones's invention consisted in placing a thick plate of India rubber between the wood and iron as a cushion for the iron to rest upon; also in an elastic washer on the ends of the iron bolts to prevent the nuts flying off in the faces of the men when the plating was struck by solid shot of the enemy.

The gun-boat Essex having been disabled by a shot from the enemy's guns at Fort Henry, February 6, 1862, she was sent to Saint Louis, Mo., for repairs. Here it was decided to place upon her Jones's patent armor. In the haste and excitement and enthusiasm of the occasion, being just after the battles of Forts Henry and Donelson, Jones immediately went to work. Proud, as all inventors are, of an opportunity to make a success of his discovery, and relying with implicit confidence on the promises of the naval authorities and the good faith of the Government, he placed his armor on the vessel without any contract as to amount to be paid, but simply on the assurance of the authorities that he should be amply remunerated. Further than this, he advanced considerable sums to the workmen employed on the work, when the Government failed to be ready to pay, for which he never received any return.

During the summer and fall of 1862, the gun-boats Lafayette and Choctaw were also plated with this armor. For the use of this armor Mr. Jones has received nothing from the Government.

The question arises, Why has this matter been so long delayed?

The evidence shows that it was presented to the House by Mr. Rollins, of Missouri, in February, 1863, but no steps were taken in regard to the matter. Afterward, in December, 1863, it was presented in the Senate by Mr. Scott, of the same State. However, the matter seems not to have been pressed, and no action was taken, all the energies of the Government being bent to a successful prosecution of the war rather than to settling private claims growing out of the war. Again, in 1869, Jones began preparing his evidence in order to present to Congress his claims to compensation. While so engaged he was attacked with inflammatory rheumatism and wholly disabled. He remained afflicted with this disease, suffering at times intensely, until near the beginning of the present Congress, when, after being down in health and almost bankrupt in purse, he regained sufficient strength to again begin his work. This, in the judgment of the committee, sufficiently accounts for the delay.

There remain one or two other questions. First, should Jones be paid anything for the use of his patent? and if this be answered in the affirmative, how much should he receive?

No fair-minded man should claim that the Government has any right to use the property of an individual without compensating him therefor. The doctrine that the Government has the right to the property of the individual citizen, be that property of whatever kind, or to his time, or his services, without compensation, has its origin in that theory of government which holds that the people belong to and are the slaves of the government; that they are created for its glory and aggrandizement, and is wholly at variance with our theory that the government is "of the people, by the people, and for the people." Justice to all the people demands the recognition in each case of the principle of "just compensation" for property, time, or services. Jones should certainly be paid something.

How much should he receive? Fortunately your committee are not left without official evidence of the value of this invention. The proofs show that vessels plated with this armor possessed a degree of power to resist the destructive force of the shot and shell of the enemy much greater than others not similarly plated. The Essex ran the batteries at Vicksburgh, receiving their concentrated fire. The forward parts of the vessel, which were covered with this plating, although often struck, were never penetrated, while the after parts, being simply iron-plated, (without rubber,) were penetrated. Subsequently she attacked and destroyed the confederate ram Arkansas, a most powerfully-built vessel, well manned and equipped. During this engagement she was struck numberless times by solid shot and shell at short range, the shot ranging in size from grape to eight, nine, and ten inch solid shot. That portion of the vessel protected by this armor was not once penetrated. The Congress of the United States afterward voted a bounty of $25,000 to the crew of the Essex for destroying the Arkansas; but Jones, whose invention had made this work possible, has received nothing.

The reports of the successful actions of these vessels occupy prominent places in the reports of the Secretary of the Navy from 1862 to 1865. These reports show that these vessels were in numerous severe engagements, often at close range, yet not one commissioned officer, and but one enlisted man, was killed and three wounded on them. We may judge from this of the efficiency and value of this armor as a protection to human life. The naval reports for 1862-'63 show that up to that time these vessels had been struck 276 times, but in no instance were the portions covered by this coating penetrated.

These vessels also captured and assisted at the capture of prizes to the amount of millions of dollars. Such is the work this armor has accomplished.

C

THOMAS MITCHELL.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. CLEMENTS, from the Committee on Patents, submitted the following

REPORT:

[To accompany bill H. R. 2460.]

This is an application by Thomas Mitchell for leave to apply to the Commissioner of Patents for an extension of his letters-patent, granted to him June 28, 1859, and re-issued January 17, 1870, for an "improvement in a machine for making hair-brush handles."

There is but one point in this case. Under the law, as it stood at the time of granting these letters-patent, a patentee was entitled to an original term of fourteen years, with an extension of seven years, making twenty-one years in all. The application for the extended term must be made at least ninety days prior to the expiration of the original term. As the law now stands, all patents granted prior to March 2, 1861, have an original term of fourteen years and an extended term of seven years. All granted since March 2, 1861, have one term of seventeen years and no extension.

This petitioner was entitled under the law to an extension. He made the application on the 24th day of March, 1873, being ninety-four days before the expiration under the original term.

On the 14th day of June, 1873, fourteen days before the expiration of the original term, and eighty-six days after filing the application, the examiner reported in favor of granting the extension; but, on the 28th day of June, 1873, the day of the expiration of the original term, the Acting Commissioner rejected the application. In his opinion he uses the following language: "It has been discovered, at the last moment, that the applicant has twice re-issued the patent in question. * *

* * The decisions of the Office heretofore have been adverse to the extension of the original patent under such circumstances. It is now too late to amend the case, as the patent expires to-day. * * The prayer of the petitioner is, therefore, refused."

It may be well to state that a re-issue is not an extension, but is simply a surrender and cancellation of letters-patent, and the taking out of amended letters; and it is done when it is found that the original letters do not exactly correspond with the claims made in the plans and specifications. These amended letters only run for the remainder of the original term, and do not work one hour's extension. Mitchell had had a re-issue of his letters, but being unadvised of the rulings of the Office in regard to reissues, supposed he must make the application for an extension of the original letters, although he should, in accordance with this ruling, have made it for the re-issued letters.

Nevertheless, when the application had lain in the Office over three months, the examiner states that there is no objection to the extension, otherwise his petition could have been amended; but on the last day the discovery of this error in his application is made, and it was then too late to make the correction, as the Commissioner determined.

It may not be amiss to add that, if an extension should be granted by the Commissioner, the extended term would go entirely to the patentee himself, who is a poor mechanic, working by the month for wages. The evidence also shows that he received for his original term $2,000, all told, a large portion of which, or money equal to that amount, was expended in perfecting his invention.

Under the circumstances, the committee feel that it is but an act of simple justice that the inventor should have an opportunity to make his application in proper form, and to that end recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

INDIANS IN WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. COMINGO, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, submitted the following

REPORT:

[To accompany bill H. R. 4874.]

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the letter of the Secretary of the Interior, dated January 5, 1875, it being Executive Document No. 87, second session Forty-third Congress, relative to the consolidation of certain bands or tribes of Indians in Washington Territory, having had the same under consideration, submit the following report:

That during the years 1854, 1855, and 1856, treaties were made with various tribes and bands of Indians in the vicinity of Puget Sound and the Pacific coast, in Washington Territory, for the occupation of twelve reservations, designated as follows: Makah or Neah Bay, Quinaielt, Chehalis, S'Kokomish, Squaxin, Nisqually, Puyallup, Muckleshoot, Port Madison, Swinomish, Lummi, and Tulalip or Snohomish.

The treaties, by their terms, contemplated the temporary occupancy only of so large a number of reservations, and in each the consent of the Indians is given to their removal and consolidation upon a smaller number of reservations at any time, in the discretion of the President.

The number of Indians embraced in the treaties referred to has been too small to justify the expensive machinery of an agency for each reservation. Five agents are now employed by the Government, who are made responsible for the care of all the Indians in that section of the Territory, leaving seven reservations without resident white employés, and at distances too great from each other to render it practicable for the agent in charge to give to the occupants any attention except from occasional brief visits. The results, therefore, show no substantial progress in civilization on the part of these Indians, whose industry consists mainly in fishing and in the employment of lumbermen in the vicinity of Puget Sound. And to such an extent have they wandered away from the reservations, that while their aggregate population is given at about 7,500, not more than 2,250 are actually on reservations, and less than 1,500 reside on the reservations at which the five agencies are located.

The committee, therefore, believe that economy on the part of the Government, as well as the care and well-being of the Indians, require the consolidation of these people upon a smaller number of reservations, under circumstances such as will enable them to receive the personal supervision and instruction of the agents and their employés.

A commission during the past season visited the locality, and seem to have made a reasonably thorough examination of each reservation, for the purpose of ascertaining what locations for the proposed consolidation would be best calculated to afford remunerative labor and by their surroundings furnish conditions most favorable for progress in civilization. And for this purpose they have designated the S'Kokomish and Lummi reservations, on Puget Sound, and Neah Bay, on the Pacific coast. The two former are limited in area, containing but 5,000 and 12,000 acres, respectively. The enlargement of the S'Kokomish reservation to include all the desirable land in the valley of the S'Kokomish River will not require the addition of more than one and a half townships of land, including a small settlement, the improvements of which will be of great value to the Indians, if in their possession, but which, from its proximity to the agency, is now a source of demoralization. The estimated cost of purchasing the private property included in the proposed enlargement is $50,000.

It is proposed to enlarge the Lummi reservation by extending it northward, increasing its dimensions to about double its present area, at an estimated cost of $10,000. Both these reservations contain a sufficient quantity of excellent land for cultivation, and are well located for the pursuits of fishing and logging, on which the people of these localities mainly depend for support.

The Neah Bay reservation now contains about 23,000 acres, and is deemed sufficient for the purposes of the Indians to be placed upon it.

The Indians belonging to the two Pacific coast agencies have not adopted the habits of civilization, and inasmuch as the pursuit of whales and fur-seals furnish profitable employment, they would not easily be induced to engage in agricultural pursuits if good land could be secured. A considerable portion of the land of the reservations proposed to be discontinued, although not cultivated to any considerable extent by the Indians, is valuable, and if disposed of for the largest available price, would more than re-imburse the Government for the cost of establishing the Indians proposed to be removed in their new homes under auspices much more favorable to their progress.

One great want of the Indian who has to any extent engaged in the pursuits of civilized life is the recognition of the rights of individual property, and especially in the possession of a home, the title of which shall be vested in himself. The condition of the Indians in the vicinity of Puget Sound seems to be such as to justify securing to them such rights, and the committee recommend that allotments of land be made upon the enlarged S'Kokomish and Lummi reservations, to remain inalienable for a term of years, after which, if the person or family shall continue to occupy the same, the title may be granted in fee-simple.

The committee submit the accompanying bill, and recommend its passage.

SILAS M. NORTON.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. DUNNELL, from the Committee on Claims, submitted the following

REPORT:

[To accompany bill H. R. 4875.]

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Silas M. Norton, postmaster at Bristol, Conn., have had the same under consideration, and respectfully report:

The following is the sworn petition of the claimant:

To the Congress of the United States, 1st session of the 43d Congress:

The undersigned, postmaster at Bristol, in the county of Hartford, State of Connecticut, respectfully represents that, on the 13th day of April, A. D. 1873, the block in which was located the post-office of said town of Bristol was consumed by fire. The fire was first discovered about 2 o'clock in the morning of said April 13, in a clothing-store adjoining the post-office, and when so discovered had made such progress as to render it impossible to save anything, either in the post-office or any other room in the block. With the property so consumed in the post-office were not less than twenty-two money-orders that had been paid by me during the week ended April 12, 1873, said orders amounting in all to the sum of $578.53, as nearly as the sum can be ascertained. I have been able to obtain receipts from the parties to whom I paid fifteen of the orders, amounting to the sum of $392.83, which amount the Auditor has allowed me; this leaves a balance of seven or more orders, amounting to the sum of $185.70, which I have been unable to trace.

I therefore respectfully ask that an appropriation be made by Congress to refund the said sum of $185.70, so paid by me on said money-orders, and for which I have been unable to obtain the necessary vouchers, so that the same could be allowed by the auditor.

Respectfully submitted.

SILAS M. NORTON,
Postmaster.

COUNTY OF HARTFORD,
State of Connecticut, ss:

BRISTOL, December 8, 1873.

S. M. Norton, signer of the above, being duly sworn, deposes and says that the foregoing statement is correct and true in all respects and particulars, to the best of his knowledge and belief. Before the subscriber, a notary public in and for said State.

JAMES SHEPARD,
Notary Public.

Your committee present, as a part of this report, the following letter from Hon. J. R. Hawley to the Postmaster-General, and the reply of the Post-Office Department thereto:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
WASHINGTON, May 19, 1874.

SIR: I inclose the petition of Silas M. Norton, postmaster at Bristol, Hartford County, Conn., in which he makes affidavit to the circumstances attending the loss by fire of certain money-orders which he had paid. For some of these orders he obtained duplicate receipts: others he could not trace. Will you please cause the proper inquiry to be made as to whether any papers in your Department throw any light upon the case; and whether there is any objection to Congress granting the relief he seeks?

Respectfully, yours,

J. R. HAWLEY, M. C.

Please return the petition.

Hon. J. A. J. CRESWELL,
Postmaster-General.

OFFICE OF THE AUDITOR OF THE TREASURY
FOR THE POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, June 6, 1874.

SIR: Your letter of May 19th last, addressed to the Postmaster-General, in regard to the petition of Silas M. Norton, postmaster at Bristol, Conn., having been referred to this Office, I would say in reply that it appears from the money-order statement of the postmaster at Bristol for April 12, 1873, that he had on hand, before the fire that destroyed his office on the morning of the following 13th, a balance due the United States of $312.70; but it seems from his first money-order statement subsequent to the said fire, that of April 19th, that he had remaining from the above-named balance but $125, so that there appears to have been a loss of $187.70; which loss was probably caused by the destruction, through the fire, of money-orders paid by Mr. Norton previous to the fire, and of which he could obtain no trace, nor, consequently, was he able to furnish any vouchers therefor.

Very respectfully,

J. J. MARTIN,
Auditor.

Hon. J. R. HAWLEY, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

POST-OFFICE, BRISTOL, CONN.,
December 8, 1873.

DEAR SIR: Inclosed I send you a statement showing my loss by the burning of money-orders at the time my office was destroyed by fire, and request that you will cause such action to be taken as you may think best. I intended to have had Mr. Newell assist me in making this statement, but he has been out of town, and I don't wish to wait longer. I have therefore written this myself. If it is not correct please return it and I will try again.

Yours, respectfully,

SILAS M. NORTON,
Postmaster.

Hon. J. R. HAWLEY.

Your committee, in view of the foregoing facts and evidence, recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

○

JACKSON LAVENBURG.

March 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. DUNNELL, from the Committee on Claims, submitted the following

REPORT:

[To accompany bill H. R. 4876.]

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred bill H. R. 4087, have had the same under consideration, and submit the following report:

The petitioner asks compensation for one hundred and fifty-six dollars and ninety cents postage-stamps, ninety dollars money taken in the post-office for stamps; one hundred and ninety-five dollars and sixty-five cents for money-orders, stolen in the late robbery of the post-office at Unionville, Mo.; and one hundred and eight dollars for expenses incurred in arresting the thief.

Your committee find from an examination of the papers furnished in the case by the Post-Office Department that the money-orders were recovered from the thief, and that the claimant received them back. It is due to the claimant to report that the recovery was subsequent to the introduction of the bill for his relief.

Your committee do not deem it proper to refund the money stolen which had been received for stamps, as said money could not be considered as belonging to the Government, and your committee further state that claimant was not called upon to expend any money for the arrest of the thief or for his conviction. That was the duty of other officers of the Government.

Your committee therefore report back a substitute to bill H. R. 4087, allowing the claimant the sum of one hundred and fifty-six dollars and ninety cents for the stamps stolen, which the records of the Post-Office Department show were in his possession at the time of the robbery.

THE HONORABLE THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY
WASHINGTON, D. C.

DEAR SIR:
I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 10th inst. in relation to the matter mentioned therein.

The same has been referred to the proper authorities for their consideration, and it is hoped that a satisfactory result will be reached in due season.

I am, Sir, very respectfully,
Yours truly,
J. M. [Signature]

Very respectfully,
J. M. [Signature]

Very respectfully,
J. M. [Signature]

BISHOP AND COMPANY.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. HAMILTON, from the Committee on Claims, submitted the following

REPORT:

[To accompany bill S. 272.]

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 272) for the relief of Bishop & Company, bankers, of Honolulu, Hawaiian Islands, submit the following report:

That it appears by the letter of the honorable Secretary of State, that the claimants, Bishop & Company, bankers, of Honolulu, in the month of June, 1872, on request of the United States consul, advanced money for the relief of wrecked and destitute seamen, and the committee refer to the letter of the Secretary, which is hereto annexed, as part of this report. The committee, being fully satisfied with the justice and merits of the claim, report the said bill, and recommend its passage.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, January 11, 1875.

SIR: This Department, by a letter of December 19, 1873, addressed to the Hon. Z. Chandler, chairman of the Committee on Commerce of the Senate, commended to the favorable consideration of that committee, in order that the necessary appropriation might be made, the claim of Messrs. Bishop & Co., bankers, of Honolulu, Sandwich Islands, for $1,180.73, gold coin, which originated in the failure of this Department to pay a draft on it, drawn by Mr. Mattoon, when consul of the United States at Honolulu, and negotiated through the claimants, for the relief of destitute seamen, the appropriation having been exhausted at the time at which the draft was presented.

The further facts in regard to the case are stated in the letter to the committee above adverted to, which, it is presumed, has been referred to your committee with the Senate bill No. 272, which passed the Senate on the 12th of May last, and was the same day referred to the House, with a request for the concurrence of that body, and which, on the 11th of June, 1874, was referred to your committee.

In view of the facts of the case, it is recommended that such action may be adopted by your committee as will result in the early concurrence of the House in the Senate bill.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

HAMILTON FISH.

Hon. JOHN B. HAWLEY,
Chairman Committee on Claims, House of Representatives.

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA
DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR
BUREAU OF LAND MANAGEMENT

REPORT

ON THE PROGRESS OF THE SURVEY

OF THE LANDS OF THE UNITED STATES IN THE TERRITORY OF ARIZONA

REPORT

FOR THE YEAR 1891

The following is a summary of the progress of the survey of the lands of the United States in the Territory of Arizona for the year 1891. The survey was conducted by the Bureau of Land Management, Department of the Interior, under the direction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

The survey was conducted by the Bureau of Land Management, Department of the Interior, under the direction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office. The survey was conducted by the Bureau of Land Management, Department of the Interior, under the direction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office. The survey was conducted by the Bureau of Land Management, Department of the Interior, under the direction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

The survey was conducted by the Bureau of Land Management, Department of the Interior, under the direction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office. The survey was conducted by the Bureau of Land Management, Department of the Interior, under the direction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office. The survey was conducted by the Bureau of Land Management, Department of the Interior, under the direction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR

BUREAU OF LAND MANAGEMENT

OSCEOLA C. GREEN.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. HAMILTON, from the Committee on Claims, submitted the following

R E P O R T :

[To accompany bill S. 629.]

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 629) for the relief of Osceola C. Green, administrator de bonis non and one of the heirs at law of Lieut. Col. Uriah Forrest, report :

That it appears from papers on file in the State Department, extracts from which accompany the papers in this case, that Uriah Forrest was a major in the Maryland line of the revolutionary army; that his commission was dated 1st of January, 1777; that he was afterward promoted to the rank of lieutenant-colonel until the close of the war; that the said Uriah Forrest died on the 8th of July, 1805, without having received the half pay due him under the resolution of Congress of October 21, 1780, and without having received the five years' full pay provided for by the law of March 22, 1783, which declared that the officers who were entitled to half pay for life might receive in lieu thereof five years' full pay in money, or in securities bearing interest at the rate of six per cent.

The facts of the case are clearly established from the records of the Departments of State and of Treasury, and the committee report back the said Senate bill without amendment, and recommend its passage, for the payment of the said half pay, without interest, as provided by said bill.

JOHN T. K. HAYWARD AND OTHERS.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. HAMILTON, from the Committee on Claims, submitted the following

REPORT:

[To accompany bill H. R. 2663.]

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2663) for the relief of John T. K. Hayward, Amos Stillwell, and Goodwin O. Bishop, of Hannibal, Mo., for transporting the United States mails, submit the following report:

The claim is fully supported by the records of the Post-Office Department, as per communication of March 5, 1874, from the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, hereto annexed and made part of this report, fully appears.

The committee therefore report the said bill, for the amount due, $998.50, and recommend the passage thereof. The necessity for a special appropriation being, that all unexpended balances for the first three quarters of 1870 for the Post-Office Department have been covered into the Treasury.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECOND ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., March 5, 1874.

SIR: An examination into the records of the Post-Office Department shows that payment is due to Messrs. Hayward, Stillwell & Co., contractors or owners of the Hannibal and Naples Railroad, for transportation of the mails between Hannibal, Mo., and Naples, Ill., from January 1 to June 8, 1870, on old route No. 11889. Contract term from 1866 to 1870, for forty-five and a half miles' service. Service was not ordered on the branch to Pittsfield, six miles, until July 1, 1870, at which time this railroad had been turned over to the Toledo, Wabash and Western Railroad Company.

The rate of pay was subsequently fixed at $50 per mile per annum, and there would be due Messrs. Hayward, Stillwell & Co. pay at that rate for forty-five and a half miles, from January 1 to June 8, 1870, amounting to $998.50. It may be, however, that similar service was performed over the six-mile branch to Pittsfield prior to July 1, 1870, the date of the order for service made by the Postmaster-General, but the records of the Department do not show the fact. Nor is there any record of authorized service before the order of December 21, 1869, which was complied with from January 1, 1870, as hereinbefore stated.

Before Messrs. Hayward, Stillwell & Co. can receive the pay due them it will be necessary to provide an appropriation by act of Congress, inasmuch as all unexpended balances for the first three quarters of 1870 have been covered into the Treasury. The Postmaster-General will be pleased to furnish any other or additional evidence to be required in these premises, and the papers filed by you are at your disposal.

Very respectfully,

JOHN L. ROUTT,
Second Assistant Postmaster-General.

HON. JOHN M. GLOVER,
House of Representatives.

REPORT

Presented to the House of Commons by the Secretary of State for the Colonies in pursuance of a Resolution of the House of Commons, passed on the 11th March 1892

REPORT

of the Commissioner of the General Land Office
for the year 1891
in pursuance of a Resolution of the House of Commons, passed on the 11th March 1892

The Commission of the General Land Office has the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the Report of the Secretary of State for the Colonies, dated the 11th March 1892, in pursuance of a Resolution of the House of Commons, passed on the 11th March 1892, and to inform the House of Commons that the Report has been received and is being considered by the Commission.

Wm. J. H. H. H.
Secretary of State for the Colonies

E. G. ALLEN.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. HAMILTON, from the Committee on Claims, submitted the following

REPORT:

[To accompany bill H. R. 4250.]

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4250) for the relief of E. G. Allen, report :

That it appears to the satisfaction of the committee that the said E. G. Allen, for full consideration paid by him, became the assignee of Isaac Uncapher, of a claim for bounty due said Uncapher ; that on May 6, 1872, a check for the amount was drawn by Charles T. Larned, paymaster in the United States Army, upon the Assistant Treasurer of the United States in New York, to the order of the said Isaac Uncapher, for the sum of one hundred and seventeen dollars and seventy-six cents, for the said claim, but that the said Isaac Uncapher cannot be found to obtain his indorsement of said check ; it appearing to the committee, by an assignment in writing and power of attorney duly executed, from said Uncapher to said E. G. Allen, that the said E. G. Allen is the lawful assignee, and authorized to receive the said claim for which said check was issued ; and the committee therefore report the bill to authorize the Treasurer to pay the said check to the said E. G. Allen without the indorsement of said Uncapher, and recommend its passage.

REPORT

OF THE

COMMISSIONERS OF THE LAND OFFICE

REPORT

FOR THE YEAR 1899

THE COMMISSIONERS OF THE LAND OFFICE, in compliance with the provisions of the Act of March 3, 1879, have the honor to submit to the Senate and House of Representatives the following report:

That it appears to the satisfaction of the Commission that the land office has during the year 1899, been actively engaged in the discharge of its duties, and that the same have been performed with fidelity and economy. The Commission has during the year 1899, received from the Secretary of the Interior, for the purpose of being sold, a large number of acres of land, and has during the same year, sold the same to the highest bidder, for the sum of $1,000,000. The Commission has also during the year 1899, received from the Secretary of the Interior, for the purpose of being sold, a large number of acres of land, and has during the same year, sold the same to the highest bidder, for the sum of $1,000,000. The Commission has also during the year 1899, received from the Secretary of the Interior, for the purpose of being sold, a large number of acres of land, and has during the same year, sold the same to the highest bidder, for the sum of $1,000,000.

The Commission has also during the year 1899, received from the Secretary of the Interior, for the purpose of being sold, a large number of acres of land, and has during the same year, sold the same to the highest bidder, for the sum of $1,000,000. The Commission has also during the year 1899, received from the Secretary of the Interior, for the purpose of being sold, a large number of acres of land, and has during the same year, sold the same to the highest bidder, for the sum of $1,000,000. The Commission has also during the year 1899, received from the Secretary of the Interior, for the purpose of being sold, a large number of acres of land, and has during the same year, sold the same to the highest bidder, for the sum of $1,000,000. The Commission has also during the year 1899, received from the Secretary of the Interior, for the purpose of being sold, a large number of acres of land, and has during the same year, sold the same to the highest bidder, for the sum of $1,000,000. The Commission has also during the year 1899, received from the Secretary of the Interior, for the purpose of being sold, a large number of acres of land, and has during the same year, sold the same to the highest bidder, for the sum of $1,000,000.

ELIZA HOWARD POWERS.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. HAMILTON, from the Committee on Claims, submitted the following

REPORT:

[To accompany bill H. R. 4877.]

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Eliza Howard Powers, having considered the same, submit the following report:

It appears that Mrs. Powers is a widow seventy-two years of age; that at the commencement of the late war of the rebellion she was a resident of the city of Paterson, N. J.; and from April 28, 1861, to August 14, 1864, she devoted her whole time, energy, influence, and means in the service and for the success of the Union cause; caring for the sick and wounded soldiers in the field and in hospitals; collecting and forwarding hospital-supplies and money for their relief, and ministering to their wants, and relieving their sufferings in camp, field, and hospital; acting during that time as the president of the Florence Nightingale Relief Association of Paterson, and from November, 1862, to August, 1864, she acted as assistant manager of the United States Sanitary Commission of New Jersey, and in such capacity she collected from individual citizens, and forwarded to relief associations and hospitals, over eight thousand dollars in money, and over twenty thousand articles for hospital use; that she received no pay or compensation of any kind for these services; that her necessary subsistence and transportation were paid from her own means and from moneys by her collected; that her whole means were expended in the service in which she was engaged; that in consequence of exposure and fatigue, her health was impaired and she became seriously sick, and that she contracted serious disabilities, from which she has never recovered; that from 1867 to September 1874, she had employment in the Post-Office Department, by which she was enabled to support herself, but that employment has been taken from her, and she finds herself, in her old age, without the means of support, and she appeals to the Government for some recognition of her services and sacrifices during the war.

The committee, in view of the valuable services and outlays made and rendered by the petitioner, and of the sacrifices made by her in behalf of the country, and considering her great age and indigent circumstances, believe that some compensation should be awarded to her, and they report and recommend the passage of the accompanying bill for the payment to her of $3,000, as a substitute for bill H. R. No. 4122.

DIXON SHINAULT AND OTHERS.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. HAMILTON, from the Committee on Claims, submitted the following

REPORT:

[To accompany bill H. R. 4878.]

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the claims of Dixon Shinault, of Virginia, John W. Watson and Lewis Goodwin, of North Carolina, report:

That it appears, from the records of the Treasury Department, (office of the Light-House Board,) that Dixon Shinault was employed and paid as mate of the Wolf-Trap light-vessel up to December 31, 1860, at the rate of $30 per month.

That John W. Watson was employed and paid as mate of the Brant Island Shoal light-vessel up to December 31, 1860, at the rate of $25 per month.

That Lewis Goodwin was employed and paid for the same period as a seaman, at $18 per month.

That there is no record of any pay being made to the above parties after December 31, 1860. But it does not appear, to the satisfaction of the committee, what amount of services were rendered by the said parties subsequent to the date of December 31, 1860, the said parties respectively claiming that they severally continued in the like service, respectively, for the next following quarter, up to April 1, 1861, for which no payment was made to them.

The committee believing it to be but equitable and just that they should be paid, if they shall respectively make it appear to the proper accounting-officer of the Treasury that they severally rendered the services by them claimed, do herewith report a bill accordingly for the payment to them of the amount which may be found to be due to them respectively, and recommend its passage.

HARVEY & LIVESEY.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. HAMILTON, from the Committee on Claims, submitted the following

R E P O R T :

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Harvey & Livesey, respectfully report :

That they cannot recommend the relief prayed for by the bill.

It appears by the case as presented to the committee that the matters in controversy were litigated between the said claimants and the United States before the Court of Claims. The controversy grew out of a contract to build a bridge across the Mississippi River between Rock Island and the city of Davenport; the claimants claimed an award for the work done by them, and for damages for non-compliance with the contract on the part of the United States. The court, after a full hearing, awarded the claimants $76,344.47 for work done, and $20,068 for damages. Chief-Justice Drake dissented from the judgment of the court, on the grounds that the breach of contract complained of was not satisfactorily made out and as to the amount of the damages awarded.

The claimants have availed themselves of the amount awarded to them, but they appeal to Congress for further redress, and say that injustice has been done them; that there were certain work done and materials provided in the construction of coffer-dams which were not allowed to them by the court, and to which they were entitled.

The committee feel bound to suggest, in answer to this, that a claim for building the coffer-dams was made and urged before the Court of Claims, and was considered by the court, as the reported case shows, the court holding that by the terms of the contract the claimants were bound to construct the coffer-dams themselves. If the Court of Claims put a wrong construction upon the contract, the claimants should have carried their appeal to the Supreme Court, and not to Congress. The committee are of the opinion that where competent courts are provided for the redress of parties, no appeal to Congress should be entertained. They therefore recommend that the bill lie on the table.

JOHN FLETCHER.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. JOHN B. HAWLEY, from the Committee on Claims, submitted the following

REPORT:

[To accompany bill S. 792.]

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 792) for the relief of John Fletcher, have considered the same, and make the following report:

Fletcher & Powell were subcontractors under Henry J. Bulkley, who agreed to transport military supplies from Fort Leavenworth to Fort Laramie. In execution of their agreement, the said Fletcher & Powell did load a transportation-train with bacon, beans, dried apples, salt, sugar, stoves, &c., in July, 1865. When the bacon was loaded it dripped badly, and continued to drip until the arrival of the train at Fort Laramie. Upon the order of the officer in charge at Fort Leavenworth, and against the remonstrance of the petitioner, a number of heavy cooking-stoves were loaded upon the sacks of bacon. That the train was loaded in midsummer, and the trip was much prolonged by reason of circumstances beyond the control of the contractors.

It is shown that the contractors delivered at Fort Laramie in good order all the sacks of bacon, barrels of beans, and dried apples received by them, with the exception of three sacks of bacon and one barrel of dried apples, which were used by the contractors, which was allowed by the terms of the contract upon payment of the cost of the same.

	Pounds.
The number of sacks of bacon received were 386.....	44, 835
Beans, 67 barrels	15, 351
Dried apples, 14 barrels.....	2, 020

The amounts delivered at Fort Laramie were as follows :

	Pounds.
Sacks of bacon, 383.....	36, 595
Barrels of beans, 67.....	13 765
Barrels of dried apples, 13.....	1, 692

Aside from the bacon and dried apples used and paid for by the contractors, a deficiency in the weight of bacon is shown of about 19 per cent. The shrinkage in the net weight of bacon transported under the same contracts ranged from 14½ per cent. to 24½ per cent.

It is also shown that the beans worked out of the barrels to some extent; but the wagons being new and tight, none were lost, but were delivered to the officers in charge, and no loss is properly chargeable.

It is conclusively shown that due care was taken by the contractors, and that, aside from the shrinkage, which, by the terms of their contract, they were not to be held liable for, the goods were delivered in as good order, and the weight was as full, as could be expected under like circumstances.

Your committee are of the opinion that the claim is a just one and should be allowed, and, therefore, report the bill without amendment, and recommend its passage.

BARTHOLOMEW COUNTY AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOLMAN, from the Committee on War-Claims, submitted the following

REPORT:

[To accompany bill H. R. 4879.]

The Committee on War-Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2001) for the relief of the Bartholomew County, Indiana, Agricultural Society, having had the same under consideration, report:

That the claim is as follows:

JUNE 1, 1865.—For occupation of grounds, for military purposes, from September 1, 1863, to date, as per contract herewith.....	$2, 100
To damages to buildings, fences, &c., as set forth in affidavit herewith.....	2, 000
	4, 100
MARCH 1, 1864.—By cash on account of rent.....	533
Balance due.....	3, 567

It appears that a portion of this claim was presented to the Quartermaster's Department and examined by the chief quartermaster of the Department of the Lakes, who reported that the said claim was not a proper charge to the Quartermaster's Department, suggesting its reference to the Adjutant-General. As recommended, the Quartermaster-General referred the case to the Adjutant-General January 31, 1872. The Adjutant-General reviewed the evidence submitted to the Quartermaster-General, and decided that as the claim was for damages it could not be entertained by him, adding the remark that Congress alone could afford the desired relief. Another ground, however, for the rejection, was that a claim for rent of said grounds from October 25, 1863, to May 3, 1864, amounting to $633, was received from Capt. J. H. Farquhar; that it was investigated, and, February 24, 1865, Maj. S. B. Hayman paid the amount allowed, $536.66, that being all that was deemed a proper charge against the appropriation for collecting, drilling, and organizing volunteers, the grounds being occupied mainly for that purpose. October 19, 1865, another claim was received by the Adjutant-General for the rent of said grounds from September 7, 1864, to October 4, 1864, based upon the same contract, amounting to $123.33, and was rejected for the reason that it was considered that a sufficient amount had been paid.

The lease between the officers of the society and the Government contains the following clause, made by Lieutenant Wilson, assistant quartermaster, and the officers of the society:

And the said Wilson, on behalf of the State of Indiana and the United States, undertakes to repair all damages that may be occasioned to said fair-ground or buildings while used and occupied for the purposes specified in this lease.

The Adjutant-General asserts that the said provision had been inserted after the lease had been executed, and exhibits a certified copy of the lease, which copy did not contain the clause referred to. The Adjutant-General also states that the facts sworn to by the witnesses, Wilson, Stansifer, and Jones, were incorrect. Wilson was the Lieutenant and quartermaster who executed the lease; Stansifer was in command of said rendezvous during the organization of the One hundred and tenth Indiana Volunteers, and was provost and mustering officer during the organization of the One hundred and fortieth Indiana Volunteers, and he swore that the estimate of damage by the officers of the society is not excessive. Jones was an officer of the society and familiar with the facts.

Your committee do not deem it important to discuss the question whether or not the lease contains the clause above referred to. An obligation existed on the part of the Government, without any such provision, to restore the grounds to the society in the same condition as when it took them. If damage was done the grounds and buildings, then the Government is bound to make proper compensation therefor.

Your committee are satisfied from the evidence submitted that the sum of $1,550 will be a proper allowance in payment of this claim, and accordingly report the accompanying bill appropriating that sum in full compensation of this claim, as a substitute for H. R. 2001, and recommend its passage.

STERLING A. MARTIN.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOLMAN, from the Committee on War-Claims, submitted the following

REPORT:

[To accompany bill H. R. 3046.]

The Committee on War-Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3046) for the relief of Sterling A. Martin, late a private in Company I, Thirty-seventh Regiment Indiana Volunteers, beg leave to report :

That this claim is for extra services rendered by him at Nashville and Gallatin, Tenn., from August 1, 1862, to November 11, 1862, and from November 12, 1862, to March 4, 1863, as a clerk, at 40 cents per day, amounting to $86.40. The petitioner was a private soldier at the time, and rendered this extra service. The claim seems to have been rejected on the technical ground that the records of the War Department do not show the rendition of this service, but your committee find that in fact this extra service was rendered by the soldier, and they are of the opinion that he should be paid. They therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

N. J. BIGLEY.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOLMAN, from the Committee on War-Claims, submitted the following

REPORT:

The Committee on War-Claims, to whom was referred the petition of N. J. Bigley, of Pennsylvania, for payment of steamboat and four barges of coal burned by the confederate forces off Memphis, Tenn., beg leave to report:

The claim is for the payment of the steam-tug Hercules, $25,000, and four barge-loads of coal, $21,211.40—total, $46,211.40.

It appears from the statement and accompanying papers that on the 17th day of February, 1863, only twenty-four days from the time that the order for said coal was given to this affiant, the steamer Hercules with the said six barges of coal (and also one other barge) came in sight of and within the range and easy protection of the armed fleet then lying at the port of Memphis. There was a heavy fog prevailing at the time, and the officers of the fleet deemed it unsafe on that account, and on account of the fact that the landing on the Tennessee shore was much crowded by crafts of various kinds, to attempt a landing at Memphis, and consequently the boat was landed with the barges in tow on the Arkansas shore, where the steamer was soon after attacked by guerrillas and captured and burned; one of the coal-boats was sunk at the same time; two of the remaining five were towed to the Tennessee shore opposite the next day. They contained about 28,000 bushels, and were received on the part of the Government, and paid for at the contract-price, 30 cents per bushel.

This affiant called upon Captain Lewis, assistant quartermaster of transportation, for a guard to protect the three boats then remaining on the Arkansas shore, and upon his order the provost-marshal detailed a guard of thirty men, commanded by an officer, for that purpose. The guard so detailed went to the river to be crossed over, and while there they were recalled by the order of some officer, for what reason this affiant does not know. This guard was ordered to protect the canal-boats during the 18th of February, they having been under the protection of the gunboats from the time of the burning of the Hercules up to that time. No guard or protection seems to have been furnished that day, (the 18th February,) and on that evening or night the three remaining barges or coal-boats were sunk by the guerrillas.

This affiant further states that the contents of the said four coal-boats had been duly measured and ascertained by the proper officers before leaving Louisville, Ky. The boat which was sunk at the time of the capture and burning of the steamer Hercules, was measured in Cincinnati, Ohio; the others, at Louisville; the tug and barges having been burned by the rebels on the — day of February, 1863, on the Mississippi River, opposite Memphis, Tenn.

The facts are as follows: Elijah S. Blasdel, being then at the city of Memphis, Tenn., received from the office of the quartermaster of the army at that city, the following order:

DEPARTMENT QUARTERMASTER'S OFFICE,
Memphis, January 24, 1863.

E. S. BLASDEL, Esq.:

Furnish to this department 75,000 to 100,000 bushels of Youghiogheny coal, also 2,000 tons of hay, for which a good market-price will be paid. Coal at 30 cents per bushel, and hay at $27.50 per ton.

A. R. EDDY,
Per DAN. W. SEUBER,
Chief Clerk.

Elijah S. Blasdel was, at the time this order was issued, residing at the city of Lawrenceburgh, Ind., a point on the Ohio River one hundred and thirty miles above the city of Louisville, and was at the time engaged in the produce business.

Mr. Blasdel testifies, in an affidavit submitted to the Quartermaster-General in behalf of this claim, that after receiving the said order he immediately proceeded North for the purpose of fulfilling the same, and in pursuance thereof he obtained from N. J. Bigley, of Pittsburgh, Pa., 100,000 bushels of the description of coal designated in said order, which was then afloat in six barges or coal-boats, and being towed by the steamer Hercules, Capt. Thomas McCloskey. To this affidavit of Mr. Blasdel is attached four certificates of the measurement of coal, on the 8th day of February, 1863, contained in three barges, by E. W. Macdonald, measurer for that city, per tug-boat Hercules, and one certificate dated Cincinnati, February 3, 1863, of measurement of coal for Mr. Chester by L. Shutterly, measurer. These certificates state the amount of coal measured, as follows:

	Bushels.
Boat No. 79.....	21,315
Boat No. 80.....	22,735
Boat No. 89.....	19,000
Load marked L. C., measured in Cincinnati.....	7,588

N. J. Bigley, in his affidavit submitted to the Quartermaster-General in support of this claim, after referring to the affidavit of E. S. Blasdel, says:

That he hastened to Memphis with the tow-boat Hercules and seven full boats containing about 100,000 bushels of coal, knowing that the Government was much in need of coal at that time. That, fearing an attack from guerrillas, he made an application to the commanding officer at Cairo for a convoy, which was refused, and he was assured by that officer that there was no danger, (vide affidavit of Captain Reilly, marked Exhibit B.) That the steamer Hercules with her tow reached Memphis on the morning of the 16th February, 1863, and was, owing to a fog and the crowded condition of the wharves just opposite, temporarily, and directly after landing was attacked by guerrillas—set on fire and destroyed.

Mr. Bigley's affidavit, after detailing the killing of one of the crew and the capture of the others by guerrillas, and detention during the night and return to the barges, states:

Upon reaching the river again they found six of the coal-barges still afloat and in good condition; that three of said boats were then towed over the river; that the three others were permitted to remain and were destroyed by the guerrillas that night, (the 18th,) but all this destruction of your claimant's property occurred after the landing had been effected as stated in exhibit, and while within the range of the guns and under the protection of the gunboats of the United States, and a part of it after a guard which had been asked for and sent forward was, for some reason unknown to your claimant, withdrawn, and after the property had been guarded by the gunboat Prairie Bird; that your claimant was to have been paid for the said coal on its arrival at Memphis, and was paid for what was contained in the boats which were towed over before dark on the evening of the 18th, but has never been paid for the remaining portion.

Captain Reilley, referred to in Mr. Bigley's affidavit, says:

On the 14th of February, 1863, I was at the office of Captain Pennock waiting to receive orders. Captain Pennock was the post naval commander, (Cairo.) Captain Bigley came in and stated to Captain Pennock that he had a tow of coal for the Government, which he wished to take to Memphis, and asked Captain Pennock to give him a convoy, as he thought it was not safe, between Cairo and Memphis, with such a big tow, from guerrillas, as he might have to land by stress of weather. Captain Pennock replied that he had no convoy to give him, and that he did not think there was any danger between there and Memphis. Captain Bigley urged the necessity of a convoy on Captain Pennock, but it was refused.

Thomas McCloskey testified:

I was captain of the steamer Hercules prior to her being burned as well as when she was burned. The trip before she was burned I towed and delivered to the United States Government a tow of coal. The United States Government was in great need of coal and was very pressing for it.

It appears from the evidence that N. J. Bigley was the owner of the steam-tug Hercules and seven barge-loads of coal. The value of the steam-tug and the amount of coal contained in the four barges lost I believe to be correctly stated in the claim, at least substantially, and there seems to be no doubt whatever of the high character and loyalty of the claimant.

On the 19th of June, 1867, E. S. Blasdel assigned all of his interest in this claim against the Government for coal to N. J. Bigley, as appears from a written assignment among the papers.

It appears to the committee from the foregoing and other affidavits on file, that on the morning of the 17th of January, 1863, when the steam-tug Hercules with her tow of seven coal-barges reached a point in the Mississippi River opposite Memphis, it was deemed prudent by the persons having charge of the boat, Mr. Bigley himself being on the steam-tug Hercules, that, in consequence of the number of vessels at the wharf at Memphis and the foggy condition of the weather, that they could not safely land at the Memphis wharf, and it was safer to land on the opposite shore, which was accordingly done, and immediately after landing the steamer and barges were boarded by guerrillas, the officers and crew captured, the steam-tug set on fire and burned.

Thomas McCloskey, captain of the tug-boat Hercules, states the facts as follows in his affidavit:

He commanded the tow-boat Hercules on the downward trip from Louisville to Memphis, February, 1863, having seven coal-barges in tow; and that on Tuesday, the 17th of February, the steamer Hercules and her tow, when near the landing of Memphis, just above the city, heavy fog set in, and the current being strong and the wharf somewhat crowded with other craft, the officers of the boat determined it unsafe just then to attempt a landing at the city wharf, and landed temporarily on the Arkansas side, nearly opposite the city. Soon after the steamer was taken by a guerrilla band and taken possession of, burned, and destroyed. The boat's crew being unarmed, were forced to surrender, after several shots had been fired and one of the crew killed. They were taken back into the country about twelve miles, robbed, kept all night under guard, then paroled, then returned to the river, which was reached about mid-day on the 18th of February, and were taken on board the gunboat Cricket, after displaying a white flag, and carried over to Memphis. Immediately on reaching Memphis, Peter G. Bigley, myself, and others got a tow-boat, the Wisconsin, and succeeded in towing over three coal-barges, which lay near where the Hercules had been destroyed. Darkness came on, and the captain of the tow-boat Wisconsin refused to go over again, considering it dangerous. That night the remaining three coal-barges were destroyed.

It appears from the evidence that the coal contained in the three barges so taken over to Memphis was received by the quartermaster at Memphis, and paid for by him.

This claim for the coal contained in the other four barges and for the steamer Hercules was submitted by the claimant to the Quartermaster-General, and this claim seems to have been examined at the Quartermaster-General's Office by the Third Auditor and Second Comptroller of the Treasury, and by General Dunn, assistant judge-advocate-general of the War Department, and rejected, not only as to the claim for the steamer, but also as to the coal.

The ground of the rejection as to the tow-boat was, that she was not in the employ of the United States, and as to the coal, that it was not delivered to the Government, but was not destroyed while it was in the ownership and possession of the claimant.

It does not appear from the testimony that the quartermaster at Memphis had any notice of the arrival of the coal-boats opposite Memphis until after the property was destroyed, but that, when notified of the landing of the three barges of coal at Memphis, he received the same and paid for it. It also appears from the affidavits on file that during the time between the burning of the steam-tug Hercules and the destruction of the three last barges there were in the Mississippi River, opposite Vicksburgh, one or two gunboats patrolling the river, and occasionally firing a shot or a shell at the Arkansas shore, and driving off the guerrillas; also that before the destruction of the last three barges both the naval and military officers were applied to by persons connected with Mr. Bigley to protect the property; that a small detachment of soldiers at one time was sent across the river, but was afterward withdrawn.

But it is very clear that there was no acceptance of this property by the quartermaster for the Government.

It would seem clear that the acts of the naval and military authorities at Memphis, in seeking to protect this property, was in no sense an acceptance of the same on behalf of the Government. The Quartermaster-General, in passing upon this claim says:

That, for the time being, the Army sought to guard and protect the property, is not deemed to have given the claimant any right to assume that thereby it came into the possession of the Government. The Army was engaged at all times in supporting, to the utmost of its ability, the property of all loyal citizens, and its failure to succeed in any instance cannot, in the absence of specific legislation, afford a basis for the reimbursement of losses incurred by such failure.

This view is clearly correct. The efforts of the Government to protect the property from the rebels was but a part of the general purposes of its employment.

The case, then, perfectly stated, is as follows: Mr. Blasdel is authorized by the quartermaster at Memphis to deliver 100 tons of coal at that city, with the engagement on the part of the Government that, upon its delivery to the quartermaster at that city, he should receive 30 cents per bushel for the same. There is no engagement or promise whatever on the part of Mr. Blasdel to deliver the coal, though Mr. Negley, however, makes an attempt to do so by, perhaps, an unavoidable accident, burning of the property, destroyed by public enemy before it reaches the city of Memphis.

The price offered by the Government for the coal seems to have been a sufficient inducement for Mr. Blasdel's making an effort for its delivery; and while it is manifest that the case presents one of great hardship on the part of Mr. Bigley, it is but one of the innumerable losses sustained by private citizens during the war, which it would be impossible for the Government to make good. That the Government certainly cannot be expected to make good such losses, however great the hardship to the citizens.

Among the papers there is the following dispatch :

SAINT LOUIS, MO., December 24, 1862.

N. J. BIGLEY :

Hurry on with your coal to Memphis. We must have it anyhow.

LEWIS B. PARSONS,
Colonel and Acting Quartermaster.

Upon which great stress has been laid in pressing this claim. It appears, however, that this dispatch had reference to a cargo of coal which Mr. Bigley had previously delivered for the Government at Memphis, and for which he was paid. It is proper to add that it is evident that Mr. Bigley is a gentleman of high character, and was loyal to the Government during the war.

Upon careful examination of all the facts in the case, your committee are compelled to recommend the rejection of this claim.

H. Rep. 309—2

HALL COLBY.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOWE, from the Committee on Claims, submitted the following

R E P O R T :

[To accompany bill H. R. 4880.]

The Committee on Claims, to whom the petition of Hall Colby was referred, have considered the same, and make the following report :

The petitioner sets forth in his sworn statement that he is the discoverer of certain principles in nautical astronomy of great importance, which he has for more than twenty years made known for the free benefit of the world ; that in the course of his investigations and experiments he invented an improved mariners' compass, which was patented ; and that he has since, and including the year 1847, largely devoted his time to the supplying and correcting of ships' compasses. In the case of United States naval vessels and transports, for many of which he represents that he has furnished and corrected compasses, he declares that he has never received any compensation. His services so accepted by naval officers, as he represents, were voluntary ; and at the beginning of the late war, he testifies that he gave his exclusive attention to the naval transports and coast-carriers for the Army of the United States, employing his whole time in examining and correcting the compasses of such vessels, at the wharves of New York, inspecting them at every trip, and so continued to do for three years, when his health failed. During that time he swears that he handled two hundred and sixty steam and wind crafts, finding them a correct compass and keeping them in order for sea, for all of which he never received any pay. After four years' detention by sickness, he represents that he resumed, in 1869, and has since continued, his voluntary labors for the public benefit, in the course of which he declares that he has exhausted his entire fortune ; and he now asks Congress to remunerate him for his services to the vessels and forces of the United States.

The petitioner submits a large number of testimonials and certificates to substantiate his statements, among them a memorial to Congress certifying that the said Hall Colby had for many years devoted a large portion of his time to examining and correcting ships' compasses and instructing nautical men therein, and that during three years he had given special attention to such services for Government transports, his services to shipmasters in Government service having been gratuitous and voluntary ; and recommending Congress to remunerate him. This is signed by twenty-three ship captains and masters, Commodore Henry Eagle, and Captain Chas. S. Boggs, of the United States Navy, by Henry and M. H. Grinnell, and others, presidents of marine-insurance companies ; and indorsed by D. N. Merritt, United States inspector. Among the numerous other testimonials to the fact and value of the petitioner's services to the Government and the public are twelve signed by naval officers, including Commodore Eagle, Captain Hudson, Lieutenant Hunter, Lieutenant Craven, and others. Lieut. C. G. Hunter certifies that Hall Colby put three compasses upon the United States steamer Scourge in 1847, with which he cruised in the Mexican war, and which he pronounced superior to other compasses. Others are of later date, reaching down to 1865. The petitioner testifies that he has furnished to vessels of the United States twenty-five of his improved compasses, in addition to the personal labor and service in correcting instruments and instructing officers voluntarily and without pay.

Your committee has addressed a letter to the Secretary of the Navy asking for any evidence in the records of that Department respecting the services in question, and receives answer that none such exists. Your committee do not regard this fact as inconsistent with the representations and claims of the petitioner, inasmuch as the services have been rendered in such a manner—wholly voluntary, informal, and unofficial—that they might reasonably have occurred without the knowledge of the Department, or at least without causing mention upon its records; and the evidence in substantiation seems to your committee very full and on high authority.

A paper is submitted to your committee making an estimate of the value of the said services of Hall Colby to be from $15,000 to $20,000, signed by Capt. W. W. Story, 51 Wall street, New York; and that is indorsed as a low compensation by eleven others, including Henry Grinnell, M. H. Grinnell, Henry Eagle, commodore United States Navy, Charles S. Boggs, United States Navy, D. N. Merritt, United States inspector, and others, ship-captains and marine-insurance officers.

In view of these facts and considerations, your committee report the accompanying bill for the relief of Hall Colby, appropriating for his compensation $10,000, and recommend its passage.

BENJAMIN W. REYNOLDS.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. HUBBELL, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, submitted the following

R E P O R T:

[To accompany bill H. R. 4357.]

The Committee on Banking and Currency, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4357) for the relief of Benjamin W. Reynolds, have had the same under consideration and submit the following report:

Your committee, to whom was referred House bill No. 4357, to amend an act to construe the act of March 2, 1853, to allow all depositaries designated under the act of August 6, 1846, &c., have had the same under consideration, and, after a careful examination thereof, report adversely thereto and recommend that it do not pass.

The only person known to your committee as being interested in said bill is one Benjamin W. Reynolds, of Wisconsin who claims compensation for services as United States depositary at the Falls of Saint Croix, in the State of Wisconsin; and with a view of recommending such relief, either by private bill or otherwise, to said Reynolds, as the circumstances of his case might seem to require, your committee examined into the facts and circumstances connected with his claim, and submit the following as the result of their investigations:

Benjamin W. Reynolds entered on the duties of the office of receiver of public moneys at the land-office at the Falls of Saint Croix, in the State of Wisconsin, May 16, 1861, and so continued until July 15, 1864, and during the greater portion of this period he acted as disbursing and timber agent for the Government. On the 20th of October, 1861, Mr. Reynolds was also designated as United States depositary, and served as such until November 15, 1864. While he so acted as depositary the public moneys received by him were only such funds as came into his hands as receiver of public moneys and timber-agent at the land-office aforesaid, and amounted to the sum of $30,599.93.

On February 19, 1872, Mr. Rusk, of Wisconsin, introduced a bill in the House of Representatives for the relief of Mr. Reynolds, authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay said Reynolds $2,175 to re-imburse him for clerk-hire necessarily paid by him in the discharge of the duties of his office. This bill was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands; and on May 11, 1872, that committee submitted a report (see Report 71, second session of Forty-second Congress) recommending that Mr. Reynolds be allowed the sum of $2,175.30 to re-imburse him for clerk-hire, and by the act approved May 20, 1872, was allowed that sum. An examination of that report must convince any one that in allowing Mr. Reynolds the sum of money aforesaid the committee intended to and did cover his whole claim for services.

It further appears that when Mr. Reynolds rendered his final account to the Treasury Department, he charged up about $1,000 for services and disbursements, which, in all probability, at that time constituted his whole pretended claim against the Government, but that when he attempted to collect the amount allowed him by the act of May 20, 1872, the Department deducted the amount so returned by him for expenses as charged in his final account, paying him the balance to which he was entitled under that act.

Mr. Reynolds now claims that the act of May 20, 1872, only re-imbursed him for clerk-hire connected with his office as receiver of the land-office and as timber and disbursing agent of the Government; that the amount deducted from that sum by the Treasury Department was intended to cover his claim for compensation as a depository of public moneys, and that the object of the bill referred to your committee was to so amend the law relating to depositaries as to enable him to obtain compensation for his services as depository.

Your committee are unable to find any equity in the claim of Mr. Reynolds to any compensation beyond that allowed him by the act of May 20, 1872.

While Mr. Reynolds acted as receiver of public money at the land-office at Saint Croix from May 16, 1861, to July 18, 1864, the entire business of his office, i. e., receipts from all sources, amounted to $30,599.90, or less than $10,000 per annum, and when it is borne in mind that as depository he only had charge of the identical funds which came into his hands as receiver, it is almost impossible to conceive how such a small volume of business could occupy the business hours of an officer without clerks or assistants. Mr. Reynolds has already received for services, including salary and amount paid him under act of May 20, 1872, the sum of $4,588.91, and your committee submit that, in view of the work done, this is ample compensation.

WILLIAM PHILLIPS.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. KELLOGG, from the Committee on War-Claims, submitted the following

REPORT:

[To accompany bill H. R. 1662.]

The Committee on War-Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1662) for the relief of William Phillips, of Tennessee, having had the same under consideration, report :

That this is a claim for compensation for 14,020 pounds of brown sugar seized at Huntsville, Ala., on the 8th day of June, 1862, for the use of the United States Army. It appears that the claim was submitted to the Commissary-General of Subsistence for payment, who declined to pay the same, upon the ground that the officer who received the sugar accounts for it in his return as seized at Huntsville, Ala., and therefore payment could not be made by the Commissary-General as a purchase, and, originating in Alabama, was a proper claim to go before the Commissioners of Claims. This decision, it appears, was reached after the time for filing claims with the said commissioners had expired, and consequently the claimant comes to Congress for relief. It appears from the papers obtained from the Third Auditor, to whom the case had been forwarded by the Commissary-General without his approval, that the refusal of the Department to pay the claim is based upon the ground that the receipt given by the officer taking the sugar is not on a regular service-voucher, and that payment could not be made, therefore, as upon a contract purchase.

From the affidavit of J. R. Paul, it appears that in the month of June, 1862, he was captain and commissary of subsistence with third division, Army of the Ohio, and acting post-commissary at Huntsville, Ala.; that on the 8th day of June, 1862, he seized for the use of the Army from the store-house of W. H. Powers, at Huntsville, Ala., 14 hogsheads of brown sugar, weighing 14,020 pounds; that a necessity existed for seizing the same, and that it was regularly issued to and consumed by United States troops, and taken up on his returns, and duly accounted for at the time of the seizure. It appears from his affidavit that Captain Paul did not know at the time of the seizure to whom the sugar belonged, the custodian of the same saying that it belonged to another party, and that he (Powers) had no interest whatever in it, except to see it properly cared for until he could ship it to the owner and consignee; the said Powers refusing to accept a receipt for the sugar, on the ground that he was not the owner, and not responsible for it after the seizure by the military authorities, and that he deemed a receipt valueless. Captain

Paul also states that there was great excitement among the citizens at the time in and about Huntsville, and it was generally believed that property seized by the military authorities was forever lost. Captain Paul further swears that in the month of June, 1865, William Phillips, of Nashville, Tenn., applied to him for an acknowledgment of the seizure of said sugar that would enable him to secure payment for the same; that he required said Phillips to produce evidence of ownership, which was done to his (Paul's) satisfaction, after which an informal voucher was issued to said Phillips for the sugar so seized. Subsequently, on the 1st of November, 1871, Captain Paul makes further affidavit to the effect that after executing the first affidavit a receipt for the sugar aforesaid has been shown him, having been found among the papers of W. H. Powers, the custodian aforesaid, which receipt is attached as appears among the papers in the case. Captain Paul recognizes the receipt as one written by James ———, at the time a soldier detailed as clerk in his Department, and states that it is a bona-fide receipt, and that it was given as a memorandum, as was the custom at the time, and that it was given in his absence, as he never knew until the aforesaid date (November 1, 1871) that a receipt was out for the sugar aforesaid.

The proof of ownership submitted by the claimant is conclusive upon that point; and from the evidence submitted, most of which is obtained from official sources, your committee believe the claimant entitled to compensation for the same, and accordingly report back the bill and recommend its passage.

SILAS REED.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. LANSING, from the Committee on Claims, submitted the following

REPORT:

[To accompany bill H. R. 4881.]

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the memorial of Silas Reed, asking payment for property in Saint Louis, Mo., condemned and taken by the United States for post-office and custom-house purposes, make the following report :

They find that an act was passed by Congress, approved March 27, 1872, authorizing the purchase of a lot or block of ground in the city of Saint Louis, Mo., for the purpose of erecting a post-office and custom-house thereon, and an appropriation of $500,000 was made for the payment therefor.

After numerous ineffectual efforts by commissioners appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury to decide on and purchase the most appropriate location, circuit court No. 3, at Saint Louis, was called upon by the United States authorities to appoint commissioners to condemn ground for the custom-house. These commissioners selected block No. 193, between Eighth and Ninth streets, on Olive street, Saint Louis, and condemned it at an appraisal of $342,553. All of the owners on Olive street objected, and excepted to the inadequacy of the price awarded. All those owners who prosecuted their appeal in that court were awarded by the court a larger amount than adjudged to them by the commissioners, except Silas Reed, (your petitioner,) who was then in Government employment as surveyor-general of Wyoming Territory, and was not made aware of the condemnation of his property, and consequently failed to make his exceptions and have them filed within the ten days limited by the court.

Sundry efforts were continued to be made by Mr. Reed over a period of nearly two years for a juster compensation than the one awarded to him by the commissioners, but failed, the history of which is not deemed necessary here.

Mr. Reed now comes before Congress by memorial, which has been referred to your committee. In this memorial and by documents he shows that his property on Olive street, and that of Mr. Bauer, who adjoined him on one side, (with an alley on the other side,) were of equal frontage and depth; that both properties were condemned at nearly an equal price by the said commissioners—Mr. Reed's at some dollars the most.

The court raised the valuation of Mr. Bauer's lot (which adjoined Mr. Reed's, and at least of equal size and value) to $26,937.50, and refused to raise the value of Mr. Reed's property above the $20,000 fixed by the commission, because his appeal was not taken in time, and dismissed his appeal for that reason.

Mr. Reed claims that he has not been fairly and justly dealt with in the matter of condemnation, and is justly entitled to $27,000 for his property, as it adjoined an alley, and was, therefore, worth more than Bauer's.

Your committee consider the prayer of the petitioner reasonable and just, and therefore recommend the payment of the sum of $7,000 in addition to the sum of $20,000 for which said property of Silas Reed was condemned for the use of the United States, and for that purpose report the accompanying bill and recommend that it do pass.

GUSTAVUS A. SCROGGS.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. LANSING, from the Committee on Claims, submitted the following

REPORT:

[To accompany bill H. R. 2804.]

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2804) for the relief of Gustavus A. Scroggs, late provost-marshal of the thirtieth district New York, beg leave to report:

That the said Gustavus A. Scroggs was provost-marshal of the thirtieth congressional district of the State of New York from November, 1864, to December, 1865, with headquarters at the city of Buffalo; that Maj. John A. Haddock was acting assistant provost-marshal of the western division of New York, and the officer superior in command to Provost-Marshal Scroggs, by whom orders had been issued to Provost-Marshal Scroggs, which were then in force, directing him to arrest and imprison any person who should present a recruit for enlistment in the United States Army under a promise to aid him to escape after his enlistment; that on the 25th day of February, 1865, one Charles Davis brought to said provost-marshal a young man named Owen Kirk for enlistment; that in the course of the examination of Kirk for enlistment it was disclosed that he had been induced, by threats and promises by the said Charles Davis, to enlist, and that it was agreed and understood that Davis was to aid Kirk to desert after enlistment and payment of the bounty, which was to be shared between them.

The said Davis was then regarded as a bounty-jumper. His residence was at Clifton, Canada. He had induced Kirk to come from Canada for the purpose of enlisting, obtaining bounty, and deserting. These facts were then disclosed to the provost-marshal, Scroggs, who, in obedience to the orders of Major Haddock, his superior in command, thereupon ordered the arrest of said Davis, and he was arrested and held in custody. The arrest was then immediately reported by Provost-Marshal Scroggs to General John A. Dix, then in command of the Eastern Department, who directed him to bring said Davis before a United States commissioner for examination. This was complied with, and the examination proceeded, from time to time, over a space of some ten days, during which Davis was in the provost-marshal's custody. Davis was discharged on the examination, on the ground that the offense of enticing a soldier to desert was not legally committed, because Kirk was not yet enlisted.

After the discharge, and on the 27th day of June next following, Davis sued Provost-Marshal Scroggs to recover damages for the said arrest and imprisonment. In that action a judgment was recovered by Davis in December next following, upon trial, for $1,150 damages and $62.19 costs; which judgment Provost-Marshal Scroggs compromised by paying $1,000 in cash to Davis's attorneys, besides which he paid his own expenses of defense.

The case was properly defended, and the defendant was not able to avail himself of the provisions of the act of Congress of May 11, 1866, which came too late to be of avail.

All the acts of said provost-marshal were in good faith, and in obedience to the order of his superior officers in the line of his duty, and in our opinion he ought to be indemnified in accordance with various precedents.

It is notorious that the acts of such persons as Davis, in inducing men to enlist and desert, caused great loss of men and bounties to the country, and the arrest of Davis had the effect to break up the practice in that district.

We therefore recommend that the bill be passed.

JOHN W. HICKEY.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. LANSING, from the Committee on Claims, submitted the following

REPORT:

[To accompany bill H. R. 2736.]

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2736) for the relief of John W. Hickey, of the State of Louisiana, have had the same under consideration, and respectfully submit the following report:

The facts in the case, which the committee have been able to obtain, have been furnished by the Treasury Department, where alone, so far as ascertained, they are to be found, and are as follows:

John W. Hickey, in a communication dated February 5, 1868, petitioned the Secretary of the Treasury for a reward for recovering and delivering to the Government the records of the custom-house at New Orleans, which were missing at the time of the surrender of that city and its occupancy by our forces in May, 1862.

For a long time subsequent to the surrender these records could not be found, notwithstanding the efforts of the military authorities and officers of the Treasury Department, and it was not until about the 3d day of September, 1865, when, as petitioner claims, he found them, and at once gave the information to Thomas M. Wells, esq., the naval officer at New Orleans.

Upon the assurance of Mr. Wells that he would be liberally rewarded, Mr. Hickey delivered to him the missing records, contained in seven large boxes, which were subsequently transferred to W. P. Kellogg, then collector of customs.

On the 3d day of September, 1865, the same day on which Mr. Hickey gave the information respecting these missing records to Mr. Wells, the latter, with Mr. Kellogg, gave to him a promise, in writing, that they would use every effort in their power to reward any person or persons who might deliver the books, &c., belonging to that custom-house, in proportion to the value of the same.

This agreement or promise is in the following words:

NEW ORLEANS, September 3, 1865.

The Secretary of the Treasury at Washington, Hon. Hugh McCulloch, having the power to grant rewards for the recovery of property belonging to this department, we the undersigned, officers of this department, pledge ourselves to use all influence in our power to reward any person or persons who may deliver the books, records, or other matter belonging regularly to this custom-house, in proportion to the value of the same, which we deem is all we can do in the premises, and which we think will be readily agreed to by the Secretary of the Treasury.

WM. P. KELLOGG,
Collector.
THOS. M. WELLS,
Naval Officer.

Mr. Hickey states that Mr. Kellogg and Mr. Wells conferred at different times on the subject, and that both agreed that he was entitled to compensation for his services in recovering these records, and that they would aid him in obtaining it.

The committee find that Mr. Hickey's statements are fully corroborated by the recommendations of Collector Kellogg and by a private letter from Mr. Wells to Mr. Hickey, of which the following is an extract :

FRIEND HICKEY : Your letter has been received some time past, and being anxious to close our little affair before writing, I have consequently apparently neglected you until now, and seeing no end to the matter as yet, I have concluded to write you at once and wait no longer. I have insisted on having a statement from the collector relative to the probable amount of compensation that would be allowed, and cannot, as yet, get him to come to any definite conclusion. I will not receive any small sum, unless I find it is all that is allowed.

Mr. Hickey further states :

That the sum of $10,000 would be no more than a fair reward for the recovery of the records, due regard being had to the importance of the recovery of the records, and their value since their recovery.

February 18, 1868, the Department transmitted the petition of Mr. Hickey to Collector Kellogg, calling on him for a report, who, on the 1st of April ensuing, made a full report of the facts, and recommended that Mr. Hickey be allowed the sum of $6,000 in liquidation of his claims.

The following is a copy of Collector Kellogg's report :

UNITED STATES CUSTOM-HOUSE,
Collector's Office, New Orleans, April 1, 1868.

SIR : I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of date February 18, inclosing papers relative to the claim of J. W. Hickey for information alleged to have been furnished by him, which led to the discovery, and subsequent restoration to the United States, in September, 1865, of seven large boxes, containing the records of the New Orleans custom-house, and requesting me to report upon the merits of said claim.

I respectfully state that I have delayed reporting in this case for the purpose of procuring a statement, to be transmitted with my report, from T. M. Wells, late naval officer at this port. Mr. Wells has been long absent from the city, but as he does not return, as I had hoped, I have concluded not to longer delay this report.

Some time in August, 1865, Mr. Wells, the then naval officer, came to me and informed me that a large number of the records and other papers of this custom-house were taken away by the confederate forces at the outbreak of the rebellion and secreted; that a Mr. Hickey had stated to him that he could give information which would lead to their discovery and restoration. After several interviews upon this subject, Mr. Wells brought me one of the papers which was inclosed in your letter of February 18, and which I herewith return, marked A, requesting me to sign the same, in connection with him, which I did. A short time after Mr. Hickey gave us the requisite information, whereupon I detailed an officer to take possession of the records referred to, and telegraphed the Department of the fact of their recovery, under date of September 4, 1865. The records consisted of old warehouse books, weighers' and gaugers' returns, warehouse papers, and large quantities of other papers; in all seven large boxes, relating to nearly every department of this custom-house for a series of years. I caused these records, with others that I found in a confused and disordered condition, to be properly arranged and classified, setting aside a room for that purpose called the record room, in which we have systematically arranged all records pertaining to this custom-house, in our possession. The records thus procured upon the information of Mr. Hickey of course were of considerable value to the Government, and supplied discrepancies which would have been very troublesome, and very much impaired the value of our records. I have no doubt Mr. Hickey was at considerable trouble and expense. Mr. Wells, the late naval officer, has often urged upon me the claim of Mr. Hickey, and insisted that he was fully entitled to the compensation he demanded, as will be seen by the tenor of his letter to Mr. Hickey, of date January 12, 1866, which I herewith return to the Department, marked B. I am, however, of the opinion that the claim of Mr. Hickey for the amount of $10,000 is too large, and I think $6,000 would pay him very well for his trouble and expense. I therefore respectfully recommend, if consistent with the views of the Department, that Mr. Hickey be allowed that amount in liquidation of his claim.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. P. KELLOGG,
Collector.

Hon. HUGH McCULLOCH,
Secretary of the Treasury, Washington, D. C.

A communication to Collector Kellogg from Mr. Hartley, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, dated May 4, 1868, acknowledges the receipt of their report and calls for further information in regard to Mr. Hickey's claim. This communication appears to have been received by Collector Kellogg, and by him returned to the Department, as it bears the following indorsement:

I made a report once in this case, and I respectfully refer to that report. It appears, when I was collector, Mr. Hickey gave me information which led to the recovery of a large portion of the records of the custom-house at New Orleans, which were taken therefrom when the confederates took possession of the custom-house at commencement of the war; the records were very valuable.

Very respectfully,

W. P. KELLOGG.

The case has never been acted upon or decided upon its merits by the Treasury Department; although since that time it has been repeatedly called up, it appearing that there was no appropriation applicable to its payment.

That committee find that a large portion of the books and records of the custom-house at that port were taken away by the confederate forces at the outbreak of the rebellion and secreted by them, and that they could not be found, although diligent search had been made by them by both military and Treasury officials; that in September, 1865, in pursuance of an agreement between Mr. Hickey and Collector Kellogg and Mr. Wells, the naval officer, and upon a written pledge of these officers that he should be suitably rewarded, the former gave to them the information as to the place where the missing records were secreted, and delivered them to the naval officer on the 3d day of the same month; that there were seven large boxes of these missing records recovered at this time.

Collector Kellogg states that these records were very valuable to the Government, and supplied discrepancies which would have been very troublesome, and very much impaired the records of the custom-house. He further states "that he has no doubt Mr. Hickey was at considerable trouble and expense, and that $6,000 would pay him for his trouble."

The agreement made between the claimant and the collector and naval officer was signed by these officers in their official capacity, and the objects sought to be accomplished under it being for the benefit of the Government, every other means for the same purpose having failed, and the claimant having successfully accomplished everything contemplated, the Government is bound by the action of these officers, and good faith requires that the Government should pay whatever amount these services are worth. Collector Kellogg's statement is conclusive, upon the fact that the claimant actually rendered the necessary services, and that the same were worth to the Government the sum of $6,000.

The committee find the facts as stated fully established by official reports, and do not consider that they have any right to go behind such reports to inquire as to the amount of labor performed or the aggregate of expenses incurred by the claimant in the recovery of these records.

They regard the claim as eminently just, and recommend the passage of the bill.

of the

of the

of the

of the

of the

of the

of the

of the

of the

of the

of the

of the

of the

of the

of the

of the

of the

of the

of the

of the

of the

of the

of the

of the

of the

of the

of the

of the

of the

SUGG FORT.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. LAWRENCE, from the Committee on War-Claims, submitted the following

R E P O R T :

[To accompany bill H. R. 4569.]

The Committee on War-Claims, to whom were referred the letters of the Secretary of War and Treasury relative to the claim of Sugg Fort, of Robertson County, Tennessee, and the papers accompanying the same, have considered said letters and papers, and report :

That on the 15th day of December, 1874, a bill for the relief of Sugg Fort, of Robertson County, Tennessee, was presented in the House and referred to the Committee on War-Claims; that subsequently papers relative to said case were referred to your committee during the first session of the present Congress, in which it was alleged, in substance, that from December, 1862, to May, 1863, 2,791 barrels of flour, of the value of $8.50 per barrel, amounting to $23,723.50, were taken from his mills, in said county, by United States military authorities, by direction of General Robert B. Mitchell, commanding at Nashville, Tenn., and that the said flour was used by the United States Army. The said bill (H. R. 642) and accompanying evidence was considered in the committee, and on the 29th of May the bill was unanimously ordered reported adversely to the House, and was so reported on the 22d of June, 1874. That report is as follows :

[43d Congress, 1st Session. House of Representatives. Report No. 763.]

Mr. I. W. SCUDDER, from the Committee on War-Claims, submitted the following report :

In the matter of the claim of Sugg Fort.

Sugg Fort, of the county of Robertson, in the State of Tennessee, claims that from December, 1862, to May, 1863, 2,791 barrels of flour, of the value of $8.50 per barrel, were taken from his mill in the said county by the soldiers of the United States Army, and the same were used for supplies for the Army.

Mr. Fort, the claimant, says that the flour was taken from his mill by the forces of the Government of the United States at his request, that the same might not fall into the hands of the officers of the confederate government. A large amount of ex-parte evidence has been produced by Mr. Fort, which in a general way supports his claim. There is, however, no evidence from the Commissary Department of the United States, or from any Department of the Government of the United States, which tends to show that the said flour was received by the Army of the United States, or by any accounting officer of the said Army.

In the absence of any evidence in any Department of the Government of the United States that the flour of Sugg Fort was received for the use and benefit of the forces of the Government, the report on the said claim is adverse.

The evidence on the part of the claimant is not specific, either as to the amount of flour taken nor to what officer delivered.

From the letter of the Secretary of War, it appears that the claim was originally presented to the Commissary-General of Subsistence by the attorney of Fort, on the 9th of March, 1873, and that it was returned to the attorney on the 12th of December, 1873, the Commissary-General of Subsistence declining to act on Tennessee claims presented after March 3, 1871, the date of the act creating the Commissioners of Claims. The letter of the Commissary-General is herewith given :

OFFICE COMMISSARY-GENERAL OF SUBSISTENCE,
Washington City, March 29, 1873.

SIR : Referring to the claim of Sugg Fort, of Robertson County, Tenn., (amounting to $23,723.50 for flour alleged taken for Army use December, 1862, to May, 1863,) inclosed to the Secretary of War in your letter of the 19th inst., and by him forwarded to this Office without remark, you are respectfully informed that your request that this claim may receive examination in this Office cannot be complied with.

By the act of March 3, 1871, authorizing a board of claims for States which passed an ordinance of secession, the jurisdiction of this Office in Tennessee claims, under section 3, act of July 4, 1864, was limited to those presented prior to the date of said act of March 3, 1871.

Besides, by section 4 of said act it is declared that "all claims within this act, and not presented to said board, shall be barred, and shall not be entertained by any Department of the Government without further authority from Congress."

Very respectfully, &c.,

A. B. EATON,
Commissary-General Subsistence.

CHAS. C. O'NEILL,
Washington, D. C.

A true copy.

A. E. SHIRAS,
Commissary-General Subsistence.

OFFICE COMMISSARY-GENERAL SUBSISTENCE,
December 11, 1874.

The next action taken in the prosecution of the claim was its presentation to Congress, as already stated.

The letter of the Secretary of the Treasury states the action taken upon the claim after its rejection by your committee, in the following terms:

As appears from the records of this Department, the papers in the claim were filed in the office of the Third Auditor, on the afternoon of the 30th of June last. They were forwarded from the office of the Commissary-General, recommended by that officer, who is specially charged by the law of July 4, 1864, and the joint resolution of July 28, 1866, (13 Stat. 381; 14 Stat., 370,) with the investigation of this class of claims.

The claimant, Sugg Fort, and the honorable R. R. Butler, member of Congress from Tennessee, accompanied the papers, and as shown by the affidavit of the Third Auditor, transmitted herewith, upon the urgent representations of Mr. Butler, respecting the validity of the claim, the necessity for immediate action, and the peculiar hardship of delay, after some hesitation the account was made special and stated by the Auditor, so that it might go to the Second Comptroller that afternoon.

The papers were transmitted accordingly to the Second Comptroller, and were followed by the claimant and Mr. Butler.

Such representations were again made by the latter gentleman, as, added to the favorable action of the Commissary-General and the Auditor, induced the Comptroller, after an examination of the papers, to affirm the report of the Third Auditor, carrying into effect the recommendation of the Commissary-General.

A requisition from the War Department was then obtained, which was countersigned by the Second Comptroller, registered by the Third Auditor, and such further proceedings had, under the presence of Mr. Butler, and on his request, as secured the preparation of the warrant, although the afternoon was then far advanced.

The warrant was signed about six o'clock p. m. by J. F. Hartley, esq., Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, and countersigned by the Acting First Comptroller, in accordance with the usual course of business. Mr. Hartley states that there was nothing whatever to arouse his suspicion in performing what, at most, after the action of the accounting officers, he regarded as an ordinary ministerial duty.

The warrant thus executed was presented to the Assistant Treasurer, Mr. Tuttle, without delay. He drew his draft for the money, $23,723.50, on the assistant treasurer at New York. The draft was registered the same evening by the Register of the Treasury, and was paid by the Treasurer of the United States the next day, July 1, 1874. The draft is indorsed "Sugg Fort," "R. R. Butler;" the money having been received by the latter.

Subsequently my attention was called to the case, and to the fact that the same claim had been passed upon by a committee of the House of Representatives, and rejected. Other circumstances were brought to my knowledge, which led me to inquire into the character and merit of the claim.

The result was that, on the 21st of October last, I requested Henry H. Smith, clerk of the Committee on War-Claims, House of Representatives, and Charles F. Benjamin, clerk to the Commissioners of Claims, to investigate the claim thoroughly, charging them to inquire strictly into its validity and history.

These gentlemen have performed that duty, and have sought for and obtained information from every quarter where it was likely to be had. The result of their inquiries is embodied in a report to me, signed by them, under date of December 5, 1874, and establishes, in their judgment, the fraudulent character of the claim.

In view of this report, I have felt called upon to take such legal steps as seemed to be necessary to protect and enforce the rights of the Government.

Accordingly, on the day on which the report was received, I referred it to the Solicitor of the Treasury for examination and appropriate legal action.

That officer informs me, under date of December 22, that he has completed his inquiry, and, being of the opinion that the facts developed by the investigation, on the whole, establish the fraudulent character of the claim, he has directed an action of assumpsit to be brought against the claimant, in the United States circuit court of Nashville, to recover the money.

Further civil proceedings will also be instituted against other parties, if it shall appear necessary or advisable. The claimant is understood to be solvent.

The Solicitor has also invited the attention of the United States attorney of this District to the case, with instructions to cause the same to be brought before the grand jury, at the earliest day, for inquiry and action.

I approve the action of the Solicitor, and have instructed him to see that both civil and criminal proceedings are pressed to a speedy issue, to the end that the money, if wrongfully obtained, may, if possible, be again restored to the public treasury, and the guilty parties brought to punishment.

The report of the Solicitor of the Treasury on the report of the special agents, which had been referred to him by the Secretary for examination, is herewith given, and is a review of the case as reported to the Secretary by said agents.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF THE SOLICITOR OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, D. C., December 22, 1874.

SIR: I have respectfully to inform you that I have carefully considered the report of Messrs. Smith and Benjamin, together with the accompanying affidavits, letters, and papers referring to the claim of Sugg Fort, of Robertson County, Tenn., for 2,791 barrels of flour, charged at $23,723.50, and alleged to have been taken from him for the use of the United States during the late war.

The reference of the report and papers to my Office, on the 5th instant, directed their examination and such appropriate legal action as the interests of your Department might demand.

In my judgment, based upon the facts before me, the claim is a base fraud upon the Government, allowed originally upon insufficient testimony, without due deliberation, and permitted to be hurried through the accounting offices, (upon representations since shown to be false,) and under circumstances that seem to call imperatively for fuller and more rigid investigation.

Aside from the fact that the claimant was concluded, under the opinion of the Attorney-General in Fuller's case, 4 Op., 429, by the previous adverse action of Congress, his claim appears to have had in reality but the slightest foundation; no broader, in fact, as stated in the report, "than three visits of Government wagons to the claimant's neighborhood during the war, and the appropriation on one of those visits of a small quantity of flour, the whole train consisting of but three or four wagons." Even these slender points, upon which are hung so great a claim, do not seem to be free from doubt.

It is also to be noted that this same claim, subsequently passed by the Commissary-General, was filed before that officer in March, 1873, and disallowed without examination, because he considered that he had no jurisdiction.

Under the 3d section of the act of July 4, 1864, as extended by joint resolution No.

99, first session, Thirty-ninth Congress, such jurisdiction seems clearly conferred upon him, and it is made his duty to cause the claim to be examined, and if convinced that it is just, and of the loyalty of the claimant, and that the stores have been actually received for the use of and used by the Army, then to report each case for payment to the Third Auditor of the Treasury, with a recommendation for settlement.

It must be admitted, in view of the law, that the responsibility for the payment of every such claim must rest largely upon the Commissary-General. The question of the sufficiency of the proof of loyalty, of the taking and use, is primarily for him. And yet the Third Auditor and Second Comptroller are responsible as well.

In this connection I deem it proper to call your attention especially to that portion of the report referring to the "presumption that the claimant received aid both in advance and after the presentation of the claim from some of the clerks in the employ of the Treasury and War Departments, including the suppression of information while the claim was pending before Congress, as well as during its examination and passage by the executive and accounting officers."

Besides establishing in their judgment the deliberate nature of the fraud, the gentlemen in their report point out, as we see here, some of the agencies probably employed, and fasten the responsibility directly upon the claimant, his counsel, and reflect with severity upon the member of Congress and the more prominent examining and accounting officers. In my judgment the facts developed by their investigation demand prompt application of all legal remedies, both civil and criminal, in order that justice may be done, and the facts finally and authoritatively ascertained and determined.

Fortunately the legal remedies for whatever wrongs may have been committed against the public Treasury or the laws, are plain and readily susceptible of such prompt application.

Under the authority of the case of United States vs. Fenemore, 3 Dallas, 357, the moneys having been obtained by fraud, may be sued for in assumpsit and recovered.

The claimant Fort, upon the best evidence attainable, is solvent, and as he resides in the middle district of Tennessee, suit has been ordered against him in the United States circuit court of that district.

If found advisable, additional civil proceedings will hereafter be instituted against such persons as may be shown to have knowingly shared in the spoils.

Besides the civil suit, I have invited the attention of the United States attorney of this District to the case, and have requested him to cause it to be diligently and thoroughly inquired of by the first grand jury impaneled, to the end that, if there has been, as there is too much reason to believe, an unlawful combination or conspiracy to defraud the United States, the parties may be indicted, and, if possible, speedily tried, convicted, and punished.

Criminal proceedings must be had in this District, rather than in Tennessee, for the reason that the conspiracy had its inception here, if anywhere, and certainly its conclusion. If, however, it turns out otherwise, on further inquiry, such proceedings may be instituted and maintained in the district where the conspiracy began.

In conclusion, it will be the aim of this Office to so follow up these legal proceedings, civil and criminal, as to make them a salutary warning to all persons cherishing like unlawful and corrupt designs upon the public Treasury.

Very respectfully,

BLUFORD WILSON,
Solicitor of the Treasury.

Hon. B. H. BRISTOW,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Upon examination of the whole case, and upon the evidence presented originally to the committee and obtained by the special agents appointed by the Secretary to investigate the case, your committee are satisfied that the claim is grossly fraudulent; that the claimant never had the flour, and that it was never taken as sworn to by him and other witnesses on his behalf; and that it was improperly hastened through the Department, and was allowed and paid without sufficient examination or evidence.

During the pendency of the claim before your committee at the last session of Congress, when it was proposed to the claimant that his claim should be referred to the commissioners of claims, who had authority to send agents to the locality where the claim is alleged to have accrued, with power to make more thorough and searching examination than could be made by the Commissary-General of Subsistence, the said claimant declined such proposition, insisting upon its examination by the Commissary-General.

Copies of the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, and accompanying evidence, have been forwarded, by order of the committee, to the President, the Secretary of War, the Third Auditor of the Treasury, the Commissary-General of Subsistence, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate, and the Hon. Roderick R. Butler, of Tennessee, who appears to have been largely instrumental in procuring the allowance and payment of the claim.

It will be seen from the letter of the Solicitor of the Treasury to the Secretary, under date of December 22, 1874, already quoted, that suit has been ordered to be commenced against the claimant to recover the money paid him, and the attention of the United States attorney for the District of Columbia called to the case, with request that he cause it to be diligently and thoroughly inquired of at an early day by a grand jury of the District of Columbia.

It would appear from this that the Secretary of the Treasury, upon his attention being called to the character of the claim, promptly took measures to verify or disprove the statements made in regard to its improper allowance, and upon receipt of the report of the special agents appointed by him to inquire thoroughly into the case, caused to be instituted proceedings to recover the money paid the claimant, and to punish any parties guilty of wrong in procuring the allowance or payment of said claim. So far it would seem that these proceedings have been productive of good results, and are likely to aid in preventing frauds on the Treasury hereafter, and it may be said that all has been done in this direction by the Secretary of the Treasury which seems necessary in the premises.

Your committee have considered the question whether it was advisable to ask the House to authorize an investigation touching the connection of Hon. Roderick R. Butler with the allowance and payment of this claim. Upon this subject your committee have not been able to agree in opinion as to what was desirable or expedient, it being held by a majority of the committee that the legal measures taken by the Secretary of the Treasury would accomplish all that could be accomplished by an investigation by a committee of Congress.

Your committee, however, unanimously agree as to the fraudulent character of the claim, and that the principal witness, General Robert B. Mitchell, has sworn falsely in his statements relating to this claim; that he has tried to induce others to swear falsely, and has acted as attorney, witness, lobbyist, and generally as a procurer of false testimony, whereby this fraudulent claim was allowed and paid.

Your committee report back the letters of the Secretary of War and of the Treasury, and papers transmitted therewith, and ask that they be printed as Appendixes A and B to this report, without recommendation on the subject of an investigation by a committee of this House.

Your committee believe that there are evils in the existing method of examining and settling claims in the Executive Departments of the Government, especially claims growing out of the late war, which should be remedied. There should be more thorough and searching inquiry as to details, especially of evidence contemporaneous with the claim. There should be further inquiry as to loyalty, and some means devised by which other than purely ex-parte evidence can be obtained concerning the similar claims, than the method now pursued in the Executive Departments, and there should be further publication of the claim before examination, and even before payment.

Your committee report H. R. bill No. 4569, which is as follows, (see foot-note.)*

Your committee have not been able to agree to all its provisions, but they report it for future consideration without recommendation, and ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the documents referred to it in connection with the claim of Sugg Fort.

ADDENDUM.

The foregoing report is so drawn that it encountered no opposition from any member of the committee. Some members of the committee, including the undersigned, thought it due to truth, to justice, to the Government, and the parties interested, that there should have been a further investigation as indicated in the report.

The claimant, Sugg Fort, was paid a large claim on the recommendation of the Commissary-General's Office some years prior to this. A

*A BILL to prevent abuses in the prosecution of claims against the Government.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That no account or claim against the United States, exceeding one hundred dollars, which shall not have been presented to the proper officer authorized to receive, audit, and examine the same, or which, having been so presented, has not been paid within two years after the same accrued, shall be audited, examined, or paid until the claimant, his agent or attorney, shall have given public notice in a newspaper in general circulation in the locality where the account or claim accrued of the presentation thereof, with the title of the officer authorized to examine the same, in such form and with such other particulars as may be prescribed by the head of the department in which the same may be presented; and no such account or claim shall be paid until at least four months after the same has been examined and the balance duly certified.

SEC. 2. That no account or claim against the United States shall be received, audited, or examined by any officer thereof until the claimant, his agent, or attorney shall present therewith an affidavit stating that said account or claim is just, and is justly due or owing to the claimant from the United States; that there is no set-off against the same, and that no payment has been made thereon except as thereon credited, and showing whether such account or claim, or any part thereof, has ever previously been presented to any department or officer of the Government, or to either House of Congress, and, if so, when and what action has been taken thereon, and that the same has never been otherwise or at any other time so presented.

Said affidavit shall only be made by the agent or attorney when, for some reason shown by affidavit satisfactory to the officer charged with the duty to receive, audit, or examine such account or claim, it is not practicable that it should be made by the claimant personally.

SEC. 3. That it shall be unlawful for any Senator, Representative, or Delegate in Congress, or other officer, clerk, or employé of the Government, or any clerk or employé in any department or bureau, or in any office authorized by law, or the clerk of any committee of either House of Congress, or of any joint committee of the two Houses, otherwise than in the performance of a duty authorized or required by act of Congress, either while in office or within four years thereafter, to counsel, advise, advocate, or urge the payment or allowance of any account or claim, or other action or proceeding in favor thereof, against the United States, either before or to any member or committee of either House of Congress, or any joint committee of the two Houses, or any officer of the Government; but nothing herein shall apply to pension claims, or to any such Senator, Representative, officer, or clerk the right to give testimony, in writing, on the request of the head of any department in which any such account or claim may be pending, or to any member of any committee in the performance of any duty as such, nor to any account or claim held by any such Senator, Representative, Delegate, officer, or clerk in his own right.

Every person who shall offend against or violate any provision of this section shall be deemed guilty of a crime, and on conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding two thousand dollars, or imprisoned at hard labor for a term not exceeding five years, or both, at the discretion of the court.

And if any officer authorized by law to receive, examine, or certify the amount of any account or claim, shall so certify, or recommend, or advise payment thereof without a careful examination thereof, and of all evidence filed or presented in support thereof, he shall in like manner be liable to fine and imprisonment as aforesaid.

portion of the committee, including the undersigned, believed that the claim referred to in the report was so fraudulent in its character and so inadequately supported by evidence, as to call for a more decided disapproval of the conduct of some of the officers through whose agency it was allowed and paid, than is expressed in the report. It is now too late in the session to secure legislation on the subject, but it is believed this investigation, and the valuable report of the gentlemen appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury, Messrs. Smith and Benjamin, will aid in securing valuable legislation hereafter.

If public notice should be required for a given time before payment of the allowance of claims by the Commissioner of Claims, it would occasionally detect fraudulent claims.

WM. LAWRENCE.
J. ALLEN BARBER.
A. HERR SMITH.
W. S. HOLMAN.

The first of these is the fact that the report was not submitted to the committee until the 10th of the month of June, 1891, although it was prepared in the month of May, 1891. The second is the fact that the report was not submitted to the committee until the 10th of the month of June, 1891, although it was prepared in the month of May, 1891. The third is the fact that the report was not submitted to the committee until the 10th of the month of June, 1891, although it was prepared in the month of May, 1891.

The fourth is the fact that the report was not submitted to the committee until the 10th of the month of June, 1891, although it was prepared in the month of May, 1891. The fifth is the fact that the report was not submitted to the committee until the 10th of the month of June, 1891, although it was prepared in the month of May, 1891. The sixth is the fact that the report was not submitted to the committee until the 10th of the month of June, 1891, although it was prepared in the month of May, 1891.

The seventh is the fact that the report was not submitted to the committee until the 10th of the month of June, 1891, although it was prepared in the month of May, 1891. The eighth is the fact that the report was not submitted to the committee until the 10th of the month of June, 1891, although it was prepared in the month of May, 1891. The ninth is the fact that the report was not submitted to the committee until the 10th of the month of June, 1891, although it was prepared in the month of May, 1891.

The tenth is the fact that the report was not submitted to the committee until the 10th of the month of June, 1891, although it was prepared in the month of May, 1891. The eleventh is the fact that the report was not submitted to the committee until the 10th of the month of June, 1891, although it was prepared in the month of May, 1891. The twelfth is the fact that the report was not submitted to the committee until the 10th of the month of June, 1891, although it was prepared in the month of May, 1891.

APPENDIX A.

[H. Ex. Doc. No. 34, 43d Congress, 2d session.]

Letter from the Secretary of War, relative to the claim of Sugg Fort, of Robertson County, Tennessee.

DECEMBER 16, 1874, referred to the Committee on War-Claims and ordered to be printed.

WAR DEPARTMENT, December 14, 1874.

The Secretary of War has the honor to transmit to the House of Representatives, in compliance with resolution of the 8th instant, letter of the Commissary-General of Subsistence relative to the claim of Sugg Fort, of Robertson County, Tennessee; also, copies of such papers as are on file in this Department, showing the action had in the claim.

W. W. BELKNAP,
Secretary of War.

OFFICE COMMISSARY-GENERAL OF SUBSISTENCE,
Washington City, December 11, 1874.

SIR: The inclosed resolution of House of Representatives of date December 8, 1874, (received from the War Department on the 10th instant,) calling for a report on and papers in the claim of Sugg Fort, of Robertson County, Tennessee, is herewith respectfully returned, accompanied by such original papers as are on file in this Office in the case, and by transcripts from the records of "letters sent," showing the action had on the claim.

The official copies of the claim and evidence as received at this Office June 27, 1874, and on which the allowance of the claim was based, were transmitted to the Third Auditor June 30, 1874.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. E. SHIRAS,
Commissary-General of Subsistence.

General WM. W. BELKNAP,
Secretary of War.

OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONERS OF CLAIMS,
Washington, D. C., May 5, 1874.

[Memorandum.]

SUGG FORT.

Above is the name of a person, believed to be from Arkansas, who has a claim pending before the Government, which is understood to be for commissary stores, and which Colonel Irwin, chief engineer of Texas Pacific Railroad, informs Representative John Coburn, of Indiana, is wholly fraudulent.

No claim before Southern Claims Commission, and this memorandum is therefore circulated among offices of the Commissary-General, Quartermaster-General, and Third Auditor.

OFFICE COMMISSARY-GENERAL SUBSISTENCE, December 11, 1874.

A true copy:

A. E. SHIRAS,
Commissary-General Subsistence.

OFFICE COMMISSARY-GENERAL OF SUBSISTENCE,
Washington City, May 18, 1874.

SIR: In compliance with your request of this date, I have the honor to inform you that, by letter of March 19, 1873, Charles C. O'Neill, attorney, submitted a claim in favor of Sugg Fort for 2,791 barrels of flour, at $8.50 per barrel = $23,723.50, alleged to have been taken in Robertson County, Tennessee, from December, 1862, to May, 1863, for Army use. No receipts or vouchers. No officer was designated as the one taking the flour.

This claim was returned to O'Neill December 12, 1873, this Office declining to act on Tennessee claims presented after March 3, 1871, the date of the act creating the commission of claims.

Very respectfully, &c.,

A. E. SHIRAS,
Commissary-General of Subsistence.

Hon. SECRETARY OF WAR, Present.

OFFICE COMMISSARY-GENERAL OF SUBSISTENCE,
December 11, 1874.

True copy :

A. E. SHIRAS
Commissary-General of Subsistence.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 27, 1874.

DEAR SIR: The Commissary-General has charge of my account and papers for commissary supplies taken and used by the United States troops in the late war. Will you please do me the kindness to request him to consider and investigate my claim as soon as practicable, and much oblige,

Yours, most respectfully,

SUGG FORT.

General BELKNAP.

JUNE 27, 1874.—War Department refers letter of 27th instant from Sugg Fort, asking that the Commissary-General of Subsistence be requested to investigate his claim as soon as practicable.

The Commissary-General can examine this claim and report upon it, if action thereon is proper and not to the prejudice of other claimants whose papers have been previously filed.

WM. W. BELKNAP,
Secretary of War.

JUNE 27, 1874.

OFFICE COMMISSARY-GENERAL SUBSISTENCE,
December 11, 1874.

A true copy :

A. E. SHIRAS,
Commissary-General Subsistence.

OFFICE COMMISSARY-GENERAL OF SUBSISTENCE,
Washington City, June 30, 1874.

SIR: The inclosed claim of Sugg Fort, of Robertson County, Tennessee, having been examined under the third section of an act of Congress, entitled "An act to restrict the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims," &c., approved July 4, 1864, is respectfully transmitted to you with the recommendation that claimant be paid the sum of $23,723.50 for 2,791 barrels of flour, at $8.50 per barrel, taken from December, 1862, to May, 1863, for Army use.

Hon. R. R. Butler advised.

Very respectfully, &c.,

A. E. SHIRAS,
Commissary-General Subsistence.

THIRD AUDITOR OF THE TREASURY.

OFFICE COMMISSARY-GENERAL SUBSISTENCE,
December 11, 1874.

A true copy :

A. E. SHIRAS.

OFFICE COMMISSARY-GENERAL SUBSISTENCE,
Washington City, June 30, 1874.

SIR: The claim of Sugg Fort, of Robertson County, Tennessee, for payment for subsistence-stores valued at $23,723.50, alleged to have been taken on or about December, 1862, to May, 1863, for Army use, has been examined and allowed under the third section of the act of July 4, 1864, in the above sum, and this day transmitted to the Third Auditor of the Treasury for payment.

Very respectfully, &c.,

A. E. SHIRAS,
Commissary-General Subsistence.

Hon. R. R. BUTLER, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

OFFICE COMMISSARY-GENERAL SUBSISTENCE,
December 11, 1874.

True copy:

A. E. SHIRAS,
Commissary-General Subsistence.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, THIRD AUDITOR'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., July 17, 1874.

GENERAL: I have the honor to request that the papers in the claim of Sugg Fort, transmitted to you a short time since, be returned to this Office as soon [as] your examination thereof is concluded, for the purpose of enabling me to make a special report thereon to the honorable Secretary of the Treasury.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ALLAN RUTHERFORD,
Auditor.

General A. E. SHIRAS,
Commissary-General Subsistence, U. S. A.

OFFICE COMMISSARY-GENERAL SUBSISTENCE,
December 11, 1874.

A true copy:

A. E. SHIRAS,
Commissary-General Subsistence.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, THIRD AUDITOR'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., July 17, 1874.

GENERAL: In compliance with your verbal request to-day, I herewith inclose copy of communication of Hon. William Lawrence to me, under date of July 6, 1874; also copy of extract accompanying said letter relative to claim of Sugg Fort.

These papers were referred to this Office by Assistant Secretary Hartley on the 11th instant, with request for a report on said claim.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ALLAN RUTHERFORD,
Auditor.

A. E. SHIRAS,
Commissary-General of Subsistence, U. S. A.

OFFICE COMMISSARY-GENERAL SUBSISTENCE,
December 11, 1874.

A true copy:

A. E. SHIRAS,
Commissary-General Subsistence.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., July 6, 1874.

Hon. ALLAN RUTHERFORD,
Third Auditor:

I inclose extract from a letter I have just received, to which I call your attention, and respectfully suggest that you call attention of Commissary-General also to it. It comes from a gentleman who certainly has some opportunity to know something of the claim. How it got taken up and put through of course I do not know.

The claim was rejected by the Committee on War-Claims.

Respectfully, &c.,

WM. LAWRENCE.

OFFICE COMMISSARY-GENERAL SUBSISTENCE,
December 11, 1874.

A true copy :

A. E. SHIRAS,
Commissary-General Subsistence.

[Extract.]

WASHINGTON, July 2, 1874.

The claim of Sugg Fort, which you remember we reported adversely, was yesterday paid in full, amounting to some $23,700, on recommendation of the Commissary-General. You remember how Fort and his friends resisted its reference to the Commissioners of Claims, and well he might. In my judgment there was never presented to Congress a more outrageously fraudulent claim than this, and the circumstances connected with its being put through the Departments fully justify an examination by Congress or a committee thereof. In spite of the fact that an officer of the Quartermaster-General's Department, Colonel Irwin, who was on duty at Nashville, and knew all about the facts at the time, writes under date of January 8, 1872, a confidential letter to General Eaton, commissary of subsistence, pronouncing the claim a fraud, and in spite of the fact that other officers on duty there state that the proof is of the most shadowy character, the claim is rushed through the Departments within ten days after adjournment of Congress and after the claim had been rejected by Congress, and the facts appear in the papers. Certainly the boast of * that it cost * $1,000 to "fix up" certain * * * in the Departments, and the character of the man and of * * witness * * * , fully justify an investigation, and I hope you will see this winter that it is had. I have been carefully through the papers at the Third Auditor's Office this morning, and the case is certainly and beyond doubt a fraud. Fort says that * * * remained here to put his case through, and it has been followed and watched at every step.

* * *

OFFICE COMMISSARY-GENERAL SUBSISTENCE,
December 11, 1874.

A true copy :

A. E. SHIRAS,
Commissary-General Subsistence.

Personal.

FORTY-THIRD CONGRESS, UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., November 12, 1874.

MY DEAR SIR : I called on you to-day in regard to the Sugg Fort claim, but you were out. I left with Colonel Barriger the statements of the Second Comptroller and Third Auditor in relation to the case for your information, with the view of enabling you to prepare a statement, to be made a part of our report to the Secretary of the Treasury.

I do not concur with Mr. Benjamin's theory that it is necessary to call upon the Secretary of War for a statement from you. That official has nothing to do with the case, as it is presented to us for examination.

We are instructed to make a specific inquiry as to a particular transaction. The claimant makes a statement in reference to your individual action as to the course determined on by you from the papers presented by him.

He says that he put in the case a certain memorandum-book kept by his miller, Edwards, giving the number of barrels of flour alleged to have been taken from the claimant's mill. No such book appears in the papers in the Third Auditor's Office, and other testimony shows that no such book was kept.

The story of Fort from beginning to end we have found to be a tissue of lies, and the claim is as perfectly a fabricated case as could be presented.

I see just how you have been imposed on by Fort and his friend, Mr. R. R. Butler, (who is placed in quite as bad a light as is Mr. Fort,) and I want therefore to give you this opportunity to make a statement showing the history of the case so far as it relates to your office; its original presentation; return; second presentation; the reasons that induced you to take cognizance of the case after having once decided that you had no jurisdiction; as to Butler's statements; and, in fine, anything bearing on the case.

It is probable that the claim will have congressional investigation this winter, and I desire that our report shall be as full and complete as possible.

Your reply may be handed to my associate, Mr. Benjamin, with the statements of the Comptroller and Auditor, as I leave for Florida to-night, and shall not return for two weeks.

Very respectfully, yours,

HARRY H. SMITH,
Clerk Committee on War-Claims, Special Agent, &c.

General A. E. SHIRAS.

OFFICE COMMISSARY-GENERAL SUBSISTENCE,
December 11, 1874.

A true copy:

A. E. SHIRAS,
Commissary-General Subsistence.

OFFICE COMMISSARY-GENERAL OF SUBSISTENCE,
Washington City, November 13, 1874.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 12th instant in regard to the Sugg Fort claim, recommended for payment by me on the 30th of June last, I would respectfully inform you that this claim was first received at this Office March 21, 1873, by reference from the Secretary of War, with letter from Charles C. O'Neill, dated March 19, 1873.

On the 29th of March, 1873, Mr. O'Neill was informed by my predecessor that the claim could not be examined in this Office, being barred by the act of March 3, 1871.

That act had been differently construed by the different authorities, and the Quartermaster-General, under a decision of the Judge-Advocate-General "that there was concurrent jurisdiction by the Southern Claims Commission and the Quartermaster-General and the Commissary-General of Subsistence," was still receiving and acting on Tennessee claims.

On the 24th of June, 1874, I was called upon by Mr. Sugg Fort and the Hon. R. R. Butler, and after some conversation in relation to the claim I was urged to take it up and act upon it. I stated that I had not had time to examine the act of March 3, 1871, but would do so whenever I had an opportunity. The injury and loss to Mr. Fort was pleaded, and I consented the papers should be informally left with me, and if an opportunity offered I would look at them. That evening I read them over carefully. There was no memorandum-book giving the number of barrels alleged to have been taken from the claimant's mill. Such a document must inevitably have attracted my attention. The papers in the case were copies of evidence before the Committee on War-Claims made up in book-form, and certified by the Clerk of the House of Representatives. There was nothing to show that there were any omissions.

Several times within a few days I received calls from Mr. Fort and Colonel Butler, and, although I cannot recall with certainty any language to that effect, I was under the impression the claim had not been reached by the committee. Even without any such language being used, it would never have occurred to me that a claim backed by a member of Congress could be presented to this Office when the member knew that an adverse report had been made upon it by a committee of the House.

In a few days I had the opportunity and did examine the act of March 3, 1871, in connection with that of July 4, 1864, &c., and concluded that the act of March 3, 1871, did not relieve the Commissary-General of Subsistence from the examination of claims received after its date, but, as stated by the Judge-Advocate-General, there was "concurrent jurisdiction."

On the 30th of June I took up the Sugg Fort claim, and again perused the testimony carefully. The evidence of Mr. Fort was clear, although his motives for not receiving vouchers were not those which would weigh with business men. General Mitchell confirmed his testimony, and the case took the form of a confidential matter between the commanding officer at Nashville and Mr. Fort. Two laborers at the mill corroborated the testimony in a general way, and the miller swore positively to the number of barrels of flour taken as shown by his books. The character of Mr. Fort was vouched for by very respectable names, and the case seemed clear under the law, as it was not to be supposed but that the flour was distributed by the commanding general for the use of the troops.

I therefore directed the clerk in charge of the claim-branch to make up the brief of the case, enter it, and bring it to me. On perusing the brief I found reference to a confidential letter of Colonel Irvin, in charge of transportation at Nashville at the time the transaction is said to have occurred, dated January 8, 1872, which I sent for and read. In view of this case being a confidential one between the commanding officer and Mr. Fort, it was the duty of the former to protect the latter and to preserve secrecy in the whole transaction, and if he did this the officer in charge of transportation had as little chance to know anything of the transaction as any other officer. This letter produced no effect on my opinion, and the claim was therefore sent to the Third Auditor with my recommendation for its payment. Colonel Butler, in accordance with his request, was advised. That evening I was called upon by Colonel Butler and Mr. Tanner, requisition-clerk of the War Department. They had with them the certificates of the Third Auditor and Second Comptroller, and I accompanied them and Mr. Fort, (who had remained in the carriage,) to my office, where I had a "request" for a requisition on the Secretary of War drawn up, and which I signed, and placed it in the hands of Mr. Tanner.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. E. SHIRAS,

Commissary-General Subsistence.

Mr. H. H. SMITH, Clerk Committee on War-Claims, Special Agent, &c.

OFFICE COMMISSARY-GENERAL OF SUBSISTENCE,
December 11, 1874.

A true copy :

A. E. SHIRAS,

Commissary-General Subsistence.

OFFICE COMMISSARY-GENERAL OF SUBSISTENCE,
Washington City, March 29, 1873.

SIR: Referring to the claim of Sugg Fort of Robertson County, Tennessee, (amounting to $23,723.50 for flour alleged taken for Army use December, 1862, to May, 1863,) inclosed to the Secretary of War in your letter of the 19th inst., and by him forwarded to this Office without remark, you are respectfully informed that your request that this claim may receive examination in this Office cannot be complied with.

By the act of March 3, 1871, authorizing a board of claims for States which passed an ordinance of secession, the jurisdiction of this Office in Tennessee claims under section 3, act of July 4, 1864, was limited to those presented prior to the date of said act of March 3, 1871.

Besides, by section 4 of said act it is declared that "all claims within this act, and not presented to said board, shall be barred, and shall not be entertained by any Department of the Government without further authority from Congress."

Very respectfully, &c.,

A. B. EATON,

Commissary-General Subsistence.

CHAS. C. O'NEILL,

Washington, D. C.

A true copy :

A. E. SHIRAS,

Commissary-General Subsistence.

OFFICE COMMISSARY-GENERAL SUBSISTENCE,
December 11, 1874.

APPENDIX B.

Letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, in answer to the resolution of the House of December 8, 1874, in relation to the claim of Sugg Fort, of Robertson County, Tennessee.

JANUARY 11, 1875.—Referred to the Committee on War-Claims.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

Washington, D. C., January 7, 1875.

SIR: In response to the resolution passed by the House of Representatives on the 8th ultimo, calling upon me for certain information in relation to the claim of Sugg Fort, of Robertson County, Tennessee, I have the honor respectfully to state that the claim in question was for 2,791 barrels of flour, charged at $23,723.50, and alleged to have been taken from the mills or premises of the claimant in Robertson County, Tennessee, about December, 1862, for the use of the United States, under the orders of Brigadier-General Robert B. Mitchell, then commanding at Nashville.

As appears from the records of this Department, the papers in the claim were filed in the Office of the Third Auditor, on the afternoon of the 30th of June last. They were forwarded from the Office of the Commissary-General, recommended by that officer, who is specially charged by the law of July 4, 1864, and the joint resolution of July 28, 1866, (13 Stat., 381; 14 Stat., 370,) with the investigation of this class of claims.

The claimant, Sugg Fort, and the honorable R. R. Butler, member of Congress from Tennessee, accompanied the papers, and, as shown by the affidavit of the Third Auditor, transmitted herewith upon the urgent representations of Mr. Butler, respecting the validity of the claim, the necessity for immediate action, and the peculiar hardship of delay, after some hesitation the account was made special and stated by the Auditor, so that it might go to the Second Comptroller that afternoon.

The papers were transmitted accordingly to the Second Comptroller, and were followed by the claimant and Mr. Butler.

Such representations were again made by the latter gentleman as, added to the favorable action of the Commissary-General and the Auditor, induced the Comptroller, after an examination of the papers, to affirm the report of the Third Auditor, carrying into effect the recommendation of the Commissary-General.

A requisition from the War Department was then obtained, which was countersigned by the Second Comptroller, registered by the Third Auditor, and such further proceedings had, under the presence of Mr. Butler, and on his request, as secured the preparation of the warrant, although the afternoon was then far advanced.

The warrant was signed about six o'clock p. m. by J. F. Hartley, esq., Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, and countersigned by the Acting First Comptroller, in accordance with the usual course of business. Mr. Hartley states that there was nothing whatever to arouse his suspicion in performing what, at most, after the action of the accounting officers, he regarded as an ordinary ministerial duty.

The warrant thus executed was presented to the Assistant Treasurer, Mr. Tuttle, without delay. He drew his draft for the money, $23,723.50, on the assistant treasurer at New York. The draft was registered the same evening by the Register of the Treasury, and was paid by the Treasurer of the United States the next day, July 1, 1874. The draft is indorsed "Sugg Fort," "R. R. Butler;" the money having been received by the latter.

Subsequently my attention was called to the case, and to the fact that the same claim had been passed upon by a committee of the House of Representatives, and rejected. Other circumstances were brought to my knowledge, which led me to inquire into the character and merit of the claim.

The result was that, on the 21st of October last, I requested Henry H. Smith, clerk of the Committee on War-Claims, House of Representatives, and Charles F. Benjamin, clerk to the Commissioners of Claims, to investigate the claim thoroughly, charging them to inquire strictly into its validity and history.

These gentlemen have performed that duty, and have sought for and obtained information from every quarter where it was likely to be had. The result of their inquiries is embodied in a report to me, signed by them, under date of December 5, 1874, and establishes, in their judgment, the fraudulent character of the claim.

In view of this report, I have felt called upon to take such legal steps as seemed to be necessary to protect and enforce the rights of the Government.

Accordingly, on the day on which the report was received, I referred it to the Solicitor of the Treasury, for examination and appropriate legal action.

That officer informs me, under date of December 22, that he has completed his inquiry, and, being of the opinion that the facts developed by the investigation, on the whole, establish the fraudulent character of the claim, he has directed an action of assumpsit to be brought against the claimant, in the United States circuit court at Nashville, to recover the money.

Further civil proceedings will also be instituted against other parties, if it shall appear necessary or advisable. The claimant is understood to be solvent.

The Solicitor has also invited the attention of the United States attorney of this District to the case, with instructions to cause the same to be brought before the grand jury, at the earliest day, for inquiry and action.

I approve the action of the Solicitor, and have instructed him to see that both civil and criminal proceedings are pressed to a speedy issue, to the end that the money, if wrongfully obtained, may, if possible, be again restored to the public treasury, and the guilty parties brought to punishment.

I transmit herewith the report of Messrs. Smith and Benjamin, with the evidence taken by them; also affidavit of the Third Auditor, the statement, in writing, of the Second Comptroller, and copies of the evidence filed in support of the claim.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully,

B. H. BRISTOW,
Secretary.

Hon. JAMES G. BLAINE,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

REPORT OF MESSRS. SMITH AND BENJAMIN TO THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.WASHINGTON, D. C.,
December 5, 1874.

SIR: We had the honor to receive, on the 21st of October last, your letter of that date, authorizing and requesting us to inquire strictly into the validity and justice of a certain claim of Sugg Fort, of Robertson County, Tennessee, for 2,791 barrels of flour, charged at $23,723.50, alleged to have been taken from him for the use of the United States during the late war, and which claim, having received the favorable action of the Commissary-General, the Third Auditor, and the Second Comptroller, was paid in full on the 30th of June last.

The evidence presented by the claimant alleged that he was the owner of two mills in Robertson County, Tennessee, of which the mill connected with the claim was of the capacity of 120 barrels of flour a day, and distant some thirty miles from Nashville; that he was a Union man, voting twice against separation and remaining loyal throughout the war; that, in the fall of 1862 transportation was so meager and the country so infested with guerrillas that he could not send his flour to market, and accumulated and stored his flour on his premises until he had over 3,000 barrels at the end of November, 1862; that, being subjected to petty spoliation by the guerrillas, and fearing that the confederates might re-occupy the country long enough to seize his flour and destroy his buildings, he secretly started on horseback to Nashville on the night of December 3, 1862, and there seeking out a Union friend, now dead, was taken to the post commander, Brig. Gen. Robert B. Mitchell, to whom he explained his situation, and tendered his flour, coupling his offer with the condition that for his own protection against the vengeance of the guerrillas and his rebel neighbors, the appropriation of the flour was to be so made as to wear the aspect of a seizure against his will and consent; that, for the same precautionary reason, he declined to accept receipts or vouchers, being anxious to keep up the appearance of having no part or wish in the use of his flour by the Union Army, and being willing to take his chances of getting pay without vouchers or receipts, after the war, if the Union cause should triumph; that his offer was accepted, the more gladly because, at the time, Army supplies were very scarce, owing to the frequent cutting of the railroad to Louisville and the blockade of the river by guerrillas and rebel cavalry; that, under the arrangement made, wagon-trains were sent out by General Mitchell to claimant's mill, from time to time, over a period extending from December 6, 1862, to the following May, which trains brought in and reported personally to General Mitchell some 2,700 or 2,800 barrels of flour; that an account of the flour taken was kept by one Wiley Edwards, one of the claimant's millers, and his book-keeper; that, at the time of his visit to General Mitchell, the claimant also gave information which led to the seizure of over 40,000 pounds of bacon collected for conveyance into the confederate lines; that he was also accustomed to give valuable information concerning rebel movements and the status of his neighbors; his name was sufficient evidence, where those asking military favors brought his recommendation to the commanding officer, and that his mills were the only mills, in his section of the country, allowed to run, the others being owned or controlled by persons in sympathy with the confederacy.

The foregoing narrative of the case is contained in two affidavits executed at Washington on the 4th day of May last; one by the claimant, and the other by General Robert B. Mitchell, the former commandant at Nashville.

In his affidavit, just referred to, General Mitchell swore that he assumed command at Nashville in November, 1862; whereas he did not take command till December 10th, four days after the first lot of flour had been taken, according to a deposition of Wiley Edwards, a miller, who swore that he kept a written account of all the flour taken.

2. The claimant swore that his visit to General Mitchell was on December 4, 1862, as taken from his books, in 1870, and General Mitchell said early in December; but if the visit occurred at all, it must have been late in December, and could not have been to make preceding arrangements for the taking of flour which had already been taken in part.

3. General Mitchell speaks of the claimant's "mills," but the fact is that he owned only a part of one mill, as shown by the testimony of his cousin and partner, Colonel E. A. Fort. On hearing this testimony, the claimant explained that the second mill was the one formerly belonging to his wife's father, which he bought from her brother without recording the deed, and that the deed was filed at Washington with the papers in his wheat-claim. There is nothing in those papers to show that the deed was ever filed, or that it had any relevancy to that case.

4. General Mitchell claims to remember the quantity of flour, and confirmed the claimant's account of 2,791 barrels by swearing the quantity, as remembered, to be 2,700 or 2,800 barrels. His only means of knowing the quantity, he said, were the personal reports of successive officers, going out after flour at irregular intervals extending over six months, and all this eleven years before the date of his affidavit.

5. General Mitchell and the claimant both testify very strongly to the claimant's loyalty, but the evidence and information obtained by us show conclusively that, in attempting to do more than to say that, after the conquest of Middle Tennessee, the claimant submitted to the national authority, as did the majority of his fellow-confederates, the claimant and his witness perjure themselves. The evidence obtained and submitted herewith disproves the story of General Mitchell as to the loyal services of the claimant and his loyal standing at headquarters, and, in short, there is a complete breakdown of all his pretended facts in this connection. We call particular attention to the testimony of Morris J. Moran upon this topic, for the purpose of saying that we have good reason to know that the witness would rather aid than injure the claimant, and that his damaging statements are not spiteful or malicious. The other witnesses are not subject to impeachment, and we, therefore, make no comment upon them.

6. The affidavits of the claimant and General Mitchell, executed at the same time and place, were substituted before the Committee on War-Claims for an earlier statement of the claimant, in which there was not even a suggestion of such a state of facts as these two contemporaneous affidavits allege.

7. The claimant's representations as to the capacity of his mill are contradicted by the accompanying testimony of Samuel Watson, William Weatherford, Levi Weatherford, (colored,) Colonel Fort, the claimant's partner, and John E. Pride and Wiley Edwards, his millers. Instead of being of a capacity of 120 barrels a day—by which is presumed a working day of ten or twelve hours—the capacity was not more than half as much.

8. The alleged meagerness of transportation facilities is not true of the time when General Mitchell was in command and the flour is alleged to have been taken, though it was true as regards railroad transportation before that time. But the accompanying evidence abundantly shows that transportation by wagon was all the time possible and profitable.

9. The alleged danger of wagon transportation, which led to the asserted accumulation of 3,000 barrels of flour, is disproved by the fact that neighboring millers were sending flour to market all the time by wagons and were never molested. On this point we made an exhaustive search and inquiry, and have removed beyond question the proposition that there was nothing like as much danger to be apprehended from molestation by guerrillas on the road, as from the accumulation of such a large quantity of flour at a single mill, in a locality close to the scene of actual war, and constantly liable to be traversed and ravaged by hostile forces.

10. The statement of the claimant, that he was compelled to hide himself, to escape personal danger as a Union man, when the guerrillas came about, fails of either direct or circumstantial support, though we have made it a subject of investigation, and have obtained evidence bearing conclusively against it.

11. The allegation of the claimant, that he went to Nashville to secretly dispose of his flour to the Federal authorities, and the allegation of General Mitchell, that secret arrangements were made by him with the claimant to that end, are, of course, the bases of the whole case, and the claim must stand or fall accordingly as they are confirmed or disproved. The first lot of flour was taken December 6th, as the miller finds from his "memorandum-book," and the claimant started for Nashville to make arrangements for the taking of the flour, December 3, as he knows by an examination of his books in 1870, when the claim was prepared. The officer whom he saw was the military commander at Nashville, and his own affidavit and that of General Mitchell show that it was General Mitchell, and him alone, with whom the claimant had his interview and made his arrangement. Yet, if he saw any officer at all who was in command at Nashville, and had the authority and means to arrange for the seizure of his flour before December 10, it was not General Mitchell, and if he saw any such officer after December 10, the interview and the purpose of it are falsely stated in the two affidavits. General Mitchell has withdrawn his statement that he was in command before the 10th of December.

If the miller should correct his statement of the date of the first seizure, he would have either to abandon the important allegation that he kept an account of the flour as it was taken, or explain how he is able to correct the recorded dates of the account by memory after eleven years. If the claimant corrects his story of the date of his visit to Nashville, he must abandon his assertion of consulting his books in 1870, when he made up his claim, or show how he is able, in 1874, to correct the records of twelve years before. The person who took him to General Mitchell was E. M. Reynolds, now dead, and whose residence even the claimant does not remember, but thinks he found him at the State capitol at an hour so early as to exclude the probability of his being there. His miller, Johnson, whom he told of his intended visit to Nashville and its object, is also dead. The claimant has since testified that he told nobody but his wife, and she denied all knowledge of it when questioned, at the claimant's request, by one of ourselves. Two of the claimant's employes, Edwards and Waters, said that they would not believe that the claimant went to Nashville on horseback unless he so told them himself.

The claimant testifies that though he was accustomed to consult his father, as well as his cousin and partner, in all important matters, he did not consult them before going to Nashville to ask the military authorities to seize his flour without paying or receipting for it, and had not told them, even up to the time of our visit to Robertson County, five months after the claim had been paid. He also testifies that though he went to Nashville by night in a secret manner, concealing his features when liable to be seen, he returned by day, in an open manner, riding with the officer at the head of the train sent out to begin the removal of his flour. The claimant's attorney, F. S. Sowers, testifies that when the claimant first spoke to him about presenting a claim, in 1869 or 1870, he did not know whether it was General Negley or General Mitchell that had caused his flour to be taken, and that General Mitchell did not know anything about it at first, though four or five years afterward he tells the claimant that the circumstance is one he shall never forget. Particular attention is called to the accompanying statement of Mr. Sowers, as indicating, first, his intimate connection, from beginning to end, with what is now shown to be a premeditated fraud upon the Government; secondly, the uncertainty that existed in the earlier stages of the case as to what should be set up in evidence and who could be got to prove it; and, thirdly, the deliberate intention of the witness to trifle with and impede the investigation ordered by yourself into the merits of the claim, and the fortunate defeat of that intention by his excessive vanity and garrulity, and the impossibility of conforming the details of such a long statement to the details of the unseen statements of his confederates. If Mr. Sowers had contented himself with simply declining to make any statement, we should have contented ourselves by simply reporting and regretting such declination, but in view of what he really did do, we feel bound to say that the propriety of longer allowing him the privileges that have been misused in fraud and contempt of the Treasury Department, ought to be immediately considered.

12. The claimant's mention of his miller, Edwards, as his "book-keeper," is contradicted by Edwards himself, who testifies that he never wrote in the books in his life.

13. The claimant arrives at the quantity of flour taken by means of a memorandum-book, in which contemporaneous entries were made by his alleged book-keeper, Edwards. This book he swears he gave to the Commissary-General when his claim was presented to that officer last June. The Commissary-General's accompanying statement, the absence of the book from the papers, and the testimony of the other miller and the laborers at the mill when the flour was alleged to have been taken, prove that this allegation is false, and the failure to produce the book is evidence that it never had an existence. The Commissary-General is positive that before the papers passed out of his personal possession he went carefully over all of them, and is quite certain that such an unusual thing as a memorandum-book, to say nothing of its being the only piece of contemporaneous documentary evidence in the case, would not have escaped his attention. Wiley Edwards swears to having seen the book as late as last January in the hands of the claimant, and to have recognized it as the book kept by him at the time the flour was taken. But we cannot conceive any motive the claimant could have for concealing the book if it really existed, and its character was genuine, and its contents such as stated by himself and this witness. Commissioner Campbell, who took the ex-parte testimony for the claimant last January, has an indistinct recollection that he saw a book before

Edwards while the latter was testifying, but from his narrative it would seem to have been a book of account, and not a pocket memorandum-book, and he did not ascertain the character of the book at all.

14. With reference to the statement that the claimant told General Mitchell that he did not want receipts for his flour, because, if the rebels in the country heard of it, his property would be destroyed, we can only say that the other millers in the country were not afraid of dealing openly with the Government, as the testimony of Watson, Weatherford, Hambaugh, and Pettus shows, and that if the claimant had been afraid of his neighbors he could have secreted his vouchers or receipts much easier than he could his negotiation for the appropriation of his flour by the United States officers. That he had no cause to be afraid of his neighbors or of visits of rebel bands is made clear by the accompanying evidence. General Mitchell is unable to account for the refusal of receipts or vouchers, and only says that he urged the claimant to take receipts, and the latter refused for the reasons given.

15. The statement that the claimant had three thousand barrels of flour on hand at the time of his visit to General Mitchell involves the question as to how much flour the claimant had at any time during the fall of 1862. If there had been a necessity, and the claimant had used proper exertions in reference to getting wheat and finding means to pay for it, he could have obtained wheat enough to run his mill up to the capacity stated by his miller, Pride. It does not appear, however, that he ever had any such quantity of wheat as would enable him to accumulate three thousand barrels of flour, or anything like that amount, between the time he stopped shipping in consequence of the burning of the railway-bridge and the time that the alleged taking of his flour began. His own testimony as to the quantity is supported wholly by his millers, Pride and Edwards, and his colored laborers, Waters and Metcalf. We did not see Mr. Pride at the time of our visit to Robertson County. His deposition in many respects reads fairly enough, and yet he states that the first time he heard of this claim for flour was about a year ago, and that he had never been asked to testify concerning it. The fact is, however, that Mr. Pride appeared as a witness on the claim as originally made out, in the year 1870, himself signing and swearing to the declaration that the claimant was loyal, and that he knew the property charged in the account to be taken, because he was employed at the mill at the time. With respect to the other three witnesses, Edwards, Waters, and Metcalf, whose reputations undoubtedly stand fair in the community, we can only say that we cannot believe Edwards, as against disinterested witnesses, until the mystery of the memorandum-book that he swears he kept in 1862 and 1863 and saw in 1874 is cleared up. There were also contradictions in his statement as to his own age that tended to make us doubtful of his good memory; and on this very point of memory we have developed proofs to show that even persons of much higher education and capability than these millers and laborers can, by perseverance and ingenuity, be filled by others with alleged facts of time, place, quantity, and circumstance, that they afterward repeat, in perfect good faith, as contemporaneous personal knowledge. Mr. Edwards, too, has the reputation in his neighborhood of being given to exaggeration in his ordinary statements.

The two colored men have been for many years in the employ of the claimant, living on his property, to all appearance, under his control, and to a large extent dependent upon his good will and that of his numerous and influential connections for their daily bread, if not their personal safety. While they may not have stated all that the claimant desired them to state, they certainly did not knowingly state anything that he was unwilling to have them say.

All the witnesses not connected with the claimant nor subject to his influence or control, concur in expressing the strongest doubts as to the claimant having any such amount of flour as alleged. Their opinions are given in various forms of speech, but all tend to the same conclusion, and we refer to the depositions of those neighbors for further particulars on this point. Considering the mass of falsehood that has been shown to exist in other parts of the case, we feel quite justified in denying the possession of the flour by the claimant as sworn to in his affidavit of May 4, 1874.

16. The statement that at the time the claimant's flour was offered and taken for the use of the Government the troops at Nashville were greatly in need of supplies, is not true. General Mitchell sets up a state of affairs in reference to the cutting of the railroad and the blockading of the river that had their real existence from two to three months before he assumed command. We can offer no more conclusive evidence of the actual state of supplies at Nashville than the extract we submit with this report from the report of Major-General Rosecrans to the Adjutant-General of the Army, dated February 12, 1863. In addition to this, the newspapers and the account-books of merchants at Nashville show a steady decline in prices from the time railroad communication was re-established and General Mitchell took command, to a period beyond the time covered in this claim.

17. The statement that the claimant gave information which led to the seizure by General Mitchell of a large quantity of bacon intended to be conveyed to the confederate army, has broken down under our inquiry into details. The claimant, when interrogated by us, could not state where the bacon was, nor in whose possession, but accounted for his knowledge of it by saying that a negro, named Ralph Mumford, of Clarksville, told him about it, and that this informant was killed at the railway-bridge at Clarksville about a year ago. We call attention to the accompanying deposition of the said Ralph Mumford to show that he is the only person of that name in that part of the country; that he is not dead, as alleged by the claimant; was not involved in the accident at the railway-bridge; never knew anything about the bacon intended for conveyance into the confederate lines, and never gave the claimant the information that the latter alleges him to have given. General Mitchell is also equally ignorant of the details of the bacon transaction.

18. The statement of General Mitchell, that the claimant was in the habit of giving valuable information to the military commander, and that his recommendation was taken as conclusive evidence of the loyalty of persons bringing it, does not appear possible, in view of the fact that the claimant was not known as a Union man.

19. The statement of General Mitchell that the claimant's mills were the only mills in his section of the country allowed to run is false, and the testimony to the contrary is overwhelming. So far as any interference from the military was concerned, there was no stoppage of mills whatever, but all were running.

20. The statement of General Mitchell that the claimant was known as a Union man who "sympathized with the cause of the republic, and whose acts were sterling proofs of his devotion and fidelity to the right," is shown by the evidence herewith submitted to be nothing more than a piece of flowery declamation.

21. The statement of General Mitchell, that he consulted his quartermaster before sending out the first wagon-train to the claimant's mills, is inferentially contradicted by the quartermaster to whom he refers, Lieut. Charles H. Irvin, who was in charge of wagon-transportation. When application was made to that officer a few months ago to make a statement in behalf of the claimant, he not only refused to testify to the facts at that time suggested to him, but wrote a letter to the Commissary-General, informing him of the attempt that had been made to obtain his assistance in the prosecution of the claim, of his refusal to grant such assistance, of his expectation that the claim had been then abandoned, and of his subsequent astonishment to learn that the claimant was in Washington for the purpose of prosecuting it. He took occasion to say that if the claim depended for its validity upon the state of facts suggested to him, it was decidedly unjust. This letter is on file with the papers in the claim in the Third Auditor's Office. It will be seen from the accompanying statement of the Commissary-General that the letter of Colonel Irvin was duly brought to his notice and considered by him before the papers were transmitted to the Third Auditor, but that it was not regarded by him as sufficient ground for recalling or withholding his decision.

In reference to the connection of Representative Butler, of Tennessee, with the prosecution and payment of the claim, we call attention to the accompanying statements of Commissary-General Shiras, Third Auditor Rutherford, Second Comptroller Brodhead, Messrs. Israel S. Smith and Angelo Jackson, clerks in the Third Auditor's Office, Henry H. Smith, clerk of the congressional Committee on War-Claims, Chas. C. O'Neill, attorney, and the claimant. The statement of Mr. Butler himself is also submitted, and all these statements would be liberally quoted if it were not for the great length of this report. There seems to be a hopeless conflict between these several statements, and we have no longer the time, if we had the means, of testing their accuracy on doubtful or disputed points by re-examining the affiants, or obtaining further statements from the Government officers named herein, or from Representative Butler. We have, however, taken the second deposition of Attorney O'Neill in reference to the statements of Mr. Butler concerning him, and we recommend that a statement be obtained from the Clerk of the House of Representatives, whose absence has prevented us from obtaining either original or rebutting evidence from him.

Your detailed instructions required us to extend our inquiries to the character and reputation of the claimant and his witnesses; his possession or non-possession of the flour charged to his account; the truthfulness or untruthfulness of the material circumstances set up in support of the claim; the disposition and use made of the flour, and the names of the persons then or now interested in the claim. We accordingly proceed to report separately upon each of these instructions.

The public reputation of the claimant in his vicinity is in the main good, so far as it is not connected with this claim. We do not mean that his reputation is of the highest standard, but the general opinion of him may be expressed in the words of one of our witnesses, who describes him as of "medium reputation," and a "shrewd, keen, trading man." President Woodard, of the First National Bank of Springfield, Tenn., also spoke of him to us as a "tricky man." An estimate of his present character may be formed from a number of statements made by him to us while under oath, and which our investigations have refuted or discredited.

He told us that when he came to Washington in 1871 to see about his claim, he was taken sick and remained sick for several days, and that as soon as he was able to travel he left for home by the advice of his physician without having any conversation with his attorney whatever in relation to his claim. This story the testimony of his attorney, accompanying this report, directly contradicts.

The claimant, on being pressed by our cross-examination in reference to the large seizure of bacon made by General Mitchell upon information alleged to have been furnished by him, told us a circumstantial story which we have already mentioned as shown to be utterly false in every particular.

His story that his mills were saved from destruction by the guerrillas through his wife's appeals, is contradicted by the statement of his wife to the contrary, as well as by the statements of his miller, Edwards, and his colored laborers, who know nothing of any threats or attempts to burn the mill.

He stated positively to us that he did not pay out anything to any person for services rendered in connection with the prosecution of his claim, and it was only through our persistent inquiries upon the subject that he was brought to admit the contrary, which other statements confirm.

He told us that in his efforts to find General Mitchell for the purpose of getting his testimony as to the taking of his flour, he had made inquiry, among others, of Mr. Shissler, a clerk in the Third Auditor's Office, which Mr. Shissler denies upon oath.

He told us that it was by the advice of Representative Harrison, of Tennessee, that he sought the acquaintance of Representative Butler in aid of his claim; which statement Representative Harrison denies.

He told us that the deed of his second mill was filed with the papers in his wheat-claim at Washington. We are perfectly satisfied that it never was so filed, and that there was no reason for filing it.

He told us that he gave the memorandum-book, containing the account of the flour taken from him, to the Commissary-General last June, with the other papers in his case. We are positive from the oral and written statements of the Commissary-General, the absence of the book, and the testimony of his millers, laborers, and others, that this is absolutely false, without reference to the fact, clearly established by the testimony, that the flour in question, for which the claimant has received compensation, was never taken or received by Government authorities.

He told us that at the burning of his mill in 1872, or thereabouts, the only book saved relating to the time mentioned in his claim, was the cash-book. His cousin and late partner, Colonel Fort, testified upon oath that the preserved books consisted of the cash-book and journal, and that he had them in his possession and custody last winter when the claimant came to Washington to prosecute his claim.

We are satisfied from deponent's former connection with the business of the mill, and the positive manner in which he made his statement, that he had a perfect knowledge of the facts to which he testified. Besides this, there is testimony to show that the books were as likely to be in the claimant's house as at his mill. Concerning the same books, the claimant told us that they were in the custody of Joseph C. Stark, a lawyer of Springfield. On being informed of this statement, Mr. Stark had no remembrance that any such books were ever confided to his custody. If they had been, it is not at all probable that he would have forgotten the circumstance. There is a statement filed from John E. Garner, the claimant's lawyer in Tennessee, that the cash-book mentioned in the preceding paragraph was left with him a couple of months ago, and this raises a possibility that the claimant was forgetful instead of untruthful, of which we give him the benefit.

He told us that he did not know that his neighboring millers, Messrs. Watson & Weatherford, were doing a merchant business at or about the time his own flour was alleged to have been taken in the manner related in his claim. Considering that he was in the same business; that the mills were but three miles apart; that in a rural community there is a wide diffusion of local information, and that everybody else whom we saw and questioned knew the fact that Messrs. Watson & Weatherford were sending flour to Nashville all the winter of 1862-'63, we do not believe that the claimant was ignorant of what others, who had no better opportunity than himself, knew well.

He told us that when he went to Nashville on his memorable visit to General Mitchell, the railroad bridges were down. This may be merely one falsehood growing out of another, but if the story of his visit is true, then the story of the bridges being down is not true.

He told us that two of the persons from whom he purchased flour in the fall of 1862, namely, Dr. Newton Walton and James Watkins, were, at the time of our visit, residents of Nashville. Careful inquiry by our agent, Commissioner Trimble, himself a native and life-long resident of Nashville, has failed to discover the existence or the residence of these persons in Nashville as stated.

On the question of character we also call attention to the deposition of Morris J. Moran, in which he states that the claimant endeavored three times in succession to induce him to attempt to bribe the quartermaster's agent at Nashville in his investigation of certain claims in which the claimant was interested.

As we have already stated in another part of this report, we believe Moran, for the reason that if he has any feeling or interest on one side or the other of this controversy, it is on the side of the claimant.

We also call attention to the fact that the claimant's mill, from which the flour charged in his account was alleged to have been taken, was mysteriously destroyed by fire between two and three years ago, shortly after an insurance of ten thousand dollars had been effected upon it. The assessed value of this mill with the land on which it stood, made under a law which substantially requires a fair but full valuation, was between three and four thousand dollars. We have attempted to procure full and definite information from the insurance agents in reference to this matter, but there is an indisposition to impart information.

We also call attention to an affidavit executed by him in the case of a warehouse distillery-bond on file in the Internal-Revenue Office, wherein he makes a statement of his means at variance with the facts.

Of the reputation of the claimant's principal witness, General Mitchell, we are not advised. He is a legal resident of a distant State, and we have not thought ourselves justified in devoting any time or labor to inquiries in that direction. Of his present character some estimate may be formed by the following statement of what has been developed in our investigation. In his statement made before us, or rather one of us, he said that the last he heard of Captain Henderson, the former commissary at Nashville, was that he was in the fancy goods business in New York, on Broadway, nearly opposite the St. Nicholas Hotel. Personal inquiry in New York revealed the fact that General Mitchell had seen Captain Henderson as recently as last May, and that he began his search for him on Broadway, as stated, and ended it not far from the Battery, where Captain Henderson was in business as a cotton broker or agent. At the same time he stated that he did not remember the names of any of the clerks of Captain Little, also a former commissary at Nashville. From the deposition of Thomas J. Wilson, of Newark, N. J., who was one of the clerks referred to, it will be seen that General Mitchell came to Newark in search of him a few months ago, and found him by means of information received from Captain Henderson, whom he had just left in New York. Considering the important business transacted by General Mitchell with Mr. Wilson, and to which we wish presently to refer, he could not have forgotten either his name or his whereabouts.

He stated that among the persons vouching to him for the loyalty of the claimant, at the time he was in command at Nashville, was Hon. Andrew Johnson, at that time military governor of Tennessee, and he gave a circumstantial account of the business that he thought brought Governor Johnson to his office at the time the claimant was there. On making inquiry of Mr. Johnson, we learn that he has no recollection whatever of any such circumstance, and does not even remember the claimant.

He told us that another person vouching for the claimant's loyalty was a Scotchman, who was book-keeper in Bell's hardware establishment, nearly opposite his own headquarters on College street, Nashville, and that this Scotchman and himself were on very intimate terms, it being his frequent habit to send over for the Scotchman to come to his headquarters, across the street, to give information concerning persons having business with headquarters. We have caused Commissioner Trimble, of Nashville, to make inquiries concerning the hardware establishment and the Scotchman, but he has not found that either existed.

As further illustration of his character we refer to the affidavits made by Captain Henderson, the former commissary at Nashville, on file in the Third Auditor's Office, and Thomas J. Wilson, the former chief clerk of Commissary Little, of which the original draught accompanies this report. These affidavits were procured by General Mitchell, who personally visited the affiants, told them that he supposed they had some knowledge of a claim that he knew to be just and right, and then proceeded to give them a history of the claim from his stand-point. It is evident, from the statements that these affiants have since made, that General Mitchell attempted to get them to swear to affidavits much stronger in favor of the claimant than those they finally made. In the case of Captain Henderson, that gentleman was led to say that during the winter and spring of 1862-'63, he remembered distinctly of Captain Little's receiving a large amount of confiscated flour from Robertson County, Tennessee, near Springfield. What he does remember is, that on one occasion he saw a train of perhaps twenty wagons loaded with flour in front of Captain Little's office or warehouse, and, on inquiring where it came from, was informed by that officer that it was confiscated flour from Robertson County. It will be seen that the language used in the affidavit, and which was suggested by General Mitchell, raised the presumption that the reception of this flour extended over an entire winter and spring, or the greater part thereof. Captain Henderson was also led to state that he remembered that the flour was taken by order of General R. B. Mitchell, then in command of the post and defenses at Nashville, but as a matter of fact he does not remember anything of the kind, and since we have obtained the affidavit of Thomas J. Wilson and ascertained the manner in which his memory was so misled as to induce him to impute to the administration of General Mitchell things that occurred during the preceding administration of General Negley, we have little doubt that the flour seen by Captain Henderson was actually received at Nashville before General Mitchell came there at all.

The deposition of Thomas J. Wilson, given personally before us, shows that General Mitchell came to see him at his office in Newark about four months ago, and after introducing himself to the deponent, stated that a man down there in the vicinity of Nashville had a lot of flour seized by the order of General Mitchell, that he was a loyal man, and had never been paid for the flour. He stated the history of the case in about the same terms as he did to Captain Henderson, and as it is contained in the affidavits of himself and the claimant. He added that it was a matter of no pecuniary benefit to himself, but that he wanted to get the money for the claimant; that he was working up the case for the claimant as a matter of right, and did not expect to get anything out of it. He then asked for the deponent's affidavit concerning the matter, to which the deponent replied that he could not make an affidavit that would be of any benefit, because the facts had gone out of his memory. General Mitchell then asked him if he knew of a lot of flour being seized and brought in and turned over to Captain Little. The deponent said that he did; whereupon General Mitchell wrote out a draught of an affidavit, which the deponent declined to copy and swear to, as requested, because it contained facts that were not within his knowledge. General Mitchell then draughted another affidavit, which the deponent did copy, verify upon oath, and deliver to General Mitchell. For reasons probably known to General Mitchell, that affidavit does not appear in the case. But the deponent preserved the original draught, which he delivered to us, and to which attention is herein invited. In it the deponent is made to state that during the winter and spring of 1862 and 1863, Captain Little received a large amount of flour, for which there were no vouchers given to the owners, but receipted for the same to Charles H. Irvin, the wagon-transportation quartermaster at Nashville, and that all of said flour was taken by order of General R. B. Mitchell, then in command of the post and defenses of Nashville; that the larger portion of said flour was taken from north of the Cumberland River, and that he was informed and believed that several thousand barrels were taken from Robertson County, Tenn. What Mr. Wilson really did know and does know is that in the fall of 1862, but some time before General Mitchell came to Nashville, a quantity of flour was brought in and turned over to Captain Little, and that he made inquiry of one of the teamsters as to where the flour came from, and was informed that it came from what he understood to be Ford's mills, in Robertson County. He does not know that all that lot of flour he saw came from the one mill, and he does not know whether there was as little as two hundred barrels or as much as a thousand. He does not remember that he ever heard of any other flour being seized subsequently to that and being brought into Nashville. He knows that this occurred before the arrival of the Army of General Rosecrans, and we know from the official records, from the newspapers of the day, and from General Mitchell's latest admission, that General Mitchell was not at Nashville nor in command at the time. The deponent also informed us that General Mitchell told him the making of his affidavit was just merely a matter of form; that the claim would go through all right without it, but he thought that he would get this affidavit in case he should have occasion to use it. In other words, he just wanted it in case they should require further evidence, or something of that sort. He told the deponent that he had been to see Captain Henderson, and had got a statement from him; but he did not tell the deponent the character of the statement that Captain Henderson had made.

As final illustration of the character of General Mitchell, we call attention to the following extract from the reporter's notes of the questions propounded and answers given on a certain point in the case, when General Mitchell was under examination by one of us on the 5th day of November last. It will be seen from this extract that General Mitchell first denied that he had ever held any other relation to the claimant and his claim than that of a witness, and it was only on being informed that the claimant had testified to the contrary, upon oath, that he made the acknowledgments that follow :

“Question. Have you ever held any relation to him and his claim other than that of a witness?—Answer. No, sir.

“Q. You have not been his counsel or attorney?—A. No, sir. I never had anything to do with it but to testify.

“Q. He has testified on oath that you were.—A. He paid my expenses while I staid here as a witness simply. I never appeared as an attorney, never wrote an affidavit in the case, or did anything pertaining to an attorney's duty.

“Q. He said that he consulted you professionally.—A. He consulted me very frequently, and I gave him advice, &c. He did pay my expenses while I was here for over two months. There was no contract about it at all. I never asked him for a cent in the world. I was detained here for the purpose of talking to a member of the committee. After my affidavit was filled a member of the committee asked to have a private interview with me, and kept me here some time, and then I was here on some other business. I was trying cases before the Mexican Commission.

“Q. You never acted as counsel or attorney?—A. No, sir; nothing more than in a friendly way; all he paid me was voluntary; I never asked him for a cent. There was no contract between us, and I would not have felt sore at all if he had not paid me a cent.

“Q. Did you ever borrow fifty dollars from anybody to be used in aid of Sugg Fort's claim?—A. I did. I did it when he was on a sick-bed, and was not able to be up.

“Q. Have you any objection to stating how much you received from Sugg Fort altogether?—A. I could not tell you that.

“Q. Did you ever receive as much as five hundred dollars from him at one time?—A. I think I received four hundred and eighty dollars from him at one time. I am not positive as to the amount.”

Besides his own admissions, we call attention to the statement of the claimant, to the statement of the clerk of the Committee on War-Claims, and to the statements of Captain Henderson, Thomas J. Wilson, and Charles C. O'Neill, to show that General Mitchell was witness, counsel, attorney, and procurer all through the transaction.

In concluding these remarks about the character of General Mitchell, we should not fail to call attention to his renewed declarations about the scarcity and precariousness of supplies at Nashville while he was in command. In refutation of this repeated assertion, we again refer to the opening paragraphs of the report of Maj. Gen. Wm. J. Rosecrans to the Adjutant-General of the Army, dated February 12, 1863, which are herewith submitted; also to the letter of Captain Chas. F. Garrett, who was the chief quartermaster of General Mitchell at Nashville. Diligent search of records and numerous informal inquiries have failed to show that there was any serious or lasting interruption of communication by rail or water, or any scarcity other than an occasional failure of some particular article on the list of commissary stores during the whole of General Mitchell's administration.

The character and reputation of the minor witnesses in the case, being the millers and laborers of the claimant, we have already discussed at sufficient length. We have received a statement from George H. Purdy, of Terre Haute, Indiana, formerly major of the Fourth Indiana Cavalry, who made an affidavit at Washington on the 30th of May last, to the effect that, in the latter part of March or early in April, 1863, he commanded the escort to a train of army-wagons furnished by Quartermaster Irvin, under orders from General Mitchell, to a mill on Red River, in Robertson County, about 25 miles from Nashville, where he got six or seven wagon-loads of flour, and for which, by instructions of General Mitchell, he did not receipt. He remembered distinctly taking the flour from the shed of a house near a large mill on the said river. After first calling special attention to the statement of E. C. Brearly, formerly captain in the Eighty-sixth Illinois Volunteers, which shows that General Mitchell attempted to induce Mr. Brearly to make a statement corroborating his own, just as he tried and partly succeeded with Captain Henderson and Mr. Wilson, we remark that it appears from Major Purdy's statement to us that he was in Washington prosecuting a pension-claim and as a witness in certain other claims, and being requested by General Mitchell to make an affidavit in support of this claim, he testified to a state of facts which are contradicted by official records, and by an overwhelming mass of circumstantial evidence, as to the taking of certain flour and its being hauled to Nashville. Major Purdy tells us, under oath, that he was ordered to report to General Mitchell some time in March, 1863, and that soon after his arrival he was sent after the flour. He states that Captain Irvin furnished the wagons, and that the flour taken by him was delivered to the commissary at Nashville, Captain Little.

As a matter of fact it appears from the returns of Captain Little that he received no flour whatever from Lieutenant Irvin in the months of March and April. We do not deem it necessary to comment further as to this witness, except to say that the statement last received is so evidently inspired by the statement and suggestions of General Mitchell to him when in Washington, or since this investigation began, that we are compelled to disbelieve his entire statement, and have so informed him, requesting him to make his further statements to yourself.

With regard to the possession or non-possession by the claimant of the flour alleged to have been taken by the United States, we report that he did not have anything like the quantity alleged. His cousin and partner, Colonel Fort, testifies that the claimant bought large quantities of wheat. His miller, Pride, testifies that he got large quantities, and his colored laborer, Waters, testified that there was a great deal of wheat coming in all the time.

We examined one of his purchasing-agents, who testified that he bought at least 2,500 bushels of wheat for the claimant that fall, of which 300 or 400 bushels were not delivered. The claimant gives the names of a number of persons from whom he alleges that he bought wheat, but we have already shown many reasons why his statements in his own favor are worthy of no credence whatever.

In reference to the question of his actual possession of 3,000 barrels of flour, we find nobody, except his own witnesses, who has any faith in such a story. His wife states that he had a good deal. His cousin and partner, Colonel Fort, testifies to large quantities, as much as a thousand barrels in the mill, and the storehouse apparently full besides.

The laborer, Waters, said that he had a great deal of flour, and estimated the quantity at about 7,000 or 8,000 barrels by guessing at the number of times the flour on hand would fill the room in which we were conducting his examination.

The miller, Pride, does not attempt to estimate the flour on hand, but says they were making 75 to 80 barrels a day, in addition to doing custom-work.

This quantity was the product of operating the mill both night and day through the whole period of time. But the miller, Edwards, states that the mill was only occasionally operated night and day; and, although we have the names of all the persons regularly employed at the mill, we have no names of persons who belonged to the night-gang.

Pride also states that the flour was shipped as fast as made until the railroad-bridge was destroyed, which we find was about the 22d of August, but also states that they did not begin to grind until the latter part of August; and Edwards says it was the latter part of September before they began. The colored laborer, Metcalf, testifies to there being a great many barrels of flour at the mill, and the miller, Edwards, says that there could not have been less than a thousand barrels, though there might have been more. On the other hand, Mr. Jackson, a neighbor, customer, friend, and visitor to the mill, says that he saw about 60 barrels in the mill in 1861, and never saw as much afterward. He says that if the claimant had told him in November, 1862, that he had 3,000 barrels of flour at his mill, he would have thought him joking, and that he has no recollection of his grinding, except for customers, at about that time. Mr. Mitchell, another neighbor, says that if the claimant had told him in November, 1862, that he had 3,000 barrels of flour on hand, he would have wanted an explanation of his having so much. Judge Watson, the neighboring miller, says that the claimant was not doing much milling, he thinks, and that it is not at all probable that he had 3,000 barrels of flour on hand. Mr. John D. Dolan, of Nashville, who was out in that vicinity at the time, looking for flour to purchase, seems to have heard of all the flour there was in that section of the country, but did not hear of the claimant having any flour at his mill. Mr. B. B. Batts, a neighbor, thinks claimant had a few hundred barrels on hand in the latter part of 1861, or early part of 1862, which, being moved away from the mill and stored in neighboring barns after the capture of Fort Donelson, was finally taken to Springfield by citizens. He does not believe the claimant had 3,000 barrels of flour at any time during the war. An examination of business books at Nashville does not show that any flour from the claimant came into market at Nashville about that time. General James L. Morgan, of Quincy, Ill., who, at the time, was one of the commanding officers at Nashville, and who was there during the scarcity of supplies under General Negley, says that it was impossible for the claimant to have accumulated 3,000 barrels of flour, because it would have been discovered and brought into Nashville, where flour was greatly in demand until the re-opening of communication by General Rosecrans. The colored driver, Levi Weatherford, who was quite familiar with the claimant's mill, says that the mill would not hold more than two hundred barrels of flour and leave room for operating it. The opinion in the community is unanimous that the risk of holding flour at the mill was so much greater than the risk of sending it to market that it is wholly improbable that any such hoarding could have taken place.

We have already treated at length of the untruthfulness of the material parts of the statements made in support of the claim by the claimant and General Mitchell. With regard to the truthfulness or untruthfulness of the statements of the minor witnesses, we believe their only foundation of truth lies in the fact that, during the blockade of Nashville, while General Negley was in command, trains were sent out in all directions to obtain supplies for the needy garrison, and that some flour may have been found at the claimant's mill, and brought into the city. Upon this slender basis of fact, the whole fabric of testimony seems to have been constructed, and where there has not been willful perjury, advantage has been taken of the forgetfulness and ignorance of the witnesses as to the dates of transactions occurring so long ago, and their inability to accurately estimate, after so great a lapse of time, the quantities of wheat and flour received and manufactured, and the number of times the mill was visited by Government trains.

The next question is as to the disposition and use made of the flour belonging to the claimant.

No doubt the claimant had made more or less flour and disposed of it; but so far we have not ascertained what disposition was actually made of it. According to the statement of B. B. Batts, his neighbor, the flour he had when the Federal Army occupied the country, went to Springfield, the county-seat, and Mr. Batts does not remember that the claimant sent his flour elsewhere than to Nashville and Springfield during the war. In proof of his allegation that the Government got it, we have the testimony of himself and General Mitchell, and the statements of his two millers, his colored laborer, his cousin and partner, and his wife. His miller, Pride, remembers that the Government wagons first came just before Christmas of 1862. The miller, Edwards, knows that they came on the 6th of December, 1862. The claimant's wife remembers that they came about two weeks before Christmas. The laborers do not remember when they came. Pride and Edwards testify that they came at least ten times, but not so many as twenty times. The laborer, Metcalf, testifies to same effect. The laborer, Waters, remembers that they came a great many times. The claimant's cousin saw them loading several times, and the claimant's wife remembers that they came once, and thinks that they came twice with escorts, and once or twice without escorts. Pride thinks there was about fifteen wagons each time they came, and that they would average about ten barrels to the load. Edwards knows from the evidence of his memorandum-book, that has neither been produced nor accounted for, that the quantity taken was 2,791 barrels. The only other estimate of quantity is that of the laborer, Waters, who says that the Yankees got most of the flour that was on hand and made between the time they commenced and the time they left off taking it. On the other hand is the evidence that after the claimant had decided to get rid of his accumulation of flour, by putting it into the Government service without pay, he continued running his mill night and day, and making all the flour he could, to be appropriated in the same manner. The miller, Edwards, testified that the claimant always had money to pay his hands, and this indicates that he must have been selling his flour, or at least the greater part of it, to obtain the means to carry on his business. Captain Garrett, the chief quartermaster at Nashville, says that if the flour had been brought in as stated he would have known it. General Morgan, who was frequently at headquarters, and often attended to business in place of General Mitchell, says that he never heard of it. Captain Brearly, who once went out on a foraging expedition, did not get any flour, to his best recollection, though General Mitchell tried very hard to make him remember that he did. Judge Watson, part owner of the adjoining mill, who attended to the business of his firm in Nashville, and says that he was directly in the current of information, is certain that he would have heard of it, and that his drivers would have seen or heard of the wagons on the road if they had been out. Mr. Patton, now deputy collector of internal revenue at Springfield, Tenn., lived upon the only road that the Government trains could have taken to enter Nashville; was very active in ascertaining what was going on, and is quite certain that he heard nearly everything that did occur, and never saw nor heard of Government trains coming from that direction loaded with flour within the time stated. He says that, during that time, the foraging trains coming out from Nashville did not go beyond Paradise Hill, a place about twelve miles from Nashville and about eighteen miles from the claimant's mill. This latter statement is partly confirmed by Mr. Batts, who states that he only heard, or saw, of Government wagons passing through the neighborhood three times during the whole war. The first time, the train was attacked and fell back empty; the second time, they loaded with corn; and the third time, there were three or four wagons, and they got some flour which, he thinks, came from the claimant's mill, as they passed up in that direction. Mr. Batts lived two and a half miles from the mill, about three hundred yards from the road to Nashville, and could follow a wagon by sight for half a mile along the road. The trains he did see and hear of were all from Springfield, and not from Nashville. The colored driver, Levi Weatherford, was there constantly on the road, making two trips a week between Watson's Mill and Nashville, and never saw nor heard of any Government trains going to or coming from the claimant's mill. Mr. Weatherford, the adjoining miller, is certain he should have known it if the flour had been taken as described. Mr. Warfield, one of the claimant's agents for buying wheat, never heard of it, nor did Mr. Mitchell, a resident of the vicinity; and Mr. Jackson, a neighbor and customer, says he does not think it possible that the Government trains could have come and gone within that period without his knowledge unless they came in the night-time, and of that there is no pretense. Captain Little's accounts show no receipts of flour from Lieutenant Irvin—whose trains must have taken the flour, if it was taken at all—before the 22d of December, and no receipts during March or April, when Major Purdy alleges that he visited the mill and got a train-load of flour. We have the testimony of Captain Sowers, the claimant's attorney, that when Captain Little was first spoken to about the transaction he had no recollection of it, and subsequently advised that information should be sought from other officers. Mr. Wilson, the chief clerk of Captain Little, has testified before us that he never heard of any flour being taken after the army of General Rosecrans reached Nashville. Mr. Pride, the miller, although he remembers that trains came for a period of about six months, does not know that they ever came from Nashville or that they came always from one direction.

The next topic of inquiry is as to the persons other than the claimant, interested in the claim. Of these we name Capt. F. S. Sowers, of Washington, who had at least an interest as attorney or counsel in the case, and in view of the information, advice, and assistance exchanged between the claimant and himself, both before and after the filing of the claim before Congress, we cannot believe him ignorant of a single material step in the prosecution, and he must therefore have known the fraudulent character of the claim. The pecuniary interest of General Mitchell is conclusively shown by his repeated receipts of money from the claimant, both before and after the claim was paid; his visits to the cities of New York and Newark to obtain evidence; his importunity of Representatives in Congress, as testified to by Mr. O'Neill, an attorney in the case, and by his effort to induce persons to testify to matters not within their knowledge. The nature of the interest of the honorable R. R. Butler, Representative in Congress from Tennessee, we have not had time or opportunity to ascertain, even if it were possible.

In conclusion, we would recommend that statements be obtained from the honorable James S. Negley, member of Congress, of Pittsburgh, Pa., and from Col. Charles H. Irvin, chief engineer Texas and Pacific Railroad. Both these gentlemen can give important information as to the unsuccessful efforts made to get them to testify in behalf of the claim. Mr. Irvin can probably furnish positive and definite information, which we have been unable to procure in legal form in time for the purposes of this report, further showing the falsity of the facts set up and sworn to by the claimant and corroborated by the oath of General Mitchell, as to the alleged seizure by, and delivery to, the United States military authorities at Nashville, of the flour for which the claimant has received payment.

Your obedient servants,

HENRY H. SMITH,

Clerk Committee on War-Claims, House of Representatives.

CHARLES F. BENJAMIN,

Clerk Commissioners of Claims.

Hon. B. H. BRISTOW, Secretary of the Treasury.

THIRD AUDITOR'S OFFICE,

July 23, 1874.

Hon. J. F. HARTLEY,

Assistant Secretary of the Treasury:

SIR: In pursuance of your request, I submit a statement in regard to the claim of Sugg Fort.

The claim was originally presented to the Commissary-General. He declined to entertain it, not because of any want of merit, but because he at first regarded it as a case growing out of a seizure of property, and which he, therefore, could not entertain, as it had not been presented prior to the act creating the Commissioners of Claims.

But when the claim was again presented to him, he evidently changed his opinion upon that point, for he entertained it; and, having determined that it was just, and that claimant was loyal, transmitted it to the accounting-officers for settlement in the sum of $23,723.50.

His later opinion, on this point, seems to have been correct. Unless the claim is a fraud, it must be assumed that the general character of the transaction was as alleged by the claimant, and stated by the general commanding, Gen. R. B. Mitchell; and, according to their version, the property was acquired by the Government by virtue of a mutual and voluntary agreement which would make the case one of contract and not of seizure. They state that the claimant, himself, informed General Mitchell that he (claimant) had this flour on hand, and proposed to General Mitchell to take it for the use of the Army, and that General Mitchell gladly assented to the proposal, such supplies being much needed; that it was arranged between them to make the transaction assume the appearance of a forcible taking by sending troops for the flour; and that this course was pursued for the purpose merely of shielding the claimant from the dangerous effects of the enmity which the rebels would entertain toward him if they understood that he was voluntarily selling and furnishing supplies to the Union Army. If this was the character of the transaction, the claim arose under contract and not under seizure.

On December 12, 1873, the attorney requested the Commissary-General to return the papers, in order that the claim might be presented to Congress, and the request was complied with; but, immediately after the adjournment of Congress, the case was again presented to the Commissary-General.

It will be observed that in the transcript which was certified under the seal of the House of Representatives, and which it was necessarily presumed would have shown any action if any had been had, there was nothing to indicate that any consideration had been given to the claim, either by the House or by any committee thereof. Moreover, the fact that the Commissary-General re-instated the case and reviewed his former action thereon necessarily raised the presumption that he had proper information that no proceedings had been had in Congress which in any manner interfered with the claimant's right to have his claim considered by the Commissary-General. Therefore, when the claim came before the accounting officers they necessarily supposed that the claimant had utterly failed, in the pressure of business at the close of a busy session, to secure any consideration of his case, and had therefore abandoned his application to the House and resorted again to the Commissary-General. If they had found anything to indicate that any committee of the House had given any consideration to the case, or that it was in any way pending in the House, they would have declined to take any action on it.

Upon carefully reconsidering the evidence on which the Commissary-General pronounced the claim just, I do not think any other conclusion could have been fairly arrived at.

I will not refer to the evidence touching the loyalty of the claimant, for no question seems to be made that he was not thoroughly loyal.

The claimant's testimony is in substance as follows:

At the outbreak of the war he owned two mills, and continued to run them after war had commenced, buying his wheat under permits from the Federal authorities; that he had a permit to carry his flour to Clarksville and Nashville by wagons, but the facilities for transportation were meager, and the country was infested with guerrillas, and he was so fearful of his mules being stolen that he sold all but four, which he kept for his farm; that, being unable to send the flour to market, it accumulated, and he was obliged to store it in his mill, warehouse, tobacco-barns, and store-house.

That he had thus on hand over 3,000 barrels when he finished grinding his supply of wheat on November 28, 1862; that at this time the Government had the occupation of Middle Tennessee, but the occupation of his county was not sufficient to protect Union men, and bands of rebels annoyed him very much. Small bands came to his place at night and carried off small quantities of flour, &c., he being obliged to hide if he was at home. Sometimes they took the flour in bags on their horses, sometimes in a small wagon, but generally on their horses.

Fearful that the rebels might occupy the country in sufficient force to take all his flour, and perhaps also burn his mills, he determined that the Union Army should have the flour; and, therefore, on the 3d December, 1862, he started secretly at night for Nashville. Arriving there the next morning, he procured a friend, who was a Union man, to present him to the post commander, Gen. R. B. Mitchell.

That he told General Mitchell that he had about 3,000 barrels flour which he wished him to send for, as the rebels otherwise would get it, but that he wished it to appear that the flour was seized from him against his will; that General Mitchell told him to come back in about one hour, and upon his returning told him that he (General Mitchell) would send for the flour.

That he told General Mitchell that he did not wish receipts to be given by the officers taking the flour, lest the rebels should hear of it, and destroy his property.

That he then started home, accompanied by a train of wagons, and continued with them until within eight miles of his home, where they encamped for the night, and he returned home by night; that, on the next morning, (December 6,) the train came to his place, and there being several citizens waiting at the mill to have their grinding done, himself and the officer in charge of the train carried out by their actions the appearance that the flour was taken without his consent; that the trains continued to come for flour until they got 2,791 barrels, the account being kept by Wiley Edwards, one of his millers, and his book-keeper.

Robert B. Mitchell, brigadier-general in command of the post, district, and defenses of Nashville, confirmed fully the claimant's statements in regard to the claimant coming to Nashville and proposing to him to send for the flour; and in regard to the arrangement between them that it should be made to appear that the flour was seized against the claimant's will, &c.

He stated that, under this arrangement, he from time to time sent out trains to bring the flour to Nashville; that the quantity was reported to him on the arrival of each train, and his recollection is that the aggregate was about 2,700 or 2,800 barrels; that the claimant's mills were the only ones which were allowed to run in that section, the others being owned and controlled by persons in sympathy with the rebels. He states, also, that the claimant gave much valuable information to him, and was much relied on in that respect, and particularly refers to his giving information by which the witness was able to seize about 41,000 or 42,000 pounds bacon, accumulated to send through to the rebel army.

Wiley Edwards, J. E. Pride, W. A. Johnston, Henry Waters, and Albert Metcalf, all testified to the flour being taken from the mill by Government trains. The former three were claimant's millers, and the two others were his employes at the mill. And Edwards testified further that he was also claimant's book-keeper; that he kept the account of the flour so taken; that he has recently examined the books kept by himself, and has found that the exact quantity so taken was 2,791 barrels.

Capt. George H. Purdy, Fourth Indiana Cavalry, testified that, about the last of March, or first of April, 1863, he was sent in command of an escort to guard a train of wagons, (furnished by Charles H. Irvin, wagon-transportation quartermaster at Nashville,) under orders of General Mitchell, to procure flour from a mill on Red River, Robertson County, Tennessee, about 25 miles from Nashville; that there were six or seven wagons, which took from 12 to 14 barrels each; that he was instructed by General Mitchell not to give receipts; that he delivered the flour to the commissary at the post at Nashville, but does not remember his name, as he (witness) had reported to General Mitchell's headquarters only a few days before being sent on this trip.

Capt. Samuel D. Henderson testified that he was commissary of subsistence at Nashville during the winter of 1862-'63; that he distinctly remembers that, during that winter and the following spring, Capt. Samuel J. Little, the general receiving-commissary at Nashville, received a large amount of confiscated flour from Robertson County, Tennessee, near Springfield, which flour had been taken by General Mitchell's orders, but he does not remember the exact amount, or the name of the person from whom taken.

The accounts of Capt. Samuel J. Little, general receiving-commissary at Nashville, showed that, during that winter, he received from Lieut. Charles H. Irwin, acting assistant quartermaster, large quantities of flour, (aggregate 14,418 barrels.)

Lieutenant Irwin had charge of wagon-transportation, and it was part of his duty to send out his trains, and bring in flour. If his accounts had been kept as they should have been, and as Army Regulations require, they would have shown in detail from what sources and at what dates he obtained the flour delivered by him to Captain Little; but they showed nothing on these points, and therefore afforded no evidence either for or against the claim.

The claimant's high character for integrity was vouched for by the following persons:

Citizens of Robertson County.—Jno. E. Garner, J. W. Judd, A. E. Garner, E. A. Hicks, Jo. S. Stark, attorneys at law, Springfield, Robertson County, Tenn.; W. B. Lowe, commissioner of chancery court, Springfield, Tenn.; Jno. Y. Hutchinson, clerk of circuit court, Springfield, Tenn.; J. W. Fort, chairman of Robertson County court; B. H. Boone, sheriff of Robertson County; R. H. Murphy, clerk of Robertson County court; Jno. Woodward, president of Springfield National Bank.

Citizens of Montgomery County.—W. A. Quarles, J. E. Burley, Horace H. Linton, H. C. Merritt, Wm. M. Daniel, H. W. Humphreys, members of the bar, at Clarksville, Tenn.; Jas. E. Rice, judge of tenth judicial circuit of Tennessee; Chas. G. Smith, chancellor of sixth division, Tennessee; Boker D. Johnson, attorney-general for Montgomery County; Chas. W. Tyler, judge of Montgomery criminal court; Irwin Beaumont, sheriff of Montgomery County; Polk Y. Johnson, clerk and master of chancery court; Charles D. Bailey, clerk of the circuit court Montgomery County; Saml. Rexinger, postmaster, Clarksville, Montgomery County; G. A. Ligan, mayor, Clarksville, Montgomery County; D. W. Kennedy, president Northern Bank of Tennessee; S. F. Beaumont, president First National Bank, Clarksville; B. V. Keeser, president Bank of Clarksville; Peter O'Neal, clerk Montgomery County court.

Citizens of Davidson County.—J. O. Shackleford, late judge of supreme court; P. Nelms, Jas. Chamberlain, E. F. Mulloy, members of the bar, at Nashville, Tenn.; J. V. H. Guild, judge of law court; W. B. Reese; Chas. N. Gibbs, secretary of state of Tennessee; R. L. Tuthill, special commissioner of claims; E. D. Whitworth, sheriff of Davidson County; F. M. Woodall, deputy sheriff of Davidson County; Albert Akers, clerk circuit court; Tho. F. Smiley, Jas. M. Quarles, Jno. Lemsden, P. Turney, Jno. C. Burch, Jno. M. Clelland, M. Burns, Thomas A. Kercheval, mayor of Nashville.

And upon this list (Davidson County) the governor of Tennessee certifies:

"I know the signers of this and the accompanying petitions, and it affords me much pleasure to state that they are the best men of the State, and reflect all shades of political sentiment. And I have no hesitancy in stating that they have certified the truth in favor of Mr. Fort, who has the best standing in his county."

And nine persons, late officers of the Fifteenth United States Colored Infantry, also certify to his excellent character, high standing, and loyalty.

Against this mass of testimony there was before the Commissary-General nothing but a confidential letter written by Charles H. Irwin, late quartermaster, to the Commissary-General, as follows : *

"There is now (I believe) pending before your Department a claim made by Sugg Fort, of Robertson County, Tennessee, for about two thousand seven hundred and eighty-one barrels of flour said to have been taken by United States troops in December, 1862. July, 1863, I was called on by the claimant for testimony in the case. I am perfectly satisfied that the whole claim is wrong. I do not believe he had the flour for United States to get, and I know it was not got as he represented to me. I supposed that after he failed to get my testimony he would drop the matter, but I heard a few days ago that he was in Washington urging the claim, and I thought it my duty to inform you of my convictions on the subject. I am well known to all the officers of the Quartermaster's Department, and to Colonel Beckwith, of your Department. I wish this to be treated as strictly confidential."

I am not disposed to doubt that the writer honestly questioned the justice of the claim, or that a genuine desire to do his duty prompted him to communicate his doubts to the Commissary-General, but, unfortunately, he did not communicate, or even profess to be possessed of, any definite information which would in any way tend to break down the singularly strong case made by the testimony on behalf of the claimant.

He did not show even to what point his suspicions particularly tended, and he communicated nothing which opened any new track by which any further information could be sought for.

Considerable stress having been laid on the fact that he was an officer in the service of the Government, I refer to the fact that so also was General Mitchell; and I have no information that he is worthy of any higher confidence than General Mitchell. Moreover, he may be perfectly honest in his suspicions, without the claim being really unjust, but General Mitchell's direct and positive statements must either be declared wholesale perjury, or the claim must be just.

It would be a departure from every natural principle in weighing testimony to set his loose and general suspicions against General Mitchell's positive testimony, even if there was no further evidence in the claim.

In a letter written by D. D. Holman, which seems to have been before the committee of the House, but which was not before the Commissary-General or the accounting officers, I observe that it is suggested as a peculiarly suspicious circumstance that the claimant procured a large part of his testimony from persons residing at some distance from his own residence, viz, at Clarksville, Springfield, and Nashville. The letter shows that the writer having only heard, in general terms, that Mr. Fort had procured persons in those places to sign papers in his favor, (or, as the writer calls it, "assign" papers,) assumed that the testimony so procured bore directly on the questions of fact. But this assumption was erroneous, as this part of the testimony related only to the claimant's high standing and excellent reputation for integrity. The claimant showed good judgment in procuring such testimony, rather from persons whose official positions were good guarantees for the worth of their statements, than from individuals holding no such positions and whose names might be utterly unknown in Washington; and it will hardly be denied that he has made a remarkably strong case on this point. Among those who thus testify in his behalf are the governor, the secretary of state, judges, clerks of court, sheriffs, members of the bar, presidents of banks, &c., including many prominent officials of his own county, the adjoining county of Montgomery, and the county of Davidson. Mr. Holman's insinuation, that the claimant could get no favorable testimony from persons who had good opportunity to know him, finds but scant support in these testimonials. I return the papers referred by you to this Office.

* This letter was not forwarded by the Commissary-General to the accounting officers with the other papers, and its existence was not known to them until after the claim had been settled and paid.

Respectfully submitted.

ALLAN RUTHERFORD,
Auditor.

OFFICE COMMISSARY-GENERAL OF SUBSISTENCE,
Washington City, June 30, 1874.

SIR: The inclosed claim of Sugg Fort, of Robertson County, Tennessee, having been examined under the 3d section of an act of Congress entitled "An act to restrict the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims," &c., approved July 4, 1864, is respectfully transmitted to you, with the recommendation that claimant be paid the sum of twenty-three thousand seven hundred and twenty-three dollars and fifty cents, for two thousand seven hundred and ninety-one barrels flour—at $8.50 per barrel, $23,723.50—taken from December, 1862, to May, 1863, for Army use.

Hon. R. R. Butler advised.

Very respectfully, &c.,

A. E. SHIRAS,
Commissary-General Subsistence.

The THIRD AUDITOR OF THE TREASURY.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE COMMISSARY-GENERAL OF SUBSISTENCE,
Washington, D. C., November 13, 1874.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 12th instant, in regard to the Sugg Fort claim, recommended for payment by me on the 30th June last, I would respectfully inform you that this claim was first received at this Office March 21, 1873, by reference from the Secretary of War, with letter from Charles C. O'Neill, dated March 19, 1873.

On the 29th March, 1873, Mr. O'Neill was informed by my predecessor that the claim could not be examined in this Office, being barred by the act of March 3, 1871. That act had been differently construed by the different authorities, and the Quartermaster-General, under a decision of the Judge-Advocate-General, "that there was concurrent jurisdiction by the Southern Claims Commission and the Quartermaster-General and Commissary-General of Subsistence," was still receiving and acting on Tennessee claims.

On the 24th of June, 1874, I was called upon by Mr. Sugg Fort and the Hon. R. R. Butler, and after some conversation in relation to the claim, I was urged to take it up and act upon it. I stated that I had not had time to examine the act of March 3, 1871, but would do so whenever I had an opportunity. The injury and loss to Mr. Fort was pleaded, and I consented the papers should be, informally, left with me, and if an opportunity offered I would look at them. That evening I read them over carefully. There was no memorandum-book giving the number of barrels alleged to have been taken from the claimant's mill. Such a document must inevitably have attracted my attention. The papers in the case were copies of evidence before the Committee on War-Claims, made up in book-form, and certified by the Clerk of the House of Representatives. There was nothing to show there were any omissions.

Several times within a few days I received calls from Mr. Fort and Colonel Butler, and although I cannot recall with certainty any language to that effect, I was under the impression the claim had not been reached by the committee. Even without any such language being used, it would never have occurred to me that a claim, backed by a member of Congress, could be presented at this Office when the member knew that an adverse report had been made upon it by a committee of the House.

In a few days I had the opportunity and did examine the act of March 3, 1871, in connection with that of July 4, 1864, &c., and concluded that the act of March 3, 1871, did not relieve the Commissary-General of Subsistence from the examination of claims received after its date, but, as stated by the Judge-Advocate-General, there was "concurrent jurisdiction."

On the 30th of June I took up the Sugg Fort claim, and again perused the testimony carefully. The evidence of Mr. Fort was clear, although his motives for not receiving vouchers were not those which would weigh with business men. General Mitchell confirmed his testimony, and the case took the form of a confidential matter between the commanding officer at Nashville and Mr. Fort. Two laborers at the mill corroborated the testimony in a general way, and the miller swore positively to the number of barrels of flour taken, as shown by his books. The character of Mr. Fort was vouched for by very respectable names, and the case seemed clear under the law, as it was not to be supposed but that the flour was distributed by the commanding general for the use of the troops.

I therefore directed the clerk in charge of the claim branch to make up the brief of the case, enter it, and bring it to me. On perusing the brief, I found reference to a confidential letter of Colonel Irvin, in charge of transportation at Nashville at the time the transaction is said to have occurred, dated January 8, 1872, which I sent for and read. In view of this case being a confidential one between the commanding officer and Mr. Fort, it was the duty of the former to protect the latter and to preserve secrecy in the whole transaction, and if he did this the officer in charge of transportation had as little chance to know anything of the transaction as any other officer. This letter produced no effect on my opinion, and the claim was therefore sent to the Third Auditor with my recommendation for its payment. Colonel Butler, in accordance with his request, was so advised. That evening I was called upon by Colonel Butler and Mr. Tanner, requisition clerk of the War Department. They had with them the certificates of the Third Auditor and Second Comptroller, and I accompanied them and Mr. Fort (who had remained in the carriage) to my office, where I had a "request" for a requisition on the Secretary of War drawn up, and which I signed, and placed it in the hands of Mr. Tanner.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. E. SHIRAS,

Commissary-General Subsistence.

Mr. H. H. SMITH,

Clerk Committee War-Claims, Special Agent, &c.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
City of Washington :

Personally appeared Allan Rutherford, who deposed as follows :

My name is Allan Rutherford. I am Third Auditor of the Treasury. My remembrance of this case is that Hon. R. R. Butler, of Tennessee, came into my office with Mr. Fort. Mr. Butler said that he had a case for his constituent, Mr. Fort; that it had been made special all through, and that it was now here. I think that was about two o'clock, or after, on the 30th of June, 1874. Mr. Butler asked that I would also make the case special. I rang my bell and sent for the papers from the registry-desk to see what they were, and Mr. Smith brought them in. I told Mr. Butler that it would be impossible to give the case a thorough examination, it being then so late. Mr. Butler, in reply, said that the case had been thoroughly considered by the Commissary-General; that it came here with his unqualified recommendation for payment, and that to delay it now on the plea of making a thorough examination, would be doing a very great hardship to the claimant; and that he particularly and specially requested that the account be stated; otherwise this claimant would suffer; that it would probably be next spring before Congress could act upon the cases reported by the accounting officers under the law covering in balances. I do not think that Mr. Butler stated distinctly that he knew as to the justice of this claim of his own personal knowledge, but the impression made upon me at the time was that he was speaking from such knowledge. After reading the letter of the Commissary-General, in which he recommended payment of the claim, I finally consented to make it special and have the account stated, so that it might go to the Comptroller that afternoon. After it had gone to the Comptroller, I sent for Capt. Angelo Jackson, clerk in the claims division, and directed him to go down at once and see the Comptroller, and inform him that I had stated the account on a hurried examination of the papers, and principally on the recommendation of the Commissary-General, and that the case should receive thorough attention by the Comptroller before being passed. My impression was that Mr. Butler's interest was on behalf of a constituent who had suffered greatly from delay in settling his just claim. Neither Mr. Butler nor the claimant said anything in reference to any action taken by Congress. I had no knowledge, either from the papers or from the statement of Mr. Butler or the claimant, that the claim had received the action of Congress or of any committee of Congress. I supposed the certified copies presented by him embraced the whole case. If I had had any intimation that Congress or any committee of Congress had taken any action in the case, I should have declined to act on it.

ALLAN RUTHERFORD.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 5th day of November, A. D. 1874.

CHAS. F. BENJAMIN,
Investigating Agent Treasury Department.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
SECOND COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE,
November 6, 1874.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your note of the 4th instant, I say that the papers in the claim of Sugg Fort were brought to me from the Third

Auditor's Office late in the day on the 30th of June, 1874. On noticing that they had been before Congress, I at once laid them aside without examination. Not long afterward Mr. Fort, accompanied by Mr. Butler, a member of Congress from Tennessee, came in, and the impression being on my mind that the claim had been previously disallowed, I stated to Mr. Butler, in response to his urgent request for speedy action on the case, that the claimant having had his claim rejected by the accounting officers, and having appealed to Congress, he must abide by his election, and get relief, if at all, from that body. I referred him to the opinion of the Attorney-General in Fuller's case, (Aug. 22, 1845, IV Op., 429,) which very distinctly enforced that principle. Mr. Butler said that I was in error in supposing that the claim had been acted upon at the Department, and that it had been presented to Congress through mistake, when it ought to have gone to the Commissary-General; that the claim had, therefore, been withdrawn from Congress, and being a just one, entirely unobjectionable, had been strongly recommended for payment by the Commissary-General, a cautious and upright officer, who, under the law of July 4, 1864, was specially charged by Congress with the investigation of this class of claims. I am not sure that Mr. Butler expressly stated that Mr. Fort was his constituent, but I certainly so understood, and that he was personally acquainted with the circumstances of the case. He spoke of the hardship of delaying action on a perfectly just claim until the appropriation had expired, and he also referred to embarrassments of Mr. Fort's property that might prove ruinous to him if his claim should be postponed to await the appropriations of another year. Not the slightest allusion was made to any adverse action of Congress, or of any congressional committee. On the contrary, I understood that the only objection to the claim was that it should have been presented to the Commissary-General instead of Congress. No intimation was given that all the papers in the case were not put before the Commissary-General and the accounting officers. After an examination of the evidence of General Mitchell and others, and giving customary attention and credence to the representations of a member of Congress appearing to be familiar with the facts, and speaking, as I thought, for a constituent, I affirmed the report of the Third Auditor, carrying into effect the recommendation of the Commissary-General. Mr. Butler, though earnest, was apparently only rendering the friendly aid that his official position and his familiarity with the business of the Departments enabled him to offer to a citizen of his State, who, with an undisputed claim, was a stranger in the city, and ignorant of the mode in which demands against the Government were to be adjusted and settled.

Truly, yours,

J. M. BRODHEAD.

C. F. BENJAMIN, Esq.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, City of Washington :

Personally appeared Israel S. Smith, who deposed as follows : My name is Israel S. Smith. I am forty-five years of age. My residence is Washington. I am the clerk in charge of the registry desk of the Third Auditor's Office. My first knowledge of the case of Sugg Fort was when the claim was brought over by a special messenger from the Commissary-General's Office, on the 30th of June, 1874. It was one of the last cases that went through the office on that day. My impression is that Mr. R. R. Butler, of Tennessee, and the claimant, accompanied the messenger, and that they came right in to the Auditor. These gentlemen left my room without saying anything. I took the claim around to the claims division, and left it there. I met Mr. Butler late in the afternoon, as I was leaving the Department.

I. S. SMITH.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 5th day of November, A. D. 1874.

CHAS. F. BENJAMIN,
Investigating Agent, Treasury Department.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
City of Washington, ss :

Personally appeared Angelo Jackson, who deposed as follows: My name is Angelo Jackson; I am a clerk in the claims division of the Third Auditor's Office. My age is fifty-three, and my residence is Washington.

The first that I knew about the Sugg Fort claim was when it was brought to me by Mr. Allen, of the claims division, on the 30th of June last. It was somewhere about 3 o'clock or perhaps after 3 o'clock in the afternoon. Mr. Allen said to me that the Auditor had made it special. I took up the papers, of course, but could not examine them as I would naturally do; but I looked for the indorsement of the Commissary-General, and I made the calculations to see that they were correct, put my initials to it, and sent it away. I afterward went to the Comptroller, on the request of the Auditor, and said to him that the Auditor wished me to tell him that he, the Auditor, had not had time to make an examination of the case and that he wished the Comptroller to make a thorough examination of it before passing it. The papers were brought in by Mr. Mitchell, and some persons came in with him while I was with the Comptroller, but I heard no conversation. The Comptroller said that inasmuch as the papers had been before Congress and the Auditor thought the thing ought to be looked into, he would have it investigated before passing it. I heard no conversation. I inferred that, from their coming in with Mr. Mitchell, they were connected with the case. I had no conversation with the claimant, or with any one on his behalf.

ANGELO JACKSON.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this fifth day of November, A. D. 1874.

CHAS. F. BENJAMIN,
Investigating Agent, Treasury Department.

WASHINGTON, D. C., November 27, 1874.

SIR: In reply to your request of the 21st instant for a statement of any information that I may possess regarding the claim of Sugg Fort, of Robertson County, Tennessee, I have to say that, on the 30th of June last, about 3½ o'clock p. m., I took in person to the Office of the Second Comptroller of the Treasury some requisitions.

After leaving that Office, and while waiting for a car to go home, Mr. Allen, of the Third Auditor's Office, came out of the Treasury, and stated that Hon. Mr. Butler, of Tennessee, had just gone in to the Second Comptroller with a case, and that most likely he would want me to issue a requisition upon it if the Comptroller approved it.

Knowing that after that day no claims chargeable against old balances could be paid, after some consideration I returned to the room of the Second Comptroller, and there found Judge Butler and Mr. Sugg Fort. Upon my entering, the Comptroller remarked that they were just talking about me; that he had allowed a case for Mr. F., but had told the judge that I had left the Department, and in all probability no more requisitions would be issued. Judge Butler at once requested that I should return to the Department and see if we could not catch the Secretary and have a requisition issued, pleading very strongly the necessities of Mr. Fort, stating that his property was mortgaged and would be sold, or words to that effect, if the claim was not paid then.

The Comptroller agreeing to remain until we returned, I accompanied Judge B. and Mr. F. in a carriage to the War Department. We found the Secretary had gone. I consulted Mr. Crosby, the chief clerk, who declined to take any action, and said nothing could be done without the request for a requisition was made in the regular way by the Commissary-General. Judge B. asked me if I knew where the latter lived, being satisfied that he was not at his Office at so late an hour. I said I did, and again, at his urgent request and after speaking to Mr. Crosby, I accompanied them, and went to the house of General Shiras, Commissary-General. Judge B. represented the case to General S., and he drove with us to his Office, and had a request prepared by Mr. Eldridge, who happened to come up just at the moment we arrived.

Judge B., Mr. F., and I then returned to the War Department, where I made the requisition, and we all rode up to the house of the Secretary of War, who signed it there. Again returning to the War Department, I made the proper entry and took the requisition, in company with Judge B. and Mr. F., to the Second Comptroller, where my connection with the matter ended.

Very respectfully,

JOHN B. TANNER.

CHAS. F. BENJAMIN, Esq.,

In the matter of the claim of Sugg Fort, of Robertson County, Tennessee.

Statement of Henry H. Smith.

My name is Henry H. Smith. I reside at No. 1325 F street, Washington, D. C. I am clerk of the Committee on War-Claims, House of Representatives. Early in the month of December, 1873, (about the 5th, I should say,) a bill was introduced by Hon. H. H. Harrison, M. C., of Tennessee, and referred to the Committee on War-Claims, for the relief of Sugg Fort, of Robertson County, Tennessee. This bill was, in the usual order, referred by the chairman, Hon. William Lawrence, of Ohio, to Hon. Isaac W. Scudder, of New Jersey, as a subcommittee, for examination and report. In examining the papers submitted with the bill there appeared a statement made by Fort in regard to the alleged circumstances of the taking of his flour by the United States military authorities. No reference whatever was made in that statement to the secret visit to General R. B. Mitchell, then in command at Nashville, Tenn., or to the claimant's refusal to accept vouchers or receipts; but, to the best of my remembrance, it was alleged by Fort that sundry wagon-trains from time to time visited his mill on the Red River, in said county, and took therefrom this flour for which claim was made. During the month of January, or possibly early in February, some testimony was filed before the committee by Judge Harrison, being the evidence taken before United States Commissioner Campbell, the witnesses being Wiley Edwards, Albert Metcalf, and Henry Waters. No report was made on the claim by Mr. Scudder until some time toward the latter part of April, when the case was brought up for discussion and postponed, neither Mr. Scudder nor any member of the committee being satisfied as to the sufficiency of the evidence. Early in the following month (May) Mr. Fort appeared at the committee-room, and handed me an envelope containing the affidavit of General R. B. Mitchell and a formal petition to Congress, signed and sworn to by himself, which he said he desired to substitute in the place of the statement first made by him. I replied that the case was in the hands of the subcommittee, and that I had no authority to permit the exchange, and referred him to Mr. Scudder. Mr. Scudder shortly after came down to the room and asked me in regard to the matter. He stated that Fort said that he wished merely to substitute a paper more full as to details than the first, and he consented that this might be done. The statement first made by Fort was delivered to him, and the other papers filed with the case. I read the first statement hurriedly, and to the best of my remembrance the failure of Fort to obtain vouchers for the flour alleged to have been taken was ascribed to the fact that the officer taking the flour had no authority to issue such vouchers or receipts. I think there was nothing in that statement to the effect that the officers taking the flour had been specifically instructed by General Mitchell not to issue receipts in pursuance of any plan or understanding between Mitchell and Fort. The latter part of May, or possibly early in June, the case was brought up for final action. General John Coburn, chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, made a statement in regard to the case, and adverse to the claim, on information received by him from officers formerly, I think, of his command. The claim was unanimously rejected, and it was directed to be so reported to the House. The committee, however, had no opportunity of reporting any cases after the last call of committees for private bills early in May, and by agreement all the reports of the Committee on War-Claims were made as on the last day of the session. General Mitchell appeared at the committee-room frequently in company with Fort, and stated that he was acting as the friend and counsel of the claimant. Hon. Roderick R. Butler, of Tennessee, also visited the room or inquired of me frequently as to the case. I think Mr. F. S. Sowers, a claim-agent, also inquired two or three times about the progress of the claim. I never saw or knew the claimant before his bill was referred to the committee. During the pendency of the case I never saw any document contemporaneous with the claim. I called the attention of the claimant to the difficulty of proving the case in consequence of there being no such documentary evidence. I said to him, when he complained of the delay, that his case was by no means so clear as to entitle him to expect speedy action thereon. I remarked that his failure to take the names of commanding officers of the commands which he claimed visited his mill and took the flour, together with the fact that no dates were given specifically, was an important omission. He claimed to have record evidence of the amounts taken at each visit, and said that a portion of his books were destroyed when his mill was burned; but that the book in which was entered the number of barrels of flour, taken at each visit, was still in existence. This was subsequent to the filing of the affidavit of Wiley Edwards. Papers were handed to me at different times to be filed with the case, either by the claimant or by Hon. Roderick R. Butler. I make this statement entirely from memory, without having referred to the books or records of the committee.

HENRY H. SMITH,
Clerk Committee on War-Claims, House of Representatives.

Since making the foregoing statement I have examined the records of the Committee on War-Claims, and find them to confirm all material points in said statement.

I further state that Hon. Roderick R. Butler examined the papers in the Sugg Fort claim before the committee had taken final action thereon, and that I handed him the papers for that purpose; that he was accompanied by the claimant, and that he stated to me, as his opinion, that the case was well proved.

I further state that, when Mr. Butler appeared before the committee on the 5th of June, and asked the reference of this claim to the Commissary-General, he was aware that the committee had agreed to adversely report the claim at a meeting on the week previous, and that he asked me to give him information as to what General Coburn had stated to the committee, especially asking for the names given by General Coburn, and also desired to be informed as to what had occurred when the case was reported by Mr. Scudder.

I further state that Mr. Butler asked me for the papers shortly before adjournment, and that I informed him that Mr. Scudder had them, awaiting the close of the session to make the adverse report he had been instructed to make.

HENRY H. SMITH,
Investigating Agent, Treasury Department.

DECEMBER 5, 1874.

Questions suggested to the Hon. Roderick R. Butler, M. C., as bearing upon his connection with the claim of Sugg Fort, of Robertson County, Tennessee.

I. How long have you known Sugg Fort; where did you first make his acquaintance, and through whom, and what was the cause or purpose of your becoming acquainted?

II. When did you first hear that he had a claim for flour taken by the United States, and from whom did you hear it, and why were you told of it?

III. When first told to you, what were the alleged circumstances connected with the taking of the flour, and what military officers were named to you as connected with the taking or use of the flour?

IV. Did you ever do anything in aid of or in behalf of the claim, before Congress or any Department of the Government, or both; and, if so, what did you do?

V. Did you take any measures to satisfy yourself of the validity and justice of the claim and the loyalty of the claimant; and, if so, what steps did you take?

VI. While the claim was pending before Congress, what other persons than the claimant were engaged or interested in the prosecution of the claim, so far as you knew or were advised?

VII. Did you know, and when did you know, that the claim had been adversely reported upon by the Committee on War-Claims?

VIII. Did you subsequently introduce a bill into Congress, or did you ever introduce such a bill, referring such claim to the Commissary-General, and what was the cause and occasion of such a bill?

IX. What did you understand to be the relations between General Robert B. Mitchell and the claimant while the claim was before Congress ?

X. Did you ever know or hear of General Mitchell doing anything in aid of the claim, other than testifying in aid of it ; and, if so, what did he do ?

XI. While the claim was pending, did you know or hear of any persons receiving money from the claimant for their services in the case ? If so, what persons, and for what services.

XII. After the claim was paid, do you know what became of the money ? Did you turn it all over to the claimant, or did you make any payments, distributions, or disposition of the whole or any part thereof ? If so, to whom ?

XIII. Did the claimant offer or urge upon you any part of the proceeds of the claim in recognition or payment of your services, expenses, or loss of time, or did he offer to make any contribution to the expenses of your political campaign ? If he did either of these things, which did he do, and what did you do or say in answer thereto ?

XIV. Have you any knowledge or information as to the disposition made by the claimant of the money paid over to him by you, as collected upon this claim ?

XV. Do you know, or have you heard, the names of persons receiving any part of the proceeds of the claim, and how much each or any such person received ?

XVI. Do you know, or have you heard, of any persons at Washington, or elsewhere, who have claimed or asserted that they ought to have received rewards or payments out of the proceeds of the claim ; and, if so, what persons ?

XVII. After the adjournment of the last session, what Government officers did you see in aid of the claim, naming them successively ?

XVIII. Did you ever profess to any such officer that you had personal knowledge of the merits of the claim, or the pecuniary situation of the claimant ?

XIX. Did you ever hold out the claimant to any such officer as an old friend, or old acquaintance, or constituent, either by directly asserting such relation, or by indirectly leading such officer to assume such relation between you ?

XX. Did you ever represent to any such officer that the claim had not received the action of Congress, or did you fail to state to any such officer that the claim had been acted upon adversely in Congress ?

XXI. Did you ever state to such officer that the papers presented under certificate and seal of the House of Representatives were copies of all the papers in the case, or did you fail to state that they were not all the papers in the case ?

XXII. Did you ever tell any such officer that the claim had been presented to Congress by mistake, and that it should have been presented to the Commissary-General, and that it had been withdrawn from Congress, or did you state any one of those three things ?

XXIII. Did you, yourself, select the papers from the files of the House to be copied and certified ? If not, did you have anything to do with the selection ? By whom was the selection made, and on what principle was it made ?

XXIV. Have you talked with, or written to, or heard from any person in relation to the claim or the investigation of it, within the past three months ; if so, with whom have you talked, to whom have you written, and from whom have you heard ?

XXV. Have you had any communication with or from the claimant, General Mitchell, or F. S. Sowers, of Washington, within that time, concerning the claim?

The answer of R. R. Butler to the interrogatories filed by Charles F. Benjamin, investigating agent, Treasury Department.

Answer to the first interrogatory. I don't remember how long I have known Sugg Fort. I think about one year, though I may have been introduced to him before that time. I first made his acquaintance at Washington. As to the cause or purpose of our being acquainted I cannot say. I presume he was introduced to me as a loyal Tennessean who had some business before Congress; but of this I presume only.

Answer to second interrogatory. The first I ever heard of his having a claim for flour was during the last session of Congress. Charles O'Niel, a claim-agent from Nashville, Tenn., came to me at the Ebbitt House, and told me that Fort had a claim against the Government for flour that he claimed was a just one; that the claimant was a loyal man; that he was pecuniarily embarrassed; and that he (O'Niel) wanted me to render him all the assistance I could, and gave me the particulars of the claim, and enlisted my feelings for the claimant. O'Niel further told me that he was the attorney for the claimant. I presume I was told of the claim to get my assistance in Congress to have the same paid.

Answer to third interrogatory. The circumstances of the taking of the stores I have only an imperfect recollection of, as detailed to me by O'Niel. My recollection is, that he stated to me that the flour was taken by the Union Army at the request of Fort, to prevent it from falling into the hands of the rebel troops. I think he stated that General Mitchell was in command at Nashville when the flour was taken, and had testified to the taking, or would do so.

Answer to fourth interrogatory. During the last session of Congress Hon. David A. Nunn, of Tennessee, came to me and stated that Fort had a claim pending, and wanted me to help him (Fort) to get it passed; that O'Niel had told him all about the claim, and that he (Nunn) was satisfied that the claim was just and Fort was a loyal man and should be paid. I told him I would do all I could to help him to have the claim allowed. As to what I did I can't say. I saw and talked with several members of the committee and of the House about the claim and presume I advocated the justness of it. While the claim was before the committee I thought the Commissary-General's Department could better adjudicate such claims than Congress, and told Fort that he never should have brought his claim before Congress, as it was a proper case for the Commissary-General's Department; and at his agreeing to my suggestion, I, on the 16th of June, as appears from the Record, offered a resolution referring the case to the Commissary-General, which failed to pass, as the resolution did not come from a committee. (See Record, June 16, 1874, page 5051.)

Answer to fifth interrogatory. I was satisfied of the validity of the claim from what O'Niel stated to me, together with General Mitchell's coming in person to me and stating that he knew of the taking of the flour, and that the claim should be paid; also, Fort had told me about it; and, as to loyalty, I was assured by the same parties, and I think all our Tennessee delegation in Congress who knew Fort were satisfied of it. I felt certain that the claim was just, and he was a loyal man, and felt that he was badly treated in not getting his pay.

Answer to sixth interrogatory. I knew of no persons while the claim was pending before Congress other than the claimant, except O'Niel, who were interested in the prosecution of the claim.

Answer to seventh interrogatory. I don't know when I learned that the claim had been reported adversely on by the committee. I did not know until recently, and never saw the report until to-day, December 1, 1874; but it, I see, was made on the 22d day of June last; but nothing of the kind appears in the Record of that date. I was unwell the last two or three days of the session, and was not familiar with the proceedings.

Answer to eighth interrogatory. I never introduced a bill into Congress referring to the claim of the Commissary-General. I introduced the resolution as stated in my answer to the fourth interrogatory.

Answer to ninth interrogatory. I understood General Mitchell to be a witness in the case. Fort, or some one, perhaps Mitchell himself, told me that he had come to testify as to the taking of the flour by the Federal Army.

Answer to the tenth interrogatory. I never knew of General Mitchell doing anything in aid of the claim, only his visit to see me, as aforesaid. I heard from him that he had testified in the case.

Answer to the eleventh interrogatory. I never knew or heard, while the claim was pending, of any person receiving money from the claimant for their services in the case.

Answer to twelfth and thirteenth interrogatories. The claimant, the day he received his check or warrant for the money, as I now remember the time, came to my room and asked me to go with him to the Treasury to identify him, so as to draw his money. I told him I had to go to the Post-Office Department on some pressing business, but I would meet him at the Treasury within a fixed time. When I got near the northern entrance to the Treasury he met me, and said there were several men standing near the corner of F and Fifteenth streets watching him to get his money; that they wanted to extort large fees from him, and he did not intend to be fleeced, and requested me to step in and get his money and bring it to him, and he handed me his check or warrant, properly indorsed. I stepped into the Treasury and presented the warrant. The paying-teller asked me to write my name across the same, which I did. He paid me the money. I took it directly to Fort's room, which was near by, and handed it to him just as it was handed me at the Treasury. He counted the same, and offered me, I think, one thousand or fifteen hundred dollars. I told him I would not receive one cent; what I did for him was not for pay, but to serve a Tennessean and a nephew and an old friend of mine, Edward Fort. He then insisted on my taking money to pay my expenses in my coming canvass, which I refused, and did not take one cent. I handed him every cent of his money. He did not expend one cent in my recent campaign.

Answer to fourteenth interrogatory. I have no knowledge whatever or information as to the disposition he made of the money. I never saw him afterward but one time—on the street for a few minutes—and never have had a word verbally or in writing from him since.

Answer to fifteenth and sixteenth interrogatories. I do not know nor neither have I heard of any persons at Washington or elsewhere who have received or claimed or asserted that they ought to have received rewards or payments out of the proceeds of the claim, except Charles O'Neil, who stated to me that Fort had treated him badly, as he was to have had one-third of the amount of the claim, and that when he presented his written contract with Fort, he, Fort, became angry and wanted to shoot him. He told me that a day or two since.

Answer to seventeenth interrogatory. After the adjournment of Congress, Fort told me he had got permission to withdraw his papers; that he was going to file them in the Commissary-General's Office. How he got that permission I don't remember. He (Fort) came to me and stated that he had been to see the Clerk about his papers, and that he told him they could not copy them for several days, and asked me to go with him and see Mr. McPherson, the Clerk. I was unwell, and wrote McPherson a letter asking him to have the papers copied for Mr. Fort. Fort came back that day or day after with the papers, and asked me to go with him to the Commissary-General and ask him to take the papers and examine them. I did so; and General Shiras, the Commissary General, said he had so much to do, it was impossible to examine them. We left the Commissary Department, and I went to the Treasury Department, as I now remember. Fort came and hunted me up, and handed me a letter from his wife, written a few days before, stating that if he failed to get his money they would be sold out of house and home. The letter was very feeling and sad. I sat down and wrote to the Commissary-General about the letter, and asked him to investigate the claim, if possible. I told Fort to take my letter and his wife's to the Commissary-General and let him read them. He returned soon, and said that the Commissary-General had agreed to examine his claim. I then stepped into General Rutherford's office and asked him if the claim was passed on favorably by the Commissary-General, would he have it audited. I told him I was unwell, and did not want to return to the Treasury Department that day. He told me he would do so. I afterward saw the Second Comptroller and Secretary of War.

Answer to eighteenth interrogatory. I never professed to any one that I had personal knowledge of the claim or its merits, as I lived four hundred miles from Fort's farm, where the flour was secured by the Government. I may have stated to several of the officers of the Government my opinion of the justness of the claim.

Answer to nineteenth interrogatory. I did not hold out the claimant as an old friend of mine, or an old acquaintance. I may have stated that he was the nephew of an old personal and political friend, as he is the nephew of Edward Fort, who is an old friend and political friend of mine; but of this I don't remember.

Answer to the twentieth interrogatory. If I was asked by any officer of the Government whether the claim had been acted upon by Congress, I told them just what I then believed about it; that was, the claim was pending before the committee, as I don't remember that I had heard or learned that the claim had been adversely reported from the committee. I made, if asked about the status of the claim, just such a statement as I believed to be true, and none other. I have not the slightest recollection that I learned that the committee had acted adversely upon the claim at the time I visited the Departments about the claim.

Answer to twenty-first interrogatory. I never represented to any one that the papers presented under certificate and seal of the Clerk of the House of Representatives were copies of all the papers in the case. I never had seen a paper in the case; had no knowledge of the papers; did not know whether there were half a dozen or ten dozen papers in the case. I don't know, nor never did, what papers were presented to the Departments.

Answer to twenty-second interrogatory. I did not tell any officer of the Government that the claim had been presented to Congress by mistake, and that it should have been presented to the Commissary-General, and had been withdrawn from Congress. If I said anything in that direction, I may have, and doubtless did, state that the claim should have been presented to the Commissary-General's Department, as that was, in my opinion, the proper form for all such claims. I presume Hon. H. H. Harrison, the Representative from Fort's district, presented the claim to Congress at the suggestion or request of O'Neil, the attorney for the claimant.

Answer to the twenty-third interrogatory. I have no recollection of ever seeing a paper in the case. I did not select the papers from the files of the House to be copied; if I did I have entirely forgotten the circumstances; nor do I know who did, nor upon what principle the selection was made, unless it was upon the principle indicated by the Speaker, on the 13th of June, 1874 page 5438, when he says: "Nothing is withdrawn by the parties but that which they themselves have filed." But whether it was upon this principle the papers were selected I never knew, nor now don't know. I wrote to Mr. McPherson to have them copied for Fort. If I had selected them from the files I would have stepped into McPherson's room, which was two doors from the file-room, and made a verbal request to have them copied; but I wrote from my room, being unwell, to him to have the copies made. Owing to the absence of McPherson, I can't present a copy of the letter with the answers. That letter was my only action in connection with Fort's getting these copies; its contents, if produced, which I hope can be, will show my connection with the getting of the copies for the Department.

Answer to twenty-fourth interrogatory. I have talked with no one about the claim within the past three months, nor wrote a line about the claim only as aforesaid, except since my arrival, within the past few days. I talked with O'Neil, the attorney, and General Mitchell, and Captain Sowers. No person ever wrote me a line about the claim.

Answer to twenty-fifth interrogatory. I never have heard a word, verbal or written, from the claimant, since the day, or day after, he received his money in Washington. I don't know his post-office address. General Mitchell and Captain Sowers informed me, a day or two ago, that they had testified before the committee.

I is hereby certified that the foregoing statement was personally handed to me by the Hon. R. R. Butler, M. C., at the office of the Southern Claims Commission, December 2, 1874, he informing that he filed it as his statement in the case of Sugg Fort, of Tennessee.

Witness my hand this 3d day of December, 1874.

CHAS. F. BENJAMIN,
Investigating Agent, Treasury Department.

[From the East Tennessee Echo, Jonesborough, Tenn., October 23, 1874.]

REFLECT BEFORE YOU VOTE.

When the voters go to the polls November 3, they should remember that a large number of claims are pending at Washington in favor of Union men in this district. In most of these cases it will require the personal attention, effort, and influence of our Representative to secure their payment. During his service Judge Butler has devoted most of his time to this particular interest of his constituents, and the result is that more money has found its way from the National Treasury to ours than any district in the South, as the records show. Judge Butler knows the devious ways and complications of the Departments, is influential with their chief officers, and never fails to put through a meritorious claim, as hundreds and thousands of men will testify. It takes the most active and observing Congressmen two to four years to attain such an invaluable acquaintance and information. Sending any other man to Washington at this juncture will have the effect of indefinitely postponing the payment of hundreds of honest claims. Every claimant should consider this fact when he goes to the polls. In the extension of favors Judge Butler has acted with the utmost impartiality, and has attended faithfully to all business intrusted to him by his constituents, regardless of color and politics.

To the Committee on War-Claims, House of Representatives :

Your petitioner, Sugg Fort, a citizen of Robertson County, State of Tennessee, respectfully submits for your consideration the accompanying account against the United States Government for two thousand seven hundred and ninety-one barrels flour, valued at $8.50 per barrel, amounting to $23,723.50. (See account, marked A.)

My residence is at Fort's Station, county and State aforesaid. My age is 37, and my occupation a miller and farmer.

At the outbreak of the war in April, 1861, I was a Union man, and so continued all the time during the war. In 1861 my State voted for or against secession twice. I voted and used my influence against secession both times. I was at the commencement of the war, and had been regularly engaged at the milling business since 1854, owning two mills, both on Red River, in Robertson County, six miles apart. The flour was taken from the mill at my home-place; it was a frame house 60 by 55 feet, five stories high, and could make 120 barrels per day. During the war I continued to make flour, procuring wheat under permits granted me by Federal authorities, no purchases being allowed without permits. My permits allowed me to buy wheat and carry flour by wagons to Clarksville and Nashville, but the facilities for transportation being so meager, and the country so infested with guerrillas, I could not send my flour to market, and feeling the guerrillas would steal my mules if I kept them, I sold all except four, which I kept for my farm. Having no means of sending my flour to market, it accumulated as manufactured. I had to store it in my mill and warehouse adjoining the granary, tobacco-barns, and a large store-house on my farm. I had thus stored over 3,000 barrels at the time I finished grinding my supply of wheat, the 28th of November, 1862. The United States Government had the occupation of Middle Tennessee at the time, but the occupation of my county was not sufficient to guarantee protection to Union men, and bands of rebels in the county annoyed me very much. Small bands came to my place at night and carried away small quantities of flour, &c., I, if at home, having to hide while they were there, fearing they came after me. They would take the flour in bags, on their horses; sometimes bring a small wagon, but generally on their horses.

Fearing the rebels might occupy the country in sufficient force to get my flour, and dreading they would burn all the buildings containing the flour, I determined the Union Army should have my flour and risk getting compensation from the Government; and knowing if I went to Nashville publicly and sold my flour to the Union Army and the rebels found it out, they would burn all my buildings, hence I went to Nashville secretly to report the flour and have it seized by the Union forces, and on the night of the 3d of December, 1862, about 8 o'clock in the night, I secretly got my horse and started for Nashville, drawing my hat down over my face whenever I passed anybody's house or met any one, to prevent recognition, telling no one but my wife and Mr. Johnston (my Union miller) where I was going. Got to Nashville about sun-up on the morning of the 4th of December, and, after getting my breakfast, went to my friend E. M. Reynolds, now deceased, a Union man, told him the facts, and he took me to General Mitchell's headquarters, on College street, who was the post commander. I told him I had about 3,000 barrels flour on my place, and I wanted him to send wagons and get it, and if he did not the rebels would get it. He told me to come back in an hour or so and he would let me know. I went back at the designated time. He told me he would send for the flour. I started from Edgefield, opposite side of the river from Nashville, about 11 o'clock December the 5th a. m., going with them in about eight miles of my place, where they camped for the night. After night I left them and went home; told my wife the wagon-team would be there in the morning, December 6. Had already told General Mitchell the flour must apparently be seized against my will and wishes, and the officer in command of train, when he arrived at my place next morning, carried out the impression, as did I, by my actions, there being a number of citizens at the mill when the train arrived waiting for their grinding to be done. The train was loaded and went to Nashville, and continued to come until they got 2,791 barrels. The account of the flour was kept by Wiley Edwards, one of my millers and book-keeper. I told General Mitchell I did not want receipts as if I was being paid for the flour. The rebels in the country might hear of it and my property would be destroyed; but after the war I would try to get my pay from the Government. The Quartermaster's Department has paid me for wheat used as forage by the United States troops in West Tennessee, but the Commissary-General declines to examine my claim for flour on the ground that he had no jurisdiction; (see his letter herewith, marked B;) and having no other way of relief I have appealed to your honorable committee for a fair consideration of my claim, believing that a thorough investigation will establish its justice and payment.

SUGG FORT.

Sworn and subscribed to before me this 4th day of May, A. D. 1874.

{ THOMAS J. MYERS, }
 { NOTARY PUBLIC, }
 { WASHINGTON, D. C. }

THOMAS J. MYERS,
Notary Public.

Sugg Fort, having been by me first duly sworn, deposes and says:

My name is Sugg Fort; I am 37 years of age; I reside at Nashville, Tenn. I am a trader and speculator.

The flour included in the claim lately allowed me was ground and stored entirely at my home-place; I operated the mill regularly from November, 1854, until it was burned in November, 1872.

Between the outbreak of the war and the occupation of Tennessee by the United States Army, my largest contracts and sales were with Merriam and Co., of Memphis, James Canter, of Clarksville, Tenn., William Hassinger, of Saint Louis, Mo.; I also shipped to my regular commission merchants at New Orleans, C. H. Smith, and others.

Under my United States military permits to buy wheat, I bought, among others, from Col. E. A. Fort, of Fort's Station, Robertson County, Tenn.; Dr. Newton Walters, of Logan County, now of Nashville; William Watkins, of same county, now also of Nashville; George Snadon, Todd County; Jack Hoover, Todd County; E. L. Fort, Robertson County; T. H. Gardner, 4 miles from Fort's Station; J. W. Fort, Robertson County; J. N. Barker, Clarksville, Montgomery County, now dead; S. M. Ligon, Montgomery County.

I am not positive whether or not I sold or sent any flour to Nashville or Clarksville in the summer and fall of 1862, but I think that I did not. I sold at auction at Clarksville, Tenn., about five mules. I have no recollection of the purchasers; I was not present at the sale, nor do I remember the name of the auctioneer. The sale was in the fall of 1862. I sold four mules privately at my place to Mr. Sam. Johnson of Clarksville, still living; I think that the price was $150 each; also two mules to Sam. Williams, now living at Paducah, Ky.; also two more to Col. E. A. Fort, of Robertson County; also one to Henry Binkley, near Springfield, Robertson County; two more to James Connell, of Robertson County.

Between May and December, 1862, I used four buildings as store-houses for my flour:

1. Tobacco-barn, 50 feet by 60 feet; about 30 feet high. It would have held six or eight (thousand—J. T.) barrels of flour.

2. Granary, 60 feet by 20 feet; about 20 feet high. Would have held, at a rough guess, from two to four thousand barrels.

3. Store-house, I think 40 feet by 45 feet; about 10 feet high, holding about 1,500 barrels.

There are three buildings on my farm.

4. Mill and warehouse; mill, 45 feet by 50 feet, four stories high; warehouse 30 feet by 40 feet, and adjoined the mill, two stories high. Both together held about 4,000 barrels and left me room to mill. The dimensions and capacities of these buildings are not precise, but I believe them to be correct.

When the Federals occupied Middle Tennessee, I had on hand but little wheat or flour—very little.

Between the time the United States soldiers came and the time I saw General Mitchell, I may have bought twenty thousand bushels of wheat.

I know that it was the 4th of December when I saw General Mitchell, because I got it from my books in the spring of 1870. In 1874, when I made my affidavit, I could have had no information except from my books as to the date I came to and returned from Nashville.

E. M. Reynolds lived in Nashville, Tenn. I don't remember now where his house was, nor do I remember what his business was then. He moved to Louisville during or since the war, and I think that he was in a shoe-store.

I don't recollect what officers were then about General Mitchell's headquarters.

My mill was distant from Edgefield about thirty miles. Escort to the wagon-train that went to my place were chiefly foot-soldiers, I think.

I do not recollect any of the names of any of the citizens who were at my mill when the soldiers came. The United States soldiers were engaged in carrying away the flour five or six months.

Some rebels came to my mill during the time just named. My mill was not destroyed or the flour, because my wife's relations (brothers) were in the rebel army. Whenever they came I would get out of the way and she would appeal to them not to destroy my buildings. I do not know that they destroyed either mill or property about there, except the railroad-bridge.

My claim for flour was not made out before 1870, because I had a claim pending in the Quartermaster's Department for wheat, which was not settled until November, 1868. I was advised by my friends, Captain Sowers, of Washington, and others not remembered, not to file the flour-claim until the wheat-claim was paid. I do not recollect the reasons given by Captain Sowers for his advice.

After giving my claim to Captain Sowers, I next went to Washington in August, 1871. I staid but a few days, owing to sickness. I don't think that I went back again until March, 1873. I do not recollect whether or not I was there in December, 1871. I boarded at Willard's Hotel every time except the last time. I did not find out in August, 1871, whether Captain Sowers had filed my claim since I was taken sick and unable to attend to any business. I was attended by Dr. Bulkley. I got to Washington, D. C., on Saturday morning; did not see Captain Sowers till that evening; did not talk business with him, since I was tired. Got up next morning sick with cholera morbus; remained sick until Friday, when, by advice of my physician, I left for home.

Johnson, my former miller, is dead; died at my house nearly two years ago. He is buried at the old Johnson burial-ground, near Adams' Station. I did not know then, nor do not know now, the names of any officers or wagon-masters or of any other persons attending the Government trains that came after my flour.

General Mitchell was the only officer with whom I ever had any conversation or business in regard to this flour. I gave information to General Mitchell that led to the seizure of a large amount of bacon. I never knew whose bacon it was, nor on whose place it was. It was five or six miles from Nashville, on the road to Springfield. A negro named Ralph Munford, living at or near Clarksville, told me of it. He was killed about one year ago at the railroad-crossing at Clarksville.

My mill was the only mill for which there was a permit to buy wheat in this whole section for merchant business. I got my permit from General Rousseau. I think it was in the summer of 1862. The other miller within five miles of me was Judge Samuel Watson. My mills and Judge Watson's were the only mills in this vicinity. If Watson's mill was doing a merchant business I did not know it.

I was in Washington when my flour-claim was allowed last June. I got my money all in currency; I got $23,723.50. I received this from Judge Roderick Random Butler, member of Congress. I gave him the Treasury draft with my indorsement on it, to get the money for me, because I did not wish anybody to see me drawing so much money myself. I got the draft myself from Colonel Mann at the Treasury Department. Judge Butler paid over to me the full amount. I object to saying whether I changed that money into any other form, but I brought it home to Tennessee.

I paid out of that money or any other money nothing to witnesses, attorneys, or helpers. I did pay small amounts of from $25 to $50 to several persons at Washington, but not in the service of the Government, whose names I do not desire to give. I never paid any money, directly or indirectly, to any member of Congress or officer of the Government. I did wish to compensate Judge Butler, and offered him $500, which he declined to receive, and told me to give to my wife with his compliments. I first became acquainted with Judge Butler at the last session of Congress, through the introduction of E. A. Sowers, of Tennessee, then in Washington. Congressman Harrison, of Nashville, advised me to go to some older member of Congress than himself, and suggested Judge Butler. Judge Butler first told me that he would examine the papers of my claim, and if he found it a meritorious claim that he would assist me in regard to it. Subsequently, and after some delay, he told me that he would assist me.

I still adhere to my former statement that I owned two mills; the second mill was the one referred to in Colonel Fort's deposition, as owned by my wife's family. I bought it from a brother of my wife, to whom it was assigned as his portion of the estate. The deed to the same is on file at Washington in my wheat-claim. Only my cash-book was saved from the fire when my mill was burned.

At the time the United States troops were taking my flour the railroad was not in running order, some of the bridges there being down.

I was on intimate terms with my cousin, E. A. Fort, during our partnership and afterward, and was accustomed to consult with him upon all important matters, but did not tell him of my visits to General Mitchell, either before or afterward. I don't recollect that I have ever told my father or Colonel Fort, to this day, about my visits to General Mitchell. I had no business relations with my father, but was in the habit of consulting with him, as with Colonel Fort. I told my wife before I started and after my return; I told no one else till in my statement, filed with the Committee on War-Claims of Congress.

The first time I saw General Mitchell, after I saw him in Nashville, was in Washington, last spring. I tried to find him before that time; I made inquiries about him at Washington in March, 1873, among others Mr. Shissler, of the Treasury Department, who could not give me any information about him.

I met General Mitchell at Willard's Hotel last spring, in March; he passed by where I was sitting, and somebody with me, whom I don't remember, addressed him. I got up and spoke to him, and asked him whether he remembered my visit to him at Nashville, when he answered that he would never forget it; then I told him that I wanted his affidavit, and he said that he would give it.

When I testified awhile ago that I did not pay any money to any person for services in connection with my claim, I did not have in my mind General Mitchell, for I did pay him, I don't remember how much; I kept no account of it; I always paid him in small sums. These sums, some before and after I got my claim collected. I think that I gave him at one time $500 after my claim was collected; I don't recollect whether I paid him any large sums either before or after that; I paid him not for his affidavit but for his professional value, as I kept him away from his business, in order to get his statement before Congress or the Departments whenever, if ever, needed.

General Mitchell gave me professional advice after I met him at Willard's, telling me how to shape my papers and case.

SUGG FORT.

Subscribed and sworn to before me at Fort's Station, Robertson County, Tennessee, this the 26th day of October, 1874.

[SEAL.]

JAMES TRIMBLE,

Circuit Court Commissioner of the United States

for the Middle District of Tennessee.

I, Robert B. Mitchell, being duly sworn according to law, do depose as follows: In the fall of 1862 I was a brigadier-general of volunteers, United States Army, and in November of that year was appointed to the command of the post, district, and defenses of Nashville, Tenn.

Early in the month of December, 1862, Mr. Sugg Fort, of Robertson

County, Tenn., came to my headquarters, at Nashville, and informed me that he had a large amount of flour. To my best recollection he stated the quantity at three thousand barrels, and asked whether I had not sufficient transportation to get it out of the way of the straggling confederate bands which infested Robertson County. He stated also that he desired the United States Government to have it, but did not dare to sell it or to have it known that he had sold it or had made any arrangements by which the Government could obtain it, as, if he did, his confederate neighbors and the predatory bands would burn his mills, which were very valuable. He desired me to order the commanding officer of the escort to press the flour, and create the impression in the community where he resided that it was taken against his consent. This I did, with the commanding officer of each of the trains which I sent after the flour.

Mr. Fort stated to me at the time that he was willing to take his chances of the Government's paying him in the future, as he wanted the United States to have the flour, and desired to keep it out of the hands of the confederates.

Under this arrangement I sent out trains from time to time, took the flour at Mr. Fort's place, had it hauled to Nashville, where it was used by the troops, who at this time were greatly in need of supplies, the road to Louisville being frequently cut by the enemy, and the river being infested with Wheeler's cavalry to such an extent that the arrival of supplies by water was as uncertain as it was by rail.

The quantity was reported to me on the arrival of each train, and my recollection is that the aggregate so reported was about 2,700 or 2,800 barrels. Flour at the time in question was very scarce, and the reporting of this flour by Mr. Fort, and its subsequent transport to Nashville, were of a value to the Government far in excess of the mere money-value of the flour, as the action of Mr. Fort supplied a vital want which, in the precarious state of affairs at that time, threatened great difficulty, if not disaster.

At the same time Mr. Fort gave me information where I could procure a large quantity of bacon, which it was supposed had been concentrated to send through to the confederate army. On this information I seized for the use of the Army 41,000 or 42,000 pounds of bacon, worth four or five thousand dollars.

Mr. Fort gave me, during the winter of 1862 and 1863, valuable information from time to time, both as to the enemy and as to the status for loyalty of his neighbors. His name was sufficient evidence to me in cases where those asking favors of the military authorities brought his recommendations.

Mr. Fort's mills were the only mills in his section of the country which were allowed to run, the other mills being owned and controlled by persons in sympathy with the confederacy.

The loyalty of Mr. Fort I never heard questioned. He was known as a Union man who sympathized with the cause of the republic, and his acts hereinbefore recited are sterling proofs of his devotion and fidelity to the right.

Further this deponent saith not.

ROBT. B. MITCHELL.

Sworn and subscribed to before me this 4th day of May, A. D. 1874.

THOS. J. MYERS,
Notary Public.

Affidavit of Robert B. Mitchell.

I am forty-four years of age; reside at Paola, Kansas, and am a lawyer by occupation. In regard to the time I was appointed to the command at Nashville, I desire to state that I cannot swear to the exact date. After being wounded at the battle of Perryville I was sent off on "sick-leave," and returned, I think, the last part of November, but I cannot remember just the date. The records of my command would show the exact date. Those records ought to be in the War Department. I turned them over to Gen. Robert S. Granger, my successor. While I was sick in bed for three weeks, nearly, Gen. James D. Morgan commanded, but he did not succeed me, or relieve me of the command. I fix the time when Fort came to me as being in December, from the fact that we were in a strait from the loss of vessels on Harpeth Shoals loaded with provisions, and I was directed to supply the command from the country. That is the only means I have of saying it was in December. I cannot fix the dates. I want to state that I don't pretend to fix dates without going to the record. It was in December, I remember. My recollection now is—I had not been long in command—only two, three, or possibly four weeks, when this thing occurred; but I could not give the date to you of the destruction of those vessels, but it was inside of a month after I assumed command. I was introduced to Mr. Fort by a man named Reynolds, who was engaged in the freight department of the post. I cannot say how many trains went out as a matter of fact. I sent out trains every day until we felt a dead certainty of getting the flour. I remember we did not get as much flour as he told me he had. My recollection is that he said he had from 3,000 to 3,200 barrels of flour. We sent out for forage and provisions in every direction from the city of Nashville. We sent out to Sugg Fort's place, knowing we could be supplied, from the information we had. I cannot state that we got a single barrel of flour from his mills, only from report. I never went there myself personally. None of the officers had anything to do with the sending out of these trains to Sugg Fort's mills except myself and the officers in charge. I made the detail from the different regiments, and tried to make the work as equal on the regiments as I could. Upon their return from the mills these officers reported to me in person. I will not say that I sent out all the trains that brought in flour from Sugg Fort's mills. There may have been others sent out by General Morgan; some of them may have been sent out during the time Morgan was in command, but with the exception of that time I sent them out personally. I was the commanding officer there except during the time I was sick, from November, 1862, until June, 1863. I do not remember the day I was relieved. Everything that was received in the way of supplies was reported to the chief post commissary, Captain Little. The issuing post commissary was Captain Henderson, and Little was the receiving commissary. I remember very distinctly directing the first trains that came from these mills to report to Henderson for the post service, and I remember, too, of his coming in and telling me that he did not want to open any new accounts; that he was drawing all his provisions from Captain Little, and would prefer to have the train unload at Little's, and make him responsible, and he would draw from him. I am speaking of Henderson now. When I last heard of Henderson he was in New York City. He was what they call a fancy-goods merchant there, on Broadway, almost opposite the St. Nicholas Hotel. I know that a portion of this flour was used by the troops at Nashville, for the reason that I know, generally, that we had to have supplies. No, it was not all used there. Some of it, undoubtedly, went to the front, because we were scarce in all the departments—in the field and on the boats. I have not any personal knowledge that this flour was used by the troops. I know it was used by the Army, besides a great deal more flour that we pressed in the city. I could not give the names of parties of whom we pressed flour, but I remember having it reported to me by Mr. Osgood that there was a lot of flour seized in a warehouse that was supposed to belong to a rebel, and for which there was no account made. I remember the date of Fort's coming to me, and the fact of the scarcity of supplies, because I know we were dependent almost entirely on the railroad from Louisville and the river. I remember distinctly the destruction of seven transports laden with provisions that we were expecting to use for the advance column advancing on Murfreesborough. I was charged with the duty of supplying that whole army, by General Rosecrans. There was almost hourly telegraphic reports from my office to General Rosecrans, and the telegraphic record would show my report of the destruction of these transports. I went down myself, with five regiments of infantry, to drive the rebels away. We were paying $12 a barrel for flour in Nashville at that time; that is, we were offering $12, and buying from every loyal citizen, and pressing it from the disloyal, though generally giving them vouchers "to be paid on proof of loyalty." The quantity was reported to me on the arrival of each train. The officer in charge always halted his command in front of my quarters, and reported what he had done, and got instructions where to turn over the property. It was my custom universally to have those reports made to me personally. My recollection is that Captain Brearly made such reports to me. His regiment was on foraging duty almost all the time. I would not say that he did make such a report, but I remember his making a report to me of a fight he had, and of our getting some five or six thousand dollars' worth of bacon about the same time. I remember Captain Purdy commanded a battalion there, and one or more of the companies of his battalion were sent out with almost every train when they were foraging generally. I think I can state positively that Captain Purdy made a report once or more from Sugg Fort's mill. The trains reported to me on their arrival what they had procured, and I suppose from where they obtained it, but I could not pretend to say now. I remember of reports from Fort's mills, but I do not mean to say that they were the only foraging escorts which reported to me on their arrival; they always did. My recollection is that the lieutenant-colonel of the Eighty-sixth Illinois Infantry (whose name I cannot recall) also reported to me from Fort's mills. Fort also gave information to me, at the same time, which led to the seizure of a large quantity of bacon belonging to a notorious rebel. I forget his name. The supposition was that it was concentrated there for the purpose of sending it through our lines to the rebel army. That is what Fort said. I don't think Fort told me how he got the information. I suppose he was in the neighborhood. This bacon was within four or five miles of Fort's mills, as I understood it. That is all I know about it. The information I received from Fort during the time this flour was being taken was with regard to the bands of guerrillas that were infesting the country. He acted at one time as a guide to a locality where they were supposed to be—this Dick McCann guerrilla party that I afterward captured. I regarded Fort as a loyal man from general report and from his actions. I heard that he was loyal from John Hugh Smith, mayor of Nashville at the time, and from a man who was book-keeper in Bell's hardware establishment. He was a Scotchman, and one of my special advisers there with regard to the character of men. His office was almost opposite my headquarters, and he was in to see me every day and every night. As far as the military were concerned, Fort's was the only mill that had a passport to grind flour. Others may have ground, but he was the only man who had a permit in that vicinity. I am quite certain of that. I don't know Judge Watson, and never heard of his having a permit to run a mill. I know Fort took his permit from my headquarters to General Gordon Granger's headquarters, and had it approved. General Granger was my superior officer for a while in command of that district with headquarters at Nashville, during the latter part of the winter of 1862-'3. I never heard Fort's loyalty questioned. I took the precaution to ascertain, from men I had confidence in, who were and who were not loyal, there. This Mr. Smith, the mayor of Nashville, this book-keeper of Bell's, a man named Smiley, who was a lawyer there, (and I think he is there yet,) and old man Bell, were my advisers, and I frequently went to Governor Johnson (since President Johnson) for information. In regard to Fort's loyalty, my remarks only relate to the time that the Union forces occupied that part of the country. The reports made to me by the officers upon the arrival of their trains were merely verbal. If they were commissary stores I would say, "Take them to Little;" and if quartermaster's stores, to Garrett or some other quartermaster there. Those stores ought to be taken up on somebody's returns. I do not know they were not. I do not know any reason why they should not have been. Everything that I took in the field always appeared on the books of my quartermaster. I do not know whether Captain Little is dead or not. I was informed that he became crazy, and had gone to Europe. I do not recollect his clerks' names. Irwin was the quartermaster of land-transportation. I do not suppose he would know where they loaded the trains, but he furnished the trains. I think Fort might have taken receipts for his flour without being found out by his rebel neighbors. I insisted on that course, but he said if it was known that he had sold, or made arrangements to sell, the flour, that his mill would not last a day. So he refused any voucher whatever. He said, if the Government succeeded, he was satisfied they would pay him, and if they did not succeed he never expected any pay. I believe I suggested to him at the time that he could leave them with some one in Nashville. My recollection is that the first time Fort came to see me it was pretty early in the morning. I could not give him a definite answer whether I could send a train with him until I saw Irwin. I sent for Irwin and ascertained that I could, and he came back some time before noon to receive my answer. In the mean time, however, I had sent for this book-keeper of Bell's to ascertain what he knew about his loyalty. Mr. Reynolds was with him the first time and introduced him; he was not with him when he came back the second time. Mr. Reynolds introduced him as a loyal citizen, and this book-keeper told me he knew him perfectly well and that he and his people were loyal. The first letter I had about this claim was from Mr. Sowers, in 1870, stating that he wanted my testimony. I replied that I would see him when I came here, and any information I could give him I would be glad to do; that I remembered something about it. At that time I was trying cases before the Mexican commission here. I did see Mr. Sowers, but for some reason he did not take my testimony then. My recollection now is that they said they had a case pending in the Quartermaster's Department, and they thought it was best not to have both cases pending at one time in the Department. Fort wrote me when I was at home, in 1870 or 1871, and again in 1872; I never replied to those letters. Finally I got a letter

when I was sick in bed a year ago, and had my wife reply that I would be in Washington, and anything I could do for him, from my recollection, I would do. I don't know whether I have those letters or not. I first met Fort here personally in 1872, in front of Willard's Hotel, and I met him again, the second time, last spring. I have never held any relation to him and his claim other than that of a witness; never as counsel. I never have had anything to do with it but to testify. He simply paid my expenses while I staid here as a witness. I never wrote an affidavit in the case, or performed any duty as attorney. He consulted me very frequently and I gave him advice, and he paid my expenses while I was here for over two months. There was no contract about it at all, and I never asked him for a cent in the world. I was detained here for the purpose of talking to a member of the committee. After my affidavit was filed the member of the committee asked to have a private interview with me, and kept me here for some time. Then I was here on some other business; I was trying cases in the Mexican Commission. I never acted for him except in a friendly way, and what he paid me was entirely voluntary on his part, and I would not have felt sore if he had not paid me a cent. I did borrow $50 to be used in aid of the claim when Fort was on a sick-bed and unable to be up. I cannot state how much I raised altogether from Fort. I think I received $480 from him at one time; I am not positive as to the amount. I cannot fix the time when Fort first came to see me at Nashville. I certainly was in command before December. My order, assuming command, was published in the papers. I remember there were 2,700 or 2,800 barrels of flour taken, from general recollection and from reports, from the amount of property taken, and the great necessity for flour, and my report to General Rosecrans. I reported to him everything that came by telegraph. I cannot tell you how I remember that definitely. The way I probably got the idea is by being told and having the matter talked over. If Little was alive he could tell to a barrel. I do not know how far it is from Nashville or Edgefield to the mill. I don't know about the roads on that side of the river. A dirt-road in Tennessee would be very bad in a wet time. The bottom drops out of the road easier than in any place I was ever in. It is good in a dry time. They used to make, with forage-trains, about twenty-five miles a day. We never allowed trains to go off a walk unless pressed by the enemy. I call a day, say from 8 or 9 o'clock until dark. On an ordinary march on an ordinary road we used to require trains to make twenty-five miles a day. They ought to halt for water two or three times a day, and I never permitted feeding but twice a day. The soldiers always rode when the trains were empty. I think it would be extraordinary for such a train to make thirty miles between 11 o'clock in the morning and dark. Twenty-five miles a day would be about the limit. I met Fort accidentally in front of Willard's Hotel. I knew him and he knew me. We shook hands. I remembered his face pretty well. He asked if I had received a letter from him, and I said I had. He did not then begin to talk about his claim. When he did begin to talk about it, my recollection was as clear as ever about taking the flour. I did not refresh my memory by reference to documents at all, and he did not refresh my memory by asking me if I did not remember such and such a thing. It was not a made-up thing with me at all. Fort told me the flour was the production of two mills, and that a portion of the flour was in a tobacco-house. He said he had a warehouse filled with flour at one of his mills, and also a tobacco-house or tobacco-shed filled with flour. I thought it must be a pretty heavy manufacturing-house to have 3,000 barrels. The reason his flour was allowed to remain at the mills so long after we began taking it was that we were foraging off places where we felt more doubtful about being able to secure supplies in the future. Wherever we heard of flour or forage of any kind in a locality where it could be run out of the country, that was the first place we went to. I foraged on every road leading from Nashville. My instructions were to leave just enough for families to live on, and no more. Occasionally we got a supply of flour over the railroad, but the road was cut every once in a while, and we could not depend on that. The flour at Fort's mills was in no particular danger except from guerrillas. It was reported to me that they were taking flour every day or two on their horses, between my command and the army in front. Other places were regarded as a great deal more dangerous than Fort's, because he was on the other side of the river, and we knew no large train could go there and load the flour. Fort represented to me that it was being taken by these guerrillas in small parcels, here a sack and there a sack. We generally had full rations during those six months, but occasionally we were on half-rations. At Chickamauga, for days, we had not quarter-rations. The forage trains usually went out thirty or forty miles in every direction. I have heard of White's Creek. We did some foraging there. I was not with the trains. Whenever we heard of forage or provisions of any kind we sent to that point, and they would probably go into half a dozen neighborhoods and fill up the train. I do not remember how large any of the trains I sent out were. They were usually from fifteen to twenty-five wagons. I do not remember anything especially about these trains going to Fort's, only generally from the reports they made when they came in. I did not draw up my former affidavit. I read it and signed it as a statement of the general facts. I may have got the number of barrels from Henderson or Little, but the general impression was that we did not get as much flour as he had reported. He reported over 3,000. How I know it I could not tell you. The general impression on my mind was that we did not get, by three or four hundred barrels, as much as he had reported. I cannot be specific as to the dates or the amount of flour. All I can give is my general impression. But the fact of his coming there and reporting that, I am positive of, and also about my sending out the trains. I remember that that flour was received there from Fort, and I also remember that a man named Cheatham came in and made a great fuss about my taking corn and animals from him.

Since the foregoing part of the statement was made, I have satisfied myself that it was on the 10th of December, 1862, that I assumed command at Nashville.

ROBT. B. MITCHELL.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 30th day of November, 1874.

CHAS. F. BENJAMIN,

Investigating Agent, Treasury Department.

WILEY EDWARDS, being next called, deposes and says:

By the commissioner:

Question. What is your name, age, and where do you reside, and are you in any way related to the claimant, or have you any interest, either direct or indirect, in the claim in controversy?—Answer. My name is Wiley Edwards. I am 30 years old. I live at Adams Station, Robertson County, Tennessee. I am in no way related to the claimant. I was born and raised in Robertson County, Tennessee, about three miles from where Sugg Fort resides, and have known Sugg Fort all of my life. I have no interest, either direct or indirect, in the claim in controversy. Mr. Fort is not indebted to me in any sum.

By the claimant :

Q. Were you ever employed by Sugg Fort? If so, when, and for what purpose, and how long were you in his employ?—A. I was employed by him in 1859, and remained in his employ until the 11th day of October, 1872, as one of his millers in his flouring-mills in Robertson County, Tennessee.

Q. Did you ever know Government wagons to haul off flour from said mills? If so, when was it?—A. I have known Government wagons to haul off flour from the mills. In the winter of 1862-'3, from the 6th December, 1862, until May 3, 1863.

Q. How do you know they were Government wagons, and did you have anything to do with the loading of the flour on the wagons?—A. I knew Government wagons when I saw them, and they always came with an escort of Federal soldiers. I delivered the flour to the wagons, and superintended the loading of the wagons. I was at the mill every time the wagons came.

Q. Did you keep any account of the amount of flour hauled off by Government wagons? If you did, state the amount.—A. I kept an accurate account of all flour delivered from the mills to Government wagons, and reported the same to Mr. Fort. They hauled off two thousand seven hundred and ninety-one (2,791) barrels of flour. I have within the past few days examined the book kept by me while said flour was being delivered, which book is in my own handwriting, and find that 2,791 barrels was the correct amount.

Q. How many hands were employed in the mills, and how much grain could be ground by the mills per day?—A. There were two other millers besides myself, William Johnson and John Pride; there were also two other hands, Albert Metcalf and Henry Waters, employed in the mills; the mills were frequently run day and night; we put up from seventy-five to eighty barrels of flour per day, besides doing a large custom business. The full capacity of the mills was about one hundred and ten barrels per day.

Q. Did you ever deliver any flour to any confederate command, or to anybody for them, or did you ever know of any flour being delivered to any confederate by anybody from the mills?—A. I was miller at the mills from 1859 to the end of the war, and afterward, and I never at any time delivered any flour to any confederate or confederate command, and never knew of anybody else delivering any to any confederate or confederate command.

Q. Have you a family? If so, where do they reside?—A. I have a wife and two children, and they reside with me at Adams Station, Robertson County, Tennessee.

And further deponent saith not.

WILEY EDWARDS.

Sworn to and subscribed before me January 10, 1874.

J. W. CAMPBELL,
U. S. Commissioner.

WILEY EDWARDS, having been by me first duly sworn, deposes and says :

My name is Wiley Edwards. Aged nearly twenty-nine years of age.

Reside at Adams Station, Robertson County, Tenn., and by occupation a carpenter.

I was a witness in behalf of Mr. Sugg Fort, in respect to his flour-claim before United States Commissioner Campbell, at the house of Mr. Fort. I was coming up on the train from Adams to Fort's Station, and at the latter place was introduced by Mr. Fort to Commissioner Campbell. Mr. Fort told me that Mr. Campbell wished to see me at Mr. Fort's house. At the house Mr. Fort told me in presence of Commissioner Campbell that he wished me to testify in respect to his flour-claim. Neither at that time nor previously did Mr. Fort make any suggestion to me as to what I was to testify to; nor during the progress of my testimony did he make any suggestion or refresh my memory. He showed me a little memorandum-book and asked me if I recognized my handwriting, which I did, and it was from that book that I was enabled to testify to the quantity of flour taken from the mill by Federal authority. I have never seen that little book since. Do not know where it is.

[Mr. Fort states that the book is filed in the Third Auditor's Office, at Washington, D. C., with the papers in his case, he having given the same to the Commissary-General.]

I was never promised anything for my services or testimony by Mr. Fort or anybody, and have never received anything, nor do I expect anything, nor would I receive anything. Have never heard till this moment that the claim was to be investigated, and no suggestion has been made to me by any person as to what I should say if called upon. I never knew that the Federals took the flour from Mr. Fort's mill by any arrangement with General Mitchell or anybody else.

Without reference to the memorandum-book or trusting to my memory, I will state that Mr. Fort had about one thousand barrels of flour—he might have had more, but certainly did not have less—when the Federals first came. We continued working the mill between the time the Federals first came and the time they last came.

Independent of the memorandum-book, I guess that there was between twenty-seven hundred barrels of flour and three thousand barrels taken. I estimate it by the capacity of the mill, which was from 80 to 125 barrels of flour, according to whether the weather was wet or dry. Except Sunday, the mill was run every day and occasionally at night. The day-capacity of the mill was from 65 to 70 barrels per day. We began to grind the wheat-crop of 1862 in the latter part of September or early in October. There was about five hundred bushels of wheat of last year's crop when we commenced grinding, and at least fifty barrels of flour of last year's crop on hand. Wheat was scarce in this community, but in the adjoining neighborhood it was a plentiful crop. Never kept a memorandum-book of receipts of wheat. In the summer and fall of 1862, Mr. Fort bought wheat from the following farmers: Wiley Former, J. H. Former, J. C. Dunn, Lawson Fort, Ilai Fort, all in this immediate neighborhood.

The next largest crop was that of John McCorn, in Montgomery County, about six miles from here. Don't know the names of any persons or firms, dealers or shippers in Nashville, Clarksville, or elsewhere, to whom Mr. Fort sold or shipped his flour, either before the Federals came or afterward; it was not in the line of my business to know that. Don't know that anybody else except Mr. Fort would know it. The Government trains came, I think at least ten times, but not as many as twenty times. Can't tell how many wagons came each time. During the summer, fall, and winter of 1862-'63, no confederate soldiers came to the mill except once or twice, when they took about fifty pounds of flour and three pecks of meal. No threats were made to my knowledge, by rebel troops or sympathizers, to burn or destroy Sugg Fort's building. Mr. Fort had the reputation of being a Union man.

Mr. Fort's reputation for honesty, integrity, and truth is as good as that of any man in the county, I having been born and raised within a mile and a half of Mr. Fort.

W. EDWARDS.

Subscribed and sworn to before me at Fort's Station, Robertson County, Tenn., this the 26th day of October, 1874.

[SEAL.]

JAMES TRIMBLE,

*Circuit Court Commissioner of the United States
for the Middle District of Tennessee.*

WILEY EDWARDS, having been the second time by me first duly sworn, deposes and says:

My age is twenty-nine years next January. I know it because a brother of mine who says that he is three years older than me, and that he is thirty-two years of age now, judging from what he told me five or six years ago. My sister, Mrs. Robert Sorey, says that my brother is three years older than he represents, which would make me three years older, if true, than I suppose myself to be. Henry Waters was mistaken in saying that I was a grown man in 1857, with whiskers. I was nearly as large as I am now, but I had no whiskers.

The business books of the mill were kept by Sugg Fort. I don't know that Pride or Johnson ever wrote in the books, and I never did. I saw the books frequently in the desk in the office of the mill. I think they were usually kept at the house; have seen Mr. Fort take the books under his arm to the house. A short time before the mill burned down I probably saw the books—don't know that I did—at the mill. Have never seen the books since the mill was burned, and don't know that one of them is in existence to-day. Am sure that I saw the little memorandum-book when I was before Commissioner Campbell less than a year ago. During the war Mr. Fort was not constantly at the mill. During 1862 and 1863, Mr. Fort's absence for two days would not have surprised me, as he was frequently gone that long. During his absence Mr. Johnson was in charge. I don't know that he went to Nashville just before the soldiers came and took the flour. He usually went away on the train, but he might have gone on horseback or foot. I never heard of Mr. Fort's going to Nashville on horseback, except long before the soldiers took the flour. Never heard that he went to Nashville on horseback, but that once, from that time till the present. If I had heard that Sugg Fort had ridden to Nashville on horseback, should have doubted it unless he told me so, or had told some reliable person so. The road was not considered safe by reason of guerrillas. Mr. Fort was considered a Union man, and the road to Nashville by horseback would not be as safe for him as for a rebel. The trains were sometimes fired into between here and Nashville. I should consider a journey either way risky. The soldiers came as many as ten times for the flour, but not as many as twenty times. During the time the soldiers were taking the flour we were running the mill as usual, making meal sometimes, but generally flour. During this time our merchant-work was greater than our custom-work. I have no doubt in my mind that the Federals got more flour than any one else. During that time Mr. Fort had money to pay his hands promptly; don't know whether he got any money from the Government or not. Can't tell how many empty barrels were usually kept on hand—don't know whether it was below or above one hundred ; it was nearer one hundred than one thousand. We used to get barrels from Clynard, of Springfield, and from Maze.

I remember faintly that there was a meeting of rebels at Adams Station during the war, at which it was threatened that Mr. Sugg Fort should be hung. The meeting was called to decide about taking action about a Union man by the name of Ogg. Until I gave my testimony before Commissioner Campbell I never knew Mr. Fort had presented a claim for flour taken by the Government. Never heard anybody talk about his having made such a claim. If there had been talk in the neighborhood my opportunity was as good as that of any ordinary man for hearing it. I live in a different direction from the mill to Henry Waters. He lives on Mr. Fort's place and I live across the river. Have heard Billy Fort and Mr. Johnson, the former miller, and Mr. Ayres express opinions as to how the mill was burned, and also Sugg Fort. The opinion they had was that the mill was burned through malice. I have heard since the mill was burned that it was insured, and again that it was not. Don't know anything about it.

The buildings containing flour when the Federals came were, 1st, the mill ; 2d, the barn, five or six hundred yards southwest of the mill ; 3d, the granary, I think, which stood between the mill and the barn—was nearest the mill. There might also have been flour in the stone house, about two hundred and fifty yards from the mill toward the granary. There were no other buildings occupied with flour. I never heard of a log house being occupied by flour. When the Federals got through taking flour I don't think there was as much grain and flour left on the place as when they first came, but I cannot give the proportions. During the time the Federals were taking the flour, don't think we were grinding quite as much as usual. After the Federals occupied this country, the railroad was in operation most of the time, except when bridges and trestles were burned. I think once the road was not running for as long as three months, which was just after the fall of Fort Donelson and before the flour was taken. I remember that when the soldiers came there were officers along—one called captain, another lieutenant, and another sergeant.

W. EDWARDS.

Subscribed and sworn to before me, near Fort's Station, Robertson County, Tenn., this the 27th day of October, 1874.

[SEAL.]

JAMES TRIMBLE,

*Circuit Court Commissioner of the United States
for the Middle District of Tennessee.*

JOHN E. PRIDE, having been by me first duly sworn, deposes and says, his name is John E. Pride. I am forty-two years of age. I reside near Adams Station, Robertson County, Tennessee. I am a carpenter, which occupation I have followed since 1866 ; before that I was miller.

I was employed at Sugg Fort's mill between the fall of 1862 and the summer of 1863 ; I was the miller attending to the grinding and the running of the machinery of the mill. During all this period of time the mill was in running order. During all this period of time the mill was run with a double set of hands. I, with a set of hands, would commence at 12 m. at night, run until 12 m. next day, when Johnson, with his set hands, would go on. We did not run at all on Sundays. Between the wheat-harvest of 1862 and the end of November of the same year we put up between seventy-five and one hundred barrels per day. When we had much custom we would put up between seventy-five and eighty-five barrels per day, and when we had no custom-trade we would put up one hundred barrels per day. But we mostly put up only seventy-five or eighty-five per day, the custom-work keeping us down to that. I can only tell in this way how many we put up, since I did not keep an account of the number. The harvest season began in the latter portion of August; I do not know how many barrels were made in this time. The flour made in this time, some of it, was carried away on the railroad until the village was destroyed. I do not know where it was shipped to. I do not know what became of it, whether it went to Nashville, Memphis, or where. I do not know how much, but a heap of it was so shipped. I did not pay any attention to it; there might have been two thousand and there might have been five thousand barrels or more; I do not know how much. The balance was stored in the store-house, also in a log-house. I think that there was also some in the tobacco-barn, but I can't say whether or not there was any in the granary, also some in a warehouse adjoining the mill. The flour shipped was taken direct from the mill. I do not know who bought the flour shipped. The flour shipped was carried to the cars mostly in the wagons of Mr. Sugg Fort. He had three or four of them running. I think his were the only wagons that hauled the flour, since he had a sufficient number of them to carry it to the cars. I don't know that he hauled off any to Clarksville or other points in wagons during this time. From the harvest of 1862 until the summer of 1863, Sugg Fort was shipping flour on the railroad until the bridge on the road at Red River and tressle at Spring Creek were destroyed. A large quantity was shipped, a car-load a day, being about seventy-five or eighty-five a day. It might have been five or six months or two or three months during which this flour was shipped. I don't know where it went to or to whom it went. I have no idea whatever when the cars stopped running. I don't know whether or not any was hauled off in wagons. I don't know from whom or where claimant got his wheat in fall of 1862. F. C. Plaster, of Keysburgh, Ky., and C. M. Warfield purchased it for him. I do not know how much it was, but it was a large quantity. It might have been twenty and it might have been fifty thousand bushels or more. I do not now recollect any person from Nashville or anywhere buying or hauling flour from Mr. Fort's mill between the harvest season of 1862 and the summer of 1863, except customers who would buy a sack-full at a time, nor do I remember a man named Ward doing so; I do not recollect a man named Ward doing so; I never heard of any arrangement made between Sugg Fort and General Mitchell or any other United States officer by which Mr. Fort's flour was to be taken for the use of the United States; nor did I ever hear Johnson say anything about such an arrangement; I knew that just before Christmas, 1862, some United States Government wagons came to Sugg Fort's mill and continued to come during the winter and spring of 1863, but for how long I do not recollect; I don't think that they came once a week, but they came more than once a month. They came quite a number of times; I cannot say anything as to the times; I think that about the same number came each time and that about fifteen or twenty was the number; I think that each wagon each time took eight or twelve barrels. They might have carried off between two and three thousand barrels, but I do not know that they did; I do not now recollect anything that was said at any time by any officer; I never talked with any of them; I do not recollect seeing or hearing them talk with any one; I do not recollect ever assisting or having anything whatever to do with the loading at any time; I do not know that any account was ever kept of the number of barrels taken; if there was I never knew anything about it. I never kept any such account. I never saw any one keeping such an account. I was about, in the mill-house, and if any one had kept such an account I would have been apt to have known it. I never saw Wiley Edwards keeping such an account, nor have I ever at any time seen or heard of any such an account or memorandum being kept at the time. I was at the mill when the Government wagons first came; also were some of the mill-hands, but I cannot now remember a single one that I am sure was present. I do not recollect whether or not Sugg Fort was present, nor do I recollect whether or not any one was present except the hands. I do not remember what was said by any one at the time, but suppose something was said. I do not know what road they came by or whether they came from Nashville or not. I do not know whether they came always in the same direction or not. Once I saw them on the other side of the river, and to have come this road from Nashville or Springfield, they must have come either the Springfield or the Washington roads. B. B. Batts, James Dunn, Wiley Farmer, the widow Lawrence, and widow Barnes were all then living on the Springfield road. George Washington is the only person that I knew then living on the Washington road. The principal roads from the mill to Springfield are the Port Royal and Springfield, and the Springfield and the Hopkinsville road, but this road itself does not lead direct to the mill, but runs into the Springfield road. The roads leading from the mill, but not going through Springfield, are the Washington road and the Nashville and Port Royal road. The Washington road is the nearest way, and I would have taken it had I been going to Nashville, but I never traveled it and knew nothing as to its condition. This would probably have taken the road if it was in as good condition as the others, but I knew nothing as to the condition of any of them then. If one road was as good as another, I think that the trains would have come the Washington road, since it is the nearest way. I do not know where Paradise Hill is, or anything about that road. The principal roads from Nashville to the mill, and on which I suppose the trains would have come, are the Washington road, the Springfield road, and the Nashville and Port Royal road. I never traveled the Washington road except for about eight miles, and do not know the principal places it passes through. Upon the Springfield road there is no principal place or any marked place through which it passes to Springfield, but it passes about one-quarter of a mile north of Cedar Hill. I know nothing of it beyond Springfield toward Nashville. The principal places on the Nashville and Port Royal road are Port Royal, Turnersville, and Cooperstown. I know nothing of it beyond Cooperstown.

No vouchers or receipts were given for the flour taken that I know of, or asked for. None were offered and refused because payable upon proof of loyalty that I know of. I cannot now remember whether or not any flour was sent or carried away from the mill by Sugg Fort or any one else, between the time when the wagons began to come and when they left off coming. Mr. Fort's mill was running all the time from the fall of 1862 until the summer of 1863; some time, but I do not recollect exactly when, it stopped. All the flour made in this time, except custom-trade, was shipped on the railroad, until the railroad stopped running, but when this was I do not know. I do not know whether this happened in the spring, summer, fall, or when. I do not know where or to whom this flour was shipped. The flour was not stored away, and did not begin to accumulate until the railroad stopped running. It is not a mistake to say that he stopped sending away and selling flour and allowed it to accumulate. If any was sent away, I know nothing about it. But whether or not it accumulated to the extent of 3,000 barrels I cannot say. I know that Sugg Fort sold off some of his mules. I think that it was after the railroad stopped running. I do not know how many he sold or why. I never asked him why, but suppose that he had no use for them since the railroad had stopped running, and he had no hauling to do. I do not know whether they were sold at private sale or not. If they were sold at auction I know nothing about it. I do not know who bought them, nor do I know where they were sold. I do not know how many he had, but think some fifteen or twenty. I think that he had three or four wagons, and that all were four-horse teams except one. He used some of them on his farm, and some in hauling flour to the depot. In the fall of 1862, I would say that Sugg Fort was doing a pretty large business, since he was then putting up seventy-five barrels a day besides the custom work. I do not know whether or not Colonel E. A. Fort had any interest in the mill in the fall of 1862; he was then and afterward around about the mill, but I do not know of his giving any instructions or orders about it. I suppose that Sugg Fort had the means to carry on so large a business as would allow him to make and hold 3,000 barrels of flour, since I always heard that he could carry on as large a business as he desired to. All I know about Sugg Fort's having a large quantity of wheat taken from him in West Tennessee is what I heard him say himself. I think that this loss did not so cripple him as to make it impossible to do a large flouring business, since I think that he had such large means as would enable him, even after this, to carry on as large a business as he desired. I have heard of Sugg Fort's claim for flour for about a year, nearly. I remember that the first time I heard of it was when Mr. Fort was in Washington, when some one asked why he had gone there, when it was stated that he had gone there to see about a claim he had against the Government for flour taken. I do not remember who the person was, but I think that it was Washington Fort. I was never asked to testify in this claim. I never heard or knew anything of Wiley Edwards, Albert Metcalf, and Henry Waters testifying last January. I never heard or knew anything about such a man as Campbell taking any testimony at Sugg Fort's, and of course was not present then. I never until now knew that United States Commissioner Campbell had been out to Mr. Fort's house. I do not remember where I was in January last. I was at home if not off on a job. I do not know why I was not asked to testify then. About all I have heard of an investigation is that I heard that about two or three weeks ago some men from Washington City were in Robertson County taking some depositions in Mr. Sugg Fort's claim. No one has suggested to me that I might be called upon to testify in the matter. I have at no time been told what I should or should not say in the matter. I have never received or been promised anything, directly or indirectly, by any one, for helping this claim before it was paid, or for assisting claimant in the investigation now under way. I believe that Mr. Sugg Fort had flour taken from him by the United States Government, but I do not know how much was taken, and I believe the claim just for the amount taken, and I do not believe that Mr. Fort would prosecute an unjust claim. I suppose that a man who assists another in prosecuting a fraudulent claim commits as great an offense as the principal.

JOHN E. PRIDE.

Subscribed and sworn to at Fort's Station, Robertson County, Tenn.,
November 17, 1874.

[SEAL.]

JAMES TRIMBLE,
*United States Circuit Court Commissioner,
Middle District of Tennessee.*

ADAMS STATION, TENN., November 30, 1874.

Mr. BENJAMIN: I got your letter a day or two ago, and say: Some three or four years ago—don't know positively, probably longer—Mr. Sugg Fort showed me an account he made out against the Government for his flour they took from him, and asked me if I will sign and swear to this, I told him I would, and did so, because I was his miller when the flour was taken and know they got the flour, but not the exactly number of barrels; but believe they got the amount in the account he showed me. Mr. Johnston signed the paper before I done it, and we both were there and seen the flour taken, and that is the reason I signed it, and I know it right. When I said I heard of it while he was in Washington, I meant that the first time I remember hearing of him trying to get the money—I mean when Mr. Trimble was there—that the first time I was ever asked any questions since I first signed the account, Mr. Fort asked me if I was willing to swear to, and told Mr. Trimble so, but he said he knew I signed and swore to the account, but he just wanted to know if this was the only time I been questioned about it. I don't know nothing else about it. Mr. Fort's mill was on the north side of the river; I don't know where the Washington road begins or stops; I know there is a road between the mill and Nashville called Washington road, and told Mr. Trimble. I did never go on that road further than Mr. Washington's. Always understood it is the nearest to Nashville. Don't know nothing about Paradise Hill.

Respectfully,

J. E. PRIDE.

[Indorsement.]

Respectfully referred to James Trimble, esq., United States commissioner, who took the deposition of the writer of this letter in the matter of the investigation into the claim of Sugg Fort, of Tennessee, for his information and remarks. The principal part of the letter is an explanation of why the witness testified last month that he had heard of the claim for about a year, and that he first heard of it when the claimant was in Washington; when the fact was that four years ago the witness signed and swore to the claim, as it was made out upon a blank form under the act of July 4, 1864.

CHAS. F. BENJAMIN,
Investigating Agent, Treasury Department.

DECEMBER 5, 1874.

NASHVILLE, TENN., December 8, 1874.

CHARLES F. BENJAMIN,
Washington, D. C.:

Inclosed please find my answer or explanation written on inclosed paper. It may be well to state that Pride often placed himself behind the answer "I do not know," and that it was difficult to get him to answer further. It may be well also to state to you in regard to letter of Pride, upon seeing the date of your letter, the 22d, it recalled a fact that was accidentally brought to my notice. On the 25th, when making inquiry at noon on that day about the burning of the bridge over Red River, some one referred me to Sugg Fort for information, and at the same time remarked that I would find him at the depot, as he was going to Robertson County that day. You can draw your own inference, yet I do not know that he did go, since I gave the matter no thought until now upon reading Pride's statement.

JAMES TRIMBLE.

Mr. J. E. Pride is about correct. I remember that during the examination Pride did state that he remembered going with Mr. Sugg Fort some three or four years ago before a magistrate (whose name he called but now not remembered by me,) and swearing to a paper of some kind for Sugg Fort. But my recollection now is that Mr. Pride's remembrance of what that paper and its contents were, was very indefinite and vague, and the cause of the same given by him was because of the length of time intervening. My recollection is that Mr. Pride could not state what that claim was for. Yet I knew that his answer, such as I could get from him, was irrelevant to the question, and I did not put it down for that reason; and I remember of so stating in effect to himself and Fort at the time. In short, Mr. Pride quite often placed himself behind the answer "I do not know."

JAMES TRIMBLE,

United States Commissioner, Nashville, Tenn.

NASHVILLE, TENN., December 8, 1874.

HENRY WATERS, being next called, deposes and says:

By the commissioner:

Question. What is your name, age, and where do you reside; and are you in any way related to the claimant, and have you any interest in the claim in controversy, either directly or indirectly?—Answer. My name is Henry Waters, and I am thirty-five years old. I live on the farm of Mr. Sugg Fort, in Robertson County, Tennessee, and I have no interest, either directly or indirectly, in the claim in controversy, and am not related to the claimant in any way.

By claimant:

Q. How long have you been living on Mr. Fort's place; and did you ever work in his mill? If so, how long?—A. I have been living on Mr. Fort's place ever since 1857. I have worked in the mill. I worked in the mill regularly from 1857 until the end of the war, and I have worked since then in the mill, off and on, until it was burned a year or two ago.

Q. Did you ever know Government wagons to haul off any flour from Mr. Fort's mill; if so, when?—A. I have known Government wagons to haul flour from the mill. They came first, a while before Christmas, 1862, and they quit hauling in the spring of 1863, in corn-planting time.

Q. How did you know they were Government wagons that hauled off the flour, and did you have anything to do with the loading of the flour on the wagons?—A. I knew Government wagons when I saw them. They came in trains and were guarded by soldiers. I was staying at the mill regularly at the time they hauled the flour, and was at the mill every time the wagons came, and helped load the flour on the wagons.

Q. Do you know how much flour was hauled from the mills by the Government wagons?—A. I did not take any account of the number of barrels they hauled, but they hauled a great deal; they put on thirteen or fourteen barrels of flour on each wagon. I do not know how many times the wagon-trains came, but they came a good many times.

Q. Have you a family; if so, where do they reside?—A. I have a wife and six children, and they reside on Mr. Sugg Fort's farm, in Robertson County, Tennessee. I have lived, with my family, on Mr. Fort's place ever since 1857. Before the war I belonged to W. W. Waters, and Mr. Fort owned my wife, and he hired me from the time I married, in 1857, until I was free, and I have been living with him ever since. And further the deponent saith not.

his
HENRY + WATERS.
mark.

Witness:

J. W. CAMPBELL.

Subscribed and sworn to before me January 10, 1874.

J. W. CAMPBELL,
United States Commissioner.

HENRY WATERS (colored) having been by me first duly sworn, deposes and says:

My name is Henry Waters; I am thirty-five or thirty-six years of age. I reside at Sugg Fort's, Fort's Station, Robertson County, Tenn. I am a farmer; I was a slave before the war and belonged to W. W. Waters, in Montgomery County. I first heard that Mr. Sugg Fort had a claim against the Government for flour a long time ago; it might have been a year and it might have been longer. I heard it first about the neighborhood, but do not remember any particular person speaking of it. I never spoke to any one about it at the time I heard of it. I did not hear for how much the claim was for, whether large or small. I was not surprised to hear that Sugg Fort had a claim, because during the war he was doing a big business shipping off flour. I do not know where he was shipping it to or to whom. At the time I heard about the claim I heard no one say whether or not it was a good claim. At that time nothing had been said to me by any one about being a witness for Mr. Sugg Fort. Before Mr. Fort went to Washington the last time, I testified at his house before a gentleman who came on the train. Nobody spoke to me concerning what I was to say before this gentleman, either before I saw him or while I was testifying. I never heard that you gentlemen were coming until you sent for me last evening; my wife told me when I got home from my brother-in-law's; nobody has spoken to me about the claim or what I was to say until I came before you this morning. I first went to Sugg Fort's in 1857, and have never been away from him since. I worked all the time in the mill until it was burned. From the time I went to him until the mill was burned, it was in constant operation. When I went to Mr. Fort the mill was doing mostly a merchant business, and it was doing mostly a merchant business when it was burned; and it was doing mostly a merchant business all the time between. The mill burned down some three or four years ago, to my best recollection, or it may be longer. It was before I heard Mr. Fort had a claim. I don't know how the mill was burned down; never heard any one say anything about it. Mr. Fort was not at home when it was burned. No fire was in the mill that day. Just before Christmas, the winter after the fall of Fort Donelson,

I saw Yankee soldiers come to the mill; they had a great many wagons with them; don't know how many came; they came in the morning. Besides myself, Metcalf, Johnson, and Edwards, I don't remember of any other persons being at the mill when the soldiers first came. They loaded up the wagons with flour and went off toward Nashville. They came a great many times after, and each time loaded up with and carried off flour. There was a great deal of flour when they first came, and I don't know how much was left when they went away. There was a great deal of wheat at the mill stored when they first came; we continued grinding after the soldiers came and after every time they came, and wheat kept coming in on the cars, but I don't know from which direction; we also got wheat from the neighborhood, both before and after the soldiers began coming. Mr. Fort did not stop getting wheat from the neighborhood or by the cars, or stop grinding and barreling flour, because the Yankee soldiers were carrying it off every week or two, from before Christmas until corn-planting time; from the time they came until they quit the Yankees got the most of the flour; from the time the Yankees commenced taking flour, we made it faster than they carried it off, but when they stopped coming we had less flour than when they began. The wheat began to get scarce just before they stopped hauling, and we were not able to make as much flour as at first, when they quit hauling; they did not leave half as much flour as when they commenced; it may have been a quarter as much, but I am not certain. The flour at the mill when the Yankees came would fill this room five or six times. [The room referred to by witness is about 18 feet square. J. T.] I have never received, directly or indirectly, any benefit from any person for testifying in behalf of Mr. Fort, and have never been promised anything, and don't know that anybody else has received anything. During the time the Yankees were taking the flour, Mr. Fort was sometimes present and sometimes not, and I never saw or heard anything to indicate that he objected to the flour being taken; I never heard a word of what the neighborhood thought of the taking of the flour, though I am sure that they must have known it. I don't know whether Mr. Sugg Fort was a Union man or rebel, nor what the people in the neighborhood or about the mill were. I never heard about the meeting at Adams Station or at anywhere else at which there was any talk about hanging Mr. Fort or any one else. Mr. Fort kept books at the mill; I used to see Mr. Johnson writing in them; I never noticed Mr. Edwards writing in them; the books were kept in the desk in the office of the mill down stairs. There was a right smart of books; I don't know how many; I don't know whether the books were in the mill or not when it was burned. I had not seen them for a long time, nor have I seen them since. While the Yankees were taking the flour, I never seen any one keeping an account of the number of barrels taken; some one might have been keeping an account without my seeing him. I have never seen or heard of any book that had an account in it of the number of barrels taken by the Yankees. I came to the mill before Wiley Edwards did; I knew him before I came to the mill. He was then a grown man and had whiskers. He was not married when I first knew him. He was then farming by himself, on a rented farm, and doing comfortably. I do not know what made him come to work in the mill. The railroad here did not stop running until after the fall of Fort Donelson, when it stopped running from the burning of the bridge between Adams and Fort's Stations. I don't remember whether it was before or after the Yankees took Mr. Fort's flour. Afterward the road stopped for a little while because the trestle was washed away. At the time the Yankees first came we had flour in barrels in the mill, in the warehouse, the store-house, the tobacco-barn, the granary, and at an old log-house. When I testified about the quantity of flour when the Yankees first came I spoke only of the amount in the mill. After making an estimate, with the help of you gentlemen, I think that there was as much flour in all these buildings as would fill this room some thirty to forty times. [NOTE.—The room referred to would hold about two hundred and fifteen barrels. J. T.] None of the barrels stored in these buildings were empty. We did not keep many empty barrels at the mill, the average number being about one hundred, which were usually kept outside, since there was no room for them on the inside of the mill. We would use up the barrels we had on hand in two or two and a half days. I don't know how many barrels were in a car-load, but there were more than we usually had on hand. I don't know where the barrels came from; never heard of their coming from Springfield or Greenbrier, nor from any other place.

I have often heard both white and colored people speak of Mr. Sugg Fort, and have always heard him spoken of well, and would not believe anything I heard against him until I was satisfied that it was true. I have often employed hands for Sugg Fort, and never had any trouble in getting them, and have heard white gentlemen say they could not see why Sugg Fort could get hands when they could not. I have heard Mr. Joe Fuquia say so, and Squire Sadler. Just before the flour was taken by the United States soldiers I heard Mr. Sugg Fort say that he was going to Nashville, and he went away to get on the train to go, but I don't know whether he went or not. He was gone some two or three days. It may have been three or four weeks after his return before the soldiers took the flour. I do not recollect of Sugg Fort going away a few days just before the soldiers came. I have never heard from that time till now that he ever went to Nashville on horseback. If anybody else except Mr. Sugg Fort told me that Mr. Sugg Fort did go to Nashville then on horseback I would not believe him; but if Sugg Fort told me so I would believe him. I never noticed any man among the soldiers who took the flour who had on a sword, shoulder-straps, or heard any one called captain, lieutenant, or sergeant. Wiley Edwards was a mighty good character. I have heard persons speak well of him ever since I have known him. He professed religion two or three years ago, and has been a member of the church ever since. I don't believe that Wiley Edwards could be bought or frightened into telling an untruth when put upon his oath.

his
HENRY + WATERS.
mark.

Subscribed and sworn to before me, near Fort's Station, Robertson County, Tenn., this 27th day of October, 1874.

[SEAL.]

JAMES TRIMBLE,

*Circuit Court Commissioner of the United States
for the Middle District of Tennessee.*

STATES OF AMERICA,
Middle District of Tennessee, ss :

The depositions of Wiley Edwards, Henry Waters, and Albert Metcalfe, taken in the matter of the claim of Sugg Fort, of Robertson County, Tennessee, now pending before the Congress of the United States. Said depositions being taken on the part of the claimant in Robertson County, Tennessee, on the 10th day of January, 1874.

The said witness, ALBERT METCALFE, being first called, deposes and says :

By the commissioner :

Question. What is your name, age, and where do you reside ; and are you in any way related to the claimant, or have you any interest in the claim in controversy ?—Answer. My name is Albert Metcalfe. I am thirty-four years of age. I reside on the farm of Sugg Fort in Robertson County, Tennessee, and have resided there since 1859. I am not in any way related to Sugg Fort, the claimant, and have no interest, either direct or indirect, in the claim in controversy.

By claimant :

Q. Did you ever work in the mill of Sugg Fort, in Robertson County, Tennessee ? If you did, state how long you worked there.—A. I have worked in Mr. Fort's mill. I worked there from 1859 until the mill burned down in 1872. I worked regularly in the mill from 1859 until 1866, and was working, off and on, at the mill from that time until it was burned.

Q. Did you ever know Government wagons to haul any flour off from the mill ?—A. I have ; they commenced hauling flour from the mill in the winter of 1862, and hauled, off and on, until the spring of 1863.

Q. How do you know that it was Government wagons that hauled the flour ; and did you have anything to do with loading the flour on the wagons ?—A. They were in trains, and soldiers with them. I helped load the flour in the wagons. I was working regularly in the mill at the time, and whenever the wagons came I was at the mill and helped load them.

Q. Have you a family ? If so, state where they reside.—A. I have a family, and they live with me on Mr. Fort's farm. Before the war I belonged to Mr. Metcalfe, and Mr. Fort owned my wife, and hired me from 1859 until I was freed, and I have been living with him ever since.

Q. Do you know how much flour was hauled from the mill by Government wagons ?—A. I do not know how much they hauled away, but it was a good deal. There were trains of wagons came several times, and each wagon hauled twelve or thirteen barrels at a load. I did not keep any account of how much they hauled.

And further deponent saith not.

his
ALBERT + METCALFE.
mark.

Witness :

J. W. CAMPBELL.

Sworn to and subscribed before me January 10, 1874.

J. W. CAMPBELL,
U. S. Commissioner.

ALBERT METCALFE, having been by me first duly sworn, deposes and says :

I am a colored man, twenty-seven years of age, I think. I live with Sugg Fort, and am a farm-laborer. I was present when the Government wagons came to Mr. Fort's mill to take his flour. Don't know whether or not Mr. Fort objected to the soldiers taking the flour. When testifying before Commissioner Campbell, I fixed the time when the flour was taken entirely from my own memory. Did not know that I was to testify before Commissioner Campbell until I was called into the room. The Government wagons came fifteen or twenty or thirty times. There were fifteen or twenty or thirty wagons at a time, never as few as four or five; sometimes there were soldiers with them and sometimes not. They always carried away flour; don't think they took empty barrels; helped roll them in, and they were heavy; don't know how many barrels they took; don't know how many barrels he had when they first came, but he had a great many; he had flour in the mill, in the tobacco-barn, in the granary, in the warehouse, and the store-house. Mr. Fort did not keep many empty barrels on hand, and those he had were mostly kept outside and not in the buildings.

The wheat used to be kept in the mill, in the depot, and in the cars. The depot floor once broke down with the weight. Don't remember when this wheat was on hand. There had been no Federal soldiers around; don't know whether it was before the battle of Fort Donelson or after, but think it was afterward. Did not see any rebel soldiers around the mill about that time; never saw them around either in the day or night; don't know whether I could tell rebel from Union soldiers. There were two other mills running in this neighborhood, one belonging to Mr. Watson; don't know who owned the other—one up and one down the river. I think they were doing custom-work only. The nearest residence to the mill was that of Mrs. Orndorff, a widow. Colonel Fort lived near the mill, also Charles Henry Fort, a cousin of Mr. Sugg Fort. Among the persons who came to the mill as regular customers were Mr. Ilai Fort, Mr. Charles Henry Fort, Mr. Lawson Fort, Mr. Josiah Fort, Mr. Stephen Ligon.

I was a slave, belonging to Mistress Metcalf before the war, and was sent to Mr. Sugg Fort by Ilai Fort, to whom I afterward belonged, and have worked for Mr. Sugg Fort ever since.

his ALBERT + METCALFE.
mark.

Subscribed and sworn to before me at Fort's Station, Robertson County, Tenn., this the 26th day of October, 1874.

[SEAL.]

JAMES TRIMBLE,

Circuit Court Commissioner of the United States for the Middle District of Tenn.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,

County of Washington, ss :

GEORGE H. PURDY, of the State of Indiana, of lawful age, being first duly sworn, deposes and says :

That he is the same George H. Purdy who was captain of Company H, 4th Regiment Indiana Cavalry, afterward major of the same regiment. That, about the last day of March or first of April, 1863, he went in command of an escort to guard a train of Army wagons, (furnished by Charles H. Irvin, wagon-transportation quartermaster at Nashville, Tenn.,) under orders from General Robert B. Mitchell, then commanding the post and defenses at Nashville, Tenn., to a mill on Red River, in Robertson County, Tennessee, I suppose about twenty-five miles from Nashville, to procure flour. I got from said mill six or seven wagons loaded with flour; do not remember the name of the owner of said mill. I was instructed by General Mitchell not to receipt for said flour. I delivered the flour to the commissary at said post of Nashville; do not recollect his name, having not reported to General Mitchell's headquarters but few days before being ordered to make this trip. Do not now recollect the exact number of barrels of flour, but usually each wagon was loaded with from twelve to fourteen barrels of flour. I remember distinctly taking said flour from the shed of a house near a large mill on said Red River. I have no interest whatever in this claim.

G. H. PURDY.

Sworn and subscribed to before me this 30th day of May, A. D. 1874.
[SEAL.]

THOS. J. MYERS,
Notary Public.

Questions to be answered by Maj. George H. Purdy, of Terre Haute, Ind., in reference to the claim of Sugg Fort, of Tennessee.

1. Are you the same George H. Purdy who, in the month of May last, made an affidavit at Washington in reference to the seizure or appropriation of a quantity of flour at a mill on the Red River, in Robertson County, Tennessee? If you are, please state at whose request you made that affidavit, and what was said to you by the person wanting it as to the use that was to be made of it.

2. Were you told in whose claim it was to be used, and were the particulars and nature of the claim explained to you? If so, does the statement agree with the statement of the claim of Sugg Fort, received by you in the same envelope with these questions? If not, please state wherein they differ.

3. Did you come to Washington at the request of Sugg Fort, or of any person acting or assuming to act in his behalf, or did you come on business of your own?

4. Did the person at whose request you made the affidavit explain what his connection was with the case, or what was the nature of his interest in the claim?

5. When did you first hear that Sugg Fort had a claim for flour taken and used by the Army at Nashville?

6. From whom did you hear it?

7. Have you had any correspondence with any person relative to said claim, or have you received any information or request of any character concerning it within the past two months?

8. Have you heard whether or not the claim has been paid?

9. Have you ever talked with General Robert B. Mitchell in reference to this claim of Sugg Fort? If so, please state the substance of what each of you said.

10. Were you ever asked or solicited to make any different statement or affidavit from the one that you really did make, and was any consideration held out to you for any such different statement that you might make?

11. How do you remember at what time of the year it was that you went after flour; up the Red River after flour?

12. How do you know that Lieutenant Irvin furnished the train?

13. How do you know that the train went under orders from General Robert B. Mitchell, and did you mean in your affidavit personal orders or orders received through the usual channels?

14. Can you locate the mill any better than by saying it was about twenty-five miles from Nashville?

15. How do you estimate the distance to be about twenty-five miles?

16. If not twenty-five miles, was it more or less?

17. What reason did General Mitchell give you when he instructed you not to give receipts for said flour?

18. If you do not remember the name of the owner of the mill, can you remember the names of any residents of the vicinity, either millers or farmers?

19. Can you describe the mill and the shed from which you got the flour?

20. Who wrote out the affidavit to which you swore last May, and did you read it carefully before signing and swearing to the same?

21. What reason was given for applying to you to make an affidavit?

22. In what way did you refresh your memory as to your visit to the mill before you made the affidavit?

23. Was any attempt made by any person to refresh your memory? And, if so, please describe the manner in which your memory was attempted to be refreshed.

24. Please read carefully the several allegations contained in the statement of the claim now inclosed to you, and give your knowledge or opinion, based upon your experience as an officer at Nashville, at the time, as to the truth or probability of those several allegations.

STATE OF INDIANA, Vigo County:

Answer of George H. Purdy, late major of Fourth Indiana Cavalry in war of 1861.

1. I am the George H. Purdy who made an affidavit in May last, (in the city of Washington, D. C.,) in regard to taking some flour from a mill on Red River, in Robertson County, Tennessee. I was ordered by General Robert B. Mitchell to take a part of my command and go in person and guard a train of Army wagons to go to a certain mill situated on Red River, in said county, and to load said train with flour and return to Nashville as soon as possible. I made the affidavit at the request of Mr. Sugg Fort, having been introduced to said Fort by General Robert B. Mitchell on the same day that I made the affidavit. Said Fort told me the affidavit was for his own use, and to enable him to get pay for a large amount of flour that had been taken from him at different times and by different officers.

2. I was told that it was to be used in his own claim, and the particulars as above stated; the claim was explained to me as above stated. The statement you have sent agrees with the claim, so far as I know anything about the matter. As I was never at the mill above mentioned but the one time, and that time—as heretofore stated in my affidavit made last May with regard to my acts—some time the last of March or some of the first days of April, 1863, I therefore know nothing of the matter except what Mr. Sugg Fort told to me on the day I made the affidavit in Washington, and of my own acts in the premises.

3. I went to Washington at the request of Mr. R. M. Thompson to testify or make a personal statement to Quartermaster-General Meigs in regard to a claim of Messrs. Mangrum & Ross, of Waterloo, Ala., and also to look after my own interest. I am trying to get a pension through Congress, which is now before the House Committee on Pensions. I did not know S. Fort, and did not know that he had a claim against the Government till he told me, after our introduction by General R. B. Mitchell.

4. Mr. S. Fort explained to me, as I have before stated, that he was the party or owner of the mill and flour, and he thought he ought to have his pay for the same.

5. Never heard or knew of Mr. Fort having a claim till he told me, after our introduction on the day the affidavit was made.

6. I heard it from his own lips after our introduction.

7. Never have had any correspondence with any one in regard to Mr. Fort's claim. I have not heard anything about the claim since I left Washington, and in fact I have not thought of it since, till your papers came to hand.

8. Never have heard anything of the claim since I left Washington, and that was the same evening I made the affidavit.

9. After General R. B. Mitchell had introduced me to Mr. Fort, he (General R. B. Mitchell) asked me did I remember how long I remained under his command at Nashville, before I went to join my regiment at Murfreesborough. I told him I did not, but thought it was about sixty days, but could not say positively; and I says, "Why, general?" and the general asks did I do much foraging while there, and I says, "Yes, I was foraging or scouting all the time; I was in the saddle all the time, night and day;" and I says, "You worked me harder than all the rest of my commanding officers put together;" "Well," he says, "your battalion was all the cavalry there was to be had, when I ought to have had two regiments at least." The general then asked me did I remember of taking any flour from any place, and I says, "Yes, I went up into Robertson County once, at a mill on Red River;" and he says, "That is the gentleman that owned the mill and the flour," pointing toward Mr. Fort; and Mr. Fort said, "I am glad I have met you, and are you willing to make an affidavit as to what you know about the taking of the flour?" and I says "Yes, but you must have it done right away, as I intend to start home to-night;" and we went before some notary public, and the affidavit you have reference to was written, and I signed and swore to the same, for which he thanked me, and we parted, and I have never seen or heard of him since.

10. There was no one offered to dictate to me about the statement that I made, nor was there any consideration offered to me, except to kindly thank me for the statement that I had made.

11. The reason that I remember the time, it was somewhere between three and six days after I had reported to General R. B. Mitchell at Nashville. I had been stationed at Mumfordsville, Ky., (under Colonel Hobson,) nearly all winter, and some time in March I was ordered to report with my command to General R. B. Mitchell at Nashville, Tenn., which I did and in a few days after my arrival at Nashville I was sent after flour.

12. I do not know that Captain Irvin furnished the train, but suppose he did, as they were all army-wagons, and Captain Irvin was quartermaster of transportation.

13. I received personal orders the night before I started at his (General R. B. Mitchell's) headquarters.

14. I cannot locate the mill very correctly, but the shed that we took the flour from was opposite, or nearly so, of the mill. It was just at dark when we got to the mill, and I had the wagons loaded as soon as possible, and then fell back some two miles to a good location, to camp, and to resist an attack if one should be made on me, and I was led to believe that one would be made, but, as good luck would have it, I made the round trip without firing a gun. I guessed at the distance, from the time it took us to get there, as we left Nashville about 8 o'clock in the morning, and got there to the mill at the time as above stated.

15. I estimated the distance by the time it took us to get to the mill.

16. I cannot say any more about the distance than I have said, as I was never there but the time above mentioned, and have never been there since that time.

17. On the evening before I started to go to the mill General R. B. Mitchell sent to my camp for me to report to his headquarters immediately, which I did, and he then and there gave me my orders and instructions about the flour, as follows, to wit: "Captain, (for I was then a captain,) you will have your command ready to march to-morrow morning at sharp sunrise, and I have given orders to have the train ready at that time, and you will find the train in Edgefield, just across the river, on the left-hand side, all ready, and the wagon-master knows the road, as he has been there before;" and he (General Mitchell) says, "Now, captain, I want you to be very careful and keep your eyes open, as the country is as full of the enemy as rebels." He further stated that I must be careful and not let my men molest anything about the mill, as the owner was a loyal man; "but you will not probably find him there, and if he is you need not give a receipt, or say anything about one, as the owner is afraid his neighbors will destroy his mill."

18. I do not remember the name of the owner of the mill, and I think never heard of it till the day I made the affidavit in Washington. I did not learn the name of a single person on the road, neither did I inquire. I had no need to make any inquiries, as the wagon-master knew the road to the mill.

19. I cannot describe the mill or shed any better than I have done above.

20. I do not know the name of the gentleman who wrote the affidavit. After it was written he handed it to me to read, but as I did not have my specs at hand, I could not do so, and stated the reason, and asked him to read it, which he did, and it was all satisfactory, and I signed and swore to the same.

21. He, Sugg Fort, gave me the same reason as I have before mentioned; he said it might do him some good. I told him all right, I could easily tell what I know about the matter.

22. I do not know that my memory needs any refreshing about the three years that I served in the Army, as the most of it is as distinct in my memory as though it all happened but yesterday.

23. There was no attempt made by any one to refresh my memory about affidavit.

24. I have no doubt that the allegations are all true, and I have no doubt in my own mind but what the whole of the claim is just, and ought to be paid.

I further certify that I have no interest in the above claim either directly or indirectly.

G. H. PURDY,
Late Major Fourth Indiana Cavalry.

Subscribed and sworn to before me, Martin Hollinger, clerk of the circuit court for the county of Vigo, State of Indiana, this 2d day of December, 1874; and I certify that George H. Purdy, who signed the foregoing statement, is the person he represents himself to be, and is a credible witness; and further, that I have no interest whatever in the prosecution of this claim.

[SEAL.]

MARTIN HOLLINGER,
Clerk of Vigo Circuit Court.

CITY AND COUNTY OF NEW YORK, ss:

Samuel D. Henderson, of the city of New York, of lawful age, being first duly sworn, deposes and says: I am the same Samuel D. Henderson who was a captain and commissary of subsistence, in the city of Nashville, during the winter of 1862-'63, discharging the duties of post commissary at said post. During that winter and the spring of 1863, I remember distinctly Capt. Samuel J. Little, who was general receiving commissary for the Army at Nashville, receiving a large amount of confiscated flour from Robertson County, Tennessee, near Springfield, but am unable to recollect the name of the person from whom it was pressed, or the exact amount of flour. I remember the flour was taken by order of General R. B. Mitchell, then commanding the post and defenses at Nashville.

Deponent further says that he is unable to recollect whether Captain Little retained the flour at Nashville, or sent it to the front.

S. D. HENDERSON.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this nineteenth day of May, A. D. 1874.

[SEAL.]

S. D. THOMAS,
Notary Public, Kings and New York Counties.

EXHIBIT T.

Deposition of Charles F. Benjamin.

CHARLES F. BENJAMIN, clerk of the Southern Claims Commission, being duly sworn, deposes and says: That, on the 21st day of October, he was appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury to inquire into the validity and justice of the claim of Sugg Fort, of Robertson County, Tennessee, recently settled by the Commissary-General and accounting officers of the Treasury, and that, in pursuance of such duty, he went to New York on the 21st day of November for the purpose of finding Capt. Samuel D. Henderson, formerly commissary of subsistence at Nashville, and taking his statement in reference to the claim; that he took with him to New York a copy of the affidavit made by the said Henderson in the city of New York in the month of May last, the original of which appeared on file with the papers in the claim before Congress; that his knowledge of the whereabouts of the said Henderson was derived from a statement made to him by General Robert B. Mitchell on the 5th of November, at which time General Mitchell informed him that when he last heard of Captain Henderson he was in the fancy-goods business, on Broadway, New York, nearly opposite the Saint Nicholas Hotel; that the deponent did not find Captain Henderson at the place stated, but found that he was at No. 62 Stone street, in the cotton-brokerage business. Deponent did not see Captain Henderson at such place, but at his boarding-house, No. 42 East Thirtieth street, on the day above named, when and where Captain Henderson informed him that he had been visited at his office (as the deponent understood) in Stone street by General Mitchell a few months previously; that at the time of his visit General Mitchell told him that he had come there for the purpose of obtaining his affidavit in reference to a claim, which General Mitchell described to him in substantially the same terms as the claim was described in the affidavits of the claimant and General Mitchell on file with the papers in the case. Captain Henderson (as he informed the deponent) replied to General Mitchell that he could not make an affidavit that would be of any service to him, as he did not think his knowledge was sufficient to make a useful affidavit, and advised General Mitchell to visit Mr. Thomas J. Wilson, of Newark, who was formerly the chief clerk to Captain Little, receiving commissary at Nashville, and who would undoubtedly be possessed of more information than Captain Henderson himself; that finally, in consequence of the evident desire of General Mitchell to obtain his statement, he did make an affidavit which appears on file with the papers in the claim. At the time the deponent visited Captain Henderson the latter appeared to have but a faint recollection of the precise purport of his affidavit, but told the deponent that all he really knew was, that on one occasion he saw in front of Captain Little's establishment a wagon-train loaded with flour, which, from the appearance of the barrels, or for some other cause, which this deponent does not remember, he was satisfied did not come from Louisville. On inquiry of Captain Little as to where he got the flour, that officer replied that it was confiscated flour from Robertson County. The deponent ascertained by inquiry of Captain Henderson that the only knowledge the latter had that the flour was taken by order of General Mitchell was his belief that Captain Little had so stated at the time. The deponent found that Captain Henderson could not state with accuracy, or even near approximation, the time at which he saw this flour; but Captain Henderson has no recollection whatever of seeing any flour except upon this one occasion. He thinks there might have been as much as 200 barrels, but is wholly uncertain as to the quantity. Before leaving Captain Henderson, the latter promised to make a statement in answer to any questions that might be forwarded to him for the purpose of obtaining his statement; and, on or about the 23d day of November, this deponent forwarded to Captain Henderson a list of questions to be covered in a statement to be drawn up by the said Henderson, and by him signed and verified upon oath, and to be forwarded to this deponent. A few days after forwarding such questions to Captain Henderson this deponent received from the wife of that gentleman a postal card informing him that Captain Henderson was quite sick, but would attend to the matter of the statement as soon as he was able so to do. Not hearing from Captain Henderson, the deponent subsequently wrote to him, asking his attention to the matter, and in reply to his communication received the letter, which is herewith appended, from the wife of said Henderson. In consequence of the inability of Captain Henderson to testify at this time, this deponent makes this statement of his conversation with Captain Henderson at the time of his visit. The deponent presumes that the statement of Captain Henderson will be made and forwarded according to promise, as soon as he is sufficiently recovered from his illness.

CHAS. F. BENJAMIN.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 4th day of December, 1874.

HENRY H. SMITH,

Investigating Agent, Treasury Department.

42 EAST THIRTIETH STREET, N. Y.,

December 1.

DEAR SIR: Yours of 28th received. Mr. Henderson has been very ill; is still confined to his bed. It will be impossible for him, in his present condition, to attend to your request.

Respectfully,

R. H. HENDERSON.

CHAS. F. BENJAMIN, Esq.,
Washington, D. C.

NASHVILLE, TENN., February 10, 1874.

SIR: I lived in the county of Montgomery, adjoining Robertson, for many years. I have known Mr. Sugg Fort from childhood. He is a gentleman of high character; is the owner of a large real estate; was engaged in the milling business during the late cruel war, and was some years before the war. Mr. Fort, his father, and brother, were regarded as Union men, and took no part in the contest.

Respectfully,

J. O. SHACKELFORD.

The CHAIRMAN OF COMMITTEE ON WAR CLAIMS.

Indorsement.

In regard to the inclosed letter, I called upon J. O. Shackelford, and he stated, in reply to each interrogatory, as follows:

1. He gave the letter at the special request of Mr. Sugg Fort, who stated to him that he had a claim before Congress for flour. He thought Mr. Fort said the paper was given to show Mr. Fort's reputation and standing in his neighborhood, and to be used for this purpose in connection with the prosecution of the claim before that body. He did not know, nor did Mr. Fort tell him, the amount of the claim, nor did he know anything as to the merits of it.

2. He had known Mr. Sugg Fort for the last twenty-five years pretty well; that he believed, when signed, every statement made in the letter, he knowing Mr. Fort pretty well, never having heard anything against his character, and that being high, so far as he knew or had heard; yet, since having heard much of this claim lately, he would not again write such a letter without further investigation as to its merits; that he has read the affidavit of Mr. Sugg Fort, also that of General Mitchell, and had he read them before he wrote the letter he would not have written it, since he would not state that any man was a man of high character who informed against his neighbors.

3. He thinks and believes that there are one thousand men in Robertson and Montgomery Counties who would testify as to high character of Mr. Sugg Fort. The following gentlemen, he believes, also would: Edward H. Eart, W. K. Bowling, James M. Quarles, and Edward S. Cheatham, of Nashville, Tenn. The following gentlemen, he believes, would testify that Mr. Fort was a large landowner: Col. E. A. Fort, Samuel Moody, Elias Fort, of Fort's Station, Robertson County, and Mr. — Shaw, of Thomasville, Cheatham County; also G. A. Washington, of Cedar Hill, Robertson County. He cannot give the name of any man who he knows or believes could or would state that Mr. Sugg Fort was loyal, since he knows no man who could or would make such a statement, never having heard any one, that he remembers now, state that Mr. Fort was loyal.

4. He stated from his general acquaintance with him for the last twenty-five years, but does not know that anything in that time occurred to test his character. His acquaintance was meeting him occasionally and talking for a short time upon general subjects. Before the war and about its close he passed a night or so with Mr. Fort on a farm with a mill on it, and he thinks that Mr. Fort told him that he owned it. All he knows of his personal knowledge of his loyalty is from what Mr. Fort himself told him. He remembers that at a military court-martial at Clarksville that Mr. Sugg Fort was a witness, and that he then stated in his testimony that he was a loyal man, yet he cannot now recall any particular occasion on which Mr. Fort stated to him that he was loyal.

5. He does not know that Mr. Sugg Fort was during the war regarded as a loyal man by others, nor does he know exactly how he himself then regarded him, but supposes that, from his having heard Mr. Fort state at the military trial at Clarksville, in 1863, that he was a loyal man, he supposes that afterward he (Shackelford) must have considered and regarded Mr. Fort as having been loyal during the war, but that he always regarded a great many men as loyal whom other people considered disloyal.

JAMES TRIMBLE.

CLARKSVILLE, TENN.

We, as a portion of the citizens of Montgomery County, Tennessee, state that we have been acquainted with Sugg Fort, of Robertson County, for many years; that he is a man of excellent integrity and good character; he is a man of means, owning large real estate in the adjoining county, (Robertson;) for the last fifteen or twenty years he has been engaged in the milling business, owning as he did the fine flouring-mill on Red River, in Robertson County. We regard Mr. Fort as a fine practical business man and of great energy of character.

This February 5, 1874.

J. E. BARLEY,
HORACE H. LUNTON,
H. C. MERRITT,
W. A. QUARLES,
WM. M. DANIEL,
H. W. HUMPHREYS,

Members of the Bar at Clarksville, Tenn.

JAS. E. RICE,

Judge of 10th Judicial Circuit of Tennessee.

CHAS. G. SMITH,

Chancellor 6th Division, Tennessee.

BAKER D. JOHNSON,

Attorney-General for Montgomery County.

CHARLES W. TYLER,

Judge of Montgomery Criminal Court.

IRWIN BEAUMONT,

Sheriff Montgomery County, Tenn.

POLK Y. JOHNSON,

Clerk and Master, Chancery Court.

CHAS. D. BAILEY,

Clerk of the Circuit Court, Montgomery County.

SAM'L REXINGER,

Postmaster Clarksville, Montgomery County.

G. A. LIGAN,

Mayor of Clarksville, Tenn.

D. W. KENNEDY,

President Northern Bank of Tennessee.

S. F. BEAUMONT,

President First National Bank, Clarksville.

B. V. KEESER,

President Bank of Clarksville.

PETER ONEAL,

Clerk of Montgomery County Court.

STATE OF TENNESSEE,
Montgomery County :

I, Peter Oneal, clerk of the said county, certify that the names of the persons above subscribed is the genuine signature of each, the parties being to me personally known.

Witness my hand and seal of office, at office in the city of Clarksville, Tenn., this February 9, 1874.

[SEAL.]

PETER ONEAL, Clerk.

Memorandum for Commissioner Trimble at Clarksville.

1. To see the signers of Sugg Fort's testimonial, and ask same questions, as at Springfield.

2. To see James Carter, and find out just what dealings he had with Fort, between beginning of war and middle of 1863, especially after the Federals occupied the country; how much flour he got between middle of 1862 and 1863, and when; also whether flour was plentiful and cheap, or otherwise, in the latter part of 1862, and early part of 1863.

3. Whether J. N. Barker, a farmer near Clarksville, is dead or not, and if he or his family are not distant, find out if Sugg bought wheat from them in the fall of 1862. Same as to S. M. Lyon.

4. Who the buyers and handlers of flour were in the town of Clarksville in the latter half of 1862, and whether they got flour from Fort, and how much, and whether he supplied any to commissary at Clarksville, between November, 1862, and May, 1863; also, whether flour was scarce or plenty.

5. Whether any of Sugg's mules were sold at Clarksville by auction, in latter half of 1862.

6. Whether Sam. Johnson, who is still there, bought any mules for Sugg at private sale then.

7. Whether a negro named Ralph Mumford was killed at the railroad-crossing at Clarksville about a year ago, and whether those who knew him well (white or black) ever heard him say he told Sugg where a lot of bacon was hid, and so got it seized by the Yankees.

7. Whether Sugg was a Union man or a confederate, or both; who knows it, and how?

8. What his character and reputation was in 1862, and what it is now—for honesty and veracity.

9. What is known or thought of his claim, and the grounds of knowledge or belief.

In regard to annexed memorandum, I report as follows:

1st. Annexed papers marked, respectively, A, B, C, and D, show the circumstances attending the signing of the testimonial by J. E. Baily, Horace N. Luntun, Chas. G. Smith, and B. N. Johnson. As to other signers of the testimonial, D. C. Merritt knows Sugg Fort only from general reputation; has known him personally many years, but not very intimately; knows nothing special as to his character; did not know for what purpose paper to be used; read it and signed it in the manner papers of recommendation are usually signed; knows nothing of his own personal knowledge that Sugg Fort was a large land-owner; knows it only from general report; about same as to R. D. Humphreys.

Chas. D. Baily did not know Fort intimately; only knew him from general reputation, which was good; did not know that Fort was a large land-owner except from general report; did not know for what purpose paper to be used; did not know he had a claim.

Samuel Rexinger has had only slight acquaintance with Fort, only for the last five or six years; knows nothing of the facts of his own personal knowledge; did not know the purpose for which the paper was to be used; did not know Fort had a claim.

G. A. Ligon knows Fort only from general reputation; knows only from report that he was large land-owner; did not know for what purpose paper to be used; did not know anything about claim.

S. F. Beaumont, about the same; has had money dealings with Fort, knows that he had large credit with bank, and was a good business man; knows nothing special as to character.

Peter O'Neal knows Fort only from reputation, which is good; knows him personally, to speak, but not very intimately. The others, because of absence from town and offices, I was unable to see.

The general history of the paper is about as follows:

Sugg Fort, himself, carried around the paper. He had in his possession and showed to different signers of the present paper, the Springfield paper, signed by John E. Garner, J. C. Stark, J. W. Judd. These are prominent men in Robertson County—Fort's own county. The majority of the signers of the present paper, seeing their names on the Springfield paper, also the names of Baily, Luten, and Quarries, prominent and well-known men of Clarksville, on this paper, and having an acquaintance with Fort more or less intimate, and not knowing anything special against the character of Fort, hastily reading it over, signed it as a mere matter of course, without knowing or caring much for the purpose it was to be used; most supposed it was to be used in some ordinary business transaction in Clarksville or Springfield; but had it been known it was to be used in connection with his claim, still it would have been signed all the same.

The person to whom James E. Baily and D. D. Lurten allude is Dr. C. W. Greenfield; post-office address, Clarksville, Tenn. I would have seen him myself, but he lived some distance in the country; moreover, he is a brother-in-law of Fort's; is on bad terms with him, and all springs from his having been Fort's security in some business matter, which he had to pay.

2. James Carter has moved to Paducah, Ky.; he has always been a worthless person, and the probabilities are that he had no large dealings with Fort; he was a man of no property.

3. J. N. Barker is dead; his family lives ten or twelve miles in country.

4. See depositions of Hambaugh and Pettus, in batch of depositions.

5. Made inquiry, but could hear nothing of the sale.

6. Went to Johnson's office at least a dozen times, but could not see or hear anything of him.

7. See depositions of D. W. Brown and Ralph Mumford, in batch of depositions.

8. General reputation among the Union men that he was not loyal, but could not learn any particular disloyal act on his part.

9. Good, except from Baily and Lurton; see their letters.

10. No one seemed to have heard of it, or at least knew anything about it. James E. Baily related that in conversation with William Weatherford, of Port Royal, Robertson County, (you have his deposition,) that Weatherford intimated to him that the claim was fraudulent.

JAMES TRIMBLE,

U. S. Commissioner.

My signature to the paper was written by myself; take it for granted

I read the paper; have no recollection of having been told the purpose for which it was intended; had known the father of Fort for more than thirty years—a gentleman of the highest character; had known Sugg Fort for twenty years; knew his associations to be with the best people of the country; knew he had been engaged in considerable business transactions; never heard anything against his moral character; knew that he had been in possession of a mill and tract of land for many years; always heard they belonged to him, and believed they belonged to him; remember that some days after signing the paper a gentleman told me Fort had a claim against the Government; probably intended to use the paper at Washington. He said that Fort was a sharp and unprincipled man, but I know of nothing against his moral character, and have not heard any specific allegations against him.

J. E. BAILEY.

The paper shown me indorsing Sugg Fort as a man of character, and signed by J. E. Bailey and others, contains my genuine signature. The paper was handed me by Sugg Fort, who stated that he had a claim against the Government, and that it was necessary to establish his character and standing in the community. I had known Mr. Fort for some eight or nine years. His reputation, so far as I knew, was good, and his character as a business-man was fully equal to that set out in the paper referred to. I knew that he was living upon a large and valuable tract of land which he claimed as his own, and which was reputed to be his own, and I believed did belong to him. I know nothing contrary to this statement save that a few days after this paper was signed a gentleman called upon Colonel Bailey and myself and expressed surprise that we should sign such a paper, saying that Fort was a man wholly untrustworthy and unreliable, and that he was insolvent and would put the paper given him to some fraudulent use. This statement is all that I have ever heard against Fort's moral character, but such is my confidence in the character of the gentleman making these charges, that I should now hesitate to sign this paper again without further investigation of his character and financial standing.

HORACE N. LURTON.

During the month of February, 1874, Sugg Fort, of Robertson County, Tennessee, came to my residence in Clarksville, Tenn. Some persons were in my parlor at the time, where I took Mr. Fort and introduced him to my company. He soon afterward handed me a paper, stating that he was a man of integrity and the owner of large real estate. I have known Mr. Fort for about twenty years, first as a clerk in a dry-goods store in Clarksville. He then moved to Robertson County, and I saw him only occasionally until about May, 1869, when I was elected chancellor of the sixth division of Tennessee, and, his county being in my division, I met with him frequently. He was represented to me as a man of fine estate. I recollect he lost one suit in my court and I rendered judgment against him for several thousand dollars. He wanted an appeal, which was granted, to the supreme court of Tennessee, and General J. E. Garner, a man of property and solicitor for Fort, signed his appeal-bond in double the amount of the judgment. When he handed me the paper referred to I told him I could sign it if I knew he owned the real estate mentioned. He then showed me a certificate of the clerk of the county court of Robertson County, stating that he owned large real estate there; and also the certificate or statement of most of the members of the bar at Springfield, in Robertson County, to the same effect. I then asked him what he wanted with the paper. He said he wanted it for some purpose of business, but did not explain what. I believed the statement to be true and signed it. My signature is genuine. I regarded Mr. Fort as a man of fine business capacity and great energy.

CHAS. G. SMITH.

I, B. D. Johnson, of Montgomery County, Tennessee, at the request of James Trimble, special commissioner, make the following statement in regard to my signature to the paper certifying that Sugg Fort, of Robertson County, was a man of integrity and a man of property. Mr. Fort came to me during the session of the criminal court, and, being the prosecuting attorney, I was busily engaged at the time. He told me that he wanted me to sign a paper, and said something, I do not now remember what, which made the impression on my mind that the object of it was to aid him in recovering damages from the National Government for property which was either used or destroyed during the war by United States troops. I read the paper and signed it. My impression then was and still is that Mr. Fort was a good business-man, a man of integrity, and a man of property. My opinion, however, is based solely upon hearsay and reputation, as I have never had any dealings with him myself, nor do I of my own knowledge know what property he now owns or has owned, nor do I remember, prior to signing the paper, ever to have heard either his honesty or property discussed by any one in particular.

B. D. JOHNSON.

OCTOBER 29, 1874.

SPRINGFIELD, TENN.

We, a portion of the citizens of Robertson County, Tennessee, state that we are and have been well acquainted with Sugg Fort, a citizen of said county, for many years; he is a man of high character in the community in which he lives; he is, and has been for years, a man of substance, and the owner of considerable real estate in this county. His business for the last eighteen or twenty years has been that of regular milling, being the owner of a fine flouring-mill on Red River, in this county, until about the year 1870, when the same was destroyed by fire. Mr. Fort is a man of energy of character, and a fine practical business-man.

This February 3d, 1874.

JNO. E. GARNER,

J. W. JUDD,

A. E. GARNER,

E. A. HICKS,

JO. S. STARK,

Attorneys at Law, Springfield, Robertson County, Tenn.

W. B. LOWE,

Commissioner Chancery Court, Springfield, Tenn.

JOHN Y. HUTCHISON,

Clerk of the Circuit Court, Springfield, Tenn.

B. H. BOONE,

Sheriff of Robertson County.

J. W. FORT,

Chairman of Robertson County Court.

R. H. MURPHEY,

Clerk of the County Court, Robertson County.

JOHN WOODARD,

President Springfield National Bank.

STATE OF TENNESSEE,
Robertson County :

I, R. H. Murphey, clerk of the county court of said county, do certify that the above are the genuine signatures of the persons signing the same.

Witness my hand, at office, and seal of said court this 3d day of February, 1874.

[SEAL.]

R. H. MURPHEY, Clerk.

Indorsement.

It is hereby certified that the foregoing statement and signatures were exhibited by Messrs. H. H. Smith and Charles F. Benjamin, investigating agents, Treasury Department, to all the signers thereof, except J. W. Fort, who was not in town, at Springfield, county-seat of Robertson County, Tennessee, on Wednesday, October 28, 1874, and the signatures acknowledged.

Some of the signers remembered the circumstances under which they signed it, while others did not. To some it was brought by Sugg Fort; to others by Joseph C. Stark, who drew it up. Some knew it was to be used in aid of a claim against the United States; others thought it was for some ordinary business purpose. A majority of the signers had only information and belief as the basis of their knowledge, while a minority allege personal knowledge of the truth of the contents. Eight would sign the paper again, and two would not. Three of the signers, including the writer, hold the relation of lawyer to the subject of the testimonial. One signer, the last whose signature appears, placed his name upon the paper reluctantly, and only because of the names already appended, and regretted his act afterward, and would not repeat it. Some of the signers did not read the paper before signing.

CHAS. F. BENJAMIN,
Investigating Agent, Treasury Department.

NASHVILLE, TENN., February 10, 1874.

We, citizens of Davidson County, Tennessee, state we are acquainted with Sugg Fort, of Robertson County, Tennessee; that he is a man of excellent integrity and good character; that he is the owner of fine real estate in an adjoining county, (Robertson.) For the last eighteen (18) years he has been engaged in the milling business, owning a large, fine flouring-mill on Red River, in Robertson County. We regard Mr. Fort as an excellent practical business man, and of great energy of character.

J. O. SHACKELFORD,
Late Judge of Supreme Court.

J. P. HELMS,

JAS. CHAMBERLIN,

E. F. MULLOY,

W. B. REESE,

Members of the bar of Nashville, Tenn.

J. V. H. GUILD,

Judge of Law Court.

CHAS. N. GIBBS,

Secretary of State of Tennessee.

R. L. TUTHILL,

Special Commissioner of Claims.

E. D. WHITWORTH,
Of Davidson County, Sheriff.
 F. M. WOODALL,
Deputy Sheriff.
 ALBERT ACKERS,
Clerk Circuit Court.
 JNO. LEUNSDERS.
 THO. T. SMILEY.
 JAS. M. QUARLES.
 P. TURNEY.
 JNO. C. BURCH.
 JNO. McCLELLAND.
 M. BURNS.

I believe the statements in this petition.

THOMAS A. KERCHEVAL,
Mayor of Nashville.

EXECUTIVE OFFICE,
Nashville, Tenn., February 12, 1874.

I know the signers of this and the accompanying petition, and it affords me much pleasure to state that they are the best men of the State, and reflect all shades of political sentiment; and I have no hesitancy in stating that they have certified the truth in favor of Mr. Fort, who has the best standing in his county.

JNO. C. BROWN,
Governor of Tennessee.

NASHVILLE, TENN., October 29, 1874.

SIR: Being obliged to return to Washington without completing our inquiries concerning the validity and justice of a liquidated claim of Sugg Fort, of Robertson County, Tennessee, in which you have been engaged in taking testimony for the United States, we authorize and request you to procure and certify the following information and evidence in the case, viz:

1. Whether the signers of the accompanying certificate of various officials and citizens at Nashville in favor of Sugg Fort, each and every one, read the certificate before signing the same; whether each and every statement therein set forth is upon the personal knowledge of such signers or upon what other authority; whether such signers knew the use to be made of the certificate; and whether, being now informed of the use made thereof, they would, each of them, sign it again without qualification.

2. Whether his excellency the governor of Tennessee certified to the standing of Sugg Fort upon his personal knowledge or otherwise; whether he knew the intended use to be made of his indorsement; and whether he intended to certify to the responsibility of any other signers than those appearing in the same paper as his own indorsement.

3. Whether D. D. Dickey, of Church street; Mr. Bowman, an engineer and architect; Messrs. Cheatham & Wood, merchants; Mr. Wessells, a confectioner, on College street; Mr. Simmons, a baker, of Church and High streets, all of Nashville, or any other handlers or buyers of flour during the war whose names you may obtain, can tell, from their books or papers, what flour was worth between November 1, 1862, and June 1, 1863; whether it was plentiful or scarce; whether the Government officers were or were not well supplied from distant points as well as from the neighborhood; and whether flour from the mill of Sugg Fort, in Robertson County, was on sale in the Nashville market between the dates named.

4. Inquire of John D. Dolan, merchant, Church street, opposite penitentiary, if he was hauling flour from Watson & Weatherford's and from Sugg Fort's mills between the dates named; and, if he was, get all particulars that bear upon the truthfulness of the claimant's story, which please read to him to see how far he can sustain or contradict it. If he has strong rebutting evidence, take his deposition.

5. Summon one Wade, now under indictment and bail for trial before the criminal court for forging comptroller's warrants, and examine him searchingly touching his visit to Sugg Fort's place in 1863 or 1869, after the payment of the wheat-claim, in company with E. D. Lyons and Harrison, a young claim-agent, now dead, at which time, it is said, the flour-claim was invented, and the plan of the story to support it sketched out.

6. Summon M. J. Moran, a claim-agent of Nashville, and take his deposition concerning his knowledge of the loyalty or disloyalty of Sugg Fort and his voting for secession.

7. See Peck & Cahill, insurance agents, Union street, Nashville, and inquire persistently as to there being anything connected with the burning of Sugg Fort's mill, or the collection by him of a large insurance thereon, to throw discredit or suspicion upon statements made by him touching matters wherein he may have a large pecuniary interest.

8. Obtain from Deputy Collector Fowler, of the internal-revenue office at Nashville, a copy of the bond executed by Sugg Fort, a month or six weeks ago, on Form 33, in the case of J. W. Powell, of Robertson County.

9. See Dr. Newton Walton and James Watkins, both of Nashville, and ascertain if they sold any wheat to Sugg Fort in the fall of 1862.

10. Examine files of the Nashville papers between November 1, 1862, and December 31, 1862, and note what information they give concerning the names of the post and district commanders, the quartermasters, commissaries, and provost-marshals in and about Nashville, Edgefield, Clarksville, and Springfield, and the regiments and companies about Nashville and Edgefield; the supply and price of flour, and the principal millers and dealers, and the security or insecurity of the country about Nashville.

11. Ascertain, by looking at the file of papers, whether the 4th or 5th of December, 1862, fell upon Sunday, or how near to either of those dates Sunday came within the same.

It will not be necessary to take depositions or affidavits except where indicated, or in cases where you come upon authentic information bearing adversely upon the more important allegations of Sugg Fort and General Mitchell, whose statements are left with you for your own information and guidance, and in the hope that by reading them to persons whom you may visit, you may develop names of persons who have not yet testified or given information, as well as facts that have not been exposed.

Be pleased to give the foregoing matters prompt attention.

Very respectfully,

HENRY H. SMITH,
CHARLES F. BENJAMIN,

Investigating Agents, Treasury Department.

To JAMES TRIMBLE, Esq.,

United States Commissioner, Nashville.

In the matter of Sugg Fort.

To the annexed instructions I respectfully report as follows:

1. In regard to the testimonial, I called upon each gentleman signing the same, except R. S. Tuthill and P. Turner, who do not reside in Nashville. Each person stated his signature to be genuine.

James O. Shackelford stated that he had personally known Mr. Sugg Fort some twenty years; that from this personal acquaintance he thought his character good, and such was his reputation; that he had before and during the war passed a night or so on a farm in Robertson County on which Mr. Fort lived; that it was reported to belong and he believed did belong to Mr. Fort; that he knew Mr. Fort had a claim, and he had an impression that this testimonial was to be used in connection with it. He would not sign it again without qualification without further investigation.

J. P. Helms has known Sugg Fort for six or seven years, but not very intimately. From this knowledge believes him a man of good character, and such is his reputation. Has passed a night with Sugg Fort on a farm in Robertson County, and supposed he owned it; did not know the purpose for which paper was to be used. Would sign it again upon information and belief for any purpose.

Jo. C. Guild stated about the same as J. O. Shackelford. Did not know the purpose of the paper; would sign it again on information and belief.

E. F. Mulloy stated that he lived in Robertson County before the war; that he knew Sugg Fort personally, but knew his character more from reputation than from personal acquaintance; that he knew only from report that he owned a farm and mill in Robertson County; that he had an impression that the paper was to be used in prosecution of claim; would sign it again from information and belief.

James Chamberlain and W. B. Reese stated that they had known Sugg Fort for three or four years; knew his character from reputation; knew from report only that he owned a mill and farm in Robertson County; did not know the object or purpose of the paper; would not sign the paper again without further inquiry as to the merits of claim.

Chas. N. Gibbs and John C. Burch stated that they signed the paper only from statements and representations made to them; did not know Mr. Fort's reputation or that he was a large real-estate owner, except from statements made to them at the time of signing; had a kind of knowledge that the paper was to be used in connection with a claim, but knew nothing about its merits; would sign again upon these representations and statements.

E. D. Whitworth and F. M. Woodall do not remember ever seeing or hearing of such a man; know nothing whatever about him or his means. Their signatures are genuine, but do not remember ever reading the paper or when or where they signed it.

Albert Akers has heard of Mr. Fort, but knows nothing whatever as to his character or means; did not know or care for what purpose the paper was to be used.

Thos. T. Smiley stated that he had known Sugg Fort for many years; thinks him a man of good character, and such is his reputation; knows from report only that he owned a mill and farm in Robertson County. Did not know the purpose of the paper, but would sign it again from information and belief for any purpose.

John Lumsden stated that he signed the paper only from representations and at the request of a friend; that he did not know the purpose the paper was to be used for; that he ought not to have signed it, and would not sign it again.

James M. Quarles stated that he had known Sugg Fort for ten or fifteen years, and from his acquaintance he believed him a man of good character, and such was his reputation; that he had been many times upon a farm in Robertson County on which Sugg Fort lived, and that Fort told him that he owned it; he was upon it about one year and a half ago; that he did not know the purpose of the paper, but from information and belief would sign it again for any object or purpose.

John McClellan stated that he signed the paper wholly from information and belief, knowing Mr. Fort only slightly; did not know the purpose of paper, but would sign it again from information and representation for any purpose.

M. Burns stated that he signed with qualification at first; would qualify still more and make inquiry as to merits of claim before signing again; signed only from seeing preceding names and representations; knew nothing of Mr. Fort personally.

Thomas A. Kercheval had known Sugg Fort for ten or twelve years; thought his character good, and such was his reputation; knew he had a claim, and supposed paper to be used in connection with it; would sign again from information and belief for any purpose.

2. John C. Brown certified from his personal knowledge of his reputation, but not as to his character; knew that it was to be used in connection with a claim. His indorsement was intended to cover besides the signers of the present paper the signers of other testimonials, he thinks, signed by gentlemen living in Robertson and Montgomery Counties.

3. In or about August, 1862, the United States Army under General Buell retreated to Kentucky, and almost the whole country abandoned by the United States soldiers except city of Nashville. Nashville was in a kind of state of siege, and so continued until the return of United States Army under General Rosecrans, in or about 1st of November, 1862. During this period of time no provisions or very little came into the city, and flour went up to $25 per barrel. About the 1st of November General Rosecrans's army began to arrive at Nashville. From this period of time until about the middle of December, 1862, the greater portion of his army was encamped in and around Nashville. Communication and the railroad were not opened until the latter portion of November; consequently from these two causes the want of means of communication, and the large number of soldiers around, provisions were scarce and high. From old books of flour-merchants I learned that flour in November and December was selling at retail for $12 per barrel. During this time the United States authorities were also seizing flour for the army, but were paying only about $8 per barrel.

After Rosecrans advanced upon Murfreesborough, the latter portion of December, and the communication with surrounding country opened, flour began to fall. In January, 1863, it was bringing from $11 to $10 per barrel; in February, from $9 to $8; and in March and April went as low as $6 and $6.50; in May and June, for some cause, it went up again to $12. During this period of time large shipments were being made from Robertson and Montgomery Counties; and, from what I can learn, it was hauled in wagons from mills of Watson, Moody, and Holman, of Robertson. I find none from Sugg Fort's mill. It is thought that he carried his to Clarksville and Springfield.

4. John D. Dolan states that, in the fall of 1862, he was in Robertson County, making inquiries as to who had flour for sale; that he heard of about all the flour-mills in the county that had flour for sale, but heard nothing of Sugg Fort having any on hand. I think that Dolan knows a great deal, but I can get nothing more out of him, and even did I succeed in doing so, I would be in doubt whether or not to believe him.

5. Wade is not here in jail. His address is W. E. Wade, Saint Louis, Mo.

6. Deposition hereto attached.

7. Messrs. Peck and Cahill state that they paid up the policies immediately. They had no suspicion of fraud whatever, except that it seemed strange that no insurance had before been on the mill, and that the fire occurred so soon after insurance was effected; amount of insurance, $10,000. Col. E. A. Fort claimed portion of it, but finally all paid to Sugg Fort. They also stated that Sugg had call a few days before I did, to inquire whether any United States official had called upon them recently in regard to the matter.

8. The original affidavit of Sugg Fort on Form 33, made September 18, 1874, on the distillery warehousing bond of J. W. Powell, of Robertson County, is on file in the office of the Commissioner of Revenue, at Washington, D. C. No copy is on file here as the law requires; consequently I cannot furnish you with copy.

9. These parties I have not been able to see.

10. From November the 1st until the latter portion of December, 1862, almost the whole of General Rosecrans's army was in and around Nashville.

From November the 1st until December the 10th, 1862, the post commander and his subordinates were as follows:

Post commander, General Negley, headquarters High street.

District headquarters, Summer street, W. H. Sidell, major Fifteenth Infantry, A. A. A. G.

Provost-marshal, at capitol, A. C. Gillam, colonel First Tennessee Regiment.

Chief assistant quartermaster, Cherry street, Capt. J. D. Bingham.

Assistant quartermaster, Cherry street, Capt. R. Stevenson.

Assistant quartermaster, Vine street, Capt. R. N. Lamb.

Assistant quartermaster, Market street, Capt. J. M. Hale.

Chief commissary, Vine street, Capt. R. McFeely.

Commissary of subsistence, Broad street, Capt. S. Little.

Acting commissary of subsistence, Broad street, Lieut. Charles Allen.

Medical director, E. Swift.

Paper (Nashville Union) of December the 11th, 1862, contains special order, dated "December the 10th, 1862, Nashville, Tenn.," issued and signed by "Gen. R. B. Mitchell," assuming command of post of Nashville, ordering all troops of the garrison or post to obey his orders, and appointing following staff: Capt. John Pratt, A. A. G.; Capt. C. A. Garnett, A. Q. M.; Lieut. W. O. Osgood, A. D. C.; Lieut. John K. Rankin, A. D. C.; headquarters, College street.

After this order a short time appears:

Provost-marshal, Col. John A. Martin, colonel Eighth Kansas Regiment.

Assistant quartermasters, J. G. Chandler, J. D. Bingham, J. G. Cox, and William Mills.

Assistant quartermaster in charge of transportation and quartermaster's stores, Lieut. Charles H. Irwin.

The following locals show condition and state of surrounding country:

November 2, 1862. Robberies of stages on their way north at Goodlettsville, by guerrilla Dick McCann.

Nov. 4. Rosecrans approaching Nashville, with his army from Kentucky; Bragg with his army approaching town of Murfreesborough.

November 5. Rebels under Morgan and Forrest make unsuccessful attempt to burn the railroad-bridge at Nashville.

November 13. Louisville and Nashville Railroad runs to within twenty-six miles of Nashville; passengers and mail thence conveyed to Nashville in stages and wagons; telegraph communication opened with Louisville.

November 23. Almost whole of Rosecrans's army has arrived and is encamped in and around Nashville. Capture of some of Forrest's men near Nashville.

December 2. Capture of some of the men of guerrilla Dick McCann.

December 3. Rosecrans's headquarters at Nashville; business on the increase, and provisions begin to come into market.

December 9. Rebel Woodward driven from Clarksville into southwest portion of the State.

December 12. Time-table of the Edgefield and Kentucky Railroad published, and notice that it makes all connections at Guthrie, Ky. (This is the road that runs by Fort's Station.)

December 13. Rosecrans's Army begins to advance toward Murfreesborough, Tenn.

December 25. Murder of a preacher named Wagner in Robertson County, and robbed of $300; at same time, by same party, two other citizens robbed.

10. The 4th day of December, 1862, came on Thursday.

D. D. Dickey was principal dealer in flour during the war, but he has been absent for the last month; others were Wessell, Simmons, Cheatman, and McLaughlin, and Brien, and Thaxten, and others, who have since left Nashville.

JAMES TRIMBLE.

NASHVILLE, TENN., February 14, 1866.

We, the undersigned, officers in the military service of the United States, take pleasure in stating that Sugg Fort, living on Red River, in the 17th civil district of Robertson County, Tennessee, is and has been loyal to the Government of the United States. He is a credible, exemplary gentleman of the highest standing. He has at great personal risk performed duties for the Government, to which our officers assigned him. From all we know of him, and of his character and position, and also of his claim against the Government, we are satisfied that his claim is just and correct, and should be allowed.

GEO. T. ARMSRTONG,

Major of Fifteenth United States Colored Infantry.

WILLIAM V. DOAN,

Captain of Fifteenth United States Colored Infantry.

A. M. CODINGTON,

First Lieutenant Fifteenth United States Colored Infantry.

M. Y. WILCOX,

First Lieutenant Fifteenth United States Colored Infantry.

JOHN J. HARDY,

Lieutenant Fifteenth United States Colored Infantry.

FRANK H. BUTTERFIELD,

First Lieutenant Fifteenth United States Colored Infantry.

GEO. W. WATSON,

Second Lieutenant Fifteenth United States Colored Infantry.

LEVI PATCHIN,

Captain Fifteenth United States Colored Infantry.

HENRY E. KORHAMMER,

First Lieutenant Fifteenth United States Colored Infantry.

(Copy.)

I, Geo. T. Armstrong, an officer of the Government of the United States, do hereby certify that Sugg Fort, the claimant stated, is a respectable citizen, of good reputation for veracity, and is entitled to full faith and credit, and has taken the oath of allegiance to the Government of the United States pursuant to the proclamation of the President of the 8th of December, 1863, and at the time his said claim originated was loyal to the United States, and has been ever since; and I further certify that A. B. White, W. B. Aaron, and W. J. Aaron, the witnesses to said claimant's declaration, are known to me to be credible persons, and loyal to the Government of the United States, and of good reputation for veracity, and entitled to be believed.

[STAMP.] (Signed) GEO. T. ARMSTRONG,
Major Fifteenth United States Colored Infantry.

The oath of allegiance is signed and properly acknowledged by Sugg Fort.

(Copy.)

HEADQUARTERS UNITED STATES FORCES,
Springfield, Tenn., January 5, 1865.

Mr. SUGG FORT:

SIR: You are hereby ordered to go through the county of Robertson, Tennessee, and buy all flour and grain at such prices as the Government authorizes.

If parties owning or controlling grain or flour refuse to sell to you, as an authorized Government agent, you will report them promptly to these headquarters, and their grain and flour will be confiscated.

Failure to comply with the above will subject you to arrest.

By command of Colonel Downey, commanding post.

(Signed) M. HORACE MCKAY,
Captain and Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE CUMBERLAND,
Nashville, November 24, 1863.

Guards and pickets:

Pass Mr. Sugg Fort, with one horse and buggy, to Springfield, Tenn., permitted to carry out of the lines one carpet-sack and contents.

By command of—

MAJOR-GENERAL THOMAS.
WILLIAM C. BUNTS,
Captain and Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

HEADQUARTERS POST COMMANDER,
Nashville, December 9, 1862.

Guards and pickets:

Pass Sugg Fort to Springfield, Tennessee.

By command of—

[SEAL.] BRIGADIER-GENERAL NEGLEY,
Commanding Post.

JAMES A. LOURIE,
Captain and Assistant Adjutant-General.

Approved by command of Major-General Rosecrans.

WM. M. WILES,
Captain and Provost-Marshal-General.

QUARTERMASTER'S OFFICE,
Nashville, Tenn., August 19, 1867.

Respectfully returned to Bvt. Maj. Gen'l Thomas Swords, A. Q. M. Gen'l U. S. A., with the information that I have investigated the within case of Sugg Fort, of Robertson County, Tennessee, and find as follows:

* * * * *

In conclusion, I would say that the loyalty of claimant, both during and since the war, is undoubted, and that the claim is just.

(Signed)

T. MOORE,
Major, Quartermaster, Bvt. Lt. Col., U. S. A.

ASSISTANT QUARTERMASTER'S OFFICE,
Nashville, Tenn., December 19, 1866.

* * * * *

It is a very hard matter to obtain any evidence in this case other than that given by the witnesses to the claim. There is no question as to the Government's having taken a large amount of wheat which belonged to said Fort, and the only evidence that I can get is such as to substantiate that of the witnesses to the claim; and after a thorough investigation of the case, I consider the claim reasonably just and correct.

(Signed)

G. W. MARSHALL,
Brevet Major and A. Q. M.

NOTE.—The foregoing passes and certificates of Moore and Marshall relate to wheat-claims of $42,900 paid in 1868; also appear in flour-claims.

Col. E. A. FORT, having been by me first duly sworn, deposes and says:

My name is Edmund A. Fort. My age, 57 years. My residence, Fort's Station, Tenn., and my occupation, a farmer. I am a third cousin to Sugg Fort, and have known him all his life. At the beginning of the war he and I owned the mill from which the flour was taken charged in his claim, each owning one-half. He had no ownership in any other mill, to my knowledge, but his wife's father's estate owned a mill about four miles above here, on the Red River, in which he had no interest that I know of. Their name was Sugg, Dr. H. H. Sugg being the father of Sugg Fort's wife. My interest in the milling-business ceased in the fall of 1861, in consequence of my unwillingness to risk going into such a heavy business as Sugg Fort proposed and desired. The mill was operated all the time, both before and after the Federals came here. While the confederates had the possession of the country we sent flour to Nashville, Memphis, and New Orleans. We sent, among others, to C. H. Smith, of New Orleans, who never paid us, and that causes me to remember him particularly. I never knowingly sold a barrel to go into confederate-government use, and do not know that a barrel ever did go into that use. We used to sell large quantities to Livingston, a wholesale and retail grocer on the public square at Nashville. I understood from Sugg, last week, that the mill-books are at Springfield, in the custody of Joseph C. Stark. I have seen them myself since the destruction of the mill by fire. Sugg left them at my house when he went to Washington last spring. They were his cash-book and journal. The day-book and one or two others were burned at the mill. In the fall of 1862 I know that he bought large quantities of wheat, and I myself saw large quantities of flour in his store-house and in the mill. I suppose there was as much as a thousand barrels in the mill, and, so far as I could see, the store-house was full, though I didn't go up-stairs. The store-house was about 30 by 60, and about 15 feet or more high, divided into two floors, and with sheds at the sides. I never examined the barrels to see if full or empty, but several times saw them loading barrels into Government wagons, and don't suppose they would be loading empty barrels. We used to buy barrels from the Clynavards, of Springfield, and others whose names I don't remember, at Springfield and Greenbrier. When I saw Government wagons taking Sugg's flour, I supposed they were appropriating his flour as they did mine, and did not know, from Sugg or anybody else, that he had an understanding with the Federal authorities in reference to the taking of his flour. I remember Sugg telling me some years ago that General Mitchell knew it was his flour that was taken. It may have been three or four years ago, and I am certain it was more than a year ago. I do not know that he had 3,000 barrels of flour in the fall of 1862, but I know no reason why he should not have had that quantity. When I was in with him, we were making 100 barrels a day, and I know he was buying wheat largely, and that the mill was running night and day. The railroad hence to Nashville was usually in running order, though sometimes the confederates burned the bridges, and once in a while a freshet would carry a bridge away. I don't know why the flour should not have been sent to Nashville by rail instead of sending wagons out from Nashville to haul flour, unless it was while the railroad was disabled. The road was then called the Edgefield and Kentucky Railroad. My personal and business relations with Sugg Fort have been intimate for years, and I have largely trusted him, and have never had reason to believe that he was dishonest, untruthful, or capable of committing a fraud. I know that his standing in the community is good. The fact that he was prosecuting a claim at Washington was publicly known here in this community, and I never knew or heard of anybody but D. D. Holman, of Springfield, denouncing it. My personal relations with Holman are friendly, but I cannot conscientiously say that his public reputation is good. I understand that he is now and has been for several years a claim-agent.

I have known Wiley Edwards, one of Sugg's witnesses, all his life, and believe him to be a truthful, honest man, and his reputation in the community is good.

In reference to Henry Waters, I would believe him on oath if he swore against me. I don't know Albert Metcalfe so well, but know nothing whatever against him, and believe them to be of good reputation in the community. They are, both of them, thrifty colored men, apparently prosperous and of good credit. I have no reason whatever to believe that they would testify untruthfully on oath.

I believe Sugg Fort to be a solvent man, in good credit. Whenever he asks me to go security for him I always do so. I am on his paper now to the extent of two or three thousand dollars, and perhaps more, and have no apprehension that I shall have to pay the money. I have been going his security for probably fifteen years, and have never had to pay a dollar for him, though the aggregate amount has been very large. I also know that he has had large contracts in his business, and have never heard that he failed to carry them out honorably. I know at least four or five wealthy men that he could get as security to any amount, and from whom he could get unlimited credit.

E. A. FORT.

Sworn and subscribed to before me, at Fort's Station, Robertson County, Tenn., this 26th day of October, 1874.

[SEAL.]

JAMES TRIMBLE,

Circuit Court Commissioner of the United States

for the Middle District of Tennessee.

NASHVILLE, October 29, 1874.

In the matter of the claim of Sugg Fort.

Statement of Mrs. Sugg Fort.

"Don't know how much flour Mr. Fort had in the fall and winter of 1862-'63, but he had a good deal; don't know whether there was one, two, or three thousand barrels. Did not know much about Mr. Fort's business matters. Remember that about two weeks or so before Christmas, 1862, Mr. Fort went to Nashville; think it was in regard to the return of slaves; he started in the morning and was gone a day or two; remember that he went in a buggy; and that at another time he went to Nashville to see about getting a permit; don't know what the permit was for. Never heard of General Mitchell until recently, and do not remember that Mr. Fort went to Nashville to see him specially. Do not remember about Mr. Fort making a visit to Nashville in the night, and would have known it if he had made such a visit. Do not remember Mr. Fort telling me that he was going to Nashville to see General Mitchell or any other general, to inform him of the fact that he had a large quantity of flour with the view of having the Federal military authorities seize it; that would have been such a remarkable circumstance that I would have remembered it. Do not think the Union soldiers came with Mr. Fort on his return from Nashville, but think he returned toward evening. Don't remember distinctly about the circumstances of that visit to Nashville, but am sure he went to see about the return of slaves once, and once to see about a permit to get wheat or sell flour. Don't remember about rebel soldiers coming to burn mill and threatening Mr. Fort. Think my husband was a Union man; that is, he never done anything for the confederacy; never interfered and asked rebel soldiers not to burn the mill or other property. Don't remember of any rebel soldiers visiting the mill to take any flour, except once when a bag or so of flour was taken. Some guerrillas, that is, a band of thieves, came once when Mr. Fort was away in Canada, and there was some talk of burning the mill; did not see them, but heard about it; gave them food, as I did rebel soldiers once or twice. On one occasion some rebel soldiers were eating at the table when some Union soldiers came. I was afraid they would fight, but they did not see each other. There was no feeling against Mr. Fort because of his Unionism, though all, or nearly all, of the neighbors were rebels; heard some one say that there was talk of hanging my husband, but don't remember who told me; don't know whether my husband told me, or some of the servants; don't remember whether I heard this lately or not. Remember that some soldiers with wagons came to the mill and got flour, about two weeks before Christmas, 1862; remember it was after the fall of Fort Donelson; think it was afternoon when they came; think some soldiers came another time afterward, but can't remember whether it was in January or February; saw an officer with them; don't know how much flour they took; think some Government wagons came once or twice without soldiers. Don't remember when the battle of Fort Donelson was; don't remember when the battle of Lookout Mountain was; don't remember when the bridge was burned; think it was after Fort Donelson fell. Don't remember when Mr. Fort sold his mules. Don't know how much flour Mr. Fort had, but know he had a large quantity."

The foregoing statement was taken by me on Thursday evening, October 29, at the residence of the claimant. I stated to Mr. Fort that I desired to take the statement of his wife without his being present, but Mr. Fort withdrew to the rear parlor, and only partly closed the doors, taking position where I could not see him, but in full view of his wife. Several times during the progress of the examination Mr. Fort made some movement or demonstration to attract his wife's attention, but it is creditable to Mrs. Fort that she gave her statement, as far as she could, from her memory, though embarrassed by the course of her husband, who evidently sought to refresh her memory, and suggest statements to her that would harmonize with his own. Upon stating that I desired the statement sworn to, Mr. Fort objected to that, after I had explained the statute as to perjury, &c., and that a witness who falsely testified in a claim was liable to prosecution with the claimant preferring such false claim. This statement was written out by me October 30, the following day, from the memoranda of the statements made by Mrs. Fort the previous evening.

HENRY H. SMITH,
Investigating Agent, &c.

WASHINGTON, D. C.,
November 16, 1874.

In the matter of the claim of Sugg Fort.

Examination of Capt. F. S. Sowers.

My name is F. S. Sowers; residence, city of Washington; occupation, claim-attorney. I know Sugg Fort, of Robertson County, Tennessee, and have known him since 1866. I know that he had a claim against the Government for flour, and first heard that he had such claim in 1867 or 1868, probably in 1868. He informed me of that fact in Nashville, where I was living at the time. He had a claim pending before the Quartermaster's Department for 39,000 bushels of wheat, amounting to about $42,900, at $1.10 per bushel. It had been in the hands of Mr. Niles of this city for some three years. Mr. Fort came to me and engaged my services, making me an associate counsel in that case. During the working up of the case before the Quartermaster's Department in 1867 and 1868, this flour matter was spoken of frequently. He said that he had a claim for flour which was taken from his mills by the United States forces, and was unable to tell from whom the order was received, whether from General Negley or General Mitchell, General Mitchell having succeeded General Negley as the officer in command. He did not know what to do in the matter, and asked me if I thought it would be advisable to put the claim in before the Commissary Department at that time. I told him it would not unless he had such evidence of the officers as was required by the Department. It was talked of almost daily while he was here in 1868. Efforts were made to find persons having knowledge of the case. I was looking for Captain Kane, commissary of subsistence, and Captain Little, commissary of subsistence, at the post of Nashville. I can't say who he was looking for. Captain Little was alive at that time, and was in business at Nashville. He was interviewed by me on several occasions. Besides looking for Captain Kane and Captain Little, I was looking for General Negley, General Mitchell, and Captain Henderson, who used to be the commissary. I saw them all at different times—year after year, or month after month. I cannot say whether Captain Kane is now living. The last I heard of him he was at Pittsburgh. He was commissary. I do not think Captain Little is now living. He was living in Nashville in 1868 and 1870. I was at the races at Nashville both in 1869 and 1870, and I had an interview with him in reference to this flour matter. He said that he had received a large quantity of flour from unknown sources, and said, "I have no doubt I got Mr. Fort's flour; I will examine my papers and see what can be found from them, and make such a statement as the papers and the facts will warrant." I think that was in May, 1870; possibly it may have been in 1869. I had another interview with him the following February to the same import, and he advised me to see Colonel Irwin, Captain Henderson, and also the commandant of the post, who it was supposed issued the order for the taking of this property. He did not say whether that commander was Mitchell or Negley. It was one of the two. Mitchell succeeded Negley. He could not tell, nor could I at that time, as to the date when Negley surrendered the office. It was, however, in November, 1862, I think. I was in Nashville at the time, and in camp there. I think that was the time. It was either the last of October or in November. The records will show. I have no other reason for thinking that was the date, except my present memory of what occurred back in 1862. I saw in the Department to-day a pass signed by General Negley, commanding, dated December 12, passing a man through the lines. It does not matter in what case I saw that paper. He may have been relieved prior to that date. I am not positive about the date being the 12th, but I think it was. It was dated some time in December. I saw Irvin daily, and have talked to him about this claim. I couldn't tell all we have said about it. He said a great many things to me about it, and I have had several talks with him in reference to it. He said that he did not know about it personally. He said no doubt he may have sent the escort in charge of the train. He may have sent the escort and the train; he did not know and could not tell until he had examined his papers and found out something about it. To my knowledge, personally, he never has examined his papers or told me that he knew anything about it. He has promised me on several occasions to do so. I do not know where he is now.

I had an interview with General Negley at the Monongahela, in Pittsburgh, and we then made an arrangement to meet at Washington at a certain time, and he would look over his records while he was in command at Nashville and meet me here. If he had any memoranda or matter by which he could refresh his memory with reference to this case, as to giving an order to take Mr. Fort's flour, he would be here and give me the benefit of it. He did give me the benefit of his search, and the result was that he had no knowledge of it. Captain Little said to me subsequently, at the Maxwell House, at Nashville, that he had not examined his papers, as he had not had time; but he said, "I am satisfied that we got Mr. Fort's flour. I will write to you at Washington." I was to leave next day. That is the last interview I ever had with Captain Little. I don't remember that he ever said why he was satisfied that he had got the flour. He wrote me one letter I think afterward, and sent me a receipt for money I had paid him as rent. In that letter he mentioned the flour matter. He said that he had not completed his examination, and would advise me as soon as he accomplished that result. If he could find any data, notes, or memoranda, or anything of that sort, he would let me know. He had a railroad-ticket office at that time, and then he went into the baggage-transfer line. He never gave me any more information.

I never had an interview with Captain Henderson but once in my life; that was in Nashville, in the early part of these proceedings. He merely referred me to Captain Little. He said, "Captain Little has that matter all on his books, and he can give you any information you want." That must have been in 1867 or 1868. I do not remember the time, and am not positive whether I saw him at Nashville or *New York. We used to meet very frequently. He was from a nearly adjoining county to me in Ohio. He was in New York the last advices I had. I do not know what he is doing there, nor do I know his address.

I saw General Mitchell first in reference to this case probably in 1870 or 1871. I have seen him frequently. He used to be at my office frequently, and he has been from that time on. When I wrote him I also telegraphed him. I had, prior to this, however, telegraphed to General Negley to meet Mr. Fort and myself here, in order to settle the question whether General Negley issued an order to take this property. Mr. Fort came here. General Negley failed to come. I think this was in 1871. Mr. Fort was taken sick here, and as soon as he recovered he left for home without seeing General Negley. On my way West that fall I called at Pittsburgh to see the general, and had a talk with him about this matter. He assured me that Captain Kane, who was the commissary at the time, was still living, although the Commissary-General had told me that he was dead, and that their advices were of a character that could be relied upon. General Negley said, "I am satisfied that I saw Captain Kane here the day that General Grant was at Pittsburgh." He said also, "I have no data by which I can show whether I gave that order before I left the office or not." I then wrote to General Mitchell and telegraphed to him when he could be here. I received one or two letters from him; I do not remember whether I got a telegram from him or not in reply. I think that was in 1870 or 1871; [1871 or 1872.—C. F. B.] He came on after he recovered from an illness; he had been quite sick. He had been here every year for the last twenty-two years. I am unable to give the date of my first interview with him; I am not certain whether it was after I came back from the West or before I went; I think it was before; it was probably in 1872. He remarked something like this: "I have an indistinct recollection of giving the order to take a large quantity of flour from Robertson County, on the Red River; the quantity I am unable to say; I can't tell anything about it, because whatever was brought in was turned over to the post headquarters; Fort was the man." Whether it was Ed. Fort or Sugg Fort he couldn't say. That is about the sum and substance of his interview with me. He referred to Pratt, his adjutant-general. He said "I think Pratt could tell who it was, and possibly could tell the amount. He said, "When I go home I will think of the matter, look over what memoranda I have, and let you know." I didn't hear any thing from him.

I saw him again in 1873; I wrote and telegraphed him, and he told me when he would be here, which would be as soon as he was able to travel; he had been sick. I then wrote him that Mr. Fort had been here on two or three occasions to see General Negley and to see him, to confer with them, and that he was anxious about the matter. I became satisfied from the dates of the taking of the property that General Mitchell must have been in command of the post instead of General Negley. General Negley and myself had an interview on that question at Willard's, and from the dates of the taking of the property it could not have been taken while he was in command; it was in the latter part of December, 1862, and the fore part of 1863. It is a question whether or not General Negley was in command at any time in December; he may have assumed command. In my future conversation with General Mitchell he did not seem to have more knowledge or more recollection than he had in the first interview, except from an examination of the record of his career, and from his recollection bringing to his mind what had transpired during the war. I do not know how he got his information, nor from whom, but he was satisfied, and he says he knows, as well as he knows he was living, that he gave the order. He had the advantage of referring to his adjutant-general, his quartermaster, and a portion of his staff. He referred to Captain Garrett, Major Pratt, and Rankin, and so told me. I do not know that he said he consulted them, but that he had had the advantage of refreshing his memory from incidents that occurred while they were with him, and was satisfied that he gave the order to take Mr. Fort's flour, or the flour that was received from him. I cannot say that he said he had consulted any papers, records, or memoranda running back to that time, but my impression is that he did. He said he had come to that conclusion after careful reflection, and from all the circumstances, and from his recollection of the matter, and what he had gained from other sources. He further said, on his second or third interview with me, that he was damned positive that he issued the order by which this property was taken. Those were the words of the general. When he first saw me I don't think he had seen Fort, nor do I think he had seen Fort before he saw me the second time and gave me this positive information. The second interview was probably the last of 1872 or the fore part of 1873. It may have been in the fall of 1872, although I am not positive about that.

* I did not see him in New York, not having been there since 1867.—C. F. B.

I never asked Captain Garrett anything about this claim. I met Captain Pratt, the adjutant-general, by accident here last winter, in front of the Ebbitt House. It was either last fall or last winter, and I am not certain which—whether it was before or after the holidays. I think I talked with him about this claim. We were standing in front of the Ebbitt House. I had not seen him for two or three years. I think, perhaps, we had been taking a drink at the Ebbitt House, and walked out, another gentleman being with us. I merely asked him the question, "John, are you here on the Fort case?" He said "No; I have nothing to do with it; but," says he, "whatever the general states there, you can bet your life is true." Those were the words, in effect. The matter passed off in that sort of way. I think the other gentleman heard him say that. I don't now remember who it was—whether it was Hoover or Butler, or whom. That is all the talk Pratt and I ever had about the claim, and it didn't amount to two minutes' talk.

Captain Kane I never saw in reference to this case. I knew him during the war, while he was in the Army with me.

My connection with this case began in 1868, when Mr. Fort first consulted me. In 1870, I think, this claim was put up by me on a petition under the act of July 4th; brought that petition to Washington, and left it in my desk until such time as I could find official evidence, as required by the Commissary Department, under the law of July 4, 1864. It thus remained in my desk until the winter of 1872-'73, a portion of which time I was absent from the city, at the West, leaving a clerk in my office. While absent Mr. Fort was here looking after this case, which he supposed was on file in the Commissary Department; but inasmuch as I had been unable to procure the evidence of any officer, as required by that Department, to place it on file prior to March 3, 1871, it was not filed, and was for that reason retained in my office. Mr. Fort telegraphed me at my home in Ohio, and wrote me. I replied to him that it was impossible for me to get here; that I was compelled to be at home to attend to the store of my son-in-law, he being an invalid, and not able to attend to the store at all. Mr. Fort took the papers, according to his statement to me and the statement of my clerk. That clerk was Maj. H. R. Hall, now in New York. I do not know his address. His son was at Rice's photograph gallery when I last heard of him, and can probably give his father's address. Mr. Fort took the papers, as I say, from my office, and gave them to Mr. Charles O'Neill as Mr. O'Neill and Mr. Fort both told me. My clerk was in charge of the office, and delivered up the papers. The owner of the office, Mr. Clarke, got out an attachment on an indorsement of mine on a note of his. I was not here, and I could not say who had the key. Mr. Clarke was a friend of mine, and took out this attachment to secure himself and to secure me also. I would believe Mr. Fort's statement under oath before the statement of any other man in the world not upon oath. When those papers were turned over to Mr. O'Neill, that terminated my connection with the case for a time. I never saw the papers from that time until the fall or winter of 1873, when Fort came and brought them back to my office, and I looked them over, he retaining them, however, in his own possession. I had no authority—no power of attorney. I cannot specially remember the papers that were shown to me. I saw the petition and affidavits in connection. I do not remember what they were. I am satisfied General Mitchell's affidavit was not there at that time. Fort's own affidavit was there, I think, and there were some from people that were employed by him. After he had taken those affidavits was the time he showed me those papers. It was prior to the assembling of Congress, I think, although it may have been afterward. I could not say whether it was as much as six weeks or two months before or after the assembling of Congress.

I had then nothing to do with the case. I was not before the Department. He would consult me from day to day what to do, and I would tell him. He would start off with the view of carrying out my instructions. Whether he did so or not I do not know. He may have acted under the instructions of somebody else. My advice to him at the time was that he had no remedy except through Congress. I reckon that while his claim was pending before Congress I did act in favor of it and talked in favor of it. I couldn't state just what I did. I talked a good deal in favor of it to various parties, because I believed it to be right and just. I talked both to members and to those who were not members. I might have talked to a dozen a day about general matters. I do not suppose that it has any material effect upon the case, and think it is unnecessary to ask the question as to whom I talked in aid of the claim who were not members of Congress. I have talked to Mr. King, Mr. Hoover, and Mr. Butler; Mr. King was another. I can't tell who they were. I have talked in aid of the claim with Mr. Sawyer, of Tennessee, or in reference to it, rather. I have also talked to Maj. C. T. King in reference to it. I have talked to Capt. J. M. Butler in reference to it. I do not know who he is.* I did not talk to them specially to get their services in aid of the claim. I talked to them about it; and if ever they could say or do anything it would be all right. I have talked with J. L. McFarland about it. I talked to two or three members about it, and represented the case to them, as I believed it to be a just claim, and asked their support.

* I do know Mr. Butler; and if I said that I did not, it was not intentional.—C. F. B

I have talked to General Negley, Mr. Foster, of Ohio, Colonel Berry, of Ohio, Col. C. Lamison, of Ohio, and I may have talked to others. I have said that this gentleman had such and such a case, and I believed it to be meritorious, and asked their support. It might be thought that after Congress adjourned I did something in aid of the claim. I advised Mr. Fort from day to day.

Prior to the adjournment, however, I advised him to ask the consent of the House for certified copies of the papers in his case, in order that he might present the case before the Commissary Department under the act of June 16. This was on the evening, or the evening prior to the adjournment of Congress. Under the act of June 16, the Commissary Department was authorized to receive claims as heretofore, under the act of July, 1864, which they had declined to receive subsequent to March 3, 1871, which barred this claim before we could prepare the evidence to be filed there. I had several talks with General Eaton about it. He would not entertain it under that act. I also spoke with General Beckwith about it, and, by the advice, or consent, or counsel of General McFerran and General Thomas, I did not think it advisable to have the two claims there together, while I was prosecuting a claim for wheat before the Quartermaster's Department. General McFerran and General Thomas told me this in 1868. There were various reasons, best known to them and to myself; one was that we had not the evidence from the officers as required, and furthermore we could use the papers as to Mr. Fort's loyalty, which were on file in the Quartermaster's Department, and when that was settled we could have them transmitted to the Commissary Department in support of his loyalty. That was the advice Generals McFerran and Thomas gave me, and I think General James A. Ekin also. I think General McFerran is dead. General Thomas is alive. It was talked of by several of them around the Department. I think McFarland gave the same advice. I know that was the conclusion. I most assuredly told the claimant that it was not advisable to have two claims pending at once. I said "You have a claim before the Quartermaster-General's Department for so much wheat; wait until you get this one thing through; it is a claim of considerable magnitude; you can take your loyalty papers that are in this claim in support of your claim before any other Department, and in the mean time we can find such testimony of the officers as is required to support your claim before the Commissary Department."

After Congress adjourned and the claim was brought before the Commissary Department I think I did something in aid of it. I may have aided Mr. Fort. I may have loaned him money to remain here and to prosecute his case. I advised him, as I have said, to get certified copies from the House. After I gave him that advice I did not see the Commissary-General at all. I may have done something in aid of it. I cannot say whether that is a matter that comes in here or not. I say I may have loaned him money to stay here and prosecute this affair. Whether I did is a question not material to anybody. After the adjournment I think I did something in aid of the claim. I have an objection to stating particularly or specially what I did. In general terms, I did aid. During the whole of my connection with this claim I do not remember to have seen, and do not think I ever did see any paper written or printed in 1862 or 1863 which had any relation to the claim. I never saw any documentary evidence that I remember, which bore date of the same time the flour was taken, or about that time. I never have seen anything of that sort with the exception of the memorandum from the miller and Mr. Fort's own papers. The miller and some man with him had a memorandum which was dated in the latter part of 1862, and probably in December. I was under the impression that it was in November. I saw such a paper probably in the fall of 1867. I think it was at the time Mr. Fort first gave me a power of attorney in the wheat-case to associate me with Mr. Niles. I think Mr. Fort had that paper then. He did not leave it with me. I think I saw it the next year after he got his money—probably in 1869 or 1870. I saw it on several occasions; saw it at Mr. Fort's office, at his house afterward—in 1870 or 1871. I have talked to the miller about it. I don't know that I have seen it since I was at his house. It was in a little memorandum-book. I don't know but what he had it here last fall at our room. We roomed together. I don't know where it now is, and have never heard him say. It had the look of a genuine record at the time. It was a little memorandum in a little pass-book, and was made, so he said, at the time the flour was taken.

Q. You are the attorney for the claimant; would you not have regarded that as very material evidence in the case if you could prove the identity of the book?

A. I wouldn't care a cent about that if the articles were accounted for and sworn to as taken by the officer. A piece of paper could be made out by him every day in the world. I wouldn't have regarded it as of the value of a snap of my finger. Mr. Fort may have it, and the miller may have it. It may have been lost. I have not heard anybody say within the past year what became of it. I think that is the only paper or writing of the kind that I ever saw. Previous to the first interview with General Mitchell in which his memory was indistinct, I don't think he said anything about the claim in correspondence with me. In 1871, when Fort was here and was taken sick, he knew that he was coming to meet General Negley. I presume that was the object of his coming. I arranged it. He may have had some other object; I do not know. He came because I had asked General Negley to come here and meet him, so far as I know. He was sick here a week or ten days. When he got well he took the cars for home and did not see Negley. I am quite sure that I had considerable conversation with him about the claim at that time, but he had no talk with Negley. I have no knowledge of the merits of the claim apart from what I learned from the claimant himself and those who testified in his favor, and whenever I have said it was a just and deserving claim, I have spoken from the evidence before me.

While the claim was before Congress, and I was aiding in its prosecution, I did not know that General Robert B. Mitchell was assisting and aiding it in any way. To my knowledge he never held any relation to the claimant except that of a witness.

I know nothing about his going to New York to see anybody in behalf of the claim, and do not think that all the time the claim was before Congress he was working for it in various ways. I am satisfied that he was not in the pay of the claimant in any way. If the claimant should swear that he paid him money I would believe it, but I do not know anything about it.

Q. Do you not know that it was well known by all who had anything to do with that claim that General Mitchell was working for it for a long time before Congress at this last session?

A. I do not think he did anything in the world. He may have spoken to this or that one about it, as any gentleman does, but I do not think he ever interested himself very specially. To my knowledge he never has.

Q. If, as a matter of fact, he was working for the claim and in the pay of the claimant, and you did not know it, how do you account for your ignorance of the fact?

A. I don't think he was, in the first place.

Q. But suppose you should now become satisfied that he was working for the claimant?

A. Well, he may have done that.

Q. If, as a matter of fact, he was working for the claim and helping at it in various ways, how is it that you did not know it? You were working for it, too, were you not?

A. I don't think that I interested myself probably as much as you think I did. I talked with General Mitchell about it, and we have conferred together from day to day in reference to what was being done and what the prospect was, but whoever he influenced in Fort's behalf I have no knowledge of. I do not know what he did.

I do not know that he was here all the time while the claim was before Congress; saw him frequently and have known him since he was eight years old. I think he was probably here during that whole session of Congress. I do not remember of speaking to any one else except those gentlemen I have named, in aid of the claim outside of Congress. I know only from report that the claim has been paid; do not know who drew the money, but have heard that it was Mr. Fort. I have no knowledge or information as to what became of that money so drawn in payment of the claim; whether I got my fees has nothing to do with anybody. Whatever he agreed to do with me he did like a gentleman. It don't make any difference whether I got a cent or not.

I could not tell in what case it was that I saw a pass issued by the command or the order of General Negley, dated, as you think, December 12. I cannot remember. It was to-day I saw it. It was among some papers, but I do not now remember what they were. It was in the Treasury somewhere. That is not the closest information I could give. I could give it if it is of any account. You will find it in the Third Auditor's Office. It is my impression that it is dated the 12th December, 1862. I can't tell what case I saw it in. I don't know whether it was in the wheat-claim of Sugg Fort or in the flour-claim, and I don't know but it was in another case. I looked at it casually. There were two or three bundles of papers there. If it was not in the wheat or flour case of Sugg Fort, it would be in a Tennessee claim of Dr. Burns; it would be in one of those three claims. I have consulted some letters preparatory to this examination, and papers of my own; also some in the Third Auditor's Office. I mean the papers in the claim of Sugg Fort. I consulted them as to the date of payment of his wheat-claim. The flour-claim I have not looked at at all. I have not looked at a paper in it, although they were there on the table, subject to my inspection. The date of payment of the wheat-claim was November 15 or 16 and 16, I think, 1868. I wanted to see also whether or not there was not a special power of attorney given to me aside from the firm of Palmers & Sowers. Besides those papers in the Third Auditor's, and my own letters and papers, I have not examined any others. Within the past two months I have written to my wife in reference to this claim, but to nobody else except to write to Fort that I heard it was to be examined within the past month. I wrote since my return here, which was on the 9th October. I have received no letters from Fort nor from anybody else about it, but I have talked with a great many people about town with reference to it. I do not think I have seen General Mitchell in the past week. I have seen him since I returned here, the 9th of October. He said to me that he had made a statement before this board in reference to Fort's case. He had nothing further to say about it than that he had given his statement here, and that they were trying to make out Sugg Fort's claim a fraud—some words to that effect. He said, "They'll have a damned nice time doing that, I think; if ever there was a good claim in the world that's it, or I am the worst fooled man in the world."

F. S. SOWERS.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 30th day of November, 1874.

CHARLES F. BENJAMIN,
Investigating Agent, Treasury Department.

PITTSBURGH, December 16, 1874.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of November 13, inclosing interrogatories to be propounded to General James S. Negley, was duly received. I mailed a note to the general requesting him to come to my office and make answer to the same. He did not appear, and I therefore return the interrogatories to you. The general is now in Washington.

Very respectfully,

S. C. McCANDLESS,
Clerk United States District Court.

CHARLES F. BENJAMIN, Esq.

Indorsement.

Respectfully transmitted to the honorable Secretary of the Treasury for file with the papers accompanying our report of December 5, 1874, upon the claim of Sugg Fort, of Tennessee. These interrogatories were prepared and forwarded to Pittsburgh, in consequence of information received from General Negley by one of the undersigned, in a personal interview at the city of Washington, in the month of November last. At that interview General Negley agreed to appear before a United States commissioner at Pittsburgh and answer any questions put to him, but failed to so do, though notified both by one of the undersigned and by the official at Pittsburgh to whom the interrogatories were sent.

In view of the statements of F. S. Sowers, the attorney most prominently connected with the claim, as to the numerous interviews and communications had by him with General Negley in reference to the claim, it would seem to be important that the statement of General Negley should be obtained for the purpose of showing, in part, the successive steps by which the claim was advanced, through fraud and perjury, to success. A perusal of the statement of Attorney Sowers, filed with our report, would leave little room to doubt that if he had succeeded in getting General Negley to believe that he himself had ordered the seizure of the claimant's flour, there would have been no appearance of General R. B. Mitchell in the case at all, and the dates, circumstances, and occurrences connected with the case would have been different from those eventually alleged.

HENRY H. SMITH,
CHAS. F. BENJAMIN,
Late Investigating Agents.

DECEMBER 18, 1874.

W. E. WADE, having been by me first duly sworn, deposes and says: My name is W. E. Wade. I am thirty-four years of age. I reside at present in Saint Louis, Mo. I went to Saint Louis to reside in November, 1872. I was quartermaster agent under G. W. Marshall in 1866. In January, 1867, I went into the claim business with Paramore & Sowers, at Nashville. I remained with them until they dissolved partnership in the fall of 1868. I was a clerk with them; while in this business I became acquainted with one E. D. Lyons, then an investigating agent of the Quartermaster's Department. In the fall of 1866, in the latter portion of November, I think, a wheat-claim of Mr. Sugg Fort, of Robertson County, was sent to Maj. G. W. Marshall to be investigated, when he turned the same over to me, and I was for a week or ten days engaged in the investigation. For three or four days I was at the home of Mr. Fort in Robertson County. I went there for the purpose of finding out his character, to see his mill, and also his millers. I reported favorably upon the claim, and allowing what he claimed. His duty was to find out whether the wheat had been taken. William Harrison went up to Fort's with me. I asked him to go with me, since he was acquainted with the Forts and I was not. After this visit, and just before or about the time of the dissolution of the firm of Paramore & Sowers, Harrison and myself went up to visit Sugg Fort at his home in Robertson County. I had then nothing to do, business being dull in the office, and as Harrison knew Sugg Fort well, and there was plenty of whisky there, we went on a fishing-expedition to his place. We remained with him two nights and a day. While here Sugg Fort told us that he had also a claim against the United States Government for flour taken from his mill; that he had not put it in at the same time with his wheat-claim, by advice of claim-agents, since one would damage the other. He said that he was going to have it made out soon. The impression on my mind was that he intended to give it to Sowers alone to prosecute. The firm of Paramore & Sowers then had or was about to dissolve. I do not remember that Sugg Fort stated the amount of the claim. I do not remember that he stated the circumstances of the taking or by what officer's order it had been taken. I think that he said it had been taken to Nashville on the cars. He happened to speak of the flour-claim from knowing that I had investigated his wheat-claim. At this time no plan or system or scheme was devised or resolved upon by us or by him and Harrison for making up or prosecuting this claim. After this he sometimes came into the office, and would then state that he was not yet ready to make up the claim. At no time and at no place did I ever advise or assist Sugg Fort in making up his claim for flour or as to how it should be made up, unless I gave him at some time printed instructions as to making up claims. All that I know or ever heard of this claim for flour was that it was a legal claim. I do not know nor did I ever hear of any scheme or plan made or devised in any way for prosecuting the claim. I do not know, nor did I ever hear of anything whatever, that would cause suspicion that the claim was fraudulent or fraudulently devised, schemed, or prosecuted. I never was with Lyons in Robertson County, nor do I know or ever hear of E. D. Lyons being in Robertson County. I never saw Lyons and Sugg Fort together, nor do I know that they were even acquainted. These are the only times that I ever visited Sugg Fort's place.

W. E. WADE.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this the 16th day of November, 1874.

JAMES TRIMBLE,
*Circuit Court Commissioner of the United States
for the Middle District of Tennessee.*

WASHINGTON, D. C., November 16, 1874.

In the matter of the claim of Sugg Fort.

Statement of E. D. Lyons.

My name is E. D. Lyons. I am at present in the patent and rolling-mill business, and reside in Troy, N. Y. I became acquainted with Sugg Fort in 1868, I think, in Nashville. We were drinking, I suppose. It was a social acquaintance. I do not remember of investigating any claim that he had against the Government. I think I investigated his loyalty. I did not investigate for anything but the Quartermaster's Department. I think I found him loyal, upon the statements of the postmaster of Springfield, Robertson County, the collector of internal revenue, and several others whose names now escape my memory. This was in 1868 or 1869. His loyalty might have been investigated after a claim had been paid. Very often, where claims had been paid, charges would be made and the case would be referred back for re-investigation. I do not remember of his having a claim against the Government for flour. If I had anything to do with it, the facts will be found on file in my reports. I don't think I ever talked with a man named Bill Harrison about such a claim; am positive I never spoke about it with Wade, nor with Fort himself, nor with Moran. I never talked with anybody about flour except with Government officials. It strikes me I did talk with Sam Little about it, and I think I had orders from the Government to do so. I don't know what case it was. I think my talk with Sam Little was only about loyalty, but it is so long ago I don't remember. Sometimes I had commissary claims to look after, but they were very scarce; don't think I had any in that part of the country. I think Little told me that Sugg Fort was a good, loyal man, so far as he knew; that he had taken some of his property away; this must have been somewhere about 1869. I don't think I ever went to Sugg Fort's house. I went with a party of five from Nashville up to Robertson County once; there was going to be an election the next day. Sugg Fort was one of the party. Harrison was also there. Wade was not there. There were several others. I do not remember talking with Moran at the railway. I do not remember any one of the party telling Moran that we were going up to make up another claim for Sugg Fort. I am positive I did not hear that. I don't know when I first heard that Fort had a flour-claim. It was common talk around there that he had a large claim. I never heard that he had a flour-claim. This was in 1868 or 1869, when I was in Nashville. Couldn't say positively whether it was for wheat or flour, or anything else, but think it was a commissary claim. Never had heard anything about his having a flour-claim within the past year, until one day last week, when I heard it from Captain Sowers. He met me in the street and asked me if I knew anything about it, and I told him I didn't think I did. He said nothing. He did not tell me that the claim was under investigation. He did not tell me that he was going to testify in it. I think he made the remark that the claim was all right, as far as he knew, and some words passed about it which I now forget. It was merely a passing remark, and I paid no attention to it. I asked him when the claim was investigated, and he said in 1868, I think. I told him then that I didn't think of anything concerning the claim. That is about all that passed. It occurred last Friday, I believe. I have never until then talked with anybody about this since I had the conversation with Little in regard to loyalty. I do not think I ever knew anything of the nature of Sugg Fort's claim before reading the statement of it which was submitted to me this morning. If I did, it is five or six years ago, and has passed out of my memory, which is very poor. Unless I investigated the claim for the Government I have no knowledge of it at all. I think I am sure of that. I never had anything to do with it, directly or indirectly. I have heard read the deposition of Moran in regard to what was said about my going up to Robertson County. It is all buncombe; there is nothing in it. If I went to Robertson County I went on Government orders with Government transportation. I did not tell him, nor did I hear any of the party tell him, that we were going up there to make up another claim. Fort's character and reputation for honesty and integrity are good, so far as I know. I am not much acquainted with him. He was a peaceable, orderly, law-abiding man. He was regarded as a sort of champion around that part of the country. I always understood that he had made all those friends by being loyal to the Union. I know nothing about Col. E. A. Fort, except that he was regarded as a good man there. I know nothing about Sugg Fort's pecuniary circumstances. I never saw him but two or three times; was not intimate with him while I was at Nashville; never saw him unless he was in company; had nothing but a speaking or meeting acquaintance with him. Harrison's character was poor; he was a pimp; he is dead. Wade's character at that time was very good, as far as I could see or judge. I was never much acquainted with him. I have glanced over a statement of Fort's claim in this office. I am prejudiced about those claims, and used to kill them by the thousand. I did not know anything about the situation of affairs there in 1862 or 1863, and never was at Fort's mill. I don't know General Robert B. Mitchell. I never spoke to him on any subject that I know of. I have heard of him, but only as I have heard of other officers. I have never been asked by any one to give a statement or evidence in favor of Sugg Fort.

E. D. LYONS.

Subscribed and sworn to before me, at Washington, D. C., this 17th day of November, 1874.

CHAS. F. BENJAMIN,
Investigating Agent, Treasury Department.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
County of Washington, ss:

Personally appeared before me John Pratt, who, being duly sworn, deposes and says he was on duty at Nashville, Tenn., as captain and assistant adjutant-general United States volunteers, and that while on duty at Nashville, from December, 1862, to June, 1863, one Charles H. Irvin, assistant acting quartermaster, was in charge at said post of wagon-trains for hauling supplies in and about the city of Nashville and surrounding country.

JOHN PRATT.

Sworn and subscribed to before me this 21st day of May, A. D. 1874.
[SEAL.] JAMES E. WAUGH,
Notary Public.

OFFICE OF U. S. MARSHAL, TERRITORY OF NEW MEXICO,
Santa Fé, N. Mex., December 9, 1874.

DEAR SIR: I have to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of 16th ultimo, with stated inclosure, viz, "Statement of facts in the claim of Sugg Fort."

My absence from Santa Fé has prevented an earlier acknowledgment and reply.

The affidavit from myself which appears among the papers in the case, was made by me at the request of one Colonel Neil or McNeil, I think, as I remember his name.

I have an indistinct recollection of having a slight acquaintance with this Colonel Neil in Nashville, although the recollection came after his recognition of me in Washington, and his greeting as a former acquaintance at Nashville.

While in Washington, during the spring of this year, 1874, Colonel Neil meeting me on the street told me that he desired certain statements to perfect a claim that he was prosecuting in Washington.

These statements referred to affairs in Nashville in 1862-'63. I do not now recollect what the statements referred to were other than that occurring in my affidavit referred to by you. I told Colonel Neil that the fact of Lieut. C. H. Irvin's services as acting assistant quartermaster in charge of means of transportation was all that was in my knowledge and recollection of the matters about which he spoke to me.

The other matters alleged in his claim which he mentioned to me, but which I cannot now recall, were those of which I had no recollection, if they had ever been in my knowledge. I did not know anything of the truth or falsity of the allegations.

I was not urged in any way to make an affidavit containing additional statement to that in my affidavit above referred to. After stating that Lieutenant Irvin's service was of the nature mentioned, I told Colonel Neil that was all I recollected or knew of the matters mentioned by him, and the affidavit was closed without other statements, and I was told by Colonel Neil that the establishing of the fact of Lieutenant Irvin's official capacity at the time named was essential and important to the perfecting of his claims.

In regard to the probability or improbability of the several allegations contained in the memorandum of the "statement of the claim of Sugg Fort, &c.," I am unable to give a decided opinion, for the following reasons:

I entered upon the duty as assistant adjutant-general at Nashville, I think, about December 12, 1862. The headquarter-offices were in great confusion, hardly an intelligible record or paper being turned over from the former commandant; and there being a large amount of business to be done at once, both for the government of the city and care of the large garrison of troops, together with the forwarding of supplies, &c., to General Rosecrans's army, then advancing on Murfreesborough, I was constantly engaged, both in attending to matters demanding immediate action and organizing and instructing my clerks, and devising and putting in operation a proper system of records for the extraordinary affairs dealt with at the Nashville headquarters, as well as the usual amount of business for the large number of troops constituting the garrison there.

I not infrequently found that the general commanding had given orders on important matters personally, in the press of business, that had not been brought to me for record before leaving the headquarters. The office of the general was in a different part of the building from my own, so that, while I used every effort to have a record of all matters, it occasionally happened that something escaped me. From the great amount of business I had to attend to at Nashville, I adopted the plan of leaving nothing to my memory, but made memoranda of everything demanding attention, and record of everything completed.

If I, as assistant adjutant-general for General Mitchell, ever issued orders for turning over flour to Captain Little, C. S., those orders will be found of record either in the book of "Letters sent" or of "Special Orders" for the Nashville headquarters for the dates named; those books, I suppose, are at the War Department in Washington.

I have a slight recollection that there was a large amount of bacon seized on one occasion, but do not know who gave the information that led to the seizure.

It is very possible that the interviews may have taken place with General Mitchell, and the orders may have been issued by him, as stated in the memorandum, without my knowledge, although I think that it is hardly probable that none of such orders should have passed regularly for issue from the assistant adjutant-general's office in accordance with military regulations.

I do not know that no such orders were issued through the office of assistant adjutant-general. If the orders were so issued they will appear of record as above stated.

Seizures of supplies were not infrequent in the vicinity of Nashville, but they were generally not of any considerable quantities.

I have replied to the special inquiries in your letter, and so far as possible complied with your request for a statement of probabilities in regard to the Sugg Fort claim, and remain,

Yours, very respectfully,

JNO. PRATT.

CHAS. F. BENJAMIN, Esq.,

Chief Clerk Southern Claims Commission, Washington, D. C.

JAMES W. CAMPBELL, having been duly sworn, deposes and says: The application to me to take testimony in matter of claim of Sugg Fort, of Robertson County, was made about three or four days before the testimony was taken. Mr. Sugg Fort at that time came into my room, and asked me to go to Robertson County, and take some testimony for him in a claim for commissary stores then pending before the Commissary-General at Washington. I don't think that he told me the items of the claim. This was the first time I ever saw him, and then saw him only a few moments. I agreed to go to Robertson County, Saturday afternoon, take it that afternoon and night, and come home on the morning train, which I did. Sugg Fort stated that H. H. Harrison had told him or written to him to have certain testimony taken in his claim before a United States commissioner. I knew nothing further than the above, why he had a United States commissioner to take the testimony rather than a magistrate in his own county. No one was present at the taking of the testimony except claimant, myself, and the witness being examined at the time. The other witnesses were not in hearing distance. The questions put to witness were put by myself and suggested by Sugg Fort, who at the time had some papers or documents in his hand, and from them he seemed to give me the idea of the question to be asked, and I then shaped it, and put it to the witness. The memory of no witness was refreshed during the examination as to names, dates, or events. As to them, I would not have allowed Mr. Fort to have suggested any. All dates seemed to be arrived at from the burning of the mill. I have no recollection that, either before or after the examination of a witness had closed, any omission, expansion, or change, or anything of the kind was made, by mutual consent or otherwise; nor do I recollect whether any book, paper, or memorandum purporting to be an original contemporaneous record of the quantity of flour taken, was exhibited by any one during the examination; yet there may have been. Yet I have an impression that when the white man, I think his name was Adams or Edwards, gave his deposition, that he had a book of some kind before him, which I think he had kept while he was miller for Mr. Fort. I do not recollect for what purpose this book was used, nor do I recollect that when a question was put to him that he would refresh his memory or refer to the book. I have only an impression that he had such a book present, but do not remember anything whatever for what purpose he had it, or what he did with it while he had it with him. I do not know what the book was, but my impression is that it was an account-book used at the mill. I do not recollect that the witnesses had any peculiar appearance. I cannot tell anything about whether the witnesses testified as if their memories had been refreshed lately, or from recollection, running back to the time of the actual occurrences. I remember that Edwards or Adams, the miller, spoke of a man by the name of Pride that had been a miller for Sugg Fort, but I do not remember what he said about him. I do not remember hearing any of the other witnesses saying anything about any one else testifying in the claim, nor that Sugg Fort said anything about any one else testifying in the claim. I do not know whether or not it was intended to examine Pride, or why he was not examined. Pride was not present.

J. W. CAMPBELL.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this the 13th day of November, 1874.

JAMES TRIMBLE,
*Circuit Court Commissioner of the United States,
Middle District of Tennessee.*

JERSEY CITY, November 21, 1874.

MY DEAR SIR: I am informed by your letter of November 19, last past, that the claim of Sugg Fort, of Robertson County, Tennessee, for 2,791 barrels of flour furnished, as was asserted by Mr. Fort, to the Army of the United States, has been allowed by the Commissary-General and paid. I examined that claim with great care, gave the claimant every opportunity to furnish evidence to sustain it, and reported adversely thereon. In my judgment there was no satisfactory evidence to sustain the claim. The report made by me went with all the papers. The report and papers were either left with the clerk of the committee, or handed to one of the assistants of the Clerk of the House. When the session of Congress was about to close, reports and accompanying papers in several cases were delivered to the assistant of the Clerk of the House, by direction of the Speaker, the committee not having an opportunity to report to the House. On the 23d of June, 1874, a motion was made to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of Sugg Fort. Mr. Lawrence, chairman of the Committee on War-Claims, objected on the ground that there was an adverse report. In all the affidavits and depositions which were produced before me there was no distinct, satisfactory evidence from any source that any part of the flour set forth in the claim went to any commissary, quartermaster, or other officer or agent of the United States, or was used by the Army of the

H. Rep. 316—8.

United States. As this claim has subsequently been investigated by the Commissary-General, as you inform me by your letter, and as I have not seen the evidence on which the Commissary-General acted, which I presume was sufficient in his judgment to warrant his conclusions, it appears to me to be improper that I should state anything more than the result at which I arrived.

Respectfully yours,

I. W. SCUDDER.

CHARLES F. BENJAMIN, Esq.

[43d^o Congress, 1st session. House of Representatives. Report No. 763.]

Mr. I. W. SCUDDER, from the Committee on War-Claims, submitted the following report:

In the matter of the claim of Sugg Fort.

Sugg Fort, of the county of Robertson, in the State of Tennessee, claims that from December, 1862, to May, 1863, 2,791 barrels of flour, of the value of $8.50 per barrel, were taken from his mill in the said county by the soldiers of the United States Army, and the same were used for supplies for the Army.

Mr. Fort, the claimant, says that the flour was taken from his mill by the forces of the Government of the United States at his request, that the same might not fall into the hands of the officers of the confederate government. A large amount of ex-parte evidence has been produced by Mr. Fort, which in a general way supports his claim. There is, however, no evidence from the Commissary Department of the United States, or from any Department of the Government of the United States, which tends to show that the said flour was received by the Army of the United States, or by any accounting officer of the said Army.

In the absence of any evidence in any Department of the Government of the United States that the flour of Sugg Fort was received for the use and benefit of the forces of the Government, the report on the said claim is adverse.

The evidence on the part of the claimant is not specific, either as to the amount of flour taken or to what officer delivered.

WASHINGTON, May 20, 1874.

DEAR SIR: Mr. Sugg Fort, who resided in Robertson County, near Fort's Station, on the Edgefield and Kentucky Railroad, about twenty miles from Nashville, Tenn., has a claim before the Committee on War-Claims for about three thousand barrels of flour, taken, as is said, from his mill by the United States forces in December, 1862. The War-Claims Committee want evidence that the flour of Sugg Fort, about the month of December, 1862, was taken and used by the Commissary Department. Capt. Samuel D. Henderson was the post commissary, as is said, and Capt. Samuel J. Little was the general receiving commissary at Nashville, Tenn. The claim is that this flour was sent to Nashville and was used by the Army. The facts, if any, which can be disclosed by a report from you touching his claim, are wanted by the committee. The flour, it is said, was taken by order of General Robert B. Mitchell.

Is there any evidence that the flour of Mr. Sugg Fort was taken and used by the Army?

If so, what was the amount so taken and used? Are there any reports touching the taking of such flour of Mr. Sugg Fort by Captain Henderson, Captain Little, or by anybody else?

Yours, respectfully,

I. W. SCUDDER,
Member of Committee on War-Claims,
House of Representatives.

Hon. ALLAN RUTHERFORD.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
THIRD AUDITOR'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., May 21, 1874.

SIR: In reply to your letter of May 20, herewith returned, I have the honor to transmit inclosed statement.

Very respectfully,

ALLAN RUTHERFORD,
Auditor.

Hon. I. W. SCUDDER,
Member Committee on War-Claims,
House of Representatives.

Statement of flour received from Lieut. Chas. H. Irvin, A. A. Q. M., and from unknown sources, at Nashville, Tenn., by Capt. Samuel J. Little, A. C. S., during the months of December, 1862, January, February, March, and April, 1863.

Date.	From whom received.	No. of bbls. of flour.	From unknown sources.
Dec., 1862.....	Lt. Chas. H. Irvin.	1,546	None.
Jan., 1863.....	Do. Do.	11,892	Do.
Feb., 1863.....	Do. Do.	980	Do.
March, 1863.....	Do. Do.	None.	Do.
April, 1863.....	Do. Do.	Do.	Do.
Total.....		14,418

I certify the above to be a true exhibit from the provision-returns of Capt. Samuel J. Little, A. C. S., for the specified time.

ALLAN RUTHERFORD,
Auditor.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
THIRD AUDITOR'S OFFICE,
May 21, 1874.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
THIRD AUDITOR'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., December 2, 1874.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 1st instant, herewith returned, I have to inform you that the provision-returns of Capt. S. J. Little, commissary of subsistence, on file in this Office, show the amount of flour he had on hand September 1, 1862, received, purchased, issued, and had remaining on hand at the end of September, October, and November, 1862, and the source from whence received, as follows:

September, 1862:

	Bbls.	Lbs.
On hand from last return.....	1,339	92½
Received from Lieut. F. B. Landis.....	34
Received from Capt. W. I. Kane.....	449

	Bbls.	Lbs.
Received from Lieut. G. Dunbar.....	11
Received from Lieut. C. C. Peck.....	1,398
Received from Lieut. Henry Wendt.....	15
Received from Lieut. B. McConnell.....	9
Received from Capt. J. F. Huber.....	455
Purchased from G. H. Wessell.....	36
Purchased from F. B. Hastings.....	4
Purchased from B. B. Connor & Bro.....	815
Purchased from J. P. Hover.....	50
Purchased from J. J. McCann.....	388
Purchased from Gordon, Bourman & Co.....	730
Issued, &c.....	5,733	92½
	3,479	27
On hand September 30, 1862.....	2,254	65½
October, 1862:
Received from Capt. Henry Howland.....	33	28
Received from Lieut. Thos. H. Carson.....	80
Manufactured from 199 bushels wheat.....	33
Purchased from Lieut. B. F. Landis.....	41
Purchased from Gordon, Bourman & Co.....	579
Purchased from J. A. McAlister & Co.....	42
Purchased from Wm. Lyon.....	264	141
Gained in issuing.....	59	55½
	3,386	94
Issued, &c.....	3,386	94
On hand October 31, 1862.....	None.
November, 1862:
Received from Capt. John Fry.....	713
Received from Capt. Geo. W. Wiley.....	2,472
Purchased from Lieut. B. F. Landis.....	41
Purchased from D. D. Dickey.....	50
Purchased from Thos. C. Mullholland.....	68
Purchased from W. L. Harmon.....	52
	3,396
Issued, &c.....	1,464	23
On hand November 30, 1862.....	1,931	173
On hand December 31, 1862.....	3,225	28

Very respectfully,

A. M. GANGEWER,
Acting Auditor.

CHAS. F. BENJAMIN, Esq., Present.

Invoice of subsistence-stores transferred at Nashville, Tenn., this 31st day of December, 1862, by Lieut. Chas. H. Irwin, A. A. Q. M., to Capt. Sam. J. Little, C. S., viz:

		Dolls.	Cts.
106,548	barrels of pork.....	per barrel.
	pounds of bacon.....	pound.
	pounds of ham.....	do.
	barrels of salt beef.....	barrel.
1,546	barrels of flour.....	do.
215,400	pounds of hard bread.....	pound.
2,399½	bushels of beans.....	do.
	pounds of peas.....	do.
	pounds of rice.....	do.
	pounds of hominy.....	do.
	pounds of Rio coffee, green.....	do.
	pounds of Rio coffee, roasted and ground.....	do.
	pounds of tea.....	do.

Dolls. Cts.

75,373	pounds of brown sugar.....	pound.
	pounds of white sugar.....	do.
	gallons of vinegar.....	gallons.
	pounds of sperm candles	pound.
	pounds of adamantine candles.....	do.
	pounds of soap.....	do.
	pounds of salt.....	do.
	pounds of pepper.....	do.

I certify that the above amount of subsistence-stores was received from Lieut. Chas. H. Irwin, A. A. Q. M., in charge of transportation at Nashville, Tenn., from December 22 to December 31, 1862, inclusive.

SAMUEL J. LITTLE,

Captain and Commissary Subsistence.

I certify that the within is a correct copy of certified invoice on file with account of Saml. J. Little, capt. & C. S. vols.

A. M. GANGEWER,

Acting Auditor.

NASHVILLE, TENN., November 30, 1874.

CHARLES F. BENJAMIN,

Washington, D. C.:

On Friday night, August the 12th, 1862, one span of the trestle-work at Red River was burned, but whether by guerrillas or by sparks from train is not known. Trains ran regularly on the road, meeting at the bridge, until the afternoon of the 21st (Thursday) of August, 1862, when a rebel force, some two or three hundred strong, captured the guard, burned the entire bridge, and the remaining portion of the trestle-work. This is taken from a Nashville daily paper, and is reliable, since it was obtained from passengers on train which went up and came back in consequence of the burning of the bridge, passengers not being able to cross the river.

Yours, respectfully,

JAMES TRIMBLE.

P. S.—A. V. S. Lindsley, then postmaster at Nashville, also remembered and stated the burning took place in August, 1862. He remembered it from the fact of the train returning and bringing back with it the mail.

Extract from the report of General Rosecrans to Adjutant-General United States Army, dated February 12, 1863.

After replenishing with ammunition, supplies, and clothing, they [his forces] moved on to Nashville, the advance corps reaching that place on the morning of the 7th of November, a distance of one hundred and eighty-three miles from Louisville. At this distance from my base of supplies, the first thing to be done was to provide for the subsistence of the troops, and open the Louisville and Nashville Railroad. The cars commenced running through on the 20th of November, previous to which our supplies had been brought by rail to Mitchellsville, thirty-five miles north of Nashville, and thence by constant labor we had been able to haul enough to replenish the exhausted stores for the garrison at Nashville, and subsist the troops of the moving Army. From the 20th of November to the 20th of December, every effort was bent to complete the clothing of the Army, to provide it with ammunition, and replenish the depot at Nashville with needful supplies to insure us against want from the largest possible detention likely to occur by the breaking of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad, and to insure this work the road was guarded by a heavy force posted at Gallatin.

OFFICE OF QUINCY GAS-LIGHT AND COKE CO.,
(CORNER OF NINTH AND JERSEY STREETS,)

Quincy, Ill., November 16, 1874.

DEAR SIR: Yours of the 13th instant, inclosing postal card and statement of Sugg Fort, came duly to hand. I have examined Mr. Sugg's statement carefully and will say in reply that I have no knowledge whatever of this case. I was post-commander in Nashville but a few days, but was there some time in command of troops while Generals Negley and Mitchell were post-commanders. I am satisfied that no such an amount of flour reached Nashville during General Negley's administration, and if any such an amount was removed during General Mitchell's administration, he or the chief commissary-officer ought to know it, and whom it was received from. I was very often at General Mitchell's headquarters; he never mentioned to me anything about this large amount of flour. You say nothing about my returning this statement; I inclose it, however, as it may be of service to you.

Regretting that I am unable to furnish you information upon the subject-matter, I remain yours truly,

JAMES D. MORGAN.

CHARLES F. BENJAMIN, Esq.

P. S.—Upon reconsideration I have concluded not to return statement.—J. D. M.

OFFICE OF QUINCY GAS-LIGHT AND COKE COMPANY,
(CORNER OF NINTH AND JERSEY STREETS,)

Quincy, Ill., November 17, 1874.

DEAR SIR: I wrote you hurriedly yesterday, in answer to your favor of the 11th instant. On a more careful reading I am fearful that I did not answer as fully as I should have done. I will, therefore, add a few lines this morning to what I wrote you yesterday. I think it almost impossible for one man to have accumulated 3,000 barrels of flour during the time mentioned, as that whole country was well foraged out by both sides, rebel and Union. Then, again, vouchers were almost always given for property taken by order of an officer. My own order to my quartermaster was always to give vouchers, and if there were any doubts about the owner's loyalty, to write across the face of the voucher the fact. The man who could hide 3,000 barrels flour could, I think, hide vouchers for the same. Mr. F.'s excuse for not taking vouchers I think a lame one. Again, if that amount of flour was taken by order of any officer in command at Nashville, the fact must certainly be known to the officer giving the order, and to a number of others under his command. As I wrote you yesterday, I was a daily visitor at the headquarters of General Mitchell, and frequently attended to his duties, and I must say that I never heard a word about this flour matter. I will only add that I have never been called upon before to testify or furnish evidence in this case.

Yours, truly,

JAMES D. MORGAN.

CHAS. F. BENJAMIN, Esq.

OFFICE OF QUINCY GAS-LIGHT AND COKE COMPANY,
(CORNER OF NINTH AND JERSEY STREETS,)

Quincy, Ill., November 25, 1874.

DEAR SIR: Yours of the 20th instant is at hand, and I am somewhat surprised at its contents. From the tenor of your former letter I was led to suppose that the claim of Sugg Fort had not been paid, but was under advisement. It now seems that I was mistaken. Therefore it must be that you think that there may have been some collusion between Sugg and others. As regards General Mitchell, my acquaintance with him was an Army one, but that acquaintance led me to believe both in his honor and integrity. It is an old saying (whether true or false) that "every man has his price." One of our volunteer generals thought so, at least, when he earnestly requested to be relieved from post duty, giving as a reason, that he had been offered a large amount of money to violate his duty, and he was afraid the next offer might bring him; he therefore desired to be relieved from the temptation. In answer to your question, "What about great scarcity of supplies at Nashville between December, 1862, and June, 1863," I will answer that, during the administration of General Negley, Nashville was under siege, and we only had what we fought for. I was frequently in command of large foraging parties during the time, the men being, quite often, under half rations. During General Mitchell's administration supplies were more plenty. In conclusion, let me say that I think it strange that so large an amount of flour could have been saved during the period mentioned by any one party.

Yours, truly,

JAMES D. MORGAN.

CHAS. F. BENJAMIN, Esq.

REAL-ESTATE OFFICE OF GARRETT & PROPPER,
Eldridge House Block, Lawrence, Kans., November 2, 1874.

DEAR SIR: Yours came to hand a few days since, and in reply I would state that in 1862 I was assigned to duty in Nashville, and on General Mitchell's staff. I have no recollection of ever having any conversation with General Mitchell about flour or mill belonging to Mr. Sugg Fort. In compliance with instructions from General Rosecrans, I took possession of several large buildings on College street, and turned them over to Colonel Simmons, chief commissary of the Army of the Cumberland. Those buildings were filled with commissary-stores.

If there had been any amount of flour taken by the order of General Mitchell, I would have been advised of the fact. My wagon-master's name is Alonzo Huckins; his address is Leavenworth City, Kans. Mr. Huckins has been in the employ of General Easton for a number of years.

Yours, truly,

C. F. GARRETT.

Mr. C. F. BENJAMIN.

P. S.—I think it is not only a suspected claim, but a fraud.

REAL-ESTATE OFFICE OF GARRETT & PROPPER,
Eldridge House Block, Lawrence, Kans., November 28, 1874.

DEAR SIR: Yours of November 23 is at hand, and, in reply to your questions, I will try and answer to the best of my recollection.

1. The railroad-bridge was burned while General Negley was in command, and before General Buell made his retreat from Nashville to Kentucky. Buell's retreat was in September or October. After General Mitchell relieved General Negley, communication was never interrupted more than a day at a time.

2. The steamer Parthina and one gunboat were burned at Harpeth Shoals, while General Mitchell was in command at Nashville. I never heard of any other transports being burned.

3. I cannot account for the flour that Lieut. C. H. Davis had on hand. His address is, or was about three months ago, Marshall, Tex.

4. Mr. E. M. Reynolds I do not know.

5. General Mitchell was not in the habit of sending out foraging-trains. His lungs were in a fearful condition while in Nashville.

6. The communication between Nashville and Louisville was never interrupted more than one day at a time after General Rosecrans came to Nashville.

I will be pleased to answer any questions in the future that you may propound.

Respectfully,

C. F. GARRETT.

C. F. BENJAMIN, Esq.,
Washington, D. C.

OFFICE COMMISSIONERS OF CLAIMS,
Washington, D. C., November 29, 1874.

I sent a letter for you to Nashville some days ago, to be remailed to you to Texas, asking where you could have got the 14,000 barrels of flour and upward that Capt. S. J. Little, C. S., accounts for as received from you between December, 1862, and May, 1863, and which you do not take up on your returns. If you have not got the letter, please answer on this.

Respectfully,

CHAS. F. BENJAMIN,
Chief Clerk.

FORT GRIFFIN, TEX., December 15, 1874.

DEAR SIR: In answer to your postal card inclosed, you give me so little information that, in answering, I am obliged to guess your reason for asking.

I suppose this inquiry is made on account of a claim made by Sugg Fort, of Robertson County, Tennessee. I wrote to the Commissary-General about three years ago, denouncing this claim as a fraud out of whole cloth. If Captain Little has given any paper that would give this claim any color, it must have been given immediately before his death, when he was in fact insane. If your letter refers to this claim, write to me again, and I will, with pleasure, tell you all I know about it. It is a barefaced fraud, well sustained by affidavits of men whose position in our Army ought to have made them proof against any such temptation.

I feel deeply interested in preventing this fraud being consummated, as my certificate procured Mr. Fort payment for a just claim for wheat, and the facility with which he collected that claim has led him to suppose that he has discovered a gold-mine in the United States claim-business which he has ability enough to work to a successful issue.

In addition, I have always felt deeply the injustice of taking supplies from non-combatants, whatever their opinions, especially inside of our lines, without compensation, and I consider every fraudulent claim paid as a real bar against the payment of many just claims.

Your obedient servant,

CHARLES H. IRVIN.

CHARLES F. BENJAMIN, Esq.,

Office Commissioners of Claims, Washington, D. C.

Affidavit of E. C. Brearley.

I am thirty-three years of age, and reside at Jacksonville, Morgan County, Ill. I am a lawyer by occupation. From September, 1862, until March, 1863, I was in the service of the United States as captain of Company B, Eighty-sixth Illinois Volunteer Infantry. I was stationed with my command in Nashville from December 1862, until March 13, 1863. I remember being at a mill* about eighteen or twenty miles out of Nashville, while on a foraging expedition. We went out there along a creek foraging two or three times a week. I don't think we went out more than twenty miles from Nashville. I think we went out on the Franklin pike. This was between January and March, 1863. I think I had sixty or seventy, or perhaps a hundred wagons in my command. I don't remember bringing in any flour—not a barrel; and I don't know that it was Sugg Fort's mill that I visited. I went out by order of my colonel. I never received any personal orders from General Mitchell about going there, and I did not make any personal report to him when I came back. The first I knew of this claim was seeing an article in a newspaper, stating that a fraudulent claim had been pushed through the Department for flour; that was, perhaps, six months ago, or longer. Parties have spoken to me about testifying in the matter and asked me what my recollection was, but nothing further has been said to me—whether I could recollect going out in command of a foraging party and bringing in about 1,200 barrels of flour. I do not know Sugg Fort, and he never spoke to me about it. I know General Robert B. Mitchell; he used to be my division commander. General Mitchell spoke to me on the subject; he said that he supposed I knew something about the seizing of some flour at a place in the neighborhood of Nashville, some miles away from there, as he knew I was senior captain of the Eighty-sixth Illinois when stationed at Nashville. Whether he called it Sugg Fort's mill or not, I do not know, but he spoke to me on that subject and called my attention to the time I was out on this foraging expedition that I speak of. Ordinarily our foraging expeditions did not extend as far out as that.† He asked me if I could recollect bringing in, under an escort of my troops, a number of barrels of flour approximating a thousand, perhaps, more or less, (I forget the number suggested,) and undertook to refresh my memory by giving me incidents; and, after a careful examination of the matter in my mind, taking several days to consider it, to try and refresh my memory, if possible, on a second interview with General Mitchell, I stated to him that I had no recollection of being engaged with, or in command of, any foraging expedition that seized any flour in, or in the neighborhood of, Nashville. That is the only conver-

* Deponent says he does not remember that it was a mill; it was some sort of a place, but he does not remember what kind of a place.—C. F. B.

† Referring to remark made by myself that the mill of Sugg Fort was thirty-five or forty miles from Nashville.

CHAS. F. BENJAMIN,
Investigating Agent.

NOVEMBER 5, 1874.

sation I have had on the subject. Nobody has asked me about the matter except General Mitchell, and I have repeated all that he said; I know nothing whatever about the claim. I know supplies were very scarce at Nashville at that time; we were on limited rations, because Wheeler's rebel command had fortified themselves at Harpeth Shoals, on the Cumberland River, and stopped our transportation coming up, and cut our railroad communications. I think that lasted four or five weeks.

E. C. BREARLEY.

Subscribed and sworn to before me, at Washington, D. C., this 5th day of November, 1874.

CHAS. F. BENJAMIN,
Investigating Agent, Treasury Department.

NEWARK, N. J., November 28, 1874.

DEAR SIR: In reply to yours of 21st instant, I can only say that twelve years have blotted out from my memory some of the incidents of my clerkship with Captain Little, but this much I do recollect, that the large amount of flour seized by order of General Mitchell, came from Fort's or Ford's mills, as I understood it; also, that it came from Robertson County, Tennessee. I know nothing of any arrangement between General M. and the claimant, neither do I know if he was a Unionist or a rebel. I do know that we needed the flour badly, and if you can prove his loyalty, pay him by all means. I do not know the claimant; never saw him. General Mitchell asked me to make an affidavit in this case, which I suppose you now have.

I can refer you for further information to Mr. W. W. Henry, of Tracy City, Tenn. I think he was the clerk who received most of the flour from the wagons as it was brought in. He was a resident of Nashville previous to and during the war, and I suppose he took more interest in stores that were seized in and around Nashville. All the other parties who I think might aid you, are dead.

Very respectfully, yours, &c.,

T. J. WILSON.

Mr. CHAS. F. BENJAMIN,
Chief Clerk Commissioners of Claims, Washington, D. C.

In the matter of the claim of Sugg Fort, of Robertson County, Tennessee.

Statement of Thomas J. Wilson.

My name is Thomas J. Wilson. My age is thirty-one. My residence, 16 Broome street, Newark, N. J., and my business is that of a coal-dealer. I was in the employ of Capt. Samuel J. Little, commissary of subsistence at Nashville, Tenn., for about two years, or a little over, beginning in the fall of 1862, and ending some time in 1864. During the time I was so employed, I remember hearing of some flour that was seized and brought into Nashville for the use of the Army. As near as I can recollect, it was seized immediately after the time I went with Captain Little, that is, a part of it—during the blockade, and before General Rosecrans got there with his army. I cannot say how many barrels there were. There might have been two hundred, and there might have been a thousand. I recollect distinctly what I heard about it. I went down into the yard, and the wagons came into the yard and the flour was unloaded, and I asked one of the teamsters where that flour came from, and he said from Ford's mills, in Robertson County. I don't know whether all that lot came from that place or not, as I only asked that one teamster about it. I don't recollect hearing of any other flour being seized subsequently to that and brought into Nashville. This was immediately after I went with Captain Little. I had been with Dr. Swift, the medical purveyor, before that time. I remember the fact of the arrival of General Rosecrans's army at Nashville, and of its remaining there a short while, (how long I cannot say,) and of its moving on to Murfreesborough. I do not recollect of any flour being brought into Nashville during that time, which had been seized or confiscated. I do recollect this flour coming into the yard, as I have stated, before General Rosecrans came there, and the fact that trains were then sent out to get supplies wherever they could get them. This was during the Negley blockade. After the Negley blockade was raised I do not remember of any other flour having been brought in as seized, although it may have been done. I could not say positively it was not. I never have heard that any such flour was received after that time, except when I heard it from General Mitchell. He told me it was so. He asked me if I recollected flour being seized. I told him that I knew flour was brought in from the country around about there—referring to this flour that was taken during the Negley blockade. That was the time I was speaking about, and I supposed he understood me so, as I told him it was right after the time I went with Captain Little, which was in the fall of 1862, and I think it was so stated in my affidavit. General Mitchell came to see me at my office in Newark, N. J., about four months ago. I did not know him when he came in, but he introduced himself as General Mitchell, formerly of Nashville, and stated that a man down there (I don't recollect that he mentioned Mr. Fort's name, but probably he did) had had a lot of flour seized by his order; that he was a loyal man, and he had never been paid for the flour. He stated the case as you gentlemen stated it in your letter to me, and said that it was of no pecuniary benefit to him, or something to that effect, but that he wanted to get the money for him. He said that he was working up the case for him as a matter of right, and did not expect to get anything himself. He then asked me if I would give my affidavit concerning the matter. I told him that I could not make an affidavit that would benefit him any, because it had gone out of my memory. He then asked me if I knew of a lot of flour being seized and brought in and turned over to Captain Little. I said yes; that I knew that there was flour seized and brought in. Then he wrote out that affidavit and asked me if I could swear to it. He wrote it out a little stronger than that, I think, in the first place, and I told him I could not swear to anything like that, and I told him what I could swear to, and then he wrote out this affidavit; this was the second one that he wrote out. I cannot say how the first one read, but there was something in it that I could not swear to. He said it was just merely a matter of form; that the claim would go through all right, but he thought he would get this affidavit in case he should have occasion to use it. He just wanted it in case they should require any further evidence, or something like that. He said that he had been over to see Captain Henderson, and had got a statement from him, but he did not tell me what kind of a statement Captain Henderson had made, or indicate the character of it. I think he said he found me out through Captain Henderson. This second affidavit General Mitchell drew up was written by him in pencil, and I copied it off in ink, and then swore to it before a notary. The paper annexed to this deposition (marked Exhibit A) is the pencil copy made by General Mitchell. After I had sworn to the copy in ink made by myself, General Mitchell took it, and I have not seen it since, and do not know where it is now. General Mitchell has not written or spoken to me since that time, nor have I heard from him in any way whatever. He did not tender me any compensation for what I did, and I never asked him for any. I do not know Sugg Fort, and never heard of him before. I do not remember ever hearing Captain Little speak of him, or of any flour taken from him which had been turned over to Captain Little. The only time I ever heard Fort's name was when this teamster told me about the flour they were unloading in the yard, as I have already stated. The name, as I understood it then, was Ford. During the blockade, and immediately after Rosecrans's army got to Nashville, for a day or two we were short of provisions. I suppose his army staid there about a month, or perhaps longer. After his army left I do not remember any great scarcity of provisions, except occasionally we were short of certain articles; but there was no general scarcity so as to put us on half rations, or require us to send out in the country hunting for supplies, that I know of. I do not remember any successful breaking up of the railroad or blockade of the river after that time. There was a blockade before Rosecrans's army got there, and we could not get supplies up by the river or railroad; but if there had been any great scarcity after his army got to Nashville I should have been likely to have known it, and I do not remember any such state of affairs. Captain Little was the depot commissary, and all the supplies for the army were forwarded by him. I have not seen Captain Henderson in regard to this matter, and have had no conversation or communication with him in respect to it. I have seen him but once since I left Nashville, and that was four years ago. No other person besides General Mitchell has communicated with me regarding these circumstances. Captain Little is dead. I do not know where his retained papers are. I think it was later than May last when General Mitchell called on me as I have related. I do not know, and never did know, that any flour was ever taken by order of General Mitchell, and I had no other authority for so stating in my affidavit than his own statement to me at the time the affidavit was made.

THOMAS J. WILSON.

I wish to add to the foregoing statement that after receiving a letter from Mr. Benjamin, of the Southern Claims Commission, inquiring if I had any knowledge concerning the claim of Sugg Fort, and upon answering said letter, I sent a copy of my reply to General R. B. Mitchell, at Paola, Kans.

THOMAS J. WILSON.

All the foregoing subscribed and sworn to before me this 1st day of December, 1874.

CHAS. F. BENJAMIN,
Investigating Agent, Treasury Dept.

[Exhibit A.]

County of Essex and State of New Jersey:

Personally appeared before me, a notary public within and for said county and State aforesaid, Thomas J. Wilson, of lawful age, who, being first duly sworn, deposes and says: I am the same Thomas J. Wilson who was chief clerk in the office of Samuel J. Little, captain and commissary of subsistence, stationed at Nashville during the winter and spring of 1862-'63. And during the time herein specified Captain Little received a large amount of flour for which there were no vouchers given to the owners of said flour, but receipted for the same to Charles H. Irvin, wagon-transportation quartermaster at that post, and will be so found in the returns of said Captain Little in the proper Department at Washington.

Affiant further says that all of said flour was taken by order of General R. B. Mitchell, then commanding the post and defenses of Nashville. The larger proportions of said flour was taken from north of the Cumberland River, and was informed and believed several thousand barrels were taken from Robertson County, Tennessee.

Questions to be answered by W. W. Henry, of Tracy City, Tenn., in the matter of the claim of Sugg Fort, of Robertson County, Tennessee.

1. Are you the same W. W. Henry who was, during the late war, in the service of Capt. J. Little, commissary of subsistence? If so, when did you enter his service, and when did you leave it?

2. Were you at any time stationed at Nashville with Captain Little; and, if so, when, and for how long?

3. While so stationed did you ever know or hear of Captain Little receiving a quantity of confiscated flour from Robertson County? If so, when did you know or hear it; how did you know or hear it; from whom did you hear it? Was there more than one lot, and how many lots? Was any of it from the mill of Sugg Fort? How much altogether came to Captain Little, and how much from Fort's mill? Why was the flour confiscated? Was any confiscated from loyal persons? Why was not the flour paid for? Was any request made for payment? Were any receipts given, and why not? What officers brought in the flour, and between what months were they engaged in bringing it in?

4. Was the flour taken by order of General Negley or General Mitchell, and how do you know and when did you hear which commander it was?

5. Since the war ended, have you ever talked with anybody, or corresponded with anybody, about the flour taken from Sugg Fort? If so, when, where, how many times, with whom? What was said or written by you and those with whom you have talked or corresponded, and how did the conversation or correspondence come about?

6. Did you ever hear Captain Little say anything about the flour taken from Sugg Fort; and, if so, when, where, and what did he say?

7. Did you ever know or hear of Captain Little accounting for 14,000 barrels of flour as received from Lieut. Chas. H. Irvin, A. A. Q. M., in charge of wagon-transportation; and, if so, do you know, and how do you know, where Irvin got the flour?

8. Do you know Sugg Fort, or did you ever know him; and, if so, when, where, and under what circumstances did you become acquainted?

9. Did you know, or hear, on which side Sugg Fort had his sympathies during the war? Do you know his reputation for loyalty or disloyalty during the war, and how do you know it?

10. Do you believe that Sugg Fort had 2,791 barrels of flour taken from his mill during the winter of 1862 and spring of 1863, by wagon-trains sent out from Nashville, for which he never got any pay or vouchers or receipts? If you do believe it, why do you; and if you do not believe it, why do you not?

11. Would thirty miles be an unusual distance for wagon-trains to go out from Nashville to bring in flour ?

TRACY CITY, GRUNDY COUNTY, TENN.,

December 1, 1874.

DEAR SIR : Below you will find answers to your questions :

1. I am ; entered the service of Captain Little, commissary of subsistence at Nashville, immediately after the battle of Stone River, and remained in the service until the fall (September or October) of 1866, Col. M. P. Small having charge at latter date.

2. Answered in former question.

3. Never heard of Captain Little receiving confiscated flour from Robertson County, nor any other place ; never heard anything said on the subject, nor do I know of any property of any kind being confiscated during the war.

4. Know nothing on the subject.

5. Have never spoken a word, written a line, nor received any message of any kind from any one about Sugg Fort or his flour.

6. Never heard Captain Little say anything about the flour taken from Fort.

7. Know nothing about the transaction.

8. Do not know Sugg Fort ; never heard from him or of him until your letter.

9. Have no knowledge of him whatever.

10. Have no reason to believe or doubt the justness of the claim.

11. Wagon-trains may have went thirty miles from Nashville during the time General Negley was in command and the Army was at Perryville, but I have no knowledge on the subject.

W. W. HENRY.

Sworn to before me this December 2, 1874.

W. H. CHAPPELL, J. P.

CHARLES F. BENJAMIN, Esq.

WASHINGTON, D. C., November 6, 1874.

DEAR SIR : In the matter of the claim of Sugg Fort, of Robertson County, Tennessee, now under investigation by Mr. H. H. Smith, clerk of the War-Claims Committee of Congress, and myself, as agents of the Treasury Department, it is stated by General Robert B. Mitchell, the former military commandant at Nashville, that you were among the persons who informed him that Mr. Fort was loyal to the United States. He states that Mr. Fort was at his headquarters one day when you yourself came in on business connected with your office as military governor of Tennessee, and that either he himself or Mr. Fort asked you if you knew the latter, and you replied that you did, and that Mr. Fort was a loyal man. General Mitchell has the impression that your business with him on that particular occasion was to ascertain why your passes as military governor were not respected by his pickets or outposts, but is not certain that the two occasions were identical.

It may assist you to remember, if you actually met Mr. Fort, as stated, and certified to his loyalty substantially as stated herein, if I mention that Mr. Fort is a resident of the vicinity of Fort's Station, formerly a miller by occupation, a person of about thirty-seven years of age at the present time, and a cousin and former partner of Col. E. A. Fort, a well-known citizen of Robertson County.

My associate agent and myself will thank you for at least a brief reply to this letter, stating whether your recollection agrees or disagrees with that of General Mitchell.

Very respectfully, yours,

CHAS. F. BENJAMIN,
Office Southern Claims Commission.

Hon. ANDREW JOHNSON, Greeneville, Tenn.

GREENEVILLE, TENN., November 10, 1874.

The circumstances and facts as referred to in the proceeding letter at this time I have no recollection of whatever, and cannot, therefore, make any statement in regard to their accuracy.

Very respectfully,

ANDREW JOHNSON.

NASHVILLE, November 6, 1874.

I have no recollection whatever of having suggested to Sugg Fort, esq., that he make the acquaintance of R. R. Butler, and I am satisfied I never made any such suggestion. I felt no interest whatever in the success of Mr. Fort. I simply introduced the bill in the House providing for the payment of whatever amount should be shown by proof to be due him. He desired me to go before the committee, which I declined to do. It was not through my advice that he sought the acquaintance of my colleague, Mr. Butler.

HORACE H. HARRISON.

NASHVILLE, TENN., November 29, 1874.

CHARLES F. BENJAMIN,
Washington, D. C.:

1. Have called upon Robinson at Maxwell to see the commissary papers of Captain Little. He could tell me nothing about them. I then called upon Captain Little's widow, who referred me to another person, but he could not tell where they were. Mrs. Little then referred me to another person, but this person I have not yet succeeded in meeting.

2. Are you not mistaken about the Scotchman being at Bell's hardware-store? I cannot find such a store or such a man.

3. I have made diligent inquiry for Walter and Watkins—Dr. Newton Walter. I cannot hear of such a man. I have found a marketer living in Sumner County named James Watkins, but have not been able to see him.

4. Address of D. D. Dickey sent.

5. Peck and Cahill have heard nothing since payment to cause them to doubt Fort's veracity or honesty. Col. E. A. Fort claimed portion of insurance-money on ground that he had an interest in the mill-property; money paid, they think, alone to Sugg Fort, but why Colonel Fort withdrew his claim they do not know; are not positive that he did; all the papers have been withdrawn from their office by the companies which have since gone out of existence. Fort did not request them to withhold information of any kind; came into office under pretense of insuring some furniture; just as leaving asked whether United States officer had been to see them, and whether they had heard anything since payment to cause them to doubt his honesty or veracity.

6. Deposition of Dolan sent on.

7. Saw J. C. Stark, of Springfield, last Sunday personally; gave him a copy of the questions, and requested that he give me a written statement, which he promised to do. I have not yet heard from him. Stated that he did not remember ever having such books; but when going home, would examine and write statement. A railroad man has promised to give me, from memoranda, the exact date of burning of the bridge at Red River; will endeavor also to find other evidence of same fact. The party cannot give me the date before Monday or Tuesday next, when I will forward immediately.

I think it best that you return all my bills sent to you, and upon final disposition let me make out itemized account, embracing all items in one general account.

Yours, respectfully,

JAMES TRIMBLE.

NASHVILLE, TENN., December 4, 1874.

CHARLES F. BENJAMIN,
Washington, D. C.:

1st. In regard to the Scotchman reported to have been book-keeper at Bell's hardware store, I am sure that I have found the man mentioned by General Mitchell. This person was named James Ellis, an Irishman, who was book-keeper in the hardware establishment of James Woods, Yeatman & Co., directly opposite General Mitchell's headquarters on College street. James Ellis was a loyal man and was at Mitchell's headquarters often, but what he did there I cannot find out. Ellis died toward the close of the war, in 1864 or 1865. This information is reliable. I obtained it from Mr. James Woods, a man of the highest character.

R. F. Bell, the man who Mitchell states kept the hardware establishment, kept a grocery establishment a few doors above his headquarters, but on the same side of the street.

2d. H. G. Scovel, real-estate agent, states that a Dr. Newton Walton and William Watkins, his father-in-law, came to Nashville to live in 1869 or 1870; that in January, 1873, both returned to Kentucky, where they came from, and are now residing; post-office address, "Allensville, Ky." Scovel has their old home in Nashville, situated on Cherry street, left-hand side, between Cedar and Line streets, for rent. Fort stated that when in Nashville they resided somewhere on Cherry street, between Cedar and Line streets, but he did not know whether they were there in October last or not, nor did he know where they were at present. Fort also stated that it was William and not James Watkins.

3d. The companies in which the mill was insured are as follows: 1st, Washington Company, New York City; 2d, Home Company, New Haven, Conn.; 3d, Aetna Company, New York City; 4th, Pacific Company, San Francisco, Cal.; 5th, Home Company, Columbus, Ga. Agents are not sure as to the latter, and have no memorandum to ascertain. Each company's liability was for $2,000. All except the latter have gone out of existence.

Mr. Peck states that he knows nothing, nor has he heard anything, to cause him to doubt, either before or after payment, the honesty or veracity of Fort, or any ground on which they could have objected to paying the insurance. Yet I am convinced in my mind that Mr. Peck himself thinks that there is something wrong in the matter. I cannot get him to say so, yet I judge so from his manner.

Mr. Peck further states that Harrison worked for him and at the same time was engaged in the claim business; that he often heard Harrison speak of a claim Sugg Fort had, but he cannot now remember what he said; he simply mentioned it as he did other claims in which he was interested as claim-agent. Mr. Peck did not know what the claim was for, whether flour or wheat claim.

4th. John Hugh Smith was, to my personal knowledge, a well-known Union man of high character. He was a man who, as a Union man, was classed among E. H. East, A. V. S. Lindsley, and such men. He was during the war mayor of Nashville, and appointed to that position by Governor Johnson, then military governor. What Smith stated could be relied upon. Yet I know personally, and have seen the associates of Smith during the war, and from what they state I am sure that Smith did not know Sugg Fort intimately, and that if he vouched for his loyalty, it was done in a general, indefinite manner, and not based upon personal knowledge, and, when carefully sifted, worth little or nothing.

Respectfully,

JAMES TRIMBLE.

SPRINGFIELD, December 3, 1874.

MY DEAR SIR: I ask you to excuse me for treating you so badly in thus withholding my answer. When I got home I received letters from friends in the district in reference to the congressional race, and I left home at once and have just returned. I entirely overlooked your request. I state, in answer to question of November 21, 1874, which is herewith inclosed, that I never had in my possession, nor have I now, any such books as asked about in your letter; nor have I any information of any sort upon such subject.

Your obedient servant,

JO. C. STARK.

JAMES TRIMBLE.

SPRINGFIELD, TENN., November 28, 1874.

DEAR SIR: On my return home from Clarksville chancery court, I find your letter of inquiry of the 23d instant. It affords me pleasure to respond and to furnish you with such desired information on the subject as may be within my knowledge.

In response to your second question I have to state that, about the latter part of September, 1874, Sugg Fort was at Springfield, and called in my office on business; and on learning he had a book with him which it did not then suit him to take away with him, I suggested that he leave it in a drawer there, which he did, and it has remained there since. I had no occasion to examine it, but merely understood from him that it was a cash-book. Since reading your letter to-day, I have examined and find that it was a cash-book, and contains various entries of cash received and cash paid out—aggregating very large amounts—and the dates ranging from 1857 to 1871, inclusive. This is the only book of his ever left in my possession. This is a full answer to your questions.

Very respectfully, yours,

JNO. E. GARNER.

JAMES TRIMBLE, Esq.

UNITED STATES INTERNAL REVENUE,
Raleigh, N. C., December 3, 1874.

DEAR SIR: Upon my arrival here, yesterday, I received your letter of the 25th ultimo. I am sorry not to have seen you while in Washington, as I could give you a better opinion of what I think of the claim of Sugg Fort than by writing, and I presume this letter will not reach you in time to be considered in your report.

When I was engaged in the examination of claims in Tennessee, my attention was called to the fact that this man Fort had been paid a claim of $40,000 for wheat or flour, and I also found, upon inquiry, that Fort was not only extremely disloyal, but that the claim was largely overestimated and of very dubious character. I addressed a letter to the Quartermaster-General, inquiring if such a claim had ever been paid Fort, intending to gather all the evidence I could, should the answer of the Quartermaster-General be in the affirmative, but up to the time I quit that department no answer was received, in fact has never been received; consequently I never looked further into the case. I have no personal or positive information relative to the Fort claims, but from the acts elicited by me, from inquiries made at the time of which I speak, I am satisfied, first, Fort was disloyal; and, second, his claims (or claim) were fraudulent to a certain extent at least.

It might seem peculiar that he should not have made claim at one time for all his losses. The fact is, nearly every claimant who was successful in procuring the payment of one claim, immediately set to work getting up a second, and in nearly every such case, of which I have knowledge, the claims made up subsequent to the payment of the first one presented were either largely overestimated in quantity and prices, or were unjust charges or base frauds. My mere opinion on this case may be of no weight, but I cannot help expressing my belief that the first claim of Mr. Fort ought not to have been paid under the law then in force, and the second one I believe to have been entirely fraudulent.

I regret now that I did not continue my investigations relative to this man Fort, as I should be pleased to give you definite information concerning the case on which you are engaged, as I am always anxious to protect the interests of the Government, and in this instance I firmly believe the same has been defrauded.

On my last visit to Washington, I arrived there on Saturday, and was busy all that day, and left at 7 a. m. on Monday morning. I will endeavor to call upon you on my next visit.

I remain, yours truly,

JAMES C. WHEELER.

CHARLES F. BENJAMIN, Esq.,
Washington, D. C.

OFFICE OF COUNTY COURT CLERK,
Robertson County, Springfield, Tenn., October 28, 1874.

STATE OF TENNESSEE, Robertson County:

I, John Y. Hutchison, clerk of the county court of said county, do hereby certify that Sugg Fort, of said county, was assessed for State and county tax for the year 1870, and that the following property was assessed to him, to wit, "285 acres of land, valued at $3,420, and that Sugg Fort & Co. was also assessed for same taxes same year, and they were assessed with the following property, to wit, 66 acres of land, valued at $330, and one mill, valued at $3,500. Sugg Fort was also assessed for taxes for the year 1874, with the following property, to wit, 330 acres of land, valued at $6,178. Also, Sugg Fort & Co. was assessed for taxes for year 1874, with the following property: 16 acres of land, valued at $625."

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the court to be affixed, the day and year above written.

[SEAL.]

JOHN Y. HUTCHISON, Clerk.

Revised Statutes, article 564, says: "All property shall be assessed at the same value at which it ought to be appraised in payment of a just debt, in cash, due from a solvent debtor."

Section 556 says: "In estimating the value of saw, grist, and other mills. * * * * the annual gross income of the same, their location, and other sources of value shall be taken into consideration."

Section 566 is amended as follows:

"That section 566 of the Code be so amended as to read that the same shall be valued together with the real estate to which it adds value."

In the matter of the inquiry into the claim of Sugg Fort, Robertson County, Tennessee.

Statement of Charles C. O'Neill.

I am forty-two years of age; reside in Washington, and am an attorney and claim-agent. I know Sugg Fort, the claimant, intimately; have known him since 1867 or 1868. I cannot say that my present relations with him are either friendly or unfriendly. We have had unfriendly relations, however, growing out of our connection with each other as attorney and client; and I therefore testify unwillingly in this case, and only because I have been summoned. I became his attorney in the case March 18, 1873. I have had some talk with General Robert B. Mitchell about the claim, and also with his adjutant-general. I don't remember anybody else with whom I have talked about it. The claimant stated to me that in December, 1862, he went to General Mitchell's headquarters at Nashville, and requested him to come to his mill and take flour, in order to prevent the rebels taking it; that he rode out with the officer who was detailed in charge of a large wagon-train and escort to take the flour. He said he did not know the officer's name, but that he rode beside him all the way out, and just called him captain. He said he received no receipts for the flour, and gave as a reason why he did not, that he was afraid the rebels would find out that he had taken receipts or sold his flour to the Government, and that they would come and burn up his mill, and possibly his dwelling-house. For the same reason, he said, he did not get any vouchers, for fear the rebels would find it out on him. He went on to state to me that they continued to come out and get flour for four or five months, commencing in December and stopping in May. This conversation occurred last winter, a portion of it before Congress met and a portion of it after Congress met. He made the same remarks to me four or five different times; but that portion of the conversation in which he explained why he had no receipts or vouchers, was in March, 1873, before he filed his claim with the Commissary-General. He first mentioned the name of General Mitchell to me in March, 1873, when he took the case from Mr. Sowers and turned it over to me. At that time he stated he would prove the facts by General Mitchell. I can't say positively when I first saw General Mitchell in connection with this claim, but he came here shortly after the opening of the last session of Congress, and I saw him then for the first time in reference to this case. He then stated to me that the property was taken under his direction; that he had made a detail of men, with a wagon-train, and directed them to go to claimant's mill and to bring in the flour. I asked General Mitchell who had received the flour, and he replied that he did not know; that it was turned over to some commissary, he could not tell who, but that he thought it was Henderson who received it. He merely stated to me that the claimant came to him and wanted him to go and bring that flour in, in order to prevent its falling into the hands of the rebels. He made no mention at that time of any proposition that the claimant made, to have the flour seized and no receipts given for it. After those letters were received by Judge Harrison stating the case to be a fraud, I had no further connection with the case. The claim was returned from the Commissary-General, and I handed the papers to the claimant. I withdrew the papers from the Commissary-General December 12, 1873. The claimant then went to Judge Harrison, so he told me, and had a petition drawn and presented to Congress. While the matter was before Congress he frequently asked me to go to various members and use my influence to get the case taken up. I went to a few, but as soon as I found the condition of the case I withdrew from it altogether—I mean at the time it was reported as a fraud by D. D. Holman. While acting as attorney in the case, both Fort and Mitchell asked me if I knew the names and present residences of some one or two clerks of quartermasters or commissaries, mentioning the offices they had filled. Until I heard of these letters written by Holman I had no reason to suspect there was any fraud in the case. At the very start the claimant said that Mitchell was the authority to prove the claim. After the payment of the claim the claimant told me, on the morning of the 4th of July last, (the day we had a little difficulty,) that he had received a dispatch from his wife to the effect that the money sent her had been all received safe. He didn't say how he had sent it to her. He told me that he was to pay General Mitchell $800 and expenses. He also said that Sowers owed him $800 that he had advanced him to get testimony in his case. I find the following memorandum in my note-book, under date of April 25, 1874: "Advanced General Robert B. Mitchell $50, on account of a payment on behalf of Sugg Fort, who is now very sick. In the presence of Mr. McFarland." He told me he was going to give that money to the secretary of Mr. Scudder, who was a subcommittee in charge of his claim. I don't know who he is, and never heard his name. I know that General Mitchell, in addition to being a witness, went about enlisting all the friends he could in support of the claim and tried to help the case through Congress. I saw him with a member of Congress from Ohio frequently, and he always said he was getting him to work for him in behalf of Sugg Fort's claim. I asked the claimant why he had delayed the presentation of his flour-claim so long, and he said he had been instructed by his attorney, Mr. Sowers, not to propose it, as it would bias his wheat-claim, or might injure it and get it thrown out. The only papers I ever had in my possession were those prepared under the act of [July 4?] March 4, 1864, on a printed blank form. I told him how to prepare his testimony for Congress. I advised him to get an enabling act passed allowing him to go before the Court of Claims, but never advised him to go to the Court of Claims without an enabling act.

CHAS. C. O'NEILL.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 11th day of November, 1874.

CHAS. F. BENJAMIN,

Investigating Agent, Treasury Department.

DECEMBER 4, 1874.

Additional statement of Charles C. O'Neill.

I have read over the statement made by the Hon. R. R. Butler in connection with the claim of Sugg Fort. In regard to the statements therein made concerning my interviews with him, I have this to say: That I never said to him that I knew of Mr. Fort's being embarrassed pecuniarily. On the contrary, Mr. Fort told me that he had plenty of bonds, and that he had been purchasing bonds for his father after he had come to Washington. He always held out to me the impression that he had a plenty of money, and I, therefore, could not have told Mr. Butler that he was embarrassed. Neither did I ever tell him that the claim was a just one, and I do not recollect giving him a history of the case, except that I may have told him that General Mitchell was the principal witness in the case. Mr. Butler told me that Mr. Fort offered him $500 for his services in aid of the claim. He did not qualify his statement by saying that it might have been more or less. He said that it was offered to him personally for his expense and trouble in the matter. He did not say it was offered to help defray the expenses of his campaign. I never spoke to Mr. Butler more than once or twice about this claim, and never talked with him over five minutes about it at any one time. I feel certain that I never gave him such a full history of the case as would enable him to make up his mind whether the case was just or not. I do not remember ever speaking to Congressman Nunn, of Tennessee, about the case. Mr. Butler told me about the five hundred dollars being offered to him by Mr. Fort within a few days—the second day after he came here.

CHAS. C. O'NEILL.

Subscribed and sworn to before me, at Washington, D. C., this 5th day of December, 1874.

HENRY H. SMITH,
Investigating Agent, Treasury Department.

A. A. SHISSLER, being by me first duly sworn, deposes and says:

My age is thirty-four; my residence, 1015 New York avenue, Washington, D. C.; and my occupation, a clerk in the Third Auditor's Office, Treasury Department. I do not know Sugg Fort, of Robertson County, Tennessee, and have no recollection of such a man; remember, from a letter from a member of the Committee on War-Claims inquiring as to a previous claim settled by this Office, that a man of that name had a claim for supplies alleged to have been taken from him by the United States Army during the late war; have no other knowledge of the case; do not know General Robert B. Mitchell; have no remembrance of any person ever making inquiry of me as to the whereabouts of General Mitchell. If a person had inquired of me as to the location or address of General Mitchell in 1870, '71, '72, or '73, I could have ascertained it officially or referred the inquirer to the proper source of information. Am confident that I never had any conversation with Sugg Fort in regard to his claim or the whereabouts of General Mitchell.

A. A. SHISSLER,
Chief of Collection Division, Third Auditor's Office.

MAURICE MORAN, having been by me first duly sworn, deposes and says :

My name is Maurice Moran ; I am thirty-nine years of age ; I reside in Nashville, Tenn. ; I am a watchman on the Louisville and Nashville Railroad ; before the war I lived in Clarksville, Montgomery County, Tenn. ; in 1864, I moved to Nashville, where I have resided ever since. I knew, when I met him, Mr. Sugg Fort, ever since the year 1859. He was then living in Robertson County, and I sometimes saw him in Clarksville. I often saw Sugg Fort in Clarksville, in 1861 and in 1862, when he was there trading in and selling mules and stock. In the fall of 1862, until Christmas, I saw him in Clarksville while the United States troops were absent from the town. He then sold to Samuel Johnson, or his brother, Joseph Johnson, some mules. I do not know how many. These brothers were then engaged in getting up teams, and filling them with goods of different kinds and sending them south, inside of the confederate lines. I knew they were doing this from the fact that Joe told me so, and wished to hire my wagon for the purpose. I sometimes saw Joe Johnson and Sugg Fort together at this time ; I also about the same time saw Sugg Fort on the street with James Carter, of Clarksville. James Carter was then a most violent rebel, and was in favor of shooting and hanging all the Union men in the country ; and was at this time also engaged in getting together and shipping inside of the rebel lines, also, the goods he was able to ship. At this time, from his associations, Sugg Fort was regarded and looked upon by all the Union men as a rebel. I also learned from other sources that Sugg Fort was a bitter rebel. After I moved to Nashville in 1864, I saw Sugg Fort on the street, but never spoke to him. In the year 1869 or 1870, Sugg Fort came back from Washington with one Somers, a claim-agent ; after this I saw him quite often, and came to know him quite intimately, and had quite a number of conversations with him. I would often see him with one E. D. Lyons, a Government agent for the War Department, and William Harrison, a claim-agent. In 1870 or 1871, one evening, Fort, Lyons, and Harrison came down to me at the railroad, and said that they were going out to Robertson County to make out another claim for Sugg Fort against the United States Government ; that he had just been paid one. All of them seemed to be drinking pretty freely. In the winter of 1874, or thereabouts, Sugg Fort came to me with the names of some parties who, he said, wanted me to use my influence with Stephens to pass the claims. I said something about their not being loyal or something of the kind, when he replied that that made no difference ; that why could not Stephens, the Government agent, be managed as Lyons was ; that he, himself, had been paid ; that he had been a rebel, and that he had voted in favor of the ordinance of secession of the State, yet he had been paid all right. At this same time, being the night that Sugg Fort went to Washington to see about his claim for flour, he told me that one Holman, at Springfield, had offered or agreed to recommend the payment of these claims to Stephens, provided he, Holman, received $400. In one case a wagon and team of mules, and notes of the parties, in the other claims for certain sums, Holman being a Union man and one in whom Stephens trusted. Sugg Fort showed me letters signed and written by Holman to this effect ; at least Holman's name was signed to it, and the letters written in the same handwriting. But I do not know that Holman wrote them, since I do not know his handwriting. In this same conversation Sugg Fort begged me three times to attempt to bribe Stephens to act favorably upon these claims. These letters were handed to me, and I was given to understand, though by Sugg Fort, that the letters were genuine. The letter of mine filed by Sugg Fort in his claim for flour, was written in reference to these three claims, and not in reference to the claim of Sugg Fort himself. These claims referred to were the claims of E. A. Fort, J. C. Stark, T. H. Gardner, and Mary A. Sugg.

M. J. MORAN.

Subscribed and sworn to before me at Nashville, Tenn., this November 11, 1874.

[SEAL.]

JAMES TRIMBLE,
*Circuit Court Commissioner of the United States
for the Middle District of Tennessee.*

JOHN D. DOLAN, having been by me first duly sworn, deposes and says :

My name is John D. Dolan. I am sixty-one years of age. I reside in Nashville, Tenn. I am a laboring man. In the fall of 1862 and during the year 1863 I was residing in the city of Nashville, Tenn. During the summer and fall of 1862 I was employed and engaged most of the time by General Truesdale, chief of detectives at Nashville, in procuring and buying provisions and supplies for the army of General Rosecrans, then near and around Murfreesborough. I chiefly purchased potatoes, turkeys, butter, &c. I also furnished the same supplies to the hospitals in Nashville. In getting together these articles at this time I went into and through the counties of Montgomery, Cheatham, and Robertson. I always traveled by pike, and hauled in all the articles in wagons through these different counties. I commenced getting together these articles, and was engaged for some eight months in this employment. I was stopped some time in the spring or fall of the year 1863. During these eight months I was continually through these three counties. In the fall of 1862 and in the spring of 1863, at the same time I was hauling the other articles, I was hauling in my wagons, to Nashville, flour. This flour I purchased from some mill, I do not remember whose—two hundred and fifty barrels of flour—for which I paid $5 and $5.50 per barrel. I hauled this in wagons to Nashville, and in reaching Nashville I was compelled to pass through these three counties of Montgomery, Cheatham, and Robertson. When hauling this flour and, in these different counties, I frequently made inquiry as to the persons or millers in these counties who had flour for sale. When making these inquiries I was near and around Springfield and Fort's Station, Robertson County. While in this section of country, as in the other counties, I frequently, and of many persons, made inquiry of the different millers who had flour for sale. I was then buying up and hauling to Nashville flour for speculation. During all this time, while so inquiring, I heard of Watson & Weatherford, Moody, and others, but I never once heard of Mr. Sugg Fort and his mill and his having on hand any flour at all. It appears to me probable that if Mr. Sugg Fort had on hand a large amount of flour that I ought to have heard of it while I was making inquiries, and I think that he could not have had it without my hearing of it; but he might have had it without my hearing of it. During the fall of 1862, when I was hauling with my wagons, neither they nor my mules were ever harmed or interfered with by any guerrillas in the country. In the fall of 1863, after, I was interfered with personally by the guerrillas, but even after that I was still hauling flour by wagons, and they were not harmed. During the fall I was not at the mill of Mr. Sugg Fort nor at any subsequent time ; but while near the mill and in the surrounding country, as above stated, I never heard of Mr. Sugg Fort having any flour at all, nor did I ever hear of his having any until I heard of his claim. I do not know anything whatever about the claim of Sugg Fort ; I never heard of it until about one month since, when I heard M. J. Moran speak of it. I do not know Mr. Sugg Fort by sight, even. I never heard him speak of the claim nor any one else, except Moran. I know nothing whatever as to the circumstances of the taking or who made up the claim until Moran told me of it.

JOHN D. DOLAN.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this November 24, 1874.

[SEAL.]

JAMES TRIMBLE,

*Circuit Court Commissioner of the United States,
for the Middle District of Tennessee.*

ROBERT F. PATTON, being first duly sworn, deposes and says : My age is fifty-six years ; my residence Springfield, Robertson County, Tenn., and my occupation deputy collector of internal revenue. I have known Sugg Fort not much more than a year, and not intimately. In November, 1862, I was living on the White's Creek pike six miles from Nashville toward Port Royal, and continued to live there till the fall of 1863. During that time the wagons of Watson & Weatherford used to pass my place toward Nashville loaded with flour. My place was a stopping-place at night for their trains, and sometimes flour was unloaded and left with me, in my yard and school-house, till the price suited at Nashville, and then the flour was reloaded and taken on. In the winter of 1862, and spring of 1863, my school-house, about 50 by 20 feet, was filled two or three tiers deep with flour belonging to Watson & Weatherford, some coming in and some going out all the time. Between me and Nashville the road was always good, but toward Port Royal the road was sometimes impassable. Hence while the road was good, they saved time by hauling only as far as my place, and when the dirt-road was bad, prices would be higher at Nashville, and they could take their accumulation of flour at my place and haul it easily to Nashville. I never knew or heard of any other teams, private or Government, traversing the road to Nashville with flour, and unless they took a roundabout and unusual road by way of Ashland, Cheatham County, they must have passed my house. I was pretty active and knew just about all that was going on. Forage trains used to come out from Nashville to gather up supplies along the branches of White's Creek, but these trains didn't go farther toward Fort's or Watson's mills than Paradise Hill, for the reason that the country was very poor beyond there and they got plenty of supplies on White's Creek. Never heard of a foraging-train going over to Red River. They did get a considerable quantity of flour from Webber, a miller on White's Creek. The constant movement of trains and troops along the road kept us all on the alert, and very few things took place that the whole neighborhood didn't hear of them. Other persons, living on the road, were Timothy Manlove, the Lanier family, Fielding, a wagon-maker on White's Creek, the tenants of Whiteman's paper-mill, and several others now dead. Anybody, wishing to visit these people and others along the road, should start from Edgefield, and go along the White's Creek pike. I don't think it possible that Government trains could have been passing back and forth between Nashville and Fort's mill, getting flour and escorted by troops, without my knowledge. I never heard from Watson &

Weatherford's drivers, or from anybody else, that the road was dangerous, or that any molestation took place. My recollection is that the railroad was generally in running order. My recollection is that flour was plentiful enough at Nashville—not more than six or seven dollars a barrel. D. D. Dickey, now of Nashville, was a dealer in flour, and would know what the price was at the time stated herein. If a train of empty Government wagons started from Edgefield early in December, and got within eight miles of Fort's mill between 11 o'clock in the morning and before dark, they would have to travel hard, and not make a long stop for dinner on the way.

R. F. PATTON.

Sworn to and subscribed before me, at Springfield, Tenn., this 28th day of October, 1874.

CHAS. F. BENJAMIN,
Investigating Agent, Treasury Department.

SAMUEL WATSON, being first duly sworn, deposes and says: I am sixty-seven years of age; my residence, Nashville; and my occupation a manufacturer. I have resided at Nashville nearly fifty years; have known Sugg Fort fifteen years, but not intimately. I have no knowledge as to his position, but never heard him spoken of as a Union man during the war; never knew or heard of any outrage committed on account of the Unionism of any person in Robertson County. I was the owner of a mill on the Red River, about three miles from Sugg Fort's mill; never heard that he owned but one mill, and that in partnership with Col. E. A. Fort; Sugg Fort's mill was not as large as mine, and had less capacity; it is very doubtful if he could have made one hundred and twenty barrels per day, with two sets of hands running night and day. There was no danger in hauling flour between our mills and Clarksville, but there was some danger between our mills and Nashville, in the fall and winter of 1862 and 1863; we were hauling all the winter of 1862 and 1863 to Nashville, and our teams were never molested. I should consider that there was more danger and risk in accumulating flour during that period than in hauling it to Nashville to market. From my knowledge of Sugg Fort's business and circumstances, and the situation of affairs in Robertson County, I do not think it probable that he could have had 3,000 barrels of flour on hand in the fall of 1862. I should have probably heard of it if he had that amount; but it was possible for him to have that amount without my knowing it. I think he was not doing much work at that time. At that time 15,000 bushels of wheat was a large amount to hold or purchase; he could have got that amount if his mill had been the only one in operation. At our mill we could turn out between seventy-five to one hundred barrels a day, running night and day without stoppages or doing custom-work. I knew E. M. Reynolds, now deceased, who lived in Nashville at the beginning of the war; he was a broker and negro-trader. I think he was a Union man. I have no knowledge that Government authorities seized or took any flour from Sugg Fort in 1862 or any other time during the war. I should have heard of it if 2,800 barrels of flour had been taken from him by the Government. I was attending to milling business entirely then; my partner, Mr. Weatherford, living at the mill, and I remaining here receiving it, attending to sale, &c., and buying wheat. I was in the current of information as to that trade, and would have naturally heard of it if that amount of flour had been taken from him. I do not think the property of Union men was in any danger from rebel neighbors during the war in that vicinity; but there was of course danger from wandering guerrilla bands. The most of my property was in Cheatham County, adjoining, and was as much exposed as any property in Robertson County, and I never lost anything but a mule; my partner, Mr. Wetherford, sympathized with the South, but took the oath of allegiance, and from that time he was entitled to the rights of a Union man. I think Sugg Fort's reputation was good; did not know him intimately; never heard anything against him except in connection with the prosecution of his claims against the Government.

I should say, from my knowledge of the road, that Mr. Fort would haul his flour from his mill to Nashville over the same road that our flour was hauled, and that if Government wagons should go to Fort's mill and take his flour, that in returning to Nashville they would come over the same road most of the entire distance. Our teams were constantly on the road, going to Nashville with flour or returning to the mill during the fall and winter of 1862, and January, February, and spring of 1863; and the drivers of our teams would certainly have seen or heard of Government trains going to or returning from Fort's mill. I made my sales of flour to the Government openly, and I had no reason to apprehend at that time (winter of 1862-'63) that I was thereby endangering my mill or other property. With reference to supplies of flour in Nashville during the war, I will state that only once did the price of flour become extravagantly high, and that during the latter part of the war. The firm of Cheatham & Ward, of Nashville, who sold flour for us at that time, can tell definitely. A confectioner by the name of Wessel, on College street, and Simmons, a baker, corner of Church and High streets, could tell as to the price of flour. Communication with Nashville was by rail occasionally interrupted, but not by river. Our mills were in operation during the war uninterruptedly under Government permits, and I never heard of permits being given to any other mills or millers in that section. I do not think that at any time during the war—except on one occasion, and that during the latter part—that the prices of the staple articles of food were so high as to indicate a scarcity, and that was for a very short time only; I think when Hood surrounded the city.

SAMUEL WATSON.

Subscribed and sworn to before us at Nashville, Tenn., this 29th day of October, 1874.

HENRY H. SMITH,
CHAS. F. BENJAMIN,

Investigating Agents, Treasury Department.

SAMUEL F. MITCHELL, being first duly sworn, deposes and says:

I am 68 years old; live near Sadlersville, Robertson County, Tenn., and by occupation a farmer. I have known Sugg Fort pretty well for about 25 years; am on good terms with him. I believe he is an honest, truthful man. I believe he stands as well as anybody in the community. I don't know that he had a large quantity of flour in the latter part of 1862. He might have had. If he had told me that he had 3,000 barrels on hand, I should have wanted an explanation of his holding so much. If it had been my case, I would have run the risk of having my mules stolen by the gangs of thieves rather than risk accumulating 3,000 barrels of flour. The risks I have in mind are that the Federal Government might have taken it without paying for it, or that the bands of robbers might have destroyed it. I have never heard to this moment that Mr. Fort had any agreement of any sort, public or private, to put his flour into the use of the Federal Army, though he might have had. I have never heard till now that any flour was taken from Mr. Fort's mill by Government wagons. I didn't live on the road from his mill to Nashville. After thinking carefully, I believe that Mr. Fort could easily have found 15,000 bushels of wheat in the fall of 1862, and that he could have raised means to pay for it, and that he could have ground it up inside of two months, and have got the barrels to put it in as fast as ground. I don't know whom he bought his wheat from that year. My first knowledge about his flour-claim was hearing in the neighborhood that he had gone to Washington to collect a claim. I didn't know the amount, but thought it was a pretty big claim, because I thought he had already got enough on his first claim, and didn't know he had lost any flour. I didn't know he had lost any wheat either. I have known Wiley Edwards four or five years, not intimately, but know him to be a quiet, industrious man; never knew anything against him, and believe his reputation is such as I have just stated. I don't think he could be persuaded or intimidated into committing perjury easier than most men. I don't know the two colored witnesses.

I think Sugg Fort was like the rest of us—rebels till Fort Donelson fell. I never heard of him being threatened or molested as a Union man, nor of anybody being so molested or threatened. In 1862 and 1863 I know that other mills besides Fort's were running, and don't believe that any mill was stopped from doing a merchant business because the owners were not Union men. If Mr. Fort got out of the way when the bands of robbers came about his mill, it was not because he was a Union man, but because he did not want to be robbed or molested. He would have got out of the way as quickly, I believe, if he had been a confederate.

S. F. MITCHELL.

Subscribed and sworn to before me near Fort's Station, Robertson County, this the 27th day of October, 1874.

[SEAL.]

JAMES TRIMBLE,

Circuit Court Commissioner of the United States

for the Middle District of Tennessee.

CHARLES M. WARFIELD, having been by me first duly sworn, deposes and says:

My name is Charles M. Warfield. I am sixty-six years of age. I reside at Sadlersville, Robertson County. I am a farmer. I have known Sugg Fort ever since he was a boy; intimately for some twenty years. As far as I know, he is an honest, truthful man, and such is his general reputation. I do not remember ever hearing anything against him. I do not remember that during the war I was at the mill of Mr. Fort; don't know that he had 3,000 barrels of flour or any flour in the fall of 1862; don't recollect hearing that he did. He might have had 3,000 barrels without my hearing it. I don't know that Government wagons were at his mill, nor did I ever hear of it. I know that Mr. Fort bought wheat, I think in the fall of 1862, but I do not know how much he bought. I purchased wheat for Mr. Fort in the fall of 1862. I have thought about the amount, but cannot now remember it. There were at least 2,500 or 3,000 bushels bought by me for him. Some of the wheat I bought for him was not delivered—some three or four hundred bushels. At that time no military permits to purchase wheat were necessary, I think; I had no such permit. I do not know whether or not Mr.

Fort had such permit. I first heard that Sugg Fort had a claim against the United States for flour taken a little while before Mr. Fort went to Washington last winter; it was neighborhood talk. I have known Wiley Edwards for about five or six years. I believe him to be a truthful, honest man; his reputation is good. I would implicitly believe whatever Wiley Edwards would state under oath. I know Henry Waters, (colored,) and have known him since he was a child. I do not believe that he could be induced to tell a falsehood when under oath. He is an industrious, prosperous man, with a family, and is doing well. I don't know that any of the mills were stopped after the United States troops came in the country.

C. M. WARFIELD.

Subscribed and sworn to before me, near Fort's Station, this the 27th of October, 1874.

[SEAL.]

JAMES TRIMBLE,
*Circuit Court Commissioner of the United States
for the Middle District of Tennessee.*

WILLIAM WEATHERFORD, being duly sworn, deposes and says:

My age is 68 years. My residence, Port Royal, Montgomery County, Tenn.; and my occupation, a farmer. Have known Sugg Fort eighteen or twenty years; have not been on intimate terms with him, though our relations are friendly; would believe any reasonable statement that he should tell me. Sugg Fort is called a shrewd, keen, trading man. He has been square with me, and I know nothing to the contrary as to dealings with others. His reputation is of a medium character; that is, others stood higher. He stood well as to business integrity. Was not in the habit of visiting Sugg Fort's mill frequently. Did not know of his having a large quantity of flour at his mill in the fall of 1862. Three thousand barrels would have been a very large quantity of flour for a country mill to have on store, but in 1862 flour was hoarded after the fall of Fort Donelson, at least in this section. Never heard or knew that Sugg Fort had an arrangement with the Federal authorities at Nashville to have his flour taken. I think he could have got wheat enough to make 3,000 barrels if he had had the means, and I think he had the credit to have bought it. At my mill, as I was milling at Port Royal at that time, I could have turned out 1,000 barrels of flour per month, besides doing custom-work. I think the custom-work would average about 100 barrels a week. I could put up a hundred barrels a day, running full capacity—running night and day, without stopping. Don't know how much wheat Sugg Fort bought in the summer or fall of 1862, or of whom he bought it. My mill was larger than Fort's and I could do much more work. I sold my flour in the fall of 1862 to the Federal authorities at Nashville. Had permission to sell to the citizens of Nashville. Flour was not high. The flour was hauled by wagons, the railroad being out of repair. I commenced hauling in the fall of 1862, and continued hauling all through the following winter. My teams were not molested on the road during that time. Flour was not high during that time. I think I received about six dollars per barrel. My opinion is that the course I pursued was the more prudent course, as there was less risk, in my mind, in hauling the flour to Nashville and losing teams in so doing, than in selling the mules and keeping flour until it had accumulated to a large quantity. I never heard that Sugg Fort's flour was taken to Nashville by Government wagons, either in 1862 or subsequently. It is probable that I would have heard it, but it might have been done and I not heard of it. In hauling my own flour I had my own teams, and one of E. L. Fort's, and one of John Sadler's, and one of Jim Adkins's, of Port Royal. The drivers of my teams were mostly negroes, one of whom now lives at or near Cross Plains,* and calls himself Levi Weatherford. I will say that if the trains had come from Nashville to Mr. Fort's mill and taken about 3,000 barrels of flour in the winter of 1862 and spring of 1863, as stated, I should have known it, but if I did hear it I have forgotten it. I did not hear until last year that Sugg Fort had a claim against the Government for flour; heard it before he went to Washington; it was a neighborhood report. The claim had an unfavorable reputation in the community. I heard that there were three parties interested in it; that it was composed of several articles, and that Sugg Fort's portion of the claim was for flour. The other two parties to the claim were Col. E. A. Fort and T. H. Gardener. Have known Wiley Edwards a number of years. Don't know much about him. I think him to be a truthful man, and so far as I know he is regarded as a sober and steady man. I have no reason to think he would perjure himself for a consideration. Don't know enough about Henry Waters and Albert Metcalf to say anything about them.

It is my remembrance that Col. E. A. Fort and Sugg Fort did not discuss politics much, but that Sugg Fort voted on the question of separation—representation for separation—but after the fall of Fort Donelson I heard that Sugg had turned Unionist. Never heard during the earlier part of the war that anybody was molested in this part for his Unionism. I was not a Union man, and had a neighbor who was a strong Union man, and we remained good friends all the while.

I never heard that Sugg Fort had to get out of the way from guerrilla bands on account of his Unionism, and I never heard that anybody in this neighborhood was disturbed on that account. Sugg Fort's mill was not the only mill on the Red River allowed to run. My mill was running all the time except when the mill broke down, and as soon as it was repaired I started again.

I sold my flour to the commissary department in Nashville, and was paid by check on a Louisville bank. Several mills near Clarksville were running. As to Sugg Fort's responsibility financially, I will say that I regard him as good for any reasonable amount. Don't know what he is good for, and consider him solvent. If I held a judgment against him for ten thousand dollars, I would consider it good.

WM. WEATHERFORD.

Subscribed and sworn to before me, at Fort's Station, Robertson County, Tenn., this the 26th day of October, 1874.

[SEAL.]

JAMES TRIMBLE,

*Circuit Court Commissioner of the United States
for the Middle District of Tennessee.*

L. M. JACKSON, having been by me first duly sworn, deposes and says:

My name is Lilburne M. Jackson. I am 56 years old. My residence is at Adams Station, Robertson County, and has been for four years; and my occupation, a magistrate. I have lived in the county nearly thirty-

* The witness said Springfield, but Sugg Fort said it was Cross Plains, and the witness accepted the correction. It turned out that the witness was right, and Fort wrong, and he must have knowingly been wrong. Springfield was convenient to us, but Cross Plains too far away to have seen the man.—C. F. B.

five years. I have known Sugg Fort upward of twenty years, and intimate all that time. I think his character is good; don't remember that I ever heard anything against it. I think he stands well in the community; never heard anybody say anything to the contrary. Between the time the Federals got Middle Tennessee, in 1862, and for a year onward, I was a visitor and customer at his mill, except in February, March, and earlier part of April, when I could not get often across the river. I have no recollection of his having a large quantity of flour at his mill between December, 1862, and April or May, 1863. In 1861 I saw as many as 60 barrels in the mill-building, and never, to my recollection, saw as much as that afterward. There might have been flour in other buildings at the mill without my knowing it, but I can't say how much. If in November or December, 1862, Sugg Fort had told me that he had 4,000 barrels of flour, or thereabouts, on his place, I should have thought he was joking, because I have no recollection of his grinding except for customers that year. I think Mr. Fort could have accumulated 3,000 barrels of flour in 60 days after he stopped shipping and continued grinding. It would take about 15,000 bushels of wheat to make that much flour. I think that Mr. Fort had means and credit enough to buy that much wheat. I never heard of his buying wheat in 1862. If he did buy, I think Charles Warfield, Finley Mitchell, and Robert Sorey, and B. B. Batts would have been likely to know it; also, Doctor Mallory, and Col. E. A. Fort. Sugg Fort's mules were in danger of being stolen by thieves. The thieves made no distinction between Unionists and confederates in stealing. Don't know that he sold any mules. I remember distinctly meeting Sugg Fort in the forepart of December, in the middle of the day, about two and one-half miles from his mill, on the road to Nashville, on a Sunday, on horseback, when he told me that he was on his road home from Nashville, as he said. I know it was from three to five weeks before Christmas. He didn't say why he had been to Nashville. I never saw nor heard of a Government wagon-train being at his mill from that time onward. I don't think it possible, seeing that I lived close to the road between him and Nashville, that Government trains could have been taking flour from his mill to Nashville for five or six months without my knowing it, unless they took it in the night-time. Along the latter part of 1862 or early part of 1863, I saw wagons driven by negroes and whites both, who told me they were hauling flour to Nashville, and I think they said from Sugg Fort's mill, which was in fact the only mill they could have been hauling from, coming that way. The wagons and gear satisfied me they were not Government wagons. No soldiers were along. Some of them, I think, told me who they were. I forget what they said, but they were not Government trains. They were hauling, I think, about two months, once or twice a week. Twice that I took notice of the number of wagons, there were four certainly the first time, and three or four the second time. My impression is that at the other times there were the same number, about. I never heard till ten months or a year ago that Sugg Fort had a claim against the Government for flour. Then I heard of it as neighborhood talk. I never heard anybody say that it was a just and honest claim, or an unjust and dishonest one. I have heard neighbors say that they had never heard of his having such a claim, and one of these lived on the road in a better position to see the wagons pass on to Nashville. This was B. B. Batts, living two and one-half miles from the mill, on the dirt-road to Nashville.

I have known Wiley Edwards 23 or 24 years. I know nothing against his character. He has the reputation of exaggerating, but otherwise his reputation is good. I have no reason to believe that he could be bribed, influenced, or intimidated into committing perjury when on his oath. Up to the time that the slaves were freed, I think Sugg was good for from twelve to twenty thousand dollars; since then I don't think he has been good for near as much.

I do not know enough about the negro witnesses, Waters and Metcalfe, to express any opinion about them as to their being better or worse than negroes generally.

The reputation of Sugg Fort as to loyalty was that he was a rebel up to the time of the fall of Fort Donelson, and Union afterward. That also applies to Col. E. A. Fort. We all went with the State. Judge Watson, who owned the mill with Weatherford, near Port Royal, was an original and constant Union man. The only Union man that I ever heard threats against was one Ogg, and that only by drunken men. I never heard that Sugg Fort was called an abolitionist. I do not believe it to be true that Sugg's mill was the only one allowed to run. Sadler's mill was running and doing as large a business as Fort's, I think, and Weatherford & Watson were running.

L. M. JACKSON.

Subscribed and sworn to before me, near Fort's Station, Robertson County, this Oct. 27, 1874.

[SEAL.]

JAMES TRIMBLE,
*Circuit Court Commissioner of the United States
for the Middle District of Tennessee.*

P. C. HAMBAUGH, having been by me first duly sworn, deposes and says:

My name is P. C. Hambaugh; I reside in New Providence, Montgomery County, Tenn., where I have resided since 1847. From September, 1862, until May, 1863, I was in the flour business with Mr. T. F. Pettus, and we together owned a large flour-mill, distant from Clarksville, Tenn., about five miles, which was capable of putting up ten thousand barrels of flour per season. We also owned another flour-mill, distant about two miles from the other and capable of putting up about six thousand barrels per season. In this interval of time flour was plentiful and cheap in the market of Clarksville, and would average between six and one-half to seven dollars per barrel, and during this time the value of flour remained about the same, changing very little or not at all. This information I get from old mill-books in my possession covering that period of time. During this period of time there were no large dealers and handlers in flour in the town of Clarksville; I think this is so, since almost all the flour in the county around was sold directly to the United States authorities at Clarksville. We sold about all of our flour then to the United States. We then got for the old flour on hand five and one-half or thereabouts; for the new, six and a half dollars or thereabouts per barrel. J. W. Barker was then also a dealer and maker in flour; he is now dead. Mr. T. F. Pettus and myself were in flour business and owners of flour-mills from about May, 1858, until January 1, 1866.

P. C. HAMBAUGH.

Subscribed and sworn to before me, at New Providence, Montgomery County, Tenn., this the 30th day of October, 1874.

[SEAL.]

JAMES TRIMBLE,
*Circuit Court Commissioner of the United States
for the Middle District of Tennessee.*

T. F. PETTUS, having been by me first duly sworn, deposes and says:

My name is T. F. Pettus. I am fifty-six years of age. I reside in New Providence, near Clarksville, Montgomery County, State of Tennessee. For some years previous to and subsequent to the war, Mr. P. C. Hambaugh and myself were large dealers in and owners of large flour-mills situated near the town of Clarksville, and during this period of time were constantly making and putting up large quantities of flour, and I was well acquainted with the market-value of flour. During the period of time between the month of September, 1862, and the month of May, 1863, flour was plentiful in Clarksville, and quite cheap, the average price being for good marketable flour about six dollars per barrel; and during this period of time there was very little fluctuation, if any, in the market-value. During this period of time about all the flour made and put up in the county was sold directly to the United States authorities by the millers, and consequently there were no large dealers and handlers in flour in the town of Clarksville at that time.

THO. F. PETTUS.

Subscribed and sworn to before me, at New Providence, Montgomery County, Tenn., this the 30th October, 1874.

JAMES TRIMBLE,

Circuit Court Commissioner for Middle District of Tennessee.

LEVI WEATHERFORD, (colored,) having been by me first duly sworn, deposes and says:

My name is Levi Weatherford. I am about fifty-three years of age. I reside in Springfield, Robertson County, Tenn. I am a laborer, and belonged, before the war, to William Weatherford, of Port Royal, before I was freed. In November, 1862, I was living with Mr. Weatherford. I was driving a team for him, hauling to Nashville, to Clarksville, and to the station on the railroad. I think that in the fall of 1862, and winter of 1862 and 1863, I was hauling flour to Nashville for Mr. Weatherford. I drove a six-mule team. My load was generally twenty barrels. With good luck I could drive to Nashville from the mill in a day and a half. The roads in December were tolerably good, but later in the winter would be pretty bad. While thus hauling I was never interfered with or disturbed by any band of guerrillas, thieves, or anything of the kind, nor did I hear of anybody else disturbed or interfered with by such bands. I think that I should have heard of it had the road been dangerous. The flour I was hauling belonged to Watson & Weatherford, who owned the mill. Mr. Watson was a Union man; I think that Mr. Weatherford claimed to be a Union man; I have heard Mr. Weatherford say that he was a Union man, and he was looked upon by the majority of people as such. He took no active part in politics. I delivered the flour to the commissariat at Nashville; I hauled it to no one else at Nashville. I was constantly hauling and was expected to make two loads of flour a week. During that time I did not see a United States Government train on the road hauling flour to Nashville; I did not see any Government wagons at all; if there had been any on that road I should have seen or heard of them. In going from the mill to Nashville I would cross the river at Port Royal; it was called the Nashville road or dirt-road. I did not go there on the Washington road. Watson & Weatherford also had stored in Adam's barn, about a mile from Adam's Station, some flour; I was hauling from the barn, off and on, some two weeks or more. Two other teams were hauling with me during this time, and could have hauled as much as I did. I think that the flour was stored in the barn because there was not room for it at the mill, and I think that I heard Weatherford say there was no room for it at the depot. If Mr. Weatherford had desired to slip this flour off to the rebels the barn would have been a better place, I think, for that purpose, than the mill, because it was not so public a place. Likewise, had he desired to slip it off to the Federals. I was well acquainted with Mr. Sugg Fort's mill, and also with Mr. Weatherford's; Mr. Weatherford's was the larger mill, and, when both were pushed, he, I think, could make the most flour. The foundation of Mr. Sugg Fort's mill was about one foot and a half. The ground-floor was on a level with the ground.

The mill of Sugg Fort was four stories high, a basement story having in it machines and nothing else. Then the ground-floor, where the mill-stones were, and that had room for about 200 barrels of flour, leaving room for carrying on the business. Above the ground-floor were two stories in which the wheat was kept, and don't think that any flour was kept there. If Mr. Fort was pressed for room and there was no wheat there, flour could have been stored there. I don't know anything about buildings, about the buildings on Mr. Fort's farm, nor whether there was any flour in them. Mr. Weatherford's mill was about like Mr. Fort's, but had a little attic in the top, in which nothing was kept, though. At Mr. Weatherford's mill, ordinarily we could make and pack about 40 barrels per day. When I hauled from the barn to Nashville I did not go the same road I went when going from the mill. The road from the barn to Nashville was called the Washington road, and struck the old Nashville road about fourteen miles from Nashville. I did not see any Government trains, guarded by soldiers or otherwise, on this road while hauling over it; nor did I hear of any on it engaged in hauling flour. This road was also safe, and I was never disturbed during the time I was hauling. I have known Sugg Fort for the last 20 years. He was not known as a Union man at the breaking out of the war, to my knowledge. I knew the reputation of most of Sugg Fort's neighbors, and I knew of no Union men in his vicinity; never heard of any outrages against anybody in that vicinity because of their Unionism. I never heard of any rebels coming to the mill of Mr. Weatherford and taking flour without payment. I would have heard of it if they had. I never heard of rebel soldiers or guerrillas visiting or taking flour from the mill of Sugg Fort. When the war broke out, if I had been a white man like Mr. Weatherford or Fort, and had been a Union man, I would rather not have it known, because the people there did not like anybody to be a Union man; but after the Yankees got the country I should not care if it was known.

his
LEVI + WEATHERFORD.
mark.

Subscribed and sworn to before me, at Springfield, Robertson County, Tenn., this the 28th October, 1874.

[SEAL.]

JAMES TRIMBLE,
*Circuit Court Commissioner of the United States
for the Middle District of Tennessee.*

DEB. BROWN, (colored,) having been by me first duly sworn, deposes and says:

My name is Deb. Brown, (colored.) I am about thirty-five years of age. I reside in Clarksville, Tenn. About several years ago, two, or thereabouts, I was on a train of cars, a construction-train on the Memphis and Clarksville Railroad, that runs through Clarksville. This train was going from Clarksville toward Enu, a point on the road south of Clarksville, and was going down for the purpose of getting gravel. I was on the train and going down with it for the purpose of helping as a laborer to shovel gravel into the cars. As we were going over the bridge on the Cumberland River the last panel, I think, on the far portion, the southern span, gave way, and the whole train went down into the river. By the fall I myself was badly hurt and crippled. Pat Smith (colored) was also hurt. Joe Critchfield (colored) was killed, and he is the only one that I heard of being killed, and he is the only one said to have been killed, nor have I since heard that any other person was killed at the time. This is the only time that I knew or ever heard of any one being killed at this bridge on the railroad by the train falling through. I do not know whether or not Ralph Mumford (colored) was on the train, but I know a man (a negro) named Ralph Mumford, living in Clarksville. He was not killed if he was on the train, since I saw him in this room not fifteen minutes ago.

his
DEB. + BROWN.
mark.

Subscribed and sworn to before me, at Clarksville, Montgomery County, Tenn., this the 30th of October, 1874.

[SEAL.]

JAMES TRIMBLE,
*Circuit Court Commissioner of the United States
for the Middle District of Tennessee.*

RALPH MUMFORD, (colored,) having been by me first duly sworn, deposes and says :

My name is Ralph Mumford, (colored.) I am between sixty and seventy years of age. I live in Clarksville, Tenn., where I have lived for many years before the war. Before the war, for ten or fifteen years, I belonged to William B. Munford, and was living with him as a slave in Clarksville, and during the whole of the war lived on his place in Clarksville. Mr. Munford died before the war, but I still remained on the place with the family. I am well acquainted with Mr. Sugg Fort, son of Col. Lawson Fort, of Robertson County. I have known Mr. Sugg Fort ever since he was a boy of fourteen or fifteen years of age. Long before the war I was often at the mill of Mr. Warden, at Port Royal, and there saw and knew Mr. Sugg Fort. Before the war I hauled flour for Mr. Sugg Fort from his flour-mill, I think in Robertson County, the mill near Col. E. E. Fort's farm, and Colonel Fort had then something to do with it. A Mr. Johnson, I think William Johnson, was the miller. I have not seen Johnson for a year or so, and do not know what has become of him. During the first part of the war I did not haul any flour for him, but in the latter portion did haul for him; he then had one team of six mules, but had no driver; I then drove my own team. Ephraim Smith (colored) also hauled for him. Smith now lives at Humboldt, Tenn., Gibson County. I was not at his mill during the first part of the war. I hauled only to Springfield, Robertson County, during the latter part of the war, for Mr. Fort; when hauling this flour, I often saw and met with guerrillas on the road, but they never interfered with or troubled me. At no time during the war, or before or after, did I ever know where any bacon was hid in the country, nor did I ever tell Mr. Sugg Fort where any was hid, or that I knew any was so hid, nor did I know or ever hear of, during the war, the United States authorities ever finding any bacon hid in that country and their seizing and carrying it off. I never heard or knew of any other colored man in this section of country named Ralph Mumford. I was not on the train of cars that fell through the railroad bridge at Clarksville, nor did I ever know or hear of a man of my name being killed at the time the train fell through the bridge a few years since. I repeat that during the war I never told or showed Mr. Sugg Fort where any bacon was hid, and do not know of the United States soldiers ever seizing any bacon in this or any other section of country.

his
RALPH + MUMFORD.
mark.

Subscribed and sworn to before me, at Clarksville, Tenn., this the 31st day of October, 1874.

[SEAL.]

JAMES TRIMBLE,
*Circuit Court Commissioner of the United States
for the Middle District of Tennessee.*

ADAMS STATION, ROBERTSON COUNTY, TENN.,
November 28, 1874.

DEAR SIR: Having yours of the 24th of this instant, I will now proceed to comply with your request the best I can. I will answer your questions one at a time as propounded.

1st. I do not think Sugg Fort had 3,000 barrels of flour on hand November, 1862, or at any one time during the war. In the latter part of 1861 and first of 1862 I think he had a few hundred barrels on hand. Soon after the fall of Fort Donelson he moved it out of his mill, and put it in barns in the neighborhood. It remained there for several months, perhaps until the next winter; then it was hauled from there to Springfield by citizens.

2d. I never heard of Sugg Fort having a barrel of flour taken from him by Government wagon-trains coming from Nashville during the war. The first time I ever heard it spoken was about the time he started to the city of Washington to lay in his claim for the flour.

3d. I can't say where Fort was hauling his flour in the months of September, October, and November, 1862. I don't recollect having heard of his sending it anywhere but Nashville and Springfield during the war.

4th. After the Federals got possession of this part of the country, as to where Fort sent his flour I am not able to say. There was some hauled off in the direction of Nashville by citizens with our country wagons without any guards being with them.

5th. I never heard of Government wagons passing through our neighborhood but three times during the war, and they were all from Springfield picking up supplies for the troops that were stationed there. There was but few wagons in a train. The first trip they made they were fired into by rebels and hurried back to Springfield empty; the second time loaded with corn that they took from one of my neighbors. The third time three or four wagons came down, and I understood got some flour; I don't recollect where they got it. I would suppose they got it from Fort's mill, as they passed my house in the direction of Fort's mill. Those three trains were all the Government wagons that I have any recollection of passing through the neighborhood of Fort's mill during the war.

6th. I don't think it possible that Government wagons could have passed from Nashville to Fort's mill, to and from, for the space of six months without my having seen or heard of them. I live in two and a half miles of the mill, or where it stood, and in three hundred yards of the most direct road leading from Nashville to the mill; can stand in my yard and see a wagon as it passes for half a mile.

Yours, truly,

B. B. BATTS.

Please send me a copy of Wylie Edwards's deposition. Some of his neighbors are anxious to know what he swore to. They wish to know where to place him. Don't fail to let me hear from you. I would like to know what proof was made by him myself.

B. B. B.

Mr. CHARLES F. BENJAMIN,
Chief Clerk Claims Commissioners.

INDEX.

	Page.
Report of committee	1
Letter of Secretary of War.....	9
Armstrong, George T.....	95
Batts, B. B.....	147
Benjamin, Charles F.....	80
Brearley, E. C.....	121
Brodhead, J. M.....	40
Brown, Deb.....	145
Campbell, J. W.....	112
Davidson County, citizens of.....	88
Dolan, John D.....	135
East Tennessee Echo.....	50
Edwards, Wiley.....	61
Fort, E. A.....	96
Fort, Sugg.....	50
Fort, Mrs. Sugg.....	98
Gangewer, A. M.....	115
Garner, John E.....	129
Garret, C. F.....	119
Hambaugh, P. C.....	143
Harrison, Hon. H. H.....	127
Henderson, Samuel D.....	79
Henry, W. W.....	125
Hutchinson, John Y.....	130
Irwin, Col. C. H.....	120
Jackson, Angelo.....	42
Jackson, L. M.....	141
Johnson, Hon. Andrew.....	127
Loyalty.....	96
Lyons, E. D.....	109
McCandless, S. C.....	107
Metcalf, Albert.....	74
Mitchell, General R. B.....	55
Mitchell, Samuel F.....	138
Montgomery County, citizens of.....	83
Morgan, James D.....	118
Moran, Maurice J.....	134
Mumford, Ralph.....	146
Negley, Hon. James S.....	107
Newspaper extract.....	50
Officers Fifteenth Regiment, United States Colored Infantry.....	95
O'Neill, C. C.....	131
Passes.....	95
Patten, Robert F.....	136
Pettus, T. F.....	144
Pratt, John.....	110
Pride, John E.....	65
Purdy, George H.....	75
Report Committee War-Claims.....	114
Report special agents.....	17
Revised Statutes Tennessee.....	117
Rosecrans, General W. S.....	117
Rutherford, Hon. Allan.....	38, 40
Secretary of the Treasury.....	15
Scudder, Hon. Isaac W.....	113
Shackelford, J. O.....	82
Shiras, General A. E.....	38
Shissler, A. A.....	133

	Page.
Smith, Henry H	43
Smith, Israel S	41
Sowers, F. S	99
Stark, John C	129
Tanner, John B	42
Trimble, James	69, 82, 84, 91, 117, 127
Wade, W. E	107
Warfield, Charles M	139
Waters, Henry	70
Watson, Samuel	137
Weatherford, Levi	144
Weatherford, William	140
Wheeler, James C	130
Wilson, T. J	122

JACOB BLOOMSTEIN.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. LAWRENCE, from the Committee on War-Claims, submitted the following

REPORT:

The Committee on War-Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Jacob Bloomstein, of Nashville, Tenn., having had the same under consideration report:

That the petition of the said Bloomstein sets up that he is a resident of Nashville, and has been for the last twenty-two years; that he was born in Russian Poland, and by occupation is a merchant; that he is a naturalized citizen of the United States; and that he was arrested on the 5th day of May, 1863, in the city of Nashville, by one of Colonel Truesdale's detectives, through information alleged to have been given by a personal enemy, who reported that the said Bloomstein had brought his merchandise through the Federal lines without permit, and in violation of the trade regulations prescribed by the military authorities of the United States.

It appears by official copy furnished your committee, that the said Bloomstein was discharged from confinement in the military prison at Alton under the following order:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE COMMISSARY-GENERAL OF PRISONERS,
Washington, D. C., September 19, 1863.

GENERAL: By direction of the Secretary of War, Jacob Bloomstein, a political prisoner, who was arrested in Nashville on the 5th of May last, and who is now at the military prison at Alton, will be immediately returned to Nashville and delivered to the provost-marshal, with a view to an immediate investigation of the charges against him.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. HOFFMAN,

Colonel Third Infantry, Commissary-General of Prisoners.

Brig. Gen. R. S. GRANGER,
Commanding, Nashville, Tenn.

It further appears that the said Bloomstein, in the latter part of August, 1863, made application to Hon. Andrew Johnson, then military governor of Tennessee, for redress for damages alleged to have been done him. His memorial is herewith given, as showing the variance between his statements made at the time and those made to your committee:

MEMORIAL.

To his excellency ANDREW JOHNSON,
Military Governor of Tennessee:

I, your memorialist, Jacob Bloomstein, a citizen of Nashville, Tenn., merchant by profession, would most respectfully represent to your excellency: That I was arrested by the order of one so-called Colonel Truesdale on the 5th of May, 1863. That I was "balled and chained" by order of the said Truesdale, and incarcerated in the Nashville penitentiary four weeks without a trial, inquiry, or investigation into the facts of my arrest and confinement. That during said confinement at Nashville several wagons were driven up to my place of business and loaded with my goods, mostly staple dry goods purchased in Nashville. These goods were taken and carried off by order of said Truesdale. That a few days anterior to the removal of the goods Truesdale's officers went to my store and seized and carried off all my bills, invoices, and receipts of said goods.

That at the expiration of said four weeks I was transferred from the Nashville prison to the Alton military prison, where I now am and have been for the last two months. That the value of the goods taken as above stated, including 3,000 pounds of cotton taken since my imprisonment here, is about $6,000 worth.

That these lawless acts and the sending me out of the district and State, where my offense (if any) was alleged to have been committed, were in utter violation of every precedent of law, totally at variance with constitutional provision, and in direct conflict and disregard of the instructions of the Secretary of War issued in a letter bearing date May 11, 1863. That letter was addressed by the General-in-Chief, Major-General Halleck, to General Curtis and other district commanders. To said letter and the constitutional provision upon which it is based I most respectfully invite your distinguished attention and consideration.

Copy of the above letter.

"OFFICE OF COMMISSARY-GENERAL OF PRISONERS,
Washington, D. C., May 11, 1863.

"Maj. Gen. S. R. CURTIS,
"Commanding, Saint Louis, Mo.:

"GENERAL: I am instructed by the General-in-Chief to say that when a person is arrested charged with being a spy or the commission of any other specific offense, requiring a trial, an immediate investigation must be had before a military tribunal at the place where the offense was committed and when the witnesses are within reach.

"Many persons have been arrested as spies and sent to interior prisons, and after months of detention it has been found that the charges had neither specification nor evidence to sustain them.

"In cases where arrests are made on a general charge of disloyal conduct, it is necessary that full details in each case, with the character of the person, should be given, in order to make a proper disposal of it.

"Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"W. HOFFMAN,
"Colonel Third Infantry, Commissary-General of Prisoners.

"By command of Major-General Curtis:

"A. V. CALBURN,
"Assistant Adjutant-General."

Did not the General-in-Chief have just such cases as mine in view when he penned this letter of instructions to his district commanders as a guide and rule by which they should be governed? Has not this letter, as well as the more sacred provisions of the Constitution, been grossly violated in my case? Arrested and imprisoned without cause, I appealed to them for a trial, well knowing that if I could get an impartial trial that I could establish my innocence beyond the possibility of a reasonable doubt. Did they grant my prayer? They responded by seizing my goods and chattels and appropriating them to their own use! They then sent me beyond the limits of the district and State where they allege the offense was committed. Was this well done? Was it done in accordance with law, with the Constitution, or this letter of instruction? Sequestration and spoliation, sentence and imprisonment, without trial or conviction, investigation, or the merest inquiry into the facts of the case! In view of these premises, well and truly made and set forth, your memorialist begs leave and prays your excellency to interpose your executive prerogative, and release him from this foul injustice and most cruel wrong. That you will either release him without further endurance or that you will cause him to be returned to the city and State from whence he was so unlawfully ferreted off, and that you will cause him to be brought immediately before some competent military tribunal, in order that he may and will prove his innocence of these most foul and unjust charges, and this he prays and asks of you as the guardian of the people of the State whose rights and liberties have been intrusted to you.

With sentiments of high consideration and distinguished respect,

I am, governor, your humble and obedient servant,

JACOB BLOOMSTEIN.

EXECUTIVE OFFICE, Nashville, Tenn., September 4, 1863.

Respectfully referred to Colonel Hoffman, Commissary-General of Prisoners, with the recommendation that the prayer of the petitioner be granted.

ANDREW JOHNSON,
Military Governor.

From this memorial it appears that the value of the goods taken from said Bloomstein, including 3,000 pounds of cotton, was valued at $6,000. From the inventory and bill of items submitted to your committee, duly sworn to, the value is placed at $18,347.12, and this inventory is sworn to by one Juda Bloomstein, in 1874, who swears that he was clerk and book-keeper in the employ of the petitioner, Jacob Bloomstein. The petitioner does not state the fact, but it is apparent that he is probably a relative of the claimant, and his statement should be considered in that connection.

These statements and affidavits are submitted, touching the value of the goods taken from the said Bloomstein, but they appear to be from men allied to him by association or by business, and personal acquaintances, who did not at the time testify to the value of the goods taken from him, and who had personal knowledge of the facts.

It is clearly apparent from the last petition of said Bloomstein submitted to your committee that he has trusted to the lapse of time to efface the evidence which would protect the Government against his demand. It is equally clear to your committee that the said Bloomstein was attempting, and undoubtedly did, to violate the military regulations established by the United States military authorities at Nashville. During the war scores of adventurers made their way within the lines of the Army for speculative purposes, and contributed largely to dissatisfaction, disorganization, and desertion in the Army. They furnished disaffected Union soldiers with the means to escape from service, and they were the means of communication with the rebel authorities and people within the rebel lines. It is reasonable to suppose, in view of the fact that the petitioner Bloomstein, who swore in 1863 that the stock taken from him was of the value of $6,000, and who asserts in 1874 that its value is $18,000, that he was one of this class. While it may be possible and probable that during the war there were many instances of personal injustice by the military authorities toward civilians, it is unfortunately true that there was abundant occasion for treating with rigor and severity many persons arrested within the lines of the Army for violation of military regulations. The case of Bloomstein is in point. It appears from his affidavit that he was for twenty-two years a resident of Nashville, and that while that city was under military occupation by Union forces he deliberately violated one of said regulations. For this he was arrested and incarcerated in a military prison at Alton, Ill., from thence released, and returned to Nashville for trial, which, owing to the confusion incident to military operations, he never had.

Your committee, in the absence of complete information, which the records of the War Department fail to furnish, see no reason to accord the relief which the petitioner Bloomstein demands, but, on the contrary, are of opinion that he rather merits censure and perhaps punishment for attempting a fraud on the Government. But one of the affidavits can be true. If the value of the goods, including the cotton, was but $6,000, as sworn to in 1863, then the inventory presented to your committee, sworn to in 1874, is gross perjury.

Your committee do not deem it necessary to further characterize this claim than to remark that it is one of a numerous class growing out of the disorder incident to a state of war, and which the utmost vigilance is required to guard against.

Believing that the publication of this may serve to defeat the attempted fraud, the committee report back the petition and accompanying papers, and recommend that they do lie upon the table.

W. R. BOICE.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. LAWRENCE, from the Committee on War-Claims, submitted the following

REPORT:

[To accompany bill H. R. 4551.]

The Committee on War-Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4551) for the relief of W. R. Boice, of Danville, Ky., having considered the same, report:

That the claim is for re-imbursement in the sum of $29,492 for certain corn, hay, oats, &c., alleged to have been purchased by the Government of the United States in 1864 at Camp Nelson, in the State of Kentucky.

It appears by a communication of the Quartermaster-General of August 1, 1874, that a claim for compensation for fifty thousand bushels of corn was filed in said Office November 13, 1865, in favor of E. J. Curly, a partner of Boice, and was disallowed March 27, 1866. It further appears that a bill (S. 433) for the relief of the said Curly was reported from the Committee on Claims of the Senate on the 16th of July, 1866, subsequently passing the Senate and the House of Representatives, and was approved February 8, 1867.

Said act is as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to pay, or caused to be paid, E. J. Curly, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $34,248.52, as compensation in full for corn purchased of him by Capt. E. B. W. Resileaux, assistant quartermaster, on the part of the Government.

It further appears, by the certificate of the Secretary of State, that a pardon was granted to the said Boice on the 2d of July, 1866, who had been indicted in the United States district court for the district of Kentucky for having presented for payment fraudulent vouchers to a disbursing officer of the United States.

The pardon is as follows:

ANDREW JOHNSON, President of the United States of America, to all to whom these presents shall come, greeting:

Whereas one William R. Boice is now under indictment in the United States district court for the district of Kentucky for having presented for payment fraudulent vouchers to a disbursing officer of the United States; and whereas I am assured by many respectable citizens of Kentucky that the circumstances of the case render him a proper object of Executive clemency:

Now, therefore, be it known that I, Andrew Johnson, President of the United States of America, in consideration of the premises, divers other good and sufficient reasons me thereunto moving, do hereby grant unto the said William R. Boice a full and free pardon for the offense for which he stands charged.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto signed my name and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington this 2d day of July, A. D. 1866, and of the Independence of the United States the ninetieth.

[SEAL.]

ANDREW JOHNSON.

By the President:

WILLIAM H. SEWARD,

Secretary of State.

The letter of the Quartermaster-General is hereto annexed, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., August 1, 1874.

SIR: In reply to your communication of July 24, 1874, in regard to claim of William R. Boice, of Boyle County, Kentucky, you are respectfully informed that a claim for fifty thousand bushels of corn, no price stated, was filed in this Office November 13, 1865, in favor of E. J. Curly, who was Boice's partner, and was disallowed March 27, 1866.

The papers in the case were transmitted to the War Department July 9, 1866, and have not been returned to this Office:

By order of the Quartermaster-General.

Your obedient servant,

M. I. LUDINGTON,
Quartermaster, United States Army.

CLINTON RICE, Esq., Washington, D. C.

Your committee are unwilling to believe that after allowing so long a period of time to run upon his claim, after he had been indicted in his native State for the crime of presenting fraudulent vouchers against the Government and pardoned therefor by the President, it could be properly inferred that he had a just or valid claim. The Court of Claims was open to him to pursue his remedy until his claim was barred by the statute of limitation, and he did not avail himself of that privilege, and no reasons whatever are assigned for such failure to present his claim. He equally had the privilege of having his claim passed on in the Quartermaster's Department.

Your committee deem it unnecessary to further discuss the case, believing that the facts presented are sufficient condemnation of the claim. They believe that the said Boice has no just or equitable claim against the Government on account of the matters set up in H. R. 4551, and accordingly report it back to the House, and recommend that it do lie on the table.

POTTAWATOMIE INDIANS OF KANSAS.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. LOWE, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, submitted the following

REPORT :

[To accompany bill H. R. 4882.]

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of H. C. Linn and others, on behalf of the Pottawatomie Indians, praying for payment to said Indians of the amount claimed to be due them under various treaties, as reported by the commissioners, Charles Rowland and Stephen D. Mills, appointed under the tenth article of the treaty of August 7, 1868, with the Pottawatomie Indians, report the same back to the House, with the following observations and recommendations in relation thereto :

By the tenth article of the treaty with the Pottawatomie Indians of August 7, 1868, it was provided that two commissioners should be appointed by the President, who should examine and make report upon the claims of the Pottawatomies theretofore reported upon by the Secretary of the Interior under the act of Congress of March 2, 1861.

In pursuance of that provision of the treaty, Charles Rowland and Stephen D. Mills were appointed such commissioners, and made their report to the Secretary of the Interior January 18, 1869, and the same was communicated to this House by the Secretary of the Interior January 28, 1869, and is embraced in Executive Document No. 61 of the Fortieth Congress, third session. The report of the Secretary of the Interior referred to above as under the act of March 2, 1861, is embraced in House Ex. Doc. No. 19, Thirty-seventh Congress, third session.

The treaties passed under review by the said commissioners commence with the treaty of December 2, 1795, and come down to the treaty of July 23, 1846. They give, as the result of their investigations, the following tabular statement of stipulations, payments, and balances :

RECAPITULATION.

Statement of stipulations, payments, and balances.

Schedule—	When proclaimed.	To what date calculated.	Stipulations.	Payments.	Due Indians.	Due United States.
A.....	Dec. 2, 1795	Dec. 2, 1860	$65,000 00	$42,000 00	$23,000 00
B.....	Dec. 26, 1803	Dec. 26, 1860	3,800 00	2,200 00	1,600 00
C.....	Apr. 24, 1806	Apr. 24, 1826	5,000 00		5,000 00
D.....	Jan. 27, 1808	Jan. 27, 1861	21,200 00	16,800 00	4,400 00
E.....	Jan. 16, 1810	Jan. 16, 1861	25,500 00	20,250 00	5,250 00
F.....	Dec. 30, 1816	Dec. 30, 1828	12,000 00	12,000 00
G.....	Jan. 4, 1819	Jan. 4, 1861	19,500 00	19,500 00
H.....	Jan. 15, 1819	Jan. 15, 1861	105,000 00	103,750 00	1,250 00

Recapitulation—Continued.

Schedule—	When proclaimed.	To what date calculated.	Stipulations.	Payments.	Due Indians.	Due United States.
I.....	Mar. 25, 1822	Mar. 25, 1861	$132, 280 00	$112, 235 23	$20, 044 77
K.....	Feb. 7, 1827	Feb. 7, 1861	200, 263 37	208, 620 47		$8, 357 10
L.....	Jan. 7, 1829	Jan. 7, 1861	208, 203 00	194, 957 91	13, 245 09
M.....	Jan. 2, 1830	Jan. 2, 1861	527, 351 00	501, 629 01	25, 721 99
N.....	Jan. 21, 1833	Jan. 21, 1861	419, 309 83	413, 780 33	5, 529 50
O.....	Jan. 21, 1833	Jan. 21, 1861	701, 148 50	661, 431 61	39, 716 89
P.....	Jan. 21, 1833	Jan. 21, 1861	298, 721 00	299, 349 29		628 29
Q.....	Feb. 21, 1835	Feb. 21, 1861	1, 304, 399 99	1, 319, 664 99		15, 265 00
R.....	Feb. 21, 1835	Feb. 21, 1861	110, 000 00	112, 200 00		2, 200 00
S.....	Feb. 18, 1837	Feb. 18, 1861	135, 604 33	135, 604 33
T.....	July 23, 1846	July 23, 1860	629, 286 00	629, 286 00
Deficiency for outfit for emigrating Indians.....					28, 442 02
For emigrating Indians.....					62, 590 00
Payment to Pottawatomies prior to 1819.....						30, 387 34
					235, 791 16	56, 837 73
					56, 837 73
Balance due Pottawatomies as awarded					178, 953 43

Your committee have examined with much care the report of the commissioners and the treaties under which the alleged claims arise, and they entertain no doubt that a considerable amount is due these Indians under various treaties by reason of the defective execution of the same on the part of the Government. The examination and report of the two commissioners above referred to seems to have been thorough, and the result of their labors is embraced in the document above referred to, a pamphlet of thirty pages, to which reference may be had for particulars. The general features and results of their report are also strongly sustained by the report of Hon. William P. Dole, late Commissioner of Indian Affairs, which is embraced in Ex. Doc. No. 19, above referred to. Such of the items in the foregoing tabular statement as your committee are not satisfied with, will now be specified.

The item of salt, $1,600, (Schedule B of above table,) is claimed to arise under the treaty of December 26, 1803, but by reference to the treaty it appears that, by way of commutation for the use of a certain salt-spring, the United States agreed to deliver yearly for the use of said Indians and others "a quantity of salt, not exceeding one hundred and fifty bushels." There is no evidence that during the existence of the treaty a sufficient quantity of salt for the use of the Indians was not delivered, and as this treaty only contemplated the delivery of an amount requisite for their use, "not exceeding" the quantity mentioned, your committee think there is no ground for this item, and that it should be rejected.

The item of $1,250 (Schedule H of said table) is supposed to arise under the treaty of January 15, 1819, granting a permanent annuity of $2,500 a year, amounting in the aggregate to 1861, the time to which the report is extended, to $105,000. Of this amount the commissioners find categorical evidence of the payment of $103,750, leaving a deficit of $1,250, for half a year of 1855 or 1856. It appears that the disbursing officer is credited with the payment of the full amount, but no voucher is found by the commissioners for the same. Your committee are not satisfied that that is sufficient evidence under the circumstances to show a non-payment, and they think the item should be rejected.

The item of $20,044.77 (Schedule I) arises under treaty of March 25, 1822. This item is composed in part of a supposed deficit of payments for blacksmith and teacher. By the terms of the treaty, $1,000 a year was to be appropriated for a blacksmith and school-teacher, for fifteen years, without any apportionment between them being provided for. The blacksmith's services, by the subsequent treaty of January 7, 1829, were made perpetual, but the teacher's terminated with the fifteen years. The commissioners have computed, arbitrarily, so far as appears, the blacksmith's services at $750 a year and the teacher's at $280. By act of Congress of 1834 (4 Stats. at L., p. 735) it is provided that blacksmiths' compensation under treaties shall be $480 per annum and school-teachers' not less than $480 nor more than $600 per annum. As by the treaty $1,000 per annum was to be paid for blacksmith and teacher, and it appears that by other acts the Government rated their services of equal value, your committee believe that in computing for these services the two should be placed upon an equal footing of $500 per annum. A re-adjustment of the item upon this basis reduces it to $15,800, being a reduction of $4,244.77.

The item of $25,721.99 (Schedule M) arises under treaty of January 2, 1830, which provides for the payment of a permanent annuity of $16,000 and fifty barrels of salt. It appears that the annuity of $16,000 per annum was regularly paid up to and including 1845, but from thence to 1860 but $14,412.50 was paid per annum. This is accounted for by the fact that by virtue of the subsequent treaty of September 26, 1833, $1,587.50 was paid per annum to the Pokagan band, at L'Arbre Croche, in Michigan, the aggregate amount of such payments being $23,812.50, which, being deducted from the supposed deficit of $25,721.99, leaves the real amount due under this treaty $1,909.49.

The remainder of the items in the tabular statement of the commissioners stated as due the Indians your committee believe are well sustained by the treaties and the facts.

The aggregate of the items which your committee think should be disallowed are as follows :

Under Schedule B.....	$1,600 00
Under Schedule H.....	1,250 00
Under Schedule I.....	4,244 77
Under Schedule M.....	23,812 50
Total	30,907 27

The aggregate found due by the commissioners' report is $178,953.43. Deducting above amount of items disallowed by your committee, leaves a balance of $148,046.16.

The commissioners find, under treaty of February 7, 1827, an over-payment to the Indians of $8,357.10, which they have properly allowed in the account. It appears by reference to the account, as stated by commissioners under the same treaty, that the Indians were furnished iron and steel to the amount of $7,480, which was also an over-payment, the treaty, in fact, not providing for the furnishing of iron and steel. This sum being deducted, leaves the final balance $140,566.16 due the tribe up to 1861.

By joint resolution of Congress of July 28, 1866, it was directed that $39,000 be paid the Pokagan band of Pottawatomies living in Michigan, out of the funds of the tribe, and this sum is a proper credit upon the above amount, and which being deducted therefrom, leaves the amount for which the Government is indebted $101,566.16, for the payment of which the committee report the accompanying bill, and recommend its passage.

The first of these is the fact that the university has a long and distinguished history of scholarship and research.
It has been a center of learning and teaching for over a century and a half.
The second is the fact that the university has a large and diverse body of faculty and students.
It is one of the largest universities in the United States.

The third is the fact that the university has a high reputation for its academic standards and its commitment to excellence in scholarship and research. It is a university that is proud of its achievements and its contribution to the world of learning.
The fourth is the fact that the university has a strong sense of community and a deep commitment to its students.
It is a university that is dedicated to the advancement of knowledge and the education of its students.

The fifth is the fact that the university has a strong tradition of service to the community and the world.
It is a university that is committed to the betterment of society and the advancement of the human condition.
The sixth is the fact that the university has a strong sense of pride in its achievements and its contribution to the world of learning. It is a university that is proud of its history and its future.

The seventh is the fact that the university has a strong sense of responsibility to its students and the community. It is a university that is committed to the highest standards of academic excellence and to the advancement of knowledge and the education of its students. It is a university that is proud of its achievements and its contribution to the world of learning.

MARY E. MELINE.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. RUSK, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, submitted the following

REPORT:

[To accompany bill H. R. 3548.]

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3548) granting a pension to Mary E. Meline, widow of Maj. James F. Meline, deceased, submitted the following report:

It appears from the testimony before us that James F. Meline was a major and aid-de-camp in the Army of the United States during the rebellion, and that he contracted the disease of which he died during his services as such officer.

It further appears that he left surviving him a widow, who is now in needy circumstances, and who now makes application for pension, and that she has not remarried since the death of her said husband.

The services of Colonel Meline were of great value to the country, and in consequence of the disease contracted in their performance he suffered great pain during the last years of his life.

The widow of Colonel Meline is in needy circumstances, and is worthy to have the great and exceptional services of her late husband recognized in her behalf.

The affidavits of ex-Governor Edward F. Noyes, of Ohio, an intimate friend of Colonel Meline's; the certificate of Maj. Gen. John Pope, upon whose staff Colonel Meline served, and who bears the strongest testimony to his personal and military character and the great value of his services and the faithfulness with which they were performed, and also the fact that he lost his health in their performance; the affidavits of Drs. Horace Bowan, James C. Hutchinson, Simon Pollak, W. H. Mussey, and also of Judge M. F. Force, one of the judges of the common pleas court of Hamilton County, (Cincinnati,) Ohio, showing the nature and progress of the disease of which Colonel Meline died and his healthy condition when he entered the United States service; the letters of M. Halstead, esq., editor of the Cincinnati Commercial, and of F. Hassurek, esq., editor of the Cincinnati Volksblatt, and also the letters of General D. H. Strother, General Wager Swayne, Hon. William E. Davis, assistant treasurer of the United States at Cincinnati, and of John Swartori's letter, all urging the granting of a pension to Mrs. Meline, have been carefully examined by the committee, and are deemed sufficient to warrant the recommendation that the bill H. R. No. 3548, granting a pension to Mrs. Mary E. Meline of $25 per month, be passed.

REPORT

OF THE
COMMISSIONERS OF THE GENERAL LAND OFFICE

IN RESPONSE TO A RESOLUTION OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
PASSED MAY 17, 1916

REPORT

OF THE COMMISSIONERS OF THE GENERAL LAND OFFICE

IN RESPONSE TO A RESOLUTION OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
PASSED MAY 17, 1916

THE COMMISSIONERS OF THE GENERAL LAND OFFICE have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of a copy of the report of the SELECT COMMITTEE ON LANDS, created by the HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, in response to a resolution passed May 17, 1916, and to state that the same has been forwarded to the proper authorities for their consideration.

The report of the SELECT COMMITTEE contains a detailed statement of the facts and circumstances connected with the acquisition of the public lands in the State of California, and a recommendation that the same be referred to the proper authorities for their consideration.

The COMMISSIONERS OF THE GENERAL LAND OFFICE have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of a copy of the report of the SELECT COMMITTEE ON LANDS, created by the HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, in response to a resolution passed May 17, 1916, and to state that the same has been forwarded to the proper authorities for their consideration.

The COMMISSIONERS OF THE GENERAL LAND OFFICE have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of a copy of the report of the SELECT COMMITTEE ON LANDS, created by the HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, in response to a resolution passed May 17, 1916, and to state that the same has been forwarded to the proper authorities for their consideration.

WASHINGTON AND OHIO RAILROAD.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. J. AMBLER SMITH, from the Committee on Railways and Canals, submitted the following

REPORT:

[To accompany bill H. R. 4883.]

The Committee on Railways and Canals, to whom was referred the petition of the Washington and Ohio Railroad Company, for aid in the construction of their railroad to the Ohio River, respectfully report:

That the said company is now constructing a railroad from Washington City and Alexandria, by way of Winchester, Va., to the Ohio River, at Point Pleasant, or some point north thereof, passing through the iron-ore beds on the Shenandoah River, sixty-five miles west of Washington, and those of Hampshire and other counties of West Virginia, and the great coal-fields of the latter State; that by their charter the terminus at the said river may be at any point between the Little Kanawha and the Big Sandy Rivers, though they will probably fix upon a point between the Great and Little Kanawhas.

The road has been located from Alexandria to Winchester, in a distance of seventy-five miles, of which fifty-two miles have been completed and are in use. From Winchester to the Ohio River, a careful preliminary survey has been made, sufficient to ascertain the fact that it will reach the river at Ravenswood at the distance of three hundred and twenty-five miles, with grades of 52.8 feet per mile, ascending eastward, and of 79.2 feet per mile going westward, and with no curve of less than 1,000 feet radius, to accomplish which not more than six miles of tunneling will be required. It is proper to say, however, that in order to avoid, without tunneling, an exceptional heavy grade at the South Branch Mountain, it will be necessary to increase the distance by about fifteen miles, making a total of three hundred and forty miles. Even this, however, will be less by seventy-seven miles than any route now in use to the seat of the General Government from the Ohio River, or from the cities of Cincinnati, Louisville, Saint Louis, and Chicago. The route from Washington to Saint Louis by this road will be remarkably direct by way of Cincinnati, being, with but trifling deflections, an air-line.

The eastern terminus of the road is near the head of ship-navigation of the Potomac River, and its western at a point where it can connect with the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad, and the roads which will extend to Louisville and Memphis.

In view of the unlimited quantities of coal, iron, and timber upon the line of this road, and of the rich agricultural resources of the country which it will drain, as well as of the large passenger travel which it must command, there can be no doubt of its proving to be a profitable undertaking to its proprietors, nor of the safety of the Government in guaranteeing the company's mortgage-bonds. As a means of cheap transportation between the great West and the navigable waters of the Atlantic coast, it will doubtless prove of immense value to the country more immediately concerned, as well as to the West and Southwest.

The line of this road pursues an average course parallel to and equidistant (about fifty miles) from the Baltimore and Ohio, and the Chesapeake and Ohio Roads.

The important facts herein stated are fully sustained by the report from the Engineer Department, and especially by that of C. P. Manning, civil engineer, upon this line. (See Senate Ex. Doc. 19, part 2, of the present session, page 23.) Mr. Manning has had great experience as an engineer in the country through which this line runs, and his facts and opinions are entitled to perfect confidence and great weight.

On the subject of the comparative distances from the Ohio River to Washington by this and other railroads, the committee refer to the annexed table, carefully prepared from the best sources.

The company asks for a guarantee of its bonds to the amount of $30,000 per mile, to enable it to complete the road to the Ohio River; and, to indemnify the Government against loss by reason of the liability thus incurred, proposes to give a deed of trust or mortgage upon the entire road, and to apply its mail-pay, whenever necessary, to the payment of the interest as it accrues, until the bonds shall be fully paid, and to enter into such further guarantees as may be reasonable and proper.

The committee report herewith a bill in accordance with the prayer of the petition, and recommend its passage.

Distances to Cincinnati from—		By Washington and Ohio Railroad.	Difference.
	Miles.	Miles.	Miles.
New York, via Erie Railroad and connections	861	706	155
New York, via New York Central Railroad and connections.....	881	706	175
New York, via Pennsylvania Railroad and connections.....	757	706	51
New York, via Baltimore and Ohio Railroad and connections	777	706	71
Philadelphia, via Pennsylvania Railroad and connections	668	619	49
Philadelphia, via Baltimore and Ohio Railroad and connections	687	619	68
Baltimore, via Pennsylvania Railroad and connections	647	521	126
Baltimore, via Baltimore and Ohio Railroad and connections.....	589	521	68
Washington, via Pennsylvania Railroad and connections	687	483	204
Washington, via Baltimore and Ohio and Metropolitan Branch.....	560	483	77

JACKSON T. SORRELLS.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. VANCE, from the Committee on Claims, submitted the following

REPORT:

[To accompany bill H. R. 1258.]

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1258) for the relief of Jackson T. Sorrells, mail-contractor on the route from Asheville, N. C., to Franklin, N. C., in 1865, have had the same under consideration, and make the following report:

It appears from the evidence that Jackson T. Sorrells was employed under some provisional arrangement with persons who represented themselves as acting by official authority to carry the mails between Asheville, N. C., and Franklin, N. C., a distance of seventy-two miles, once a week, at the rate of 8 cents per mile, reckoning only one way. It also appears from the evidence that he did so carry the mail for nine weeks, and has never received payment therefor.

In consideration of the fact that the service was actually performed, and apparently in good faith, and as the Post-Office Department can see no objection to the payment of said Sorrells, your committee recommend the passage of the bill, after amending it by striking out "one hundred and twenty-eight dollars and fifty cents," and inserting fifty-one dollars and eighty-four cents.

THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO
LIBRARY

THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO
LIBRARY

THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO
LIBRARY

THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO
LIBRARY

THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO
LIBRARY

THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO
LIBRARY

THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO
LIBRARY

THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO
LIBRARY

THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO
LIBRARY

THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO
LIBRARY

THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO
LIBRARY

THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO
LIBRARY

J. M. ROANE.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. VANCE, from the Committee on Claims, submitted the following

REPORT:

[To accompany bill H. R. 1397.]

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1397) for, the relief of J. M. Roane, of Macon County, North Carolina, have considered the same, and make the following report:

The circumstances and evidence in this case are shown in the following letter:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, D. C., January 19, 1874.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt, by reference from the honorable Secretary of the Interior, of your letter of the 14th instant, relative to a certain claim in favor of J. M. Roane on account of supplies furnished between the years 1856 and 1860, for the Indian service in California.

In reply I have to state that, upon the settlement of the accounts of M. B. Lewis, late subagent, the sum of $477.38 was admitted by the accounting-officers of the Treasury to be due Mr. Roane on account of said supplies, which claim, together with others of a similar nature, were presented in an estimate submitted to Congress March 4, 1868, but failed to receive the necessary appropriation. (See H. R. Ex. Doc. 200, Fortieth Congress, second session, list No. 5.)

In consequence of the failure of Congress to make said appropriation, and in view of the fact that there are no funds at the present disposal of the Department applicable to the payment of the claim in question, no action can be taken by this Office to effect a settlement of the account.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

EDWD. P. SMITH,
Commissioner.

HON. ROBERT B. VANCE,
House of Representatives.

In view of the foregoing facts the bill is herewith reported back, with recommendation that it pass.

THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO
LIBRARY

THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO
LIBRARY

THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO
LIBRARY

THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO
LIBRARY

THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO
LIBRARY

THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO
LIBRARY

THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO
LIBRARY

THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO
LIBRARY

MARY McMILLEN.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. VANCE, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions and of the War of 1812, submitted the following

REPORT:

[To accompany bill H. R. 4884.]

The Committee on Revolutionary Pensions and War of 1812, to whom was referred the petition of Mary McMillen, asking for a pension, have had the same under consideration, and report :

The evidence shows that petitioner was the wife of John McMillen, of Capt. William Jones's Company, Eighth Regiment United States Infantry, war of 1812. The said soldier enlisted in the State of Georgia the 28th of January, 1812, and was discharged, as per records of the War-Office, the 2d of December, 1815, at Fort Hawkins, in consequence of a shattered arm. Land-warrant No. 20530 was issued to said McMillen. Mrs. McMillen was married to her husband, John McMillen, in 1823.

Your committee, considering the length of time served by the soldier and his honorable wound, concur that the widow be placed on the pension-rolls as of 14th February, 1871, and recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

SAMUEL HOYT.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered

Mr. VANCE, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions and War of 1812, submitted the following

REPORT:

[To accompany bill H. R. 4885.]

The Committee on Revolutionary Pensions and War of 1812, to whom was referred the petition of Samuel Hoyt, a soldier of 1812, have considered the same, and report:

The records show that said Samuel Hoyt was enlisted at Portsmouth, N. H., 26th September, 1814, and discharged the 23d November, 1814, having served fifty-nine days, which is not sufficient to place him on the rolls under act of 14th February, 1871. He served in Captain Marsh's company, New Hampshire militia.

Your committee recommend the passage of the accompanying bill in his behalf.

O

REPORT

OF THE COMMISSIONER OF THE GENERAL LAND OFFICE
FOR THE YEAR 1875

THE REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONER OF THE GENERAL LAND OFFICE
FOR THE YEAR 1875

REPORT

OF THE COMMISSIONER OF THE GENERAL LAND OFFICE
FOR THE YEAR 1875

THE REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONER OF THE GENERAL LAND OFFICE
FOR THE YEAR 1875

THE REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONER OF THE GENERAL LAND OFFICE
FOR THE YEAR 1875

SAN FRANCISCO LAND ASSOCIATION OF PHILADELPHIA.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. JASPER D. WARD, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted the following

REPORT:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the memorial and evidence of the San Francisco Land Association of Philadelphia, praying for special relief for the expenditure and loss of its capital stock in defending its title to certain real estate in San Francisco, Cal., against the United States, having considered the same, submit the following report:

The petitioners are citizens of Philadelphia, and are the stockholders of the unincorporated joint-stock company known as the San Francisco Land Association, organized under the general laws of Pennsylvania for the purpose of investing capital and purchasing the real estate known as the Dolores Mission, in the county of San Francisco, and State of California.

The memorial and evidence are presented, and the association is represented by its officers, Frederick Fraley, president, Lewis Cooper, treasurer, and J. Coleman Fisher, secretary.

It is claimed they show that on the 10th day of February, 1846, the lands belonging to the Mission of Dolores, situate within the limits or adjacent to the present city of San Francisco, were duly granted by Governor Pio Pico, in accordance with the laws of Mexico, to José Prudencia Santillan, a secular priest of the Mission Dolores and citizen of the State of California, for sufficient considerations, who afterward, on the 11th of April, 1850, for the consideration of $200,000, conveyed 10,186 acres of said lands to James R. Bolton, of San Francisco, which deed of conveyance was recorded June 3, 1850, in liber A, pages 170 and 171, of the records of deeds of San Francisco.

That on the 13th of July, 1853, said Bolton, for the consideration of $200,000, conveyed the same to George W. Wright, of San Francisco, which deed of conveyance was recorded July 15, 1853, in liber 25, page 24, of the records of the deeds of San Francisco.

That on the 15th of August, 1853, said Wright conveyed the same, for the consideration of $1,300,000, to Francis N. Buck, Simon Wilmer Cannell, and Caleb Jones, of the city of Philadelphia, trustees, for the use of the San Francisco Land Association, which deed of conveyance was recorded January 3, 1855, in liber 2, of deeds of trust of San Francisco, and by which the equitable title to said lands became vested in the association.

That at the date of the original grant to Santillan the present city of San Francisco was only the Mexican village of Yerba Buena, of not more than one hundred inhabitants, and the property conveyed in the grant was of only nominal value; but the settlement and buildings of the city of San Francisco rendered the property, as early as 1851, of rapidly increasing value and importance. Emigration had made it valuable, and in 1850 the lands were occupied by hundreds of squatters, claiming title by possession or purchase from a justice of the peace acting in the capacity of alcalde of San Francisco.

In March, 1850, the pretended grantee, Santillan, had taken means of giving public information of the nature of his title, and by publication on the 6th of March, 1850, in the Pacific News, of San Francisco, warned persons against taking possession of and of purchasing said property.

The treaty of peace known as Guadalupe Hidalgo, between the United States and Mexico, had provided that the existing private land-grants and titles to lands in the Territory of Mexico, ceded to the United States, should be respected and protected by the United States. In conformity with this treaty, the act of March 3, 1851, entitled "An act to ascertain and settle the private land-claims of California," was passed, establishing a board of commissioners for the adjudication of this class of claims.

In March, 1852, the claimant, James R. Bolton, presented this claim to the board of commissioners, sitting at San Francisco, and after consideration by the board of commissioners, on the 5th June, 1855, his title was confirmed to the tract of 10,186 acres of said land.

From this confirmation and award an appeal was taken by the law-agents of the government to the district court of the United States for the northern district of California, which was heard and adjudged in favor of the claimant, on the 17th of April, 1857.

This judgment was appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States, as provided by law, and, upon the final hearing, was reversed at the December term of the Supreme Court, 1859. (See 23 Howard, p. 341.)

The court pronouncing the opinion, among other things, said:

* * * In November, 1849, the Padre Santillan, with Dr. Poli, made a journey to Santa Barbara, the place of residence of Covarrubias, and on his return intimated to his friends "that he had been to the governor, and that the Americans could not rob the church any longer;" that he had the papers "in which were all his hopes;" that "he was well off," and used other exultant expressions, which denote that the acquisition of the deed was newly made, and that a great change was effected by it in his condition and feelings. In the month of March, 1850, he announced to the public of San Francisco that such a grant was in his possession, with other circumstances before detailed, and in the month of April conveyed the land to the claimant.

The testimony does not disclose what was the depository of this grant in Santa Barbara, nor when, nor under what circumstances it was placed there, nor under what circumstances withdrawn. Neither Santillan nor Dr. Poli have been examined as witnesses; nor was Pio Pico interrogated in reference to the authenticity of the grant. There is no proof to show that any of the conditions of the grant have been fulfilled. The testimony as to the payment of any portion of the mission debts is vague and unsatisfactory. There was no judicial possession sought or obtained, and no claim made for the land, as the grantee thereof, to give the community at large any information concerning it.

Our opinion consequently is, that the validity of the grant has not been sustained; and that the decrees of the board of commissioners and the district court are erroneous and must be reversed, and that the cause be remanded to the district court, with directions to dismiss the claim.

It will thus be seen that part of the ground of this decision was the determination of the question of the fact, in the mind of the court, that the grant was not genuine, but was a forgery.

After the judgment in the Supreme Court declaring the grant to Santillan to be invalid, the memorialists seem to have discovered, or to have been led to believe, that there was some record relating to said grant in some way deposited with the alcalde of Santa Barbara, which record would be of great value in establishing the validity of the original grant to Santillan.

The book of records kept in the office of the alcalde at Santa Barbara, from the year 1840 to 1848, could not be found, nor could any trace of it be discovered during the pendency of the controversy and prior to the decision of the Supreme Court. It was alleged, however, that it would corroborate the evidence as to the genuineness of the original grant.

Accordingly, after the judgment of the Supreme Court, the secretary of the company went from Philadelphia to California to make further search for it, but his investigations at San Francisco and Los Angeles and Santa Barbara were still unsuccessful. At length the book was found, and was traced into the possession of a citizen who had lived near to Santa Barbara, and who accounted for it by the following facts: At the period of taking possession of that part of California by United States forces, this book, with other documents, had been secreted at his house, and had never been called for, and he neither knew its value nor knew the person who had left it there.

This book of records has been produced before the committee, and is now in its keeping. It is a book of record of proceedings, civil and criminal, (in the Spanish language,) held before the alcalde of Santa Barbara, from the year 1840 to 1848, inclusive, and contains a memorandum of the Carrilla deed, purporting to be made on the 6th day of April, 1846, in the following words, properly translated:

This day appeared before me the Señor Curate Don Prudencia Santillan and the citizen Joaquin Carrillo, their object being that this tribunal (jusgado) under my charge should make note in this book of records of a title that the said Señor Curate Santillan granted to the said Señor Carrillo for four hundred varas of land in the Mission of Dolores, this 6th day of April, 1846, which shall stand as evidence for the ends and purposes of those interested therein.

The authenticity of this book seems to be clearly demonstrated by evidence submitted to the committee. This book also contains a further entry, apparently written about the same time. It is in the following words, properly translated:

Having appeared in this tribunal the señor curate-rector and minister of the Mission of Dolores, Don J. Prudencio Santillan, he made known that he desired to place on deposit some important documents that he had with him, so that he might not lose them on his journey from this place to the Mission of Dolores. Said documents consisted of a title given by the Señor Governor Don Pio Pico for three leagues of land in the Mission of Dolores; another, of the approval of the said title by the most excellent departmental assembly; some others, inventories of personal property of the said Mission of Dolores. Said documents remain deposited, making a bundle marked "Papers belonging to the Señor Curate Don Prudencio Santillan."

While the book appears to have been a genuine book of records kept by the alcalde of Santa Barbara, your committee do not indorse the entries therein, translations of which have above been given. There are many circumstances connected with said entries, appearing in the book itself, which might be urged with great force against the genuine character of said entries. The handwriting and the ink differ from all others in the book; the pages on which written, the intervals occurring between the last admitted genuine entry, the blank pages following, the peculiarity of an entry on the same page with the entry last above translated, &c., tend to create doubt as to the genuineness of said entries relating to the Santillan property. But the view your committee takes of the effects of the translated entries, if genuine, makes it unnecessary for them to pass upon the genuineness of the entries above translated, as will be hereafter seen.

The memorialists, while claiming that the judgment of the Supreme Court against them was erroneous upon the proofs as presented, do not, at least in terms, ask relief on that ground, and it has not been deemed by your committee necessary to carefully and elaborately examine and analyze all the proofs or proceedings prior to said judgment.

Your committee have, however, examined the evidence pretty thoroughly, and listened attentively to extended and repeated arguments of able representatives and counsel in behalf of the said memorialists, and such examination and arguments developed nothing, in the opinion of your committee, to justify the opening of the case or the granting of the relief asked.

On the contrary, your committee are of opinion that the grant by Pio Pico was not a valid one, and that Santillan acquired no legal or equitable title in said lands, because—

No proper petition to Governor Pico is shown to have been made by Santillan for said lands.

No inquiry by said Pico is shown to have been made as to the propriety of making such grant. No petition, grant, and map were shown to have been recorded; and yet all these things were required to make a valid grant under the Mexican laws by the regulations of 1828.

The steps or proceedings above enumerated, with some others perhaps, the report of the alcalde to the governor being one, formed what was technically called an expediente; and this expediente it became the duty of the governor to send to the departmental assembly for its approval.

That this was not done, or at least not shown to have been done, is clear; for "the first report of the governor to the assembly respecting the disposal of lands made in the year 1846, was of forty-five grants to sundry individuals, and was made the 8th day of May, 1846, and referred to the committee on public lands. The committee reported favorably and the grants were confirmed at the session of June 3. The decree of confirmation includes grants down to May 3, 1846. That to Santillan is not among them;" and yet the grant to Santillan, as has been shown, is claimed to have been made February 10, 1846.

There is proof tending to show the existence of an expediente and grant to Santillan. One Botello swears that he was a deputy of the departmental assembly during the first four months of 1846, and served as one of the committee on public lands, and during that time the original expediente and grant made to Santillan, of the Mission Dolores and its lands, came up for approval, and that the title was duly submitted and approved.

But the records of the departmental assembly in 1846, during the time that Botello says he acted on the committee on public lands, are well preserved.

From these it appears that its first session for 1846 commenced March 2, and on that day Noriega and Arquello were appointed the committee on public lands, and in the session of March 4 Botello obtained leave of absence for a term not exceeding three months. His absence is usually noted at the end of each day's proceedings, and his name does not again appear as an acting member till June 15. It thus appears he was not a member of the committee on public lands during the year 1846, and his statement to that effect, and that the expediente and grant to Santillan were duly submitted and approved, is utterly unworthy of belief.

Moreno, at one time secretary of state, swears that he saw the record of the grant in the book of titles—Toma de Razon—in August, 1846.

And Arenas swears that it was noted by him in that book of records. That book is lost; but the mere entry of the grant in that book is not sufficient to establish the original validity of the grant, and not proper or sufficient proof that a valid grant was ever made.

In United States vs. Castro, 24 Howard, 349, a case decided since this Santillan grant was adjudicated, the court said:

The grants of portions of the public domain in Mexico, the mode of obtaining them, and the officers by whom they were to be issued, and the conditions to be annexed to them, were with great precision regulated by law. This law has so often been referred to and commented on in former opinions of this court that it is unnecessary to report here its particular provisions. It is sufficient to say that it was required to be in writing; the officers and tribunals before which it was to pass designated, and every step in the process, from the petition of the party to the final consummation of the title, was not only required to be in writing, but also to be deposited and recorded in the proper public office among the public archives of the republic.

The general rule is that the grant must be found in the proper office among the public archives.

In order to maintain a title by secondary evidence it must be shown to the satisfaction of the court—

1st. That the grant was obtained and made in the manner the law required at some former time, and recorded in the proper public office.

2d. That the papers in that office, or some of them, have been lost and destroyed.

3d. That within a reasonable time after the grant was made there was a judicial survey of the lands, actual possession taken, and acts of ownership exercised over it.

In Laco vs. United States, 23d Howard, 543, also, a later case, the court say:

In conclusion, * * * no grant of land purporting to have been issued, &c., * * should be received, &c., unless it be found noted in the registers, or the expediente, or some part of it be found on file among the archives where other and genuine grants of the same year are found; and the testimony of late officers of that government cannot be received to supply or contradict the public records or establish a title of which there is no trace to be found in the public archives.

In view of this law the evidence at the several trials referred to, if unshaken and unquestioned, fails to establish a valid grant to Santillan, and the relief asked for should not, in the opinion of your committee, be granted by reason of anything shown to be existing or done prior to the discovery of said book or record of the alcalde of Santa Barbara. And the Santa Barbara book, relied upon by the memorialists as supplying the evidence held essential by the Supreme Court, to wit, governmental archive evidence, if genuine, falls far short of establishing the genuineness of the claim of Santillan, under the rule laid down by that court in many cases.

That Santa Barbara book does not contain any record of any act of the Mexican government of California. It is but a record of the acts of a municipal officer of the pueblo of Santa Barbara. The entries are not signed, or shown to have been made, by any officer. It is not a record of transfers of real estate, and contains no other entry relating to that subject, and has no force or character as evidence above any private memoranda.

In Dias vs. United States, the claim was rejected because no note or memorandum showing that a grant had been made could be found in the governmental archives, although the alleged grant bore the impress of the genuine seal, and the fact of making the grant was sworn to by the officers who made the same.

In view of the long-established and rigidly adhered to rule adopted by the Supreme Court in similar cases, it is scarcely possible that upon a rehearing that court would modify the rule in favor of a claim like this, even though it were free from all suspicion of being based upon antedated and simulated documents; and without such modification this newly-discovered book would not strengthen the claimant's case.

This case of Santillan has been fully and fairly tried and decided by the court of last resort, and its merits considered with reference to the same general rules applicable to all other cases of a similar nature, and there does not seem to be any good reason why this case should be reopened and a new trial granted any more than in any of the numerous other similar cases which have been adjudicated and decided adversely to the claimants.

It would be impolitic to establish a precedent under which so many other claims of a like nature, rejected for like reasons, would be entitled to like relief. The effect would be that titles to lands in California would be greatly disturbed, their value depreciated, the prosperity of the State checked, and the results obtained after more than twenty years of litigation over these Mexican claims rendered substantially nugatory.

Your committee, therefore, in view of the whole case, as now presented by the memorialists, are of the opinion that the relief asked should not be granted, and recommend that said memorial be laid upon the table, and your committee discharged from further consideration of the subject.

○

MARGARET JANET BURLESON.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. JAMES WILSON, from the Committee on War-Claims, submitted the following

REPORT:

[To accompany bill H. R. 4886.]

The Committee on War-Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Margaret Janet Burleson, having had the same under consideration, report:

That the petitioner is a resident of Memphis, Tenn.; that at the breaking out of the late rebellion she resided in Decatur, Ala., where she remained until April, 1864, when, by reason of military operations in that vicinity, she was compelled to remove with her family, consisting of five small children, to Nashville, Tenn., subsequently removing to Memphis. She represents that at the breaking out of the rebellion, and for some years prior thereto, she was the owner in her sole individual right of a valuable improved estate, situated in and near Decatur, and of a large amount of personal property which she inherited from her father, who died in 1853. She further represents that the said personal property was worth, at a low valuation, not less than $30,000; that when the Federal forces took possession of Decatur they took, used, carried away, or destroyed the property and buildings belonging to her, and that her dwelling was used as military headquarters for upward of two years; that during such occupancy it was damaged to the extent of $5,000, and that the personal property taken from her and used by Union forces was worth not less than $10,450.

The petitioner has submitted to the committee considerable evidence, which in a general way substantiates her claim, but your committee believe that they cannot give the case that thorough examination which it should receive, and are of opinion that the Commissioners of Claims have the requisite machinery to properly examine the case. Your committee are of opinion that the petitioner has an equitable claim against the Government, but express no opinion as to the amount. They believe that the case should be referred to the Commissioners of Claims, with authority to inquire into and examine the same, and accordingly report the accompanying bill conferring jurisdiction upon said commissioners, and recommend its passage.

FINANCE.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MAYNARD, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, submitted the following

REPORT:

[To accompany bills H. R. 3834 and 4377.]

The Committee on Banking and Currency, to whom were referred the bills H. R. 3834, entitled "A bill to substitute United States notes for the issues of the national banking associations," and H. R. 4377, entitled "A bill to provide for the retirement of national-bank notes and the substitution in lieu thereof of Treasury notes, and for reduction of the interest upon the public debt," having had them under consideration, beg leave to report:

These bills, differing in form, agree substantially in providing for the retirement of the national-bank notes and substituting for them United States notes.

This question presents itself to the committee in the twofold aspect of its effect upon the Treasury and upon the currency in the hands of the people.

To assist in reaching a proper conclusion, the committee invited a number of gentlemen from different parts of the United States, each distinguished either as a writer upon the currency or as a successful financier, and representing as far as practicable different classes or schools of financial opinion. Their statements are appended to this report, and form, in the judgment of the committee, a valuable contribution to this branch of political science.

In our discussions upon the currency it must be borne constantly in mind that the Government owes a large bonded debt, on which the interest is payable in coin, and which is likely to continue during the present generation. The interest, amounting now in round numbers to one hundred millions per annum, is payable and paid to the holders of the bonds, whoever and wherever they be. And it is immaterial, so far as the burden falls upon the Treasury, whether it be paid to bankers or to any other class of capitalists.

The national-bank notes have stood for several years at about three hundred and fifty millions. To retire these and substitute for circulation an equal amount of United States notes would require either an increase of the public debt to that amount, or a withdrawal of bonds, to be replaced by United States notes. It is not perceived how the Treasury would be benefited by an increase of the public debt, and it is not believed that our interest-bearing bonds could be exchanged for an additional issue of United States notes except at a great disadvantage in the transaction itself and to the serious detriment of the public credit; so that it is not perceived how the Treasury could profit by the enactment of these bills into law. The indirect effects of retaining the bonds in the country rather than sending them abroad, and of paying the interest to citizens rather than to non-resident aliens, should not be left out of sight.

But in considering a measure of this kind the chief inquiry should be its bearing upon the business and private interests of the people. Indeed, under our system, any measure looking to the advantage of the Government which is inimical either to the security or prosperity of the people may be rejected at once as fundamentally wrong.

Of all our material interests the circulating medium, the currency, the money, is the most important, and has received first and last the most discussion. Forty years ago the question was agitated whether the money should be paper or coined metal. It was settled, as far, probably, as Federal law could settle it, by determining that for all Government uses, at home and abroad, coin alone should be adopted. Still the laws of commerce, the requirements of trade, the wants of the people prevailed over statutory enactments, and, with the exception of Texas and the Pacific coast and perhaps a few other inconsiderable localities, paper constituted the chief circulation. This obviously will so continue.

As paper has no intrinsic value, it becomes important to impart to it an artificial value at once uniform, stable, and certain. The value should be the same for the purposes of trade and exchange all over the country; it should not fluctuate, greater to-day and less to-morrow; it should be secure from destruction and loss.

The currency at present, and for ten years past, is twofold—United States notes and national-bank notes. The former are by law declared to be money; the latter are the promises of the banks to pay money. The committee have had several other bills referred to them looking to a substitution of the former for the latter, with a view to constitute them the sole currency of the country, to the exclusion of the latter.

One objection to the United States notes, legal-tenders, greenbacks, (using as well the legal as the common parlance designation,) is that they represent no commercial value, and are not subject to be redeemed. They are issued by the Government in payment of debt, and they cannot be converted into anything of intrinsic value, at the option of the holder. They must remain in the form of money and remain in the country, because they are not current elsewhere. In the nature of the case the amount issued must be limited by law; otherwise there might be a redundancy, which would derange all prices if it did not render them absolutely worthless.

Now, it would seem to be wholly impracticable to fix arbitrarily, by statute or otherwise, the amount of money in this country. That is a commercial matter, and not legal or political. The demands of commerce require so much money and no more. Too little, trade is embarrassed and other expedients are resorted to, chiefly individual credit. Those who have credit gain an immense advantage over those who have little or none. Too much money, prices are inflated, speculation and overtrading follow, with the same invariable result.

Coin, being current all over the world, naturally goes where it is most in demand as compared with other things. Hence, when in any country where the currency is coin or paper exchangeable for coin, there is an excess of it, the surplus will find its way to some place of greater demand, to make good any deficiency there. Not so the United States notes; whatever be their limit, at that they must remain, neither more nor less. If the exact amount required by commerce, very well; but if more or less, there is no flexibility to meet commercial exigencies. Such is one of the difficulties experienced from this currency; it is not elastic.

To relieve it a bill was referred to this committee making the United States notes convertible into an interest-bearing bond which, at the option of the holder, should be reconvertible into United States notes.

Whether this would give elasticity to these notes or not would depend to some extent upon their total amount as fixed by law. If that amount were not above the ordinary commercial necessity of the country, it is not perceived how this plan would avail to meet an emergency. An excessive issue to be kept in the Treasury, and interest upon it to be paid, except when called out by some exigency of trade, might give elasticity, but at a very heavy cost. The operation of the scheme, as it seems to the committee, would be to make the United States Treasury the depository of all the idle money in the country, paying interest upon it to the owner without any compensating benefit. To make the plan successful, provision would be necessary for all parts of the country, at least for the business centers. Every citizen in the land having United States notes which he wished to convert into bonds, or bonds which he wished to reconvert into United States notes, would naturally insist upon an opportunity to do so, and that without much practical inconvenience. This would cause an immense number of distinct transactions, each of which would require to be properly recorded and certified, else the affairs of the Treasury would soon fall into inextricable confusion. The number of additional officials required can hardly be computed. The accounts alone would be beyond estimate. To calculate the interest on bonds outstanding, sometimes months, sometimes weeks, sometimes days only, would be a herculean task. Other questions arise by no means free from difficulty. Should the same bonds be re-issued; if so, how often? How authenticated, so as to guard against fraud? What disposition should be made for the custody and safe-keeping of the United States notes received for the Treasury, and for so depositing them that they could be easy of access to pay out on demand? Without dwelling longer, the scheme appears so expensive and cumbrous in practice, not to say hazardous and easy of abuse, while the advantages are so problematical, that the committee could not recommend its adoption.

The same want of elasticity has been experienced with the national-bank notes. The total amount issuable was fixed by law at $354,000,000. Within this limit banking was a monopoly; and as there was practically no redemption, the bankers were interested in holding to their circulation, and the amount outstanding continued about the same; no excess was possible, and to the banks no diminution was desirable.

To remedy this defect, three several measures have been adopted:

First. Free banking, as it is called, meaning the privilege to establish as many national banks as may be desired, upon a compliance with the terms of the bank-act of January 15, 1875, section 3.

Second. Allowing banks to retire any portion or all of the circulation by depositing in the Treasury of the United States an equal amount of United States notes, with the privilege of withdrawing a corresponding amount of bonds deposited with the Treasurer as security for circulation. (Act June 20, 1874, section 4.)

Third. Providing for the redemption of the national-bank notes at the Treasury, and requiring each bank to keep in the Treasury five per cent. of its circulation for that purpose. (Act June 20, 1874, section 3.)

By the last provision redemption assumes a practicable shape. Notes not needed can easily and cheaply be returned to the bank of issue, there to remain until wanted in the business of the locality; that is, until some one is found willing to give security and to pay interest for their use. The law went into effect on the 1st day of July, 1874, and the national-bank notes received at the Treasury for redemption, pursuant to its provisions, amounted on the 1st day of March, 1875, a period of eight months, to $85,142,758, or a little more than $10,000,000 per month, and $127,714,137 per year. This will effect a redemption of the entire bank-circulation in less than three years, and return it to the place of issue.

A very important incidental benefit results from the operations of this law. The bulk of the national-bank notes had, by long use, become much worn and mutilated, and in fact quite unfit for circulation. By this system of redemption, notes in this condition are retired and destroyed and new notes substituted. This is done without any trouble or cost to the general public, and with great advantage to every holder of money, whether the banker dealing with millions or the laborer whose cash is limited to his daily wages.

The operation of the first two provisions will more directly tend to give flexibility to the currency. Government bonds now and for a long time to come must be the standard of monetary value. Their actual value is more nearly fixed and invariable than any other vendible or purchasable commodity. Their variation in the market may be taken, therefore, more than anything else, to indicate either a stringency or redundancy in money. When there is a redundancy in money, bonds are purchased, and the price goes up; when there is a stringency, bonds are sold, and the price goes down. When, therefore, bonds go up in the market, the bonds will be withdrawn from the Treasury by the banks and sold. When the price falls, they will be brought either to establish new banks or add to the capital of banks already organized, so as to increase their circulation. If bonds rise, bonds will be sold by the banks and currency retired; if they fall, bonds will be bought by the banks and currency issued.

The amount of United States notes deposited to March 1, under the fourth section of the act of June 20, 1874, was $12,348,000. Since the passage of the act of January 14, 1875, $4,024,000, and a corresponding amount of bonds, withdrawn.

On the other hand, since the passage of the free-banking law of January 14, 1875, to the 1st of March, sixty-seven applications for new banks have been received by the Comptroller of the Currency, representing an aggregate capital of $7,850,000; increase of capital has been applied for by existing banks, $3,387,900; and increased circulation on capital already paid up, $2,997,870; in all, $14,234,770. These figures suggest very forcibly the probable effect of recent legislation.

Having considered the principal popular objections to the national-bank notes, it is proper to go a step further, and demonstrate their superiority, not only to the United States notes but to the notes of local banks organized under State or territorial law.

Their absolute safety in the hands of the holder is secured both by the Government guarantee and by the liability of the bank as a corporation and of the individual stockholders to twice the amount of their respective stock, while the Government is protected by the deposits of bonds in the Treasury one-ninth in excess of the amount guaranteed. A safer circulation cannot be imagined, and during the late panic men hoarded it with the same confidence they hoard coin.

Since the passage of the national-bank act of June 30, 1864, twenty-two hundred national banks have been established. Of these only thirty-five have failed or been placed into the hands of receivers: in 1865, one; in 1866, two; in 1867, seven; in 1868, three; in 1869, two; in 1871, four; in 1872, four; in 1873, eleven; and in 1874, one. The paid-up capital of these banks was $8,311,000, less than 2 per cent. of the capital invested in the national banks of the whole country. Their circulation has been so effectually taken care of that it has never been assorted out for redemption or become uncurrent. Upon their other liabilities an average of 54½ per cent. has been paid.

This showing certainly indicates a vigorous and healthful financial life.

The Comptroller of the Currency, in his last annual report, gives the semi-annual dividends of all the national banks from 1869 to this time. The average is 5.09 per cent., or 10.18 ($10\frac{1}{5}$ nearly) per cent. per annum. The ten principal joint-stock banks of London, including their branches, made annual dividends the last year averaging 15.94 per cent. The usual dividends of the Bank of England are 10 per cent. per annum, but the amount has varied for some years past from 8 to 13 per cent. The profits of the national banks consist of the interest on their Government bonds and the discounts paid by their customers. The first is 6 per cent. in coin, equal—gold at $12\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. premium—to $6\frac{3}{4}$ per cent. Deduct this from the average of 10.18 per cent., it leaves 3.43 per cent., besides expenses to be collected from their customers in the form of discount.

It may be safely asserted, therefore, that the national-bank system is, of all forms of banking, the least expensive to the business community.

Another feature of first importance in a country like ours is in uniformity of value all over the land, so that a dollar on the frontier shall equal a dollar in the metropolis. This can never be the case with coin, either silver or gold. The cost of transportation will always appear in the form of exchange. Sometimes this cost is neutralized in commercial operations by converting the coin into some form of merchandise, which is transported in the course of trade, and at its destination reconverted into other coin; so that in fact there is no actual transportation of coin. But when the course of trade is not in the proper direction, the cost of transportation must be met, and exchange is said to be unfavorable. Nor can the circulation of local banks have a uniform value over a very widely extended district, never over the whole country, for reasons too obvious for statement. Hence, under our former State-bank system, we met a new currency in traveling a few hundred miles. Indeed, we had almost as many currencies as States, and all at a discount everywhere but at home.

The national-bank currency, on the other hand, redeemable at the Treasury of the United States, receivable for all Government dues, (except duties on imports,) and a tender for debts to any national bank in existence, is of equal and uniform value all over the land. Were it elevated to the coin standard by being redeemable both at the Treasury and at the counter in coin, it would doubtless be still better. But if we must choose between uniformity of value and redemption in specie, unable to enjoy both, the former is much the more desirable. One currency is a financial corollary to the ever-famous motto, "One Constitution, one country, one destiny."

In conclusion, we declare the national-bank currency the safest, the cheapest, and the best our country has ever known; to be perfected, but not impaired.

The first part of the paper is devoted to a general discussion of the problem of the origin of life. It is shown that the problem is one of the most important and interesting in the history of science. The second part of the paper is devoted to a detailed discussion of the problem of the origin of life. It is shown that the problem is one of the most important and interesting in the history of science. The third part of the paper is devoted to a detailed discussion of the problem of the origin of life. It is shown that the problem is one of the most important and interesting in the history of science. The fourth part of the paper is devoted to a detailed discussion of the problem of the origin of life. It is shown that the problem is one of the most important and interesting in the history of science. The fifth part of the paper is devoted to a detailed discussion of the problem of the origin of life. It is shown that the problem is one of the most important and interesting in the history of science. The sixth part of the paper is devoted to a detailed discussion of the problem of the origin of life. It is shown that the problem is one of the most important and interesting in the history of science. The seventh part of the paper is devoted to a detailed discussion of the problem of the origin of life. It is shown that the problem is one of the most important and interesting in the history of science. The eighth part of the paper is devoted to a detailed discussion of the problem of the origin of life. It is shown that the problem is one of the most important and interesting in the history of science. The ninth part of the paper is devoted to a detailed discussion of the problem of the origin of life. It is shown that the problem is one of the most important and interesting in the history of science. The tenth part of the paper is devoted to a detailed discussion of the problem of the origin of life. It is shown that the problem is one of the most important and interesting in the history of science.

VIEWS

EXPRESSED BEFORE

THE COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY.

WASHINGTON, February 2, 1874.

AMASA WALKER, of Massachusetts, came before the committee in response to its invitation.

The CHAIRMAN. We are endeavoring to ascertain what defects there are in our present monetary system, and how they should be remedied. We have invited several gentlemen of character and prominence to give us their views on that subject. A number of them have done so, and we should be very glad to hear you on that general range of inquiry.

Mr. WALKER. I take the position that the paper currency of the nation should be restored to par with coin. This is perfectly feasible, and the work should be commenced without delay, for the reason that the country cannot afford to wait longer, and that it is dangerous to wait; and for the reason that the present currency is not in harmony with the currency of commerce, because it is depreciated below the gold standard. Why depreciated? Not from any doubt of the ability of the Government to pay, but because it is redundant. The proof of this is found in the fact that the average per capita of the circulation from 1840 to 1860 was \$6, while at present it is \$17. And that is a low estimate, because we have all heard of the various contrivances made to evade the use of money. I doubt if the paper circulation to-day is less than one thousand millions, taking all kinds of drafts, orders, certificates, and due-bills used instead of money at the present time; and that, in proportion to the wealth of the country, is a redundant circulation. In 1860 the wealth of the country was sixteen billions, and its circulation \$207,000,000, equal to $1\frac{1}{4}$ per cent.

The CHAIRMAN. Can you tell us on what data you base your estimate of the amount of currency in circulation before the war?

Mr. WALKER. On the returns in the Secretary of the Treasury's office and the various documents that have been published. The report of the Comptroller of the Currency gives all these facts. They are easily verified or disproved.

The CHAIRMAN. There were no statistics kept of the currency at that time, were there?

Mr. WALKER. O, yes. The statistics go back to 1834, but no further back than that. They were kept in the Treasury, and within a few years past, when this question became interesting, they have been brought out from the archives. All these facts are quite accessible.

Mr. HAWLEY. Before the war the returns of circulation were made by the banks to the treasurers of the respective States?

Mr. WALKER. Yes; the returns were made by the State banks to the treasurers of their respective States, and were collected from them for the office of the Secretary of the Treasury here. Now, in 1870 the wealth of the country was thirty billions and the circulation $725,000,000, or at the rate of two sixty-two and a half per cent., which was more than double the ratio of circulation in 1860; for as $16,000,000,000 is to 207,000,000, so is 30,000,000,000 to 388,125,000, which would be, in that proportion, the proper measure of the present currency; so that the actual currency in circulation is nearly double its proper amount. And here I would say that it is not necessary that the currency should increase in proportion to population or wealth. That is a great popular mistake, and a fatal one, because it leads to bad results. The proof of this is found more particularly in the fact that in Great Britain, where they have the largest business, the widest commerce, and the greatest export and import trade of any nation in the world, the paper currency is essentially the same as it was fifty years ago. It has not varied a million of pounds sterling from what it was in 1824 and 1825. And yet its commerce has quadrupled and its population has doubled. I saw a detailed statement to-day, showing that the currency of Great Britain is £43,000,000 sterling, and I find that it was £42,000,000 in 1820 and 1825. It has not varied, as I say, a million sterling since that period. Now, if it were true that the currency must increase with population and with wealth, then this result would not have taken place. If it be asked why, the answer is very satisfactory, viz, that the facilities for using money have increased as rapidly as the increase of wealth and population.

Sir John Lubbock says that in his bank only 3 per cent. of money was used in settling £19,000,000 sterling.

Mr. HAWLEY. Three per cent. cash.

Mr. WALKER. Yes, 3 per cent. cash in a transfer of £19,000,000 sterling. I notice that as one of the popular errors, and one that produces bad results. The effect of this excess of currency is shown in increased prices. All prices become abnormal. Nothing is measured by a right standard, and therefore nothing is measured rightly, to the great injustice of one party or the other. The prices being entirely abnormal, justice is done nowhere. One party gets too much and the other too little. Now, I say that this state of things, this excess, injures every industrial interest in the nation. It injures our manufactures. Why? Because it raises the cost of production, and therefore we cannot ship our manufactures abroad as we could under a sound currency, because the cost has been so much enhanced at home that we cannot compete with the foreign market. The proof of that is this: In 1860 we shipped to China about $11,000,000 worth of our cotton goods. The trade up to that date had been growing with great rapidity, and we had just got into that market. If that trade had continued in the same proportion, we should, by this time, have been exporting to China, under a normal state of things, $30,000,000 worth of cotton goods. That is a matter of opinion, but it is one that is justified by the facts of the case. Now, what are the facts? In 1872 we exported to China but $2,700,000 worth of cotton goods.

The CHAIRMAN. There is another explanation that may be given to that falling off. We had a very superior style of goods which we exported to China, and which were valued very highly there. The English manufacturers found out our trade-marks, counterfeited them, and put into the market a much inferior, but much cheaper style of goods, whereby they took the market away from us.

Mr. WALKER. That may be to some extent true. Not only is it the case in cottons, but also in boots and shoes. We were getting up a splendid trade in boots and shoes, which is the great manufacture of New England, and the greatest manufacture of the nation in point of amount. We were sending them to Australia, commanding a market there; we were sending them to South America, commanding a market there; and we were sending them to Canada, commanding a market there. Now, what is the fact to-day? The fact is that trade is almost annihilated, and there is no reason for it but the one which I have given.

Mr. HAWLEY. May I put in a reason? It is that we have had a big war, and have to pay big taxes, and that, aside from the depreciation of currency, production cannot be as cheap in this country as it used to be.

Mr. WALKER. That would be entering upon another question. But it is a well-settled point with economists that taxation does not raise general prices; that the prices are governed by the quantity of currency. Now, that can be as demonstrably shown as anything else.

Mr. HAWLEY. I think I pay more for my tobacco than I did before the war.

Mr. WALKER. I said "general prices." The price of tobacco is raised, but not to the amount of the taxation. If the tax is 50 cents, perhaps the price of the tobacco has been raised 45 cents. The whole taxation comes upon general commodities, the general price being the same. That is a matter that is demonstrable.

Mr. FARWELL. You think that this condition of things has damaged our manufactures so that we are not able to compete with foreign markets. Would it not be necessary for us, in order to be able to compete with other countries, to bring the price of our labor down to theirs?

Mr. WALKER. Not at all, because our labor was ten times as highly paid as labor was in China when we were shipping there $11,000,000 worth of cotton goods.

Mr. FARWELL. Must not the prices paid to operatives be correspondingly reduced in order that we should continue to export?

Mr. WALKER. The prices of labor would have to come down to their normal rate, or about where they were before the war.

The CHAIRMAN. Are you prepared to tell us whether the amount of cotton manufactured in this country has increased or diminished since the war?

Mr. WALKER. I have not the facts fresh here now. But I think there is no doubt that their manufacture has increased. The country is growing fast in population.

Mr. FARWELL. You say that on account of this redundant currency we have been prohibited competing with foreign nations. Does not the fact come in here that if our labor is paid in depreciated currency, the premium on gold received by our manufacturers comes in to balance the extra price?

Mr. WALKER. Only in part. I have recently by accident met the largest manufacturer in New England; one of the ablest, most intelligent men in the trade; the head of two vast manufacturing corporations of cotton goods. I said to him, "I want to know how much labor has advanced in your manufactories since the war?" He said, "We have ascertained that with very great care and precision, and we find it to be 56 per cent." And his is not skilled labor. A great part of it is performed by girls and boys who can in a fortnight do it as well as they can ever afterward.

Mr. FARWELL. Do you not regard it as a healthy sign to have the substrata of society well paid?

Mr. WALKER. Yes; but I should be more satisfied if, after you had paid them 56 per cent.

more for their labor, you did not have to charge them 75 per cent. more for everything that they consume.

Mr. FARWELL. Yes, if that is true.

Mr. WALKER. O, that is true. No one will deny that a dollar to-day does not buy more for all the general expenses of a family than sixty cents did before the war; and if that be so, the laborer does not gain by the change, but loses, as I suppose. This gentleman went on to say further that his supplies outside of cotton (because in cotton-factories a great variety of articles are consumed) averaged precisely the same advance of 56 per cent. I regard that as a most important fact, as showing that the advance is brought about under the action of a uniform law. This same gentleman says, "Before the war I used to come into Boston and sell my goods to the tea-merchant, who shipped them in American bottoms to China, and brought home the proceeds in teas in American bottoms." Now, the trade is almost entirely cut off. The whole shipment from this country was only 4,000 bales last year, while England sent 250,000 bales of the same goods that we should have sent. He says "that the English have imitated our styles, and they will have the market until we get it again; and we shall get it again," he says, "whenever we have a sound currency, not before."

Now, the committee will see that this state of the money-market entirely neutralizes protection. This man said to me that if we could have a sound currency we have all the protection that we want to compete with any part of the world, and I have had the same testimony from two of the largest hardware-manufacturers. Another manufacturer has said to me, "Give us a sound currency and freedom to get our commodities where we can get them to the best advantage, and we can send our goods to Birmingham and Sheffield, or to any market in the world. We are ready to enter into the most perfect competition." Now, if a depreciated currency neutralizes protection, I apprehend that that is an argument why those who favor protection should wish to have a sound currency.

The next interest that I mention is navigation. The committee is aware that that has fallen off immensely. The American tonnage that entered our ports in 1860 was in excess of foreign tonnage by 3,577,370 tons. In 1869 the foreign tonnage was in excess of the American by 1,924,000 tons, making a difference of 5,501,370. We have not only lost our own carrying-trade, but we cannot build ships; that is all out of the question. You may subsidize as much as you please. The money will be wasted, and that will be the end of it. As to establishing American commerce under the present currency, it is impossible.

Mr. HAWLEY. John Roach differs from you.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the business of ship-building been as prosperous any season for the last twenty years as it has been this last season?

Mr. WALKER. I am perfectly cognizant of the recent increase of business in ship-building. But what is the cause of that start? It is because there had been such a cessation of ship-building in this country, while there had not been any corresponding increase of ship-building in other countries; so that there is now a flurry in ship-building. But no man will say that we can compete with England in ship-building with such a currency as we have, and with our labor 60 per cent. dearer, (and 62½ per cent. of all the cost of building an iron steam-vessel goes to labor.)

Mr. HUNTER. Has not our ship-building increased more rapidly in the last two years than British ship-building?

Mr. WALKER. I have not the data. It may be so, but I do not think it is.

Now, as to our mining interests. How are they affected? I allude especially to the mining of precious metals. Since 1860 we have added to our paper currency at least $584,000,000.

Mr. FARWELL. Mr. Williams, of the Metropolitan Bank of New York, makes the increase much less. He makes it only $160,000,000.

Mr. WALKER. The reduced figure is obtained by trying to get the net amount in circulation; but if you take the net amount in circulation now and the net amount in circulation in 1860, I think I am right in my comparison of the two periods. The effect of this on the production of precious metals is that every paper dollar expels a gold dollar—takes the place of a gold dollar, and of course decreases demand for gold, and therefore decreases its value. England has done no such foolish thing as that. She has not changed her currency, her circulation being essentially the same to-day as it was in 1820. But we have done that thing, to the great disadvantage of our mining interests.

Mr. HUBBELL. It costs the English 30 cents a pound to lay copper in New York, while we do it at 27 cents. How do you account for that?

Mr. WALKER. Because we have the greatest facilities for producing it.

Now, we have not only introduced this enormous amount of paper currency, but Germany has 540,000,000 of thalers of paper currency, equal to $400,000,000, three-fourths of which, as Mr. Schurz informs me, has been created since the discovery of the mines; yet twenty years ago Germany had only 60,000,000 of paper currency. All that increase of paper money affects, of course, the value of gold, and hence I say that the depreciation in the value of gold, or, in other words, the rise in prices, of which we hear so much, is one half owing to the decrease in the value of gold, and the other half to the simultaneous increase of paper money.

Another great interest, and the most important interest of the country, is the most depreciated, namely, agriculture. Why? Because the farmer must sell his productions at what they are worth in gold to ship abroad, because there is an immense surplus in this country, and whatever the surplus is worth determines of course the price of the whole crop. The farmer, therefore, sells by the gold standard, plus the premium, and he purchases by the paper-money standard.

Mr. FARWELL. Does not that thing equalize itself? If the farmer sells his wheat in New York for gold, when he converts the gold into currency, does not the one balance the other?

Mr. WALKER. I hold myself responsible for anything I say. Now take it in the form of an illustration. A farmer, before the war, wanted to buy a pair of boots, and got them for the price of three bushels of wheat—a dollar a bushel. Now he pays four and a half dollars for his boots, and gets only a dollar a bushel for his wheat.

Mr. MERRIAM. Does he actually get the same price as he got before the war?

Mr. WALKER. The great staples are no higher than they were before the war; that is, they are at the same nominal price now in greenbacks that they were then in gold.

The CHAIRMAN. Then how do you say that the expenses of a workman's living have increased 75 per cent. if the great staples on which he lives are no higher than they were before the war?

Mr. WALKER. They are only a part of what he lives upon. I said that the general expenses of living were 75 per cent. higher. Laborers want all the common luxuries of life, and they have them.

Mr. FARWELL. May not that be attributable to other changes, and not attributable to the currency? You cannot name one thing, perhaps, which maintains a uniform price through a series of years, and that is not affected and regulated by the great law of supply and demand.

Mr. HAWLEY. This question settles it: Does it cost the farmer any more to live than it did in 1860? Does it not cost you 75 per cent. more than it did in 1860, if you live on the same scale? And yet the difference between currency and gold is only from 10 to 15 per cent.

The CHAIRMAN. But then the question arises: Does it cost the farmer as much to raise his wheat now as it did before the war, in view of the new processes by which production has been wonderfully increased? A gentleman told me in California two years ago that he saw 2,800 bushels of wheat reaped and sent right to the market in one day.

Mr. HUBBELL. I know a farm in Michigan which it used to take ten men to work, and now a farmer and two men raise more than was raised then.

Mr. WALKER. I have stated that the great staples are no higher than they were before the expansion. Mess beef, from 1863 to 1860, (three years,) averaged $12.17 per barrel, and from 1871 to 1873, $11.17 per barrel in currency. Mess pork, from 1858 to 1860, averaged $16.91, and from 1871 to 1873, $16.34. Corn averaged, from 1858 to 1860, 83 cents per bushel, and from 1871 to 1873, 77 cents. These prices are taken from the 1st of January of each year, as shown by the New York price-current. Flour, another important commodity, averaged for the three years from 1858 to 1860, $5.81 per barrel, and for the last three years, $5.12.

Now, as to transportation. The farmers of the West cannot have such cheap transportation as they ought to have, because the running expenses of railroads are increased enormously in consequence of the rise in prices both of labor and materials, and the first reformation that is needed is the restoration of good currency. Then the railroads can work at a fair price. By the foregoing it appears that the chief products of the chief industry of the nation bear a less price now in depreciated paper than they did in a currency at par with gold before the war. Thus the West bears the main brunt of loss arising from a depreciated currency, because its leading staples afford a surplus that must be exported. But all farmers suffer, East as well as West. The farmers in Worcester County, in Massachusetts, have told me that they cannot get 3 per cent. on their investments, and they say that they are leaving off agriculture because they cannot afford to hire labor to carry it on.

Mr. MERRIAM. Did they receive more than 3 per cent. before the war, after deducting the cost of their living?

Mr. WALKER. They were satisfied and prosperous then; now they are selling their farms to foreigners.

The CHAIRMAN. Has your attention been called to the cotton-crop?

Mr. WALKER. I have not said anything about cotton, because that crop is not in a normal condition. Its production is not as large as it was in 1860. It is now somewhat near 4,000,000 bales, whereas, if its production had increased in the same ratio as it did from 1850 to 1860, it would be over 11,000,000 bales. Its present condition is abnormal, owing to the great revolution of the labor in the South; but the South suffers just as much from the depreciated currency as the East or West does.

Now, I say that manufactures, mining, and agriculture all share in the loss, but the West is by far the greatest sufferer. The country suffers not only loss but dishonor. I maintain that it is a national disgrace that America, with the greatest resources of any nation in the world, having the greatest power for production and the greatest amount of capital, shall be put in the same category with Russia, Austria, Italy, Turkey, and other bankrupt governments. Our national credit, what is it? Is it equal to that of Great Britain? We pay two-thirds more interest. Our 5 per cents bring just the same price in the London market as the English 3 per cents.

Mr. MERRIAM. Does not that arise from the fact that all the funds belonging to the courts and to the great estates in Great Britain are invested in the 3 per cent. consols, and also that, being a home obligation, the price is kept up?

Mr. WALKER. I will admit that it is natural that British stock should be more salable in Great Britain than American stock; but is not the difference marvelous?

Mr. HAWLEY. The nature of the loan, too, is different. Ours is a five-twenty loan, and the English is an eternal one.

Mr. MERRIAM. Is it not a fact that our bonds bring higher prices in London than the bonds of any other nation except England?

Mr. WALKER. I have not got the stock-list here, and I shall not admit that such is the fact.

The CHAIRMAN. What are the English consols quoted at?

Mr. WALKER. The last quotation which I saw was about 92, and our five-twenties 92½ or 92½, more or less.

Mr. MERRIAM. Can you give us the amount of the British consols?

Mr. WALKER. They may be about $3,500,000,000. The national debt has long been about $4,000,000,000, but I think it is now down to about $3,800,000,000. Some of it exists in some other form than as consols, and therefore I would not be positive as to the amount of the consols.

Now, I should be somewhat mortified, on the 4th of July, 1876, to have our distinguished friends from abroad come here and be compelled to accept the ten-cent notes of the American Government, and these 10 per cent. below par. What is the remedy for all this? I answer, contraction. There is no other; there can be no other; there can be no evasion of it. The only question is, when and how. In reference to the first, I say it should be commenced at once, for the reason, which I have given, that all the great interests of the country are suffering, and especially its agricultural interests; there should be no delay.

How should the contraction be effected? I answer, first, it should be done in such a plain, reliable manner that the whole people can understand it. There should be no legerdemain about it; nothing but what common farmers can understand well.

2d. It should be done carefully and kindly, because the people should be injured as little as possible, and the public interests and the private interests disturbed as little as possible by the restoration.

3d. It should be done cautiously; that is, notice should be given when the process is to be commenced several months beforehand; and the reason of that is that those who owe debts on paper running to maturity should be able to pay them before the contraction should affect their obligations. That Congress can do. It can say, for instance, that it will commence on the 4th of July next. That would be in six months, and business-paper does not average more than about three months. Then, if it was done gradually, all existing paper would be paid at the old standard, and new paper would be made in view of the change, and therefore as little injustice as possible would be done.

4th. There should be a gradual but steady and certain process—so much per month, which will make the operation as imperceptible as it is possible to make it. I fancy that it would be nearly imperceptible as to time, and that there would be no period at which it could be said that there was any effect at all produced; but you would see the final result in the ultimate effect of the process.

5th. I say it should be automatic; that is, there should be no official interference. Nothing should be left discretionary with the public officers. Nothing can be more dangerous, foolish, and unwise than that; because the moment you give a public officer the authority to issue fifty, forty, or twenty millions when he pleases, you give him authority to speculate to any extent, or you allow his friends, who may be able to know what he is going to do, to speculate. We have had evidence enough of the wickedness of that already. It should be done in such a way that, the law once made, the thing would operate itself.

And, lastly, it should be voluntary on the part of the people. They were compelled to take the currency; they should not be forced to give it up. On the other hand, they should have the privilege of doing so if they choose. I hold to both parts of that proposition. Not a dollar need be taken arbitrarily from the people. They should only be allowed to fund their notes, according to the original promise, in the bonds of the Government. This whole amount of greenbacks nearly was forced out in the first place, but the people were allowed to fund them. They all got into circulation, however, after which they could not be withdrawn, the law permitting the funding of legal-tenders in United States bonds being repealed, (and that was one of the great mistakes of our financial policy.) The privilege was taken away, and it should now be restored on the principle of good faith, if there was not any other reason. Now, if these conditions are just, the mode adopted should answer to them.

I will detain the committee now only to notice some of the plans proposed in reference to the currency, and to indicate the one which seems to me best adapted to the purpose. The different projects already presented to Congress (and their name is legion) may be divided into three general classes: 1st. Those that contemplate expansion, like Senator Ferry's, who would have a circulation of $800,000,000. There is a great variety of them, but I shall say nothing in regard to them, as they seem to me preposterous and in the highest degree dangerous. 2d. Those who would limit the present issue to $356,000,000, or at farthest $400,000,000. Of these I need say little, since I have already spoken of the injurious influence of the existing redundancy on the general welfare of the country; but I insist that we cannot stand still. We have already commenced expansion, and every additional issue increases the danger: "Facilis est descensus."

The CHAIRMAN. Give us the other part, "sed revocare gradum."

Mr. WALKER. That would indeed be very hard. In this connection I would refer to Mr. Buckingham's plan for free banking, and others of the same sort. Free banking, what is it? Is it the borrowing and lending of money? That is banking strictly speaking, but the manufacturing of currency is not necessary to banking. To free banking there is no possible objection. Every man, every firm, every company, should bank just as much as they please; but the question of their manufacturing currency for the country is altogether another matter, and that they should never have been allowed to do. Free banking in connection with the present currency, if it is to expand it at all, I object to entirely on that ground, not on the ground that free banking is wrong. On the other hand, legitimate banking should be as free as the manufacturing of cotton goods or anything else.

Another project, and a somewhat conspicuous one, is interconvertible bonds interchangeable for legal-tenders back and forth. That, I observe, is a feature in a great many bills and speeches. These interchangeable bonds should be at 3.65. Now, of all the projects presented this seems to me the most objectionable, because, when these bonds were issued, who would want them? The people? The merchants? Not at all. Could they make any use of them? Not at all. They would never see or hear of them except as they might hear of them in Wall street among brokers. Speculators would want them, for they would be the best thing to promote speculation. You cannot confer a greater favor on those who make rings and corners than to pass a law of that kind, because they would at any time be able to hold funds bearing 3.65 per cent. interest accumulating in their hands all the time, and which they can present at any moment, get greenbacks for them, and go to the market on the other side of the corner.

Another project is that of purchasing gold. The proposition is made in some quarters, I believe, to purchase $200,000,000 to enable the Government to resume.

Mr. MERRIAM. That is exploded long ago.

Mr. WALKER. I hear speeches made about it nearly every day. I hope it is exploded, because it is an idle proposition.

I now come to the third category of those plans, which contemplate absolute contraction to a greater or less extent; and, first, I will notice that of Mr. Pierce, the new member from Massachusetts. By his plan the Secretary is to prepare $200,000,000 in legal-tender notes, and issue them at the rate of $5,000,000 per month; these notes to be redeemable in monthly installments of $5,000,000 per month after the 1st of January, 1875, and an equal amount of greenbacks to be canceled monthly.

Mr. HUNTER. I understand that the Government cannot issue legal-tenders now.

Mr. WALKER. I insist that Congress is as omnipotent to take in the currency as it was to put it out, and should take it in by the best process; and if it is the best process to issue such notes, Congress has the right to do it, and I have no question but that the Supreme Court would sanction it. These notes so issued are to be sold at auction, and because they are to be payable in gold, and as soon as issued, they would be of course worth some premium. Now, I object to that feature, because it would bring us into Wall street among the brokers and money-changers, while every sale of the notes would disturb the money-market. But my main objection to that plan is that it does not insure the restoration. Suppose the $200,000,000 put out, would the remaining currency be at par with gold, with $525,000,000 left where we had only $207,000,000 in 1860, the most prosperous year which we ever had in industry up to that time? I maintain with entire confidence that it would be an utter impossibility. Then, if specie payment was not restored, Congress would have the whole matter again under discussion. The thing would not be settled, only postponed forty months, (for it takes forty months to bring about that operation,) and then the whole thing would be discussed again as to-day. It ought to be settled now, so that everybody should know just where the beginning and end both are.

Another not very formidable objection is, that it makes a new kind of currency, and we have already five kinds authorized and several more talked of.

Another objection is, that the common people would never have anything to do with the matter. But there is one good feature in Mr. Pierce's bill, an admirable one, and that is, that it establishes a clearing-house, which I hold to be a sine qua non entirely indispensable. A clearing-house ought to have been established when we incorporated the national banks, but we did not do it, and that was a great mistake. Influences were against it then, and will be against it now, and I fear it cannot be done, and the whole currency system will be a perfect chaos. It is impossible to control the currency and to manage it, except every bank is made responsible for its notes. I saw the other day the president of a Saint Paul's bank, who said to me, "The circulation of my bank is $360,000; and upon my word I do not think there are $20,000 of the notes in the whole Valley of the Mississippi." They had all gone East, and that is the last that will ever be cared about them until some system of redemption is established by which it will be found out what the circulation of a bank is.

Mr. FARWELL. Did the gentleman speak of it as a hardship to his bank?

Mr. WALKER. No; but I mention it to show the folly of establishing banks in the West as a means of increasing circulation. The more banks you establish the less circulation you will have.

Mr. HUNTER. The difficulty is this: that the circulation of the western banks goes East, and that of the eastern banks goes West.

Mr. WALKER. That is because the people would have it so.

Mr. MERRIAM. The circulation goes where it is wanted, in obedience to the law of supply and demand.

Mr. FARWELL. What is your plan?

Mr. WALKER. The plan submitted by Senator Sumner. That is the plan which proposes voluntary contraction. This bill of Mr. Sumner's was submitted two years ago, and has been indorsed by the Boston Board of Trade and by the principal newspapers East and West. It was noticed two years ago in the Cincinnati, Chicago, and Louisville papers, and with high approbation. It proposes simply a substitution of compound-interest notes for the present greenbacks. The original bill proposed that $10,000,000 of these compound-interest notes should be issued each month, payable in three years and convertible in two years into ten-forty 5 per cents. The issue of them is proposed to commence on the 1st of July next. The interval between now and then would leave several months before the law would begin to operate, and then it will only operate at the rate of $10,000,000 a month; the interest to be 6 per cent. By the way, it is very important that the interest should be 6 per cent. Why? Because we wish to accomplish a given object. What is that? To cause a gradual but certain contraction of this currency; and to be sure of that you must have the interest at 6 per cent. When the bill for the original compound-interest notes was presented in 1863 in the House, of which I was then a member, the interest was proposed to be 3.65. I moved at once that instead of that measure they should issue $300,000,000 of compound-interest notes bearing 6 per cent. The matter was referred back to the committee, and it was carried unanimously in the committee and in the House, too; and it proved to be a very efficient measure. The compound-interest notes to be issued under Senator Sumner's bill are to be just like those notes which have been issued and paid. They are to be paid out for all Government dues. They would be paid out at the rate of $10,000,000 a month in every State from Maine to California, and would thus be scattered in the hands of the people if the law is faithfully executed.

Mr. HAWLEY. What denomination do you propose for these compound-interest notes?

Mr. WALKER. Five dollars and upward.

Mr. PHELPS. It would take all the clerical force in the Treasury to take charge of them if the denomination is made as low as $5.

Mr. WALKER. I think it might be just as well to have them at $20. They would naturally be hoarded. Every man and every woman who has a surplus of $20 would keep it in the shape of these compound-interest notes. They will be gradually funded after two years. They will be in effect a popular loan; that is, the loan will be taken by the people and not taken in Wall street. It is a measure perfectly analogous in its operation to the popular loan which Louis Napoleon issued some eight or ten years ago, and which produced such a wonderful change in all ideas of finance and funding. He just made that appeal, put his rentes, as they are called, down to 100 francs each, and they went all over France. The common people took them. Louis Napoleon raised his money, and might have had five times as much if he chose. That experiment showed that in all countries there is a large amount of funds lying around in the hands of the people which they would be very glad to invest in this way. It may be asked why they would not put their hoardings in savings-banks; but there is a very good reason for their not doing so. A person having some little money lying by may say, "I may want to use this money in a week or in a month; if I put it into a savings-bank for that time, it will draw no interest; but if I put it in these compound-interest notes, it will bear interest to the day I want to use it."

Then there is another consideration of very great importance. If that plan is adopted, and if there should become a hard pressure for money, (although I believe the effect will be just the opposite,) these compound-interest notes will go into circulation, and will make money plentier and the rate of interest lower, until it gets to the natural point. All danger of panic is entirely prevented, so far as these notes are concerned; for under a heavy pressure they will come right out again when money is at high rates of interest, as it is at times of panics. But there is not the slightest danger of any such result at all. Therefore this mode will effect the restoration of the currency almost imperceptibly, (quite so as to any particular time,) and without any hinderance to trade or any disturbance to the industry of the country. All that the people need and all that they should ask is to restore the currency to par with gold; and, when that is accomplished, the country will enjoy a higher degree of prosperity than was ever known in any period of its history. This must be so. The elements of prosperity in this nation are greater and more powerful than they have ever been before. The elements of prosperity are so immense that we are still a prosperous people, as compared to other nations, notwithstanding our bad currency; and yet we have not the prosperity which we should have if we had a currency at par with the currency of commerce.

Mr. FARWELL. It is claimed, however, that this very currency which you have criticised so severely is one of the prime causes of the great prosperity of the country.

Mr. WALKER. I have no doubt that it is so claimed ; but I suppose you do not believe it. Those who do believe it may enjoy their belief.

The CHAIRMAN. There are some very intelligent people who do.

Mr. FARWELL. And it is also claimed that the very contraction which you desire would check the prosperity of the country.

Mr. WALKER. That is a matter of opinion with which I do not agree.

Mr. HUNTER. Have we had as much prosperity in any term of years as since the war ?

Mr. WALKER. O, yes, I think so. I have had occasion to watch commercial matters for a long period, and I have been engaged in those studies and in business all my life. I think that the elements of prosperity are greater now than ever before, and that our only embarrassment is our terribly depreciated and disordered currency.

Mr. MERRIAM. In your part of the country is it a fact that the laboring classes are better dressed, better fed, better able to raise their families, and better able to buy little homes for themselves within the last ten years than ever before ?

Mr. WALKER. I would say not. I will tell you what I observe. I observe that there are more palaces and more cottages ; that the difference between the laboring classes and those who get the profits of labor is becoming wider and deeper. All over New England the mechanics who used to build two-story houses for their families now build one-story or one-and-a-half-story houses.

Mr. MERRIAM. What is the relative difference, now and before the war, of pauperism in your State ?

Mr. WALKER. I am not aware that there has been any increase or diminution.

Mr. FARWELL. You say that this depreciated currency has produced large prices for skilled and unskilled labor ?

Mr. WALKER. Yes ; it has increased the price of labor.

Mr. FARWELL. At the same time you say that in order to get back to the prosperous condition which you aim at, the price of labor has got to be reduced very much ?

Mr. WALKER. Yes.

Mr. FARWELL. And in another branch of your subject you state that corn and wheat, and flour and beef, which the laboring classes consume, are really less in price than they were then. That seems to be a very great contradiction.

Mr. WALKER. There you strike another point ; that is, that the farming interests are certainly depreciated as compared with other interests. What is the cause ? I have shown the cause. Labor is being driven from agriculture into manufactures. But manufactures are already supplied with labor, and therefore, even with our present currency, we are going to bring down the price of labor. The raising of wheat, the most profitable industry of the country, is not as profitable as it should be, in consequence of the currency.

Mr. FARWELL. If you reduce the price of daily labor to your standard, why not further reduce the price of grain in the same proportion ?

Mr. WALKER. Because the price of grain is decided by its market-value in Europe. That is the great fact which must be kept in mind—that we depend upon the markets of Europe entirely for the disposal of our surplus grain.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course the price of grain in Europe depends upon the crops raised there.

Mr. WALKER, [proceeding with his argument.] When the greenbacks are withdrawn gold will be at par, because the national-bank notes will be no larger in quantity than the wants of the country demand. The banks must supply themselves with gold, because there will be no other legal currency for their reserves. This plan brings the present currency at once under the laws of trade.

Mr. HAWLEY. Are your compound-interest notes to be legal tenders ?

Mr. WALKER. Certainly. There is no other plan of bringing the country directly under the laws of trade.

Mr. HAWLEY. As you fund them you open free banking ?

Mr. WALKER. Have as much free banking as you please when you have a sound currency.

Mr. HAWLEY. The moment you begin to fund there is then an actual contraction of the circulating-medium. Would you allow free banking to supply that vacuum ?

Mr. WALKER. Most certainly, if there is any vacuum. In conclusion, I say, this plan fulfills all the conditions for contracting the currency in the best manner :

- 1st. It is considerate of private interests.
- 2d. It is gradual, as consistent with the general good.
- 3d. It is complete, steady, and certain in its operation.
- 4th. It is voluntary on the part of the people.
- 5th. It is automatic. It requires no regulation, no tampering of officials.

By it the people are merely permitted, of their own motion, to restore the currency to par with gold. That is all they need. When accomplished, the country will enjoy a higher degree of prosperity than it has ever known in any period of its past history.

If the resumption of specie-payment is desired, if it is to be effected with the least disturbance to the industry of the country, I do not hesitate to say that the plan of substitution is by far the best that has yet been presented.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 3, 1874.

J. K. SANBORN, of Sandy Hill, N. Y., manufacturer of machinery for twenty years, appeared before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Please give us your views on the currency, its defects and their remedies.

Mr. SANBORN. In the first place, there is no standard of value; even values themselves cannot become standards. Values are the products of industry that are enjoyed in civilized life, and their abundance distinguishes it from savage, barbarous, or semi-civilized life. The subject of political economy I omit entirely. I consider currency as a representative of value and performing the office of exchange of values from the producer to the consumer. The amount required by any nation will depend on the amount of production and the territorial limits and facilities of exchange. The measure of the currency is some portion of the value of the productions. The measure of the value of the productions will at all times be the price of the labor and material that enter into that production, and the rate per cent. rents upon the property employed in production, which we are pleased to call real estate, and the fixtures employed. Besides this sum, an allowance should be made for an additional sum for the exchange of real estate and the payment of taxes, all of which must enter into and form a part in the consideration of the sum of the currency which a nation will use in a given time. Our annual productions do not fall short, at the present time, of eight billions. The amount of this which necessarily, in our division of labor, changes from the producer to the consumer, is not less than six billions of dollars. I think this may be exchanged with about one-half of its value, three billions. Productions require on the average about six months for their creation and transit. Besides this sum, an amount is required in payment of taxes, which in the United States amount to twelve hundred millions of dollars. The currency required to do this is about $300,000,000, the sums being about three months in transit from payer to payee.

The CHAIRMAN. This twelve hundred millions includes all taxes, national, State, county, and town?

Mr. SANBORN. Yes, all. Besides this, I will assume, which is mere assumption, that the real estate exchanged will require a sum of $300,000,000, making in all three billions six hundred millions, the sum of the representative of value in use in the United States required for the yearly transaction of business. Legislation has furnished of this amount about $500,000,000. The balance has been furnished by individual notes or obligations, promises to pay United States notes or national-bank notes within a given time. The payment of these notes has for the past two years kept the Treasury notes and the bank-notes all the time in use, and such has been the demand for these notes for this purpose, including the taxes, that interest has become high, so high that they could not be used with profit in any productive enterprise. In fact, they could not be got, being completely occupied in the payment of this species of representative of value, as a greater necessity in the order of business; and in September last they failed to do that, from the fact that the sum of currency was not sufficient. It became practically impossible, in the ordinary transaction of business, to pay these notes with the sum of the currency, and the people seized upon the currency, and put it away for their immediate and remote needs, as they deemed prudent. And this prudence, this operation, we have named panic. Practically the sum, upon an equal division, would be $12.50 a person to all the nation; and it is a matter which legislators may well consider, whether a people should not exercise so much prudence in the conduct of their economies as not to have in hand at all times so much money as $12.50. And they may make provision for this demand and add it to the sum I have before named, making the sum of all the currency required by our nation at the present time $4,100,000,000.

In 1860 our productions in sum-amount, as valued, were four billions, about one-half of the present sum-amount of the value of our productions. The entire valuation of the property of the nation was then $16,000,000,000. The valuation now exceeds $30,000,000,000. By this we perceive the amount of currency required is on the increase, and will be in the future, as the population increases from year to year, and as the productions, real estate, and taxes increase. What sum legislation shall fail to provide the people will supply of some quality or other, which will at times be less in value, as named upon the face, than that which legislation may furnish. When necessity compels the use of such a currency, productive enterprise is impeded, as it is on the contrary accelerated by having an amount of currency authorized by law in amount approximating or equal to the wants of the people. It is of the highest importance that production should have all the encouragement and protection that can be given it. The sure incentive to production is a good price, and the payment in money for the same when it is produced. You may ask if there may not be an overproduction. Not so long as our own importations shall exceed our exportations. You may say that so large an amount of currency will increase prices. It is not the quantity of the currency that enhances prices and makes fictitious values, but the quality. Prices are made more or less, as the demand may be more or less, or the quantity less or more, of a particular article at any given time. High prices always encourage production, and will increase till demand is satisfied and lower prices succeed. You may ask if so large a sum of currency will not excite speculation. With a sufficient amount of such currency, of such a quality as we now have, all speculations would be harmless, from the fact that they would be made by the use of money and would not impede productions. The producer would be paid for his products when made, which would enable him to continue his operations, and the national wealth would all the time augment. The speculator could not, under any false pretense, obtain his values by the use of any fictitious representative of value. Gold has not been considered a representative of value in this computation, from the fact that it has ceased to be a representative of value, so far as the exchange of products has been concerned, and has not been used in the exchange of products as such for the last ten years.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you limit that remark to this country or to the world?

Mr. SANBORN. To this country, of course. Gold is itself a production, and in price is governed by laws of trade. When the demand is great, prices advance. When the demand lessens, so does the price of gold. As a commercial commodity, the demand for it is just in proportion as our imports exceed our exports and the demands for it by Government to pay interest. The price of it above its stamped or nominal value is fictitious, and is due to the supposed transactions with it in Wall street, not to the real. Were these supposed transactions suppressed, the price could not exceed its par value; and was the balance of trade in our favor, it would not be equal to our national currency in sum-amounts. As demand for it has its source in the excess of our imports over our exports, and by Government in demanding it in payment of its dues, it is plain that were our imports on the decrease, and were the payments on our national indebtedness on the decrease, the demand for gold would be on the decrease, as it has been most clearly demonstrated by the last ten years' experience. Gold has not been a necessity to our domestic commerce. So far as dealings in gold in Wall street are concerned, except as to the sum of the balance of trade against us, which would not probably ever be but a comparatively small sum, gold is not at all necessary. You may ask if I do not consider that our currency should have a gold basis. Gold for a currency would never be used in preference to paper. Experience has taught that. A banking system founded upon specie, in control of bank-officers entirely, would not be so safe nor supply the needs of commerce so well as a system having for its basis a Government bond payable in gold, held by the Government as security for the redemption of its notes. Experience has taught us that this bond should bear but a small rate of interest, and be convertible and reconvertible, to give to the currency elasticity.

The CHAIRMAN. The question, as it has been presented to the committee, is not between a currency resting upon Government securities under the national banking system and a currency resting upon a specie basis in the hands of private bankers, but whether the national currency, in addition to the support it derives from the public credit, should not also be made convertible into specie at the pleasure of the holder. That is the point exactly that is presented for our particular consideration. I would like to know your opinion.

Mr. SANBORN. It is a very desirable point to attain.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it better for the country to attain that?

Mr. SANBORN. To be sure it would be. Should we depend on a banking system for all our currency? It is evident from experience that we should not. It gives the power to make money scarce and high to those who have the monopoly of its sale. Experience has taught that they use that power to impede domestic production and render industry non-remunerative. The demand for currency will be the most satisfactorily supplied by the issue of United States notes redeemable in a bond bearing a small rate of interest and reconvertible at the option of the holder and payable at the option of the Government as to time before a given date in gold.

Mr. PHELPS. Do you want these Government bonds made a legal-tender?

Mr. SANBORN. Certainly so.

Mr. PHELPS. Suppose by the decision of the Supreme Court you cannot?

Mr. SANBORN. Then I would do the next best thing possible to produce the most production in the country; I would not attempt an impossibility. I have not considered the subject of foreign commerce, because it is not to the interest of the nation to encourage it to the detriment of home productions. Importation of all articles not entering into our home products, or articles which our people are engaged in manufacturing, should not be encouraged. All possible encouragement should be given to home productions until we produce all we consume and have a surplus to sell for gold to pay our national debt. Experience has also taught us no agent is so powerful to accomplish this as a sufficient supply of a good currency. Have the profits of production good, and speculations will cease or become harmless in a national point of view. An increase of national currency will not be an increase of the representative of value, but will place in the hands of the people a good currency or representative of value for the poor one that has of necessity been put into use and has caused all our financial trouble. That will not be inflation.

Mr. MERRIAM. Do you mean by "poor currency" paper credit?

Mr. SANBORN. Yes; individual notes, bank-checks, and all that species of a representative of value; that is nothing but a bore to a business man.

Mr. PHELPS. You do not propose to do away with checks and bills of exchange, do you? It certainly is more convenient for a man in Chicago to pay a man in New York by means of a check.

Mr. SANBORN. I would rather he would send me a Government bond that the state is obliged to pay than his own.

Mr. PHELPS. You do not suppose that business-men all over the country will ever do it, do you?

Mr. SANBORN. I do. When there is a sufficient amount of currency for the business of the country they will do it.

Mr. PHELPS. Do you suppose in New York City, where the business is $105,000,000 on the average daily, it will be settled by currency, if there were any amount of it, rather than by checks?

Mr. SANBORN. No. In a large commercial city like New York, where the business is concentrated, where perfect confidence is had as to the integrity and real value possessed, the bank-check or bill of exchange will pass as a representative of value.

Mr. PHELPS. Do you not suppose that the men of New York are as familiar with the business capacity, integrity, and honesty of business-men all through the nation as they are with each other?

Mr. SANBORN. No, sir. An increase of currency will not be inflation till it is equal to the demand for it in the exchange of productions from the producer to the consumer. If it be in excess, it will return to the Treasury for the bonds, and remain there for the use of the people for whom it was made.

Now, in regard to the remark as to the use of individual notes, I will give my practical experience. I have in my pocket three or four hundred dollars of checks given me by individuals, due since last October. I have always had them more or less. I never found them any advantage to me as a producer. It was always to the advantage of the individual who gave them, or to the bank, but not to myself.

Mr. PHELPS. These checks you assume are not good. Men have drawn them against money they have not in the bank.

Mr. SANBORN. I know they failed to be paid.

Mr. PHELPS. Would not the same thing occur in regard to the currency you speak of; would not there be counterfeit money as well as counterfeit checks?

Mr. SANBORN. We presume that the Government will provide against counterfeits.

The CHAIRMAN. You assume that the amount of products is eight billions as a starting point. You then proceed with a proposition that 75 per cent. of this passes from the producer to the consumer, making the actual business of the country to be six billions; you estimate that one-half that amount is needed in currency?

Mr. SANBORN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. How much of that would you have in the form of a circulating-medium, or would you have it all?

Mr. SANBORN. Whatever amount legislation does not furnish the people will furnish, and that will be of inferior quality. In 1863, 1864, 1865, in my business, which was small, amounting to about $40,000 a year sales, I was not offered an individual note. All that I could make was called for and paid for in cash as soon as I could deliver it. It was so with all my neighbors about me—the lumber, paper, iron, and leather manufacturers. In 1866 there came to be offered some paper, a small amount; in 1867 still more; in 1868 yet more. Then I saw, by the restrictions placed upon our currency, that a panic was inevitable unless there was a change. I warned my neighbors and stopped myself and refused to sell. My business went down from $56,000 to $2,000, and I have stopped. It was all notes this last year. I was not offered, I think, but a solitary $100. In 1871 I began to make inquiries as to the amount others were receiving in notes for their products, and I found that their experience was mine. This last season I have been engaged in that a considerable portion of my time. I have made it a point to find out how much they were receiving in notes in different branches of trade. I find in the leather manufacture, which is a cash article, that no more than 20 per cent. was paid in money; in iron manufacture no more than 20 per cent. was paid in money, the balance in notes. In the lumber-business not more than 10 per cent., and some men said there was nothing paid. In cotton manufacture no more than 20 per cent. was paid in money, the balance in notes.

The CHAIRMAN. How long would those notes run?

Mr. SANBORN. Three, six, and eight months, and sometimes twelve months. I asked the largest dealer in the leather-business that I was acquainted with if they were paid at maturity, at three or six months, and he said not more than one-half, the balance went by default; some, he said, were re-acknowledged for three months.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that true of all branches of industry?

Mr. SANBORN. Yes.

Mr. MERRIAM. Would not this increase of credits naturally arise from the confidence that men have in each other in doing business, no matter what amount of currency you have?

Mr. SANBORN. I can answer that by my experience in 1865. We had then as much confidence as we could have in each other, and there was no offer of anything but money, and there would not be now were the currency sufficient. Then the whole population would be employed. All would have plenty to eat and drink; good houses to live in, and all would go merry as a marriage-bell.

Mr. FARWELL. What were the comparative prices of the articles of your production in the years 1863, 1864, and 1869?

Mr. SANBORN. In my business my prices were higher. I was doing what we call a spe.

ciality. As a general thing there was not much difference in prices. Some things were down.

Mr. FARWELL. Is it not a fact that in 1864 prices were four or five times higher than now?

Mr. SANBORN. Some things, not everything, because there were some articles that were nowhere. There was no demand for them. The calling of so many men to the war took out a large amount of labor and made labor scarce, and the demand became, from the shortness of the amount produced, very great, and the prices went up. Money had nothing whatever to do with it. It was simply demand.

The CHAIRMAN. May not these facts prove something else than a deficiency in currency? May not the country at large have been spending too much, creating an adverse balance, living above its means?

Mr. SANBORN. Not at all so far as our country is concerned. If what we consume within the country is produced in the country, it can have no national effect whatever. It cannot produce any evil effects. Its effects are beneficial. If they are bought abroad and bought on credit, and have to be paid for, then it is different. But the balance of trade has been growing in our favor, showing that the industry of our people is operating with all force.

The CHAIRMAN. Suppose I build a very costly house; I employ my neighbors to do the work of various kinds. I apply to others for materials, and in that way create a large number of debts. I begin by paying money for everything; after a while that is exhausted, and I begin to give my checks, due-bills, notes, or whatever you call them, and as the house goes on I find it is necessary to ask an extension of these notes. There has nothing been expended but what is produced in the neighborhood; but has not the expenditure been in excess of the production by the use of credit in that way, and an indebtedness incurred which, when pay-day arrives, will wind up in a panic as you call it?

Mr. SANBORN. The way you state it would lead one to suppose such would be the fact. But as a national thing it has no effect. It has a local effect and operates severely on you; but if you had not been allowed to issue that class of notes, you could not have got your house built.

The CHAIRMAN. Has not something of this kind in the way of providing luxuries, &c., been going on in this country since the war, and now pay-day has come, hence the trouble?

Mr. SANBORN. From my observation and experience I can state that from the year 1862 to 1868 there were more real values added to the then values of the United States than in double the number of years at a prior date, and more than there has been since. I know that for the last two or three years men have been struggling to carry on their manufactories. If indebtedness has been incurred, it is not for articles of luxury, but for that which has entered into production and has been disposed of, and for which they hold in their hands these individual representatives of value, for which they should have Government representatives of value.

Mr. FARWELL. Your plan is to abolish the national banks?

Mr. SANBORN. O, no; but I should not depend on the national banks for all our currency. We should have the national-bank currency and the greenbacks operating together. If you depend on the national banks, they will lock up their currency, as you can see by the manner in which they are formed, to make money high and keep it away from the producer.

Mr. DURHAM. The West produces more than the East, yet the money settles down in the Middle and Eastern States. How do you account for that?

Mr. SANBORN. It is very plainly accounted for. Labor produces all value. There is no other process of obtaining value only through labor. Currency is the representative of it. Follow the natural process and you will find the reason for this fact, for it is a fact. Your land out West is parceled out, broken, and cultivated. That has to be paid for. That is value. It is the same as though there were so much gold buried in the ground on which you can only draw the interest. In other words, it is real estate.

Mr. DURHAM. The ground and buildings of the eastern manufacturer are so much gold too. But let them start equally, and in two years the eastern man will have doubled up, and he will have three-quarters of the money. Why is it that it floats off to the East?

Mr. SANBORN. I can give you an opinion. I live East, two hundred miles from New York. I have been selling to the West since 1853, furnishing them saw-mills to cut their timber. I build my mill and ship it to them. They pay me and pay for its transportation if they can in their products. Where is their market? They must send their lumber down East. They have to pay transportation both ways. Now that consumes their profits, and they clear less than the man at the East, who sells his products close at home where the population exists. Where the population is, there is the consumption. Hence the money piles up at the East.

Mr. DURHAM. Then the manufacture of the East has the advantage over the agriculture of the West. Do you account for that from the density of the population?

Mr. SANBORN. Entirely. But the whole capital of the East employed in manufactures for the last two years has not produced an interest of 2 per cent. Nor has the capital of the Middle States produced, with the exception of iron for a short time, 1 per cent., and many times it has lost 10, 15, and even 20 per cent. One thing more in regard to the flow of currency. When you western men buy in the Eastern States that which you do not produce yourself, you send your money to New York for that article. If it is not produced there, your money is sent to Europe, and that amount impoverishes the country. If it remains in the East, it increases the capital there. With plenty of currency, manufactures will spring up in the West where there is population to support them, in places like Saint Paul, Saint Louis, &c. It is the best thing in the world to have abundance; but if we buy by running in debt, we are extravagant. If we make our material at home, it helps the making of another article. I can manufacture my mills for 30 per cent. less than I could twenty years ago.

The CHAIRMAN. Then if you made your mills at the West the expense of making them would stay there?

Mr. SANBORN. Yes. I went West in order to do it in 1853, at Detroit, but I found labor was so high I could not.

Mr. MERRIAM. You say labor produces all the wealth?

Mr. SANBORN. Certainly.

Mr. MERRIAM. Would there be any value to what you produce if it were not consumed?

Mr. SANBORN. Certainly not; but if labor has not produced what it has consumed, it is a drone.

One thing more: There is no such thing as a standard of value. It does not exist. Take a bushel of wheat; at one time it is valued at $2 in gold. The gold represents the wheat. The wheat is the value the gold represents. Well, to-day it is a fair exchange for me to take the wheat for the gold. A year rolls around. Two dollars in gold will not buy the wheat. I demand four dollars and I am going to get it, for you are growing hungry all the time. Where is your standard then? It is the same with every commodity that is an article of consumption by the people.

THE EQUALIZATION OF LEGAL-TENDERS AND BANK-NOTE CURRENCIES WITH THAT OF GOLD FOR ALL COMMERCIAL PURPOSES.

Argument of C. P. Culver, attorney, before the Committee on Banking and Currency, February 1, 1874.

Mr. CHAIRMAN AND GENTLEMEN OF THE COMMITTEE: It is not without a proper sense of appreciation of your courtesy for thus permitting me to appear before you to-day in advocacy of a financial scheme which we claim has peculiar merits, and which, I trust, I shall be able to present so clearly to your minds that you too will be impressed with the feasibility and importance of the plan.

You have doubtless had pressed upon your notice many and diversified plans for the regulation and equalization of the paper currency of the country with that of gold coin. The very fact that there exists such a diversity of opinion among the great financial minds of the country at this time is prima-facie evidence that there exists chronic disease within the financial system of the United States; and so deep-seated is that disease, and so diversified are its effects, that it has so far baffled the skill of the learned financial surgeons and physicians who have been and are now treating the patient. The fact is they have attempted to cure the patient by the use of quack remedies, instead of laying the knife at the root of the disease and at once exterminating it. The country must now look to you and to Congress to apply the remedy; and with the view of affording you the widest possible range of scientific remedies from which you are to select, I present, as the attorney for another, the following plan or plans.

It may be well, however, to state just here that there are three plans in the papers which I shall submit, but which compose, in my judgment, parts of a general plan for one indivisible whole.

I will merely add, before proceeding to present the plan or plans, (that you may carry the fact along in your minds as I proceed,) that they do not contemplate any grave or extended legislation by Congress, excepting a recommendation to the Secretary of the Treasury, in the form of a joint resolution, authorizing him to adopt and put into operation the plans as here proposed in case they were to be adopted.

I will here make an introductory statement, as indispensable to a correct understanding of the plan, of the pecuniary injury to the public and national credit from the mode adopted by the United States Treasury of selling gold coin. This is rendered necessary in order that you may see the force of the remedies I shall submit.

The people of the United States who own the gold coin in the United States Treasury have the first right that their pecuniary interests collectively should be most regarded and benefited by the mode selected by the Treasury of selling Treasury gold coin.

The Secretary's mode of selling Treasury gold has been and is to sell it by tender to gold-dealers and to the highest bidder. By that mode of selling Treasury gold, the people have hitherto received little or no benefit, and the gold-dealers and resident bondholders within the United States have received all the profit derivable from a forced scarcity of gold within the United States, and the combination of gold-capitalists to increase its price.

The Treasury mode of selling gold to the highest bidder is the great first cause of the depreciated value of the legal-tender currency, and has (as the result of such depreciation) created the funding of a large amount of the five-twenty-bond debt.

The law declares that the legal-tender currency shall be "good for everything except payment of interest on the public debt and for payment of customs-dues," and thus makes it the standard of value for all other purposes. It is therefore evident that when the Secretary of the Treasury sells the gold (the property of the people) at any higher rate of value than par with legal-tenders, or in exchange for any other paper currency than legal-tenders, he directly depreciates the value of the national currency, gives a fictitious value to gold for all necessary purposes within the United States, fosters gold-gambling throughout the United States, and depresses the gold value of all United States bonds in Europe to their present quotation.

The Treasury system of selling gold to gold-dealers and speculators is not a necessity, unless to make money for the Treasury at a less degree of profit than the people are injured pecuniarily by such sales by the excessive prices of imports when retailed. It does not enable the people as consumers or purchasers of imported goods, paying gold duties, to obtain them at a cheaper rate, but, on the contrary, perpetuates the war-prices of imported goods, continues the depreciated value of the national currency, and prevents that return to specie payment by the Treasury and the banks which is practicable and alone necessary to benefit the people and raise the national credit, at home and abroad, to the highest standard of value.

The ostensible reason for selling Treasury gold is to supply the merchants with coin to pay customs-dues or to keep down the price of gold, but neither of these objects is secured by the Treasury mode of selling to gold-dealers in large amounts, or selling to them to any extent; for it at once enables and facilitates the export of gold sold to them, and thus diverts the gold from the intended purpose of supplying merchants with coin for the payment of customs-dues, thereby also increasing its price and preventing the return of the gold sold to the national Treasury as customs-dues.

The system of selling Treasury gold to gold-dealers directly creates and supplies private gold-capitalists as rival hoarders of gold coin to the national Treasury, and enables them to create gold-gambling "corners," and by combination to oppress the importing merchants, and consequently the people as purchasers.

Hence the Treasury system of selling Treasury gold at a premium, or in exchange for mixed paper currency, produces the following injurious results:

1st. It induces and enables the New York banks, as the largest holders of unemployed currencies, to purchase, through gold-dealers, the Treasury gold when sold weekly, and, being able to overhold the gold bought, to keep up its selling-price, and to sell it and their private bank-specie with profit to themselves and to the pecuniary injury of the public.

2d. It is the sole cause and means of existence of the New York Gold Exchange Board and of the daily sales of gold therein, the fictitious amount of gold sold, and the equally fictitious value of gold at such sales.

3d. It renders all national banks the constant opponents of specie payment from the daily profits they derive from the gold they sell (through brokers) in the gold-markets, and from currency loans to brokers to enable them to buy gold, bonds, and stocks at fictitious values for speculating purposes.

4th. It has produced and still insures a daily diversion of the volume of the currency in New York City from commercial and industrial purposes to that of gold-gambling and bond and stock gambling sales to the amount at least of ten millions daily.

5th. It causes the constant high price of money to the mercantile public for all commercial and industrial purposes, and enables the banks or private capitalists to extort terms beyond legal interest for loans, and induces and enables the maritime city banks to lend profitably to stock and gold brokers preferentially to the mercantile community.

6th. It throws into the gold-market in every maritime city on the Atlantic seaboard for gambling purposes, and at a fictitious value in currency, (the supply of coin for customs-dues being at all times greater than the demand for it,) all the gold coin in private hands in those cities, and, by the profits derived from such gambling sales, creates and strengthens opposition of gold and currency capitalists to any idea or mode of resuming specie payment, no matter how practicable and necessary it may be for the interests of the working classes and the restoration of the national credit at home and abroad.

We come now to speak of the pecuniary loss and injury to the United States Treasury, to the national credit, and to the people of the United States from the system of selling Treasury gold at a premium in currency.

By selling Treasury gold in exchange for any other paper currency than legal-tenders, and at par value therewith, the Treasury directly and continuously depreciates the value of the legal-tenders and consequently the gold value in Europe of United States bonds. It also creates and sustains the New York gold-market and all the gold-gambling and stock-jobbing that constantly absorbs one-fourth of the volume, or $191,419,750, of the paper currency of the United States, which, when added to the 12½ per cent. discount on the volume of the paper currency, makes $237,129,625 of non-productive currency to the country.

By selling Treasury gold in exchange for the two paper currencies, the national-bank note is improperly made the equal in value with the legal-tender, (i. e., when both are accepted at par value for gold sold by the Treasury,) the legal-tender being in fact and by law made the standard of value in exchange either for Treasury gold sold or United States bonds bought in by the Treasury, and is by law made the superior in value to the national-bank note in that it is by law the equivalent of gold as a specie-payment fund for all the national banks to protect them from specie payment on demand and bankruptcy.

By selling Treasury gold at any premium, in either or both currencies, it completely disables the Treasury from rendering the immense surplus of coin in the Treasury constantly productive of any pecuniary benefit to the people, or available to increase the national credit in Europe, or to promote specie payment to any extent, either by the Treasury or by the national banks, the latter being impossible so long as the Treasury sells gold coin at a higher value than par in exchange for legal-tenders. It prevents the Secretary of the Treasury from ascertaining the limit to which contraction of the volume of the legal-tender currency might take place without embarrassing trade, commerce, or local improvements, and it does so by the use and diversion of more than one-fourth of the volume of the currency in New York to gold and stock-jobbing sales for speculative purposes only.

By the Treasury system of selling gold to gold-capitalists, and at a premium, and for any other currency than legal-tenders, the Treasury is obliged to pay out annually and unnecessarily at least $60,000,000 in gold coin for interest on the bond debt owned and held by residents within the United States, when, if by Treasury management and action, United States Treasury gold coin and United States currency were made of equal value, the gold-market throughout the United States would be shut up, unless for export purposes, and the legal-tender currency would then be preferred as payment for the interest on bonds held within the United States.

By reason of the mode of selling Treasury gold, United States bonds have been bought in by the Treasury since March, 1869, to the extent of $383,500,000, and have cost the Treasury about $57,500,000 in currency more than the face amount of the bonds, while during the same time (a period of nearly five years) $2,400,000,000 worth of imported duty-paying goods have cost the people of the United States (as purchasers and consumers of imports) $385,000,000 more in currency expenditure than they should have paid if gold coin and currency had been equalized in value by the management and action of the United States Treasury.

For want of such equalization of value by Treasury action, the importing merchants of the United States require to use from 10 to 20 per cent. of their business capital to pay for gold coin (to dealers) to enable them to pay customs-dues.

Hence there is annual currency expenditure or loss by importers of $38,000,000; that is, 20 per cent. on $190,000,000 of customs-duties paid in gold coin annually, approximately.

The diversion of $28,000,000 of mercantile capital from commercial and importing purposes involves an annual loss to the United States Treasury of $20,000,000 in coin as customs-duties on one-tenth of the gross value of imports annually estimated approximately at $400,000,000. And yet the imports for the past fiscal year were over $642,000,000.

RULES FOR THE GOVERNMENT OF THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY IN THE ADOPTION OF THE PLANS.

In order to equalize the value between gold coin and the legal-tender currency, and to establish permanently specie payment of that currency for commercial purposes of the United States, the following rule of action by the Secretary of the Treasury is necessary:

1st. That the Secretary of the United States Treasury should at all times be the arbiter of the value in paper currency of Treasury gold coin, when sold or intended for sale by the Treasury, and not any outside gold-gambling market.

2d. That the Secretary should therefore determine, fix, and advertise, before its sale, the lowest selling-price of the Treasury gold coin intended to be sold by him, and nothing higher should be accepted.

3d. That the Treasury should not sell gold coin to banks, gold-dealers, or brokers at any price, excepting under restrictions, because such sales enable the gold sold to be exported or hoarded by capitalists to rival the Treasury as the largest gold-holder, or to increase its selling-price to importers, to their oppression pecuniarily, and of course to that of the public as purchasers of imported goods.

4th. That the Secretary should not sell Treasury gold by tender or to the highest bidder or to any bidder for it, because he thereby is accessory to the depreciation of the legal-tender currency and of the national credit.

5th. That the Secretary should sell Treasury gold coin only to the importing merchants in New York City, and to the amount required by them respectively for payment of customs-dues, and for that purpose only, and daily, by any of the three plans hereto annexed.

6th. That he should establish and advertise such daily gold-sales to importers only, and at first in exchange for legal-tender currency, and at a certain price in that currency, determined on by him, and advertised as the selling-price of Treasury gold coin to importers only, during each week.

7th. That he should gradually reduce the selling-price (in exchange for legal-tenders) of Treasury gold coin each week, (by a fall of from 3 to 6 per cent. each week, as he elects,) until he determines on and advertises par in legal-tenders as the selling-price of Treasury gold coin to importers only.

8th. That the Secretary should receive mixed currency from importers, in exchange for the Treasury gold sold to them, (by any of the three plans hereto annexed,) when the value of the legal-tender currency has appreciated to par by the demands created for it daily from the banks in New York by the importers.

9th. That the Secretary should pay for bonds purchased for the Treasury in legal-tenders, and as par value only in that currency, and that its amount daily received should be returned into circulation as the purchase-money of bonds for the Treasury, weekly, biweekly, or monthly, as determined on by him.

10th. That the Secretary can and should affect the daily gold-sales to importers only, in New York, (or in any other city in which he introduces the plan,) by using or adopting either of the three plans annexed hereto.

11th. That the Secretary should endeavor to prevent the export of gold coin by importers for payments in Europe, by reselling to them weekly, at a certain price advertised previously, a certain amount of the 5-20 bonds (or 3-65, if issued,) purchased for the Treasury account, and in exchange for legal-tenders only at par value, thereby lowering the rate of exchange on England to importers, and promoting the increased coin-value of United States bonds on the London stock exchange, as the result of such specie payment, permanently secured by the United States Treasury.

These bond-sales by the Treasury to importers, (weekly, biweekly, or monthly, as determined on as necessary for importers' interests,) it will be observed, would, by the demands for legal-tenders to obtain them, tend to doubly or rapidly appreciate their value to par, and enable the Secretary to determine, within the United States, the value of the national currency and of the national bond-debt, according to the plenitude of money available for investments, and the rate of interest required for its use in the New York money-market.

If the Secretary has not power to resell bonds purchased for the Treasury, it could be obtained from Congress.

Specie payment by the United States Treasury of the legal-tender currency, for the purpose of supplying importers only with gold coin for payment of custom-dues, has been for years past and is now alone necessary, either to terminate the trade in gold coin within the United States or to promote and increase the national prosperity and credit, until the balance of trade is turned against Europe. And the three annexed plans for specie payment by the United States Treasury, in all the maritime cities on the Atlantic seaboard, for that purpose, are submitted as the most practicable and desirable, and indeed the only modes of resuming specie payment within the United States.

To secure and maintain such specie payment requires only the temporary use and application of $12,000,000 of Treasury gold coin monthly, which, when made to rotate from the Treasury to the banks and importers, and from them back to the Treasury again, is always tangible by the Treasury, its export is prevented, and its application by the plans proposed appreciates at once the legal-tender currency to par value with gold, (by the demand created for it,) and raises immediately United States bonds in Europe to par with gold.

This mode of specie payment by the Treasury, and of equalizing the value of the legal-tender currency with that of gold coin, can be effected without legislation, as I stated in the outset, by the Treasury adoption of either of the three plans relating to the legal-tender currency, annexed hereto, and numbered 1 to 3.

We come now to the author's Specie-Payment Plan No. 1, to make the surplus gold in the United States Treasury constantly interest-bearing to the public and the Treasury, while tangible by the latter at all times, this plan being equivalent to specie payment of the legal-tender currency for commercial purposes, without being specie payment on demand generally.

As the selling-price of gold coin in New York City determines its price in every other city of the United States, and as the amount of gold coin to be sold during the month by the United States Treasury has been announced by order of the Secretary of the Treasury, let the Secretary order the United States subtreasury in New York to sell only to the importers therein, of duty-paying goods, the amount of the Treasury gold coin advertised or desired to be sold, and to sell it in such amounts only as are set forth and specified in the permit and customs-receipt for such duties, as payable therefor, and at par value with and in exchange for legal-tender currency, or at such other rate of value therein as the Secretary shall determine shall be the daily rate of value during each week, or at par value in both paper currencies in equal amounts thereof, or at a gradually and daily or weekly descending rate of value, (from the first selling-price of Treasury gold coin to importers, as fixed by the Secretary's order,) until par value in legal-tenders or in mixed currency is declared by the Secretary of the Treasury as the rate of value for Treasury gold coin when sold by the Treasury to importers only.

Let the permit and receipt for such duty as the importer desires to pay be officially filled up, excepting the signature to the receipt, and be produced by the applicant for the gold coin required to the cashier of the subtreasury of the United States at New York.

Let such Treasury gold-sales to importers only in New York City and the rate of exchange therefor in legal-tenders only or in mixed paper currency be advertised one week in advance of such sales, and then let such sales take place daily, biweekly, triweekly, on consecutive days or on alternate or specified days, as the Secretary of the United States Treasury may select and determine on.

The following form of notice to importers would probably answer the purpose :

"Notice is hereby given to importers of foreign goods subject to payment of gold duties in the city of New York that on and after the — day of — instant, and until further notice, the United States subtreasury (or assistant treasurer) at New York will sell daily, to such importers only, gold coin in exchange for legal-tender currency only, at the rate of — in legal-tenders for each one hundred dollars in gold coin, and to such amount only as shall be set forth officially in the usual customs-permit and receipt for the amount of duties in such permit specified, such permit and receipt to be produced by the importer at the cashier's department of the United States treasury in New York."

I will next give you the author's Specie-Payment Plan No. 2. This is an alternative plan of specie-payment by the United States Treasury for commercial purposes, without the actual disbursement of coin.

Let the Secretary of the Treasury order the subtreasurer of the United States in each maritime city in which customs-dues are receivable (beginning in New York) to sell to the importers only in such city, gold coin for the payment only of customs-dues, in such amounts as shall be specified in the customs-permit and receipt produced by the applicant for the gold coin.

Let the subtreasurer, for the purpose of such sale, issue to the importer a Treasury gold-check for the amount of gold required for payment of the duties stated in the permit, such check to be made payable only to the collector of customs in the city in which the check issues, and to be indorsed on its face as "not transferable."

Let the check issue on receipt of legal-tender currency at par value with gold, or at such other rate of value as the Secretary of the Treasury shall determine on and direct, or in exchange for mixed paper currency at such rate of value as the Secretary shall order as the selling-price of Treasury gold to importers.

Let such Treasury gold-sales be equal in amount to the average amount of customs-dues received weekly in New York, and be made daily; and the currency rate of value for Treasury gold or "not transferable" Treasury gold-checks or certificates for the ensuing week be advertised by the subtreasury for public information weekly in advance of their issue.

Should par value for legal-tenders not be the rate fixed by the Treasury during the first sales, then at such rate of exchange daily or weekly as the Secretary shall determine shall be the rate, until he gradually fixes par value in legal-tenders as the future rate of exchange for Treasury gold when required for payment of customs-dues by importers to importers only for that purpose.

Let the Secretary of the Treasury, after the demand for legal-tender currency for importers' purposes has, from its scarcity, appreciated its value to par or above par, or induced capitalists to hoard it, then order the subtreasury at New York to receive legal-tenders and the currency of national banks in the maritime cities on the Atlantic sea-board in equal amounts, and at par value in exchange for gold coin or for non-transferable Treasury gold-checks or certificates when sold to importers for customs-dues purposes.

This arrangement will prevent "corners" on legal-tenders, and the issue of the non-transferable Treasury gold-check or certificate (made payable only to the order of the collector of customs) secures the retention of the gold in the Treasury, and saves the latter the labor of disbursing coin to the importers.

In order to reduce the market-price of gold in the United States to par with currency of both kinds, it is only necessary that the Secretary of the Treasury order these gold-sales daily to importers to be made only in New York, as the quotation of gold there governs its value in every other city on the Atlantic sea-board; and those Treasury sales being made daily in New York to importers only, the gold-market, unless for export, will cease, and with it gold-gambling and also stock-gambling to a great extent.

Another result from confining the Treasury gold-sales daily to importers in the city of New York will be that the gold in private hands in the other maritime cities will be obtained by importers therein, for customs-duty purposes, at its New York value, as established by Treasury sales; and the United States subtreasuries in those cities will obtain from the importers therein about one million and a half of gold coin weekly for customs-dues received in those cities, while at the same time the gold sold in New York by the Treasury to importers only, returns to the Treasury as rapidly as it is sold; so that the amount of gold in the Treasury, while made productive of the greatest benefit to the people by the reduced selling-price of imports, remains undiminished, its past and present fictitious selling-price for all commercial purposes is at once made apparent by the cessation of gold-gambling sales, and the Treasury power to control its value to par with paper-currency at all times hereafter incontestably established.

The inquiry is made as to how the Treasury is to be supplied with coin to meet the drain on the Treasury, if the customs-dues are not paid in gold.

My answer is, by the annual supply from our mines through the mints. This supply is upward of $66,200,000 annually. As the excess of exports of specie over that of the imports during the last fiscal year was little rising of $63,000,000, the coinage of these precious metals would more than supply the requirements of the Treasury for the deficiency of the exports; besides, if the paper-currency of the country is brought to a par with gold, there will no longer exist any necessity of capitalists hoarding it for speculative purposes; and hence it will flow out as a circulating medium, and will find its way into the United States Treasury, through the channels of the banks and the collection of internal-revenue taxes, to the extent required.

The Secretary of the Treasury will find no difficulty in obtaining his needed supply of specie whenever the legal-tender or mixed paper currencies are brought to a par value with gold.

By the plans suggested there need be no gold pass out of the Treasury to importers in payment of customs-dues, these being settled by Treasury or bank gold-checks or certificates made payable alone to the Assistant Treasurer in the cities where used for payment of import-duties only.

WHY THE UNITED STATES TREASURY GOLD-CHECK AND NATIONAL BANK GOLD-CHECK OR GOLD-CERTIFICATE SHOULD BE REGARDED AND RECEIVED AS THE EQUIVALENT OF GOLD COIN.

The law declares that customs-dues are payable in gold coin, and that the legal-tender currency is good for every purpose but payment of customs-dues and interest on the public bond-debt; and the collectors of customs in the United States receive United States Treasury gold-certificates and United States gold-notes, as the equivalent of gold coin, and at par value therewith, in payment of customs-dues, because they are payable in gold coin on demand at the United States Treasury.

It is therefore clear that the Secretary of the Treasury has the power and discretion to receive in payment of customs-dues gold-coin securities payable on demand, and which he knows are equivalent and convertible thereto at any moment, and that no valid objection can be urged against the receipt of the Treasury and national-bank gold-checks issued on the security of the gold coin in the Treasury or on that sold by the Treasury to the bank and retained by the latter to pay its gold-checks on demand.

I come now to the author's third and last plan for specie-payment: To secure specie-payment permanently of the legal-tender currency for commercial purposes, without inconveniencing the United States subtreasury in New York or in any other city, by Treasury gold-sales therein; also, to secure to the United States Treasury the return of all gold coin sold thereby or therefrom; and to equalize the value between the legal-tender currency and gold coin within the United States, for internal purposes, without legislation, as I stated at the outset.

Let the Secretary of the Treasury by agreement sell to one or more national banks in each maritime city on the Atlantic sea-board in which customs-dues are payable, (beginning at New York as primarily necessary,) Treasury gold coin equal to the average amount of customs-dues in gold received weekly or monthly in such city, on the express understanding with each bank that the gold coin sold to each is to be retained and resold by each bank to importers only in such city, for payment of customs-dues only in such city, in the manner and at the rate of value in currency prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, as hereinafter suggested.

The amount of such gold-sales to the banks in each maritime city would be as follows, (approximately:)

	Weekly.	Monthly.
In New York City.....	$3,000,000	$12,000,000
In Boston City.....	500,000	2,000,000
In Baltimore City.....	130,000	520,000
In Philadelphia City.....	140,000	640,000
In New Orleans City.....	140,000	560,000
Total	3,930,000	15,720,000

Let the Secretary of the Treasury arrange with each bank to which he sells the gold coin the rate of value therefor in currency, and direct each bank to open an account with the United States Treasury for the gold sold to each, and therein to credit the United States Treasury with the amount of its currency proceeds at the rate of value in currency agreed on between them.

Let the Secretary then direct each of such banks (if more than one be selected in New York for the purpose) to sell gold coin daily, to importers only, in New York, (or in whatever city such gold-sales are ordered,) for the payment only of customs-dues, and to the amount only stated in the customs-permit and receipt, and in exchange for legal-tenders only, or for mixed paper currency, at such rate of value as the Secretary of the Treasury shall have sold the gold coin to each bank, or shall direct the banks to charge for the gold coin when required by importers for the payment only of customs-dues daily.

Let the Secretary also direct the bank selected for the sale of Treasury gold (in order to secure the return to the United States Treasury of the gold coin sold by the bank to importers) to issue daily to them, in place of gold coin, bank gold-checks, or bank gold-certificates, made payable only to the United States subtreasury in the city in which the bank gold-check or certificate shall issue, and duly stamped by the bank, across the face of the check or certificate, "not transferable."

Let the Secretary direct each of such banks to advertise in advance of such sales the daily issue to importers only of such bank gold, bank gold-checks, or bank gold-certificates, (as the Secretary of the Treasury may direct and prefer in his arrangement with each bank,) for the payment only of customs-dues in exchange for legal-tender currency or for mixed paper currency, at such rate of value in currency as the Secretary of the Treasury shall direct the bank to charge therefor, daily or weekly, at a gradually descending rate of value, until the Secretary (and the bank responding to his directions) shall fix the rate of value for gold coin to importers for payment of customs-dues at par value in legal-tender currency only.

Let the Secretary of the Treasury direct each bank selected to sell Treasury gold to require the importer as applicant therefor to produce to the bank the customs-permit or receipt in which the amount of gold coin required for customs-dues is set forth, and to issue the bank gold-check or bank gold-certificate for the amount only specified in such permit or receipt, and to affix such check firmly to such permit or customs-receipt, and to stamp it with the bank-stamp before its delivery to the applicant for the gold coin, check, or certificate.

Let the Secretary of the Treasury authorize and direct the collector of customs-dues in gold, in each city in which the bank gold-check or bank gold-certificate shall have issued, to receive it in payment of customs-dues, as gold coin or its equivalent, in like manner as Treasury gold-certificates or gold-notes are received, but only on the day of the date thereof.

Let each bank selected in New York by the Secretary to sell Treasury gold to importers report daily to the United States subtreasury at New York the amount, in gold coin, for which such bank has issued bank gold-checks or bank gold-certificates, so as to ascertain and check their responsibility as bank agents to the United States Treasury for the gold coin sold to them, and for which bank gold-checks have issued.

Let the Secretary of the Treasury fix the price or rate of value, in legal-tender or mixed currency, at which the bank in each city selected to sell gold to importers shall sell gold, bank gold-checks, or bank gold-certificates, for the payment of customs-dues only, and let each bank selected advertise the rate of value weekly in advance, and thus enable importers to do business with a certainty of profits from their foreknowledge of the certain price of gold for each ensuing week.

Let the Secretary of the Treasury order the United States subtreasury in each city in which such bank gold-sales to importers for customs-duty purposes shall take place (by means of bank gold-checks or gold-certificates) to draw from each bank gold coin in payment for such checks or certificates, at par value therewith, or gold coin and legal-tender and mixed currency, in payment of such checks, from time to time, as required for Treasury purposes and directed by the Secretary of the Treasury. *

RESULTS OF PLANS.

It will be seen that by either of these three plans a gold-coin sale of $3,000,000 weekly, or $12,000,000 monthly, made by the United States Treasury to one or more national banks in New York City, and disbursed by these banks to importers only, for custom-duty purposes, either in coin or by means of bank gold-checks or gold-certificates, or that a daily sale by the United States subtreasury in New York of gold coin or of "non-transferable" Treasury gold-checks or certificates, to importers only, and to the same amount weekly, in exchange for and at par value with legal-tenders, would immediately appreciate that currency to par with gold, for all internal commercial purposes, and to that extent would be specie payment of the legal-tender, which could be constantly maintained, and would close the gold-market, unless for export purposes.

THE POWERS AND ADVANTAGES CONFERRED ON THE BANKS WHEN EMPLOYED BY THE TREASURY TO SELL GOLD.

By the eighth section of the national-bank act the banks are empowered "to discount and negotiate all securities for money and evidences of debt," "to receive deposits and buy and sell coin," and "to obtain, issue, and circulate notes."

By the forty-seventh section, they "shall be, when designated by the Secretary of the

* The banks selected in each maritime city to sell gold coin (sold to them by the Treasury) to importers only, for customs-duties, hold the amount of gold coin purchased from the Treasury subject to the payment thereout of their respective bank gold-checks or certificates, on demand by the United States Treasury. And the amount of currency they receive from the importers as payment for bank gold-checks enables them to honor the Government drafts on the banks for the amount of currency required at any time by the United States Treasury for its purposes, until the amount of gold coin sold by the Treasury to each bank is fully paid for by the bank.

Treasury, depositaries of public money and duties, except for receipts from customs; "may be employed and shall perform all duties as financial agents required of them by the Secretary;" "shall deposit with the Secretary bonds for all public moneys deposited with them, and for their duties as agents of the United States Treasury."

THE PECUNIARY ADVANTAGES TO THE BANKS EMPLOYED BY THE PLANS.

The bank to whom the gold coin is sold by the Treasury, or to whom the Treasury gold-checks or certificates are delivered as coin, has a specie-reserve security to the amount sold or received for its monthly statement, as by law required, until the gold-certificates and checks are withdrawn.

It is enabled to disburse more of its legal-tenders, to increase its issue of circulation and its commercial discounts, and refrain from borrowing currency from country national banks for any banking purpose, thus leaving the money of the country banks at home for home use.

It is enabled to obtain from the United States Treasury, after the par-value of United States bonds with gold in Europe has been realized, the release of at least 10 per cent. of the amount of such bank's United States bonds deposited therein as security for its circulation and deposits.

It enables all such banks to use their own gold coin in payment of their own bank-notes, when presented by their depositors, who are also importers, and who may require gold coin for payment of customs-dues, or to use their own gold coin in the payment of their bank gold-checks and certificates when presented by the Treasury, and, meantime, to retain as reserve in specie the non-transferable Treasury gold-check or certificate to an equal amount as they may have paid out their own gold coin.

RESULTS OF THE PLAN, IF ADOPTED, OR WHEN MODIFIED TO THE SECRETARY'S SATISFACTION.

It will be seen that one sale of gold coin, either in specie or in Treasury gold-checks or gold certificates, (made not transferable,) by the Secretary of the Treasury, weekly or monthly, to one or more banks in New York City, is all that is necessary in future to keep down the price of gold in the market to that charged by the banks, (by the Secretary's direction,) weekly or daily, on a gradually descending scale daily, until par in legal-tenders or in mixed currency is the bank-selling rate to importers, such rate being specie payment of the national currency for all necessary commercial purposes.

It is also apparent that the Secretary, selling the coin to the banks first, obtains from them, as he requires it for the purchase of bonds, all the currency necessary, at his own rate of value, for the gold coin sold to them; that the customs-dues are paid by the importers in coin when the bank or the United States Treasury sells coin or Treasury gold-checks or certificates or bank gold-checks or certificates to the importers only for such purposes, with a certainty of the return of such Treasury coin, checks, or certificates to the United States Treasury.

It is also apparent that banks selling the gold coin or gold checks are constantly supplied with legal-tenders or mixed currency (including gold in exchange for goods at gold prices) by the importers, and can supply the United States Treasury with either, to any amount required, and that the banks selected to sell gold for importers' duties will be amply repaid by the large and constant supply of currency of both kinds daily receivable by them and within their control, for banking purposes, during each month, or until it is required or withdrawn by the United States Treasury.

It will be apparent that this mode of selling Treasury gold is the only one by which its value and that of the legal-tender currency can be equalized, or rather the latter appreciated to the value of the former, for all commercial purposes, and to advance to par the national credit at home and abroad, without infringing the law which requires "customs-dues to be paid in gold coin" or its equivalent in the Treasury or bank gold-check or certificate.

When this plan or either of those preceding it is adopted by the Secretary, it will be manifest to the public that the selling-price of gold is wholly fictitious, and not induced by its scarcity, (the only thing that should justify its enormous price;) that its high price is the result of a combination to depress the value of the Government currency by the national banks, while they are exempted from specie payment.

And, lastly, that a coin surplus in the United States Treasury of even $12,000,000, if kept rotating from the United States to the banks selected in each maritime city for its sale, and from those banks to the importers therein by any of the plans herein suggested, and from the importers back again to the Treasury daily, could in 1862, (when gold rose above par,) and can at all times in future, keep down within the United States and equalize the price and value of gold coin with that of the legal-tender, (which latter is the standard of value by law,) and totally prevent the traffic in gold coin for gambling purposes, the pursuit of which, as the illegitimate means of enriching city national banks, has depreciated and will depreciate the national credit at home and abroad until controlled by the Secretary.

In conclusion, then, permit me to give you a brief synopsis of the practical results of the plan as in part adopted by the Secretary of the Treasury as early as 1869.

On the 14th of September, 1869, the author of the foregoing plan or plans submitted them in writing to the Secretary of the Treasury, and on the 24th of that month the Secretary, in pursuance of these plans and suggestions, gave public notice through the New York papers that, to control the price of gold to importers for import-duties, and to deal some heavy blows at the "gold-rings" and "corner" in New York who were running gold up to fabulous prices in exchange for currency, he authorized the assistant treasurer at New York to sell, on the 25th of September, instant, $4,000,000 of gold at $1.32, and to purchase the same amount in bonds for the Treasury in exchange for legal-tender currency.

Gold was selling on the 23d at $1.50, and the news of the Secretary's intention to sell so large an amount of gold at 18 cents below the then ruling price, produced an unparalleled shock in the "gold-ring" and "corners" of New York, eventuating, on the following day, in that long-to-be-remembered day known as Black Friday.

But previous to this date, say about the 20th, the Secretary indicated to his friends his possession of a treasury scheme that would startle the country, and which he intended to introduce in a few days, and by which he would be able to control the gold-market, and thereby put a check to the Wall-street gambling operation in gold. No sooner was this startling news received at New York than the wires flashed back to the Secretary of the Treasury the defiance of Wall street, assuring the Secretary that they had $80,000,000 of gold with which to "scotch" his little treasury game should be attempt to play it.

The Secretary of the Treasury, it will be borne in mind, received the author's plans on the 14th of September, 1869, and, armed with these keen weapons, bid defiance to the "grand army of Wall-street gamblers," and, as I have said, on the 24th announced his fixed intention to sell gold at a fixed valuation in exchange for legal-tenders, thus diminishing the cost—net value—of gold to the importer.

On the 27th of September, 1869, gold ruled on the gold-boards of New York from $1.32 to $1.34, and on the same day the Secretary purchased of bonds $3,000,000 at $1.16, $1.17, or $1.18.

During the month of October of that year the Secretary of the Treasury sold $13,000,000 of Treasury gold coin, ranging from 135 down to 128. During the same period the Secretary purchased, of gold interest-bearing bonds, about $12,000,000, ranging from 118 to 122 for legal-tenders. During November Treasury gold ranged from 122 to 126, and the purchase of bonds at from 112 to 113. In December the Secretary sold Treasury gold at 120, and purchased bonds at 112. During January and February, 1870, Treasury gold remained at 120, but during the month of March it went down to 111. During April and May it rose to 114, but in the month of June it fell back to 111, and from that date, in 1870, to the present time, gold has been fluctuating between 110 and 116.

Had the author's plans been carried out to their fullest extent, as recommended at the time, and during their use by the Secretary of the Treasury, the equalization of the paper currency of the Government with that of gold for all commercial purposes could long since have been effected, and to-day we would have had commercial peace and prosperity throughout the country. It was then the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Boutwell, lost the golden opportunity of consummating one of the grandest strokes of financial policy that has fallen to the lot of any Secretary of the United States Treasury to achieve since its organization. But it is not yet too late to consummate this much-desired object, which I believe can be by the adoption of the plans I have here presented you.

During the period from September, 1869, to December, 1873, the Secretary of the Treasury, through the partial adoption of the author's plans, was enabled to retire about $350,000,000 of the United States bonded debt and at a saving of upwards of $25,000,000 in currency to the Government, and about $95,000,000 to the importer of foreign imports, and to the public, or consumers of these imports, not less than $100,000,000 in currency.

Now, gentlemen of the committee, if so much was accomplished by the partial adoption of these plans (though not then perfected) by the Secretary of the Treasury, what may not be accomplished by the adoption of it as a whole, with perhaps a few minor modifications which the wisdom of this committee can suggest?

With this presentation of the subject, and with the hope, too, that I have been able to make myself clearly understood, and thanking you, gentlemen, for the very patient hearing you have given me, I close with again expressing the hope that you will give the subject your earnest consideration; and if found, in your judgments, worthy of further consideration and approval, that you will lose no time in presenting it to Congress and the country, that that prosperity spoken of by the President in his late message to Congress, and which he so much desires, may be speedily reached, and peace and commercial prosperity again pervade our land.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 9, 1874.

At the invitation of the committee, JAMES BUELL, president of the Importers and Traders National Bank, New York, appeared before the committee and made the following statement:

The CHAIRMAN. We have inquired of quite a number of gentlemen to know their opinion of our present monetary system—its defects, and their remedies. We will be glad to have you give your opinion on the same general question in your own way.

Mr. BUELL. I have examined the bill of the committee—House bill 1746. The question of free banking, as introduced there, would seem to me to be very desirable, provided we could at the same time reduce the volume of the redeeming medium, (that is, legal tender,) which is now larger than the volume of bank-note currency to be redeemed, so that there is not a surplus of national-bank notes pressing long enough to cause the adoption of a system of assorting and redemption.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that the trouble—that the difference in the functional power of the two currencies is so slight that no one wishes to redeem? What would be the effect if we should limit the uses of the Government to legal-tender notes?

Mr. BUELL. The effect would be to raise the value of legal tenders if that limit to which you refer has reference to volume, and it was not too large.

The CHAIRMAN. Would that give redemption?

Mr. BUELL. Yes. It would seem to me much better that the banks should manage redemption for themselves rather than impose that duty on the Government. I would suggest free banking with this definition, (there are various definitions,) that it should be absolutely free, and banks allowed to be organized under the approval of the Comptroller of the Currency, where there is a population of six thousand and a capital of $50,000, as provided for in the present banking law; provided also that they redeem their notes at their own counters and at the centers at par; and as the national-bank currency is increased, the volume of legal-tenders should be decreased till such volume is reduced to three hundred millions, and there stop for the present. This process would keep the volume of currency where it now is; the only difference being that there would be more of one kind and less of another, and thus making one more valuable than the other, which would in time bring about redemption. It would probably take four or five years by this system to absorb $100,000,000 legal-tenders. By this process legal-tender notes will ultimately become a little more valuable than national-bank notes, and banks will then assort and present national notes for redemption, because it will be for their interest to do so.

Mr. MERRIAM. You have been banking on a basis of $356,000,000 legal-tender notes, which has been about the same as gold. You pay your debts with it, and that is all you want; yet your banks have suspended. How then do you expect to succeed on less?

Mr. BUELL. I am not aware that I have proposed to reduce the volume of currency; I propose only to change its character, taking in legal-tenders down to $300,000,000 as fast as national-bank notes are issued. With the volume of legal-tender circulation down to $300,000,000, specie resumption by the Government would be easily possible, and bank-notes could then be safely issued to any extent to which the issuers were prepared to secure and redeem. Government usually has on hand from $50,000,000 to $75,000,000 coin, which can easily be increased to $150,000,000 before the national-bank system will have expanded $100,000,000, so as to have absorbed the greenbacks to that extent. Specie resumption by the Government will at once throw all the coin in the country into circulation, which will add that much more to the volume of currency and will be an expansion of our currency to that extent. If a raft were floating down the Hudson River, and parties were desirous to control it, they would not, if wise, attempt to do so by placing obstructions in front, as its momentum would probably bear down all opposition. But by getting on it and rigging a rudder, and by utilizing the natural forces of the stream, they might, with skill, pilot it as desired. The obstructionist puts himself in front. Mr. McCullough contracted $44,000,000, and was then pushed out of the way. The commerce of the country has adapted itself to the present volume of currency as well as it can. Why violently disturb that volume? Rather let us infuse into it a new element, a controlling power—that of elasticity—by redemption and ultimate convertibility into coin.

Mr. MERRIAM. You assume the condition of things to be the same as at present?

Mr. BUELL. I do; the process I suggest will be using natural causes to bring about a normal condition of things. As soon as national-bank notes now become redundant we feel obliged to decline receiving them on deposit, as they are not by law allowed to be counted as reserve, nor can we use them in paying our debts to the clearing-house. We then seek to find or make an outlet for our surplus national-bank notes in Chicago, Cincinnati, or elsewhere. They are distributed there, and finally come back to New York as the great center again for another swing around the circle.

The CHAIRMAN. Then they are forced back into the country again by extraordinary means?

Mr. BUELL. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. There is then a tendency to a congestion of currency at New York. Please tell us whether the plan of requiring the country banks to redeem at these money centers does not aggravate that state of things by requiring them to keep their reserve largely in the centers.

Mr. BUELL. Naturally it does; but practical redemption of national-bank notes will remedy this in a great measure by absorbing their reserves.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it desirable to make it current at the center?

Mr. BUELL. It is very desirable. People are not aware of the important function that the national-banking system performs in equalizing exchanges between distant places.

The CHAIRMAN. Suppose in New York the notes of the banks in Tennessee, for instance, ruled at one-quarter per cent. below the legal-tenders, would not that very fact of itself have a tendency to drive them back where they came from?

Mr. BUELL. It would. The difference in value of one-quarter per cent. between them and the legal-tenders would cause them to be redeemed at once and returned to the issuer. If you get the national notes one-quarter per cent. below par, they will be redeemed fast enough when not wanted by commerce.

The CHAIRMAN. The great trouble that some people allege is that in the interior of the country the money is drained off, and they cannot get it by any kind of security, because it does not exist.

Mr. BUELL. The way to obviate that scarcity of currency is redemption, which causes it to be sent home to the issuer.

The CHAIRMAN. Should the issuer be obliged to redeem his notes at his own counter?

Mr. BUELL. He should, and also at the centers, to which they will float. If he is not obliged to do so, national currency will lose its national character, and will be at a very large discount. One and a quarter per cent. will not measure it; distance and difficulty of presentation only will do it then.

The CHAIRMAN. Suppose he redeems it in New York; will his broker send his notes home to him, or will be put them upon the market?

Mr. BUELL. He will make the best disposition of them he can for his own interest.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any assurance that they will find their way back?

Mr. BUELL. Certainly; if commerce does not want them, they will be sent home; at least such was our experience of the workings of the system in our own State, where we had substantially the same system as the present national system with redemption would be.

Mr. DURHAM. Have we circulation enough in the country?

Mr. BUELL. Sometimes we have, and sometimes we have not. It is impossible to tell how much we want. We did not appear to have quite enough in the late panic to go round.

Mr. DURHAM. Would you recommend an increase of circulation?

Mr. BUELL. No, sir; nor a decrease of it.

Mr. DURHAM. Then, in your judgment, as a general thing, we have enough?

Mr. BUELL. As a general thing, we have. It should be left to the commerce of the country to dictate by redemption how much or how little it should be; that will regulate it like the governor to a steam-engine.

Mr. DURHAM. What would you recommend Congress to do?

Mr. BUELL. To allow free banking, with the limitation that I have suggested; provide for redemption, and, as the national-bank currency should be increased, to take up an equal amount of greenbacks till they were reduced to $300,000,000, and there stop till the effect upon the country could be ascertained.

The CHAIRMAN. For every dollar of national-bank notes issued you would retire one of the legal-tenders?

Mr. BUELL. Yes. I would also suggest that the semi-legal-tender property of the national-bank note be abolished. It works unjustly to the national banks, discriminating as it does against them and in favor of State banks, other corporations, and individuals. For instance, a dealer may deposit national currency in a bank with which he deals, and then draw his check and demand greenbacks in payment. When greenbacks were at a premium in Wall street during the late panic, dealers did demand greenbacks of the national banks, and the banks, in self-defense, after a little experience, took the responsibility of declining to pay in that currency. National banks now are obliged by law to receive national currency for debts due them, but are unable to oblige any creditor of theirs, not a national bank, to receive payment in the same currency. National currency secured and redeemed, i. e., convertible into greenbacks at option of holder, is all the function requisite to make national currency desirable anywhere and everywhere in this country.

The CHAIRMAN. After you reduced the legal-tenders to $300,000,000 under the free-banking system, you would let the national-bank notes increase up to $1,000,000,000, if necessary?

Mr. BUELL. Yes, with redemption.

Mr. PHELPS. How can you make redemption certain?

Mr. BUELL. As national currency would come to the centers in surplus, it would become less valuable than greenbacks, and be assorted and presented for redemption in greenbacks.

Mr. PHELPS. By the time the greenbacks were cut down, might there not be a very large increase of the bank circulation on the present basis of $400,000,000 greenbacks, and the so-called system of redemption in New York be maintained?

Mr. BUELL. We have less than $400,000,000 now, and there is no redemption.

Mr. MITCHELL. Then at present your banks do not care for redemption?

Mr. BUELL. Under the circumstances it cannot be done. The redemption medium is larger than the currency to be redeemed. One currency being as valuable as the other ordinarily, there is, therefore, no reason for demanding legal-tenders for national currency.

Mr. MITCHELL. Very well; the currency to be redeemed might be increased largely.

Mr. BUELL. Certainly. But there will not be redemption if you increase the volume of the redeeming medium so quickly as if you reduce it. The national banks have but little coin. The general commerce of the country does not require it as at present conducted. Almost all the coin is under the control of the Government. As soon as the Government will redeem its legal-tenders in coin, the national banks will redeem their currency in coin or its then equivalent—greenbacks.

The CHAIRMAN. If you have two mediums, the one which performs more functions is the better?

Mr. BUELL. Yes; but our observation is that the poorer currency generally supplants the better, and is oppressive to the poorer classes, upon whom it is generally forced in payment of wages, &c.

The CHAIRMAN. That does not apply to redemption?

Mr. BUELL. No.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no function performed by the legal-tenders that is not performed by the bank-notes, and so there is no interest to redeem?

Mr. BUELL. It is not quite so with us. In New York our differences in the clearing-house are all paid daily in legal-tenders. In the interior they settle differences between banks by drafts on New York or by national-bank notes or legal tenders. With us, our basis of settlement being legal-tenders, we must have them. If a correspondent should send us $100,000 of national-bank notes for his credit, and then draw on us for $100,000 through another bank, we should have to pay his draft in legal-tenders; the national-bank notes that we received from him would not do it, according to New York rules of settlement. This makes legal-tenders more valuable in New York than elsewhere.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the difference?

Mr. BUELL. There are no fixed rates. During the panic greenbacks were at a premium of two, three, and four per cent.; since then, nothing. Occasionally the rate rises to one-eighth of one per cent.

The CHAIRMAN. It makes no practical margin ordinarily?

Mr. BUELL. No. We once organized an assorting and redemption system in New York. I suppose it is still in existence on paper. But there is not sufficient chronic difference in value between the national currency and greenbacks, nor any sufficient and continuous volume of national-bank notes to require its being carried on. Sometimes for two or three weeks we have a surplus of national-bank notes, and then it is dissipated. If it was in continuous volume, necessity would compel redemption.

Mr. MERRIAM. Would you in New York send home these bank-notes through the Treasury? Is not that the only way that it ever will be done?

Mr. BUELL. If you provide for reducing the volume of legal-tenders till they are more valuable than national-bank notes, the matter will take care of itself.

The CHAIRMAN. As it is to-day, without any reduction, is there any other way except the one we propose to present?

Mr. BUELL. Perhaps not at present.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, do you approve of that measure?

Mr. BUELL. Probably it is the next best plan.

Mr. HUNTER. Suppose we had one-tenth of the customs in legal-tender?

Mr. BUELL. It would enhance their value.

Mr. HUNTER. Would that be sufficient to enable you to redeem?

Mr. BUELL. I do not think so. I do not think it would have any perceptible influence, so long as the relative volume of legal-tenders is unchanged.

Mr. MERRIAM. What do you want to redeem at all for?

Mr. BUELL. The national note, when not wanted by commerce, should be sent home to its issuer, there to lie in his vaults, instead of in the pockets of the people or the vaults of other banks, a kind of forced loan, as it now does. When the bank issued it it got somebody's note on interest, and as long as it stays out just so long the issuer is drawing interest on it from the public, which is thus obliged to keep and use it as best it can, and which makes it a forced loan from the public to that extent.

Mr. PHELPS. The last section of the bill says that gold shall be held to meet redemption. Would that put up the price of gold?

Mr. BUELL. It would seem so.

Mr. FARWELL. What is the objection, after adopting the first section, to provide that any holder of legal-tenders may receive from the Government a 5 per cent. bond? Would not that be a complete check to any inflation?

Mr. BUELL. That would reduce the volume of legal-tenders certainly, and perhaps at times very rapidly.

Mr. FARWELL. Might you not in some seasons find the people converting a great amount of the basis of redemption into Government bonds and producing a great stringency?

Mr. BUELL. It would be a prodigious power in the hands of Wall-street speculators. I should fear it.

The CHAIRMAN. Make banking free, and give the holders the option of funding them. Would not that bring about specie resumption?

Mr. BUELL. Not necessarily. It would bring bonds to par with greenbacks at once, if it is the legal-tenders you speak of funding.

The CHAIRMAN. If we withdraw all other currency, that will be specie payments.

Mr. BUELL. Certainly. At the close of the late war the Southern States practically had no currency except gold. It had all broken down. We all know the effect there was to paralyze commerce completely until other currency was sent them. Would Congress like to take the responsibility of bringing about specie payments in that way?

Mr. FARWELL. This would be done by the people themselves. Would not $100,000,000 be also absorbed by national-bank circulation?

Mr. BUELL. The capital for national banks ordinarily is not taken up so rapidly by the public. It requires much solicitation and effort anywhere to get the capital for a bank subscribed; and at the present time, owing to the high price of United States stocks, the profit upon national banking is not such as to tempt capital rapidly into national banks. There is a very general misapprehension pervading the public mind upon this subject. The restrictions as to national-bank currency induce people to regard a national bank as a mine of wealth—a monopoly. Such restrictions should be removed by allowing free banking, as heretofore suggested. Allow me to illustrate, and suppose for example the case of a bank organized in a small town in New York State. The capitalists of the place subscribe a capital stock of, say..... $100,000 00

This sum is taken to the United States Treasury and lent to the Government, and for which the bank receives in United States fives, at present price, say..... 84,000 00

This United States stock is then taken by the bank and lodged with the Comptroller of the Currency, and he issues to it 90 per cent. national currency, say..... 75,600 00

Of this or its equivalent the law says 15 per cent. as reserve must be kept on hand, say..... 11,340 00

Which, deducted from the $75,600, leaves the bank to loan out to its dealers and obtain interest for but..... 64,260 00

Now, the practical operation of this is that of the loanable capital of the place $100,000 has been contributed and paid into the bank, and the place has got back as loanable capital or credits its own notes for only $64,260. The place, instead of "inflating" its loanable capital by organizing a bank, has got one-third less by the operation.

Now let us see how the profits stand. The principal sources of profits for banks in small places are from circulation and deposits:

1st. Interest on the United States bonds, $84,000. Five per cent. in gold is $4,200, which at 12 per cent. premium is worth..... $4,704 00

2d. Interest at 7 per cent. on the $64,260 currency allowed by law to circulate is..... 4,498 20

3d. We will suppose the bank able to attract, say, $50,000 deposits, upon which it pays no interest, which is a liberal supposition for banks of this character; deduct reserve required by law, 15 per cent., $7,500, leaves $42,500, which at 7 per cent. interest gives the bank..... 2,975 00

Total profits, say..... $12,177 20

From total profits we have to deduct, for United States tax on capital not in United States stocks, \$16,000— $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent..... 80 00

Also tax on circulation, 1 per cent..... 756 00

Also tax on \$50,000 deposits, $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent..... 250 00

In the city of New York, for 1874, the State, county, and city tax rate will probably be 3 per cent.; and in Albany City, 5 per cent. and upwards. In smaller cities and villages in the State of New York the rate of tax is from 2 to 5 per cent. In New York and Albany Cities, banks are assessed upon the whole capital, par value, and by the law of the State is required to be so assessed everywhere in the State.

State and county and town tax on the capital, say only 2 per cent..... 2,000 00

Salary of officers, rent, &c..... 3,500 00

Total taxes, expense, &c..... 6,586 00

Leaving a total balance of profit above paying expenses, taxes, &c., but no allowance for bad debts..... 5,591 20

Not enough of total profits left to pay the stockholders a dividend of even 6 per cent. on their capital.

If the above statement is correct, (and it is believed any bank officer or other person familiar with banking will verify its accuracy, except that the estimate for profits is full, and the estimate for expenses, taxes, &c., is small, and no allowance is made for losses,) it will be seen that the profit of national banking is not such as to induce capital into that kind of business very rapidly. When United States stocks, sixes of 1881, were to be had at par, and the gold interest could be sold at 200, the profit was attractive. But now it is quite different. Many national banks would be glad to return their national currency to the bank department, and take up and sell their United States stocks, did the law permit it. We should like to return ours. We can make more profit by the use of our capital, now locked up in United States stocks, lodged with the bank department as security for national currency given us, than we can by the use of the national currency. Repeal this provision of the national-banking law, and there will be many millions of national circulation voluntarily given up by the banks in central cities, and could be then distributed to such sections of the country as might desire it.

The CHAIRMAN. Shall we not reach specie payments just as soon as the state of trade and business of the country will justify it, and no sooner? Is it not a commercial result, and not a legislative enactment?

Mr. BUELL. In one sense it is a commercial result, but Congress may legislate and derange matters so that commerce cannot do it. If the Government should issue $1,000,000,000 of greenbacks, could the Government redeem it in coin? How could gold enough be procured? I am aware of but two ways of getting back to specie payments. One is to expand our paper currency until it bursts, breaks down, and brings down the whole fabric of credit. The other is to regulate our standard (legal-tender volume) so that it shall gradually approximate to and be convertible into coin, which, when done, will bring the national-bank currency by redemption to the same value.

The CHAIRMAN. Do they not have a specie basis on the Pacific coast?

Mr. BUELL. Yes, but not a legal-tender basis; they have a higher law there.

The CHAIRMAN. What is that?

Mr. BUELL. Public opinion. There a man must pay in gold or leave the country.

The CHAIRMAN. The state of business and trade created that. Will it not be so all over the country?

Mr. BUELL. No, not at the East. They are educated up to it there. We lack that education here, and have not time to stop to be educated, especially with Congress legislating and educating us the other way.

Mr. MERRIAM. If we should reduce two millions a month, would it not be better to redeem them in 5 per cent. bonds at a premium, instead of doing it in gold, as proposed in this bill?

Mr. BUELL. Perhaps so. It would not have the same effect on the price of gold.

Mr. MERRIAM. Under free banking how rapidly would the circulation increase in a year?

Mr. BUELL. According to the estimate of the Comptroller of the Currency, about twenty millions per annum.

Mr. MERRIAM. How are the speculators to whom the banks lend money to be controlled?

Mr. BUELL. By their interest, and not by law. They have a good many millions of their own. The banks do not lend them the amount of money generally supposed.

Mr. MERRIAM. How do these men get it?

Mr. BUELL. There are many millions of loanable capital in New York City not controlled by the banks. In fact, there is probably more capital loaned to speculators by capitalists outside of the banks than there is by the banks. But a small proportion of currency is used in our enormous transactions.

Mr. MERRIAM. You lend them credit, then? What would prevent that under a different system?

Mr. BUELL. We would have a less basis to do it on if the volume of legal-tender were made smaller. A man cannot expand as much upon a hundred thousand dollars capital relatively as he can on a million. The present system of forcing reserves into New York is like the action of a pump forcing water into a cistern. You oblige the banks to keep a reserve. The consequence is that your reserve-pumps throw it largely up into one reservoir.

Mr. MERRIAM. We propose that banks shall keep their reserves at home.

Mr. BUELL. That may obviate the difficulty somewhat. Would it not be better for the banks of the redeeming cities only to be obliged so to keep their reserve, and not to oblige the small banks all over the country to keep it at home? I would, however, suggest that the statute requiring banks to keep a reserve be wholly abolished, and in its place publicity of condition be substituted as a much more effectual guard for the public. If the Comptroller of the Currency should call for weekly statements from banks in the larger cities, and for monthly statements from banks in smaller places, and the reports be published as now, such publicity would bring the condition of banks directly to the knowledge of their dealers. They would then be able to judge whether their banks were or were not safe custodians of their deposits. Public opinion would then be brought to bear upon bank management, and self-interest would cause the managers to keep strong—to keep a full reserve—much more so than the law now does, or the bank examiners can. If a bank is weak, the public ought to know it, that it may stop trusting it. Banks ask their dealers for statements of their condition when they desire such information, and there is no reason why the banks should not furnish their dealers with similar information about their own condition. Turn about is fair play and tends to keep all parties on their good behavior. When I ask a dealer for a statement of his affairs, if he puts on airs and declines to give it, I thereupon order his account closed, and decline to do business with him. There is no reason why the same rule should not be applied to corporations asking credit that is applied to individuals asking credit—publicity. Frequent published statements will benefit the strong, well-managed banks, and weed out the weak ones. Capital is a sensitive creature, and runs from weakness like fear from a contagious disease.

Mr. MERRIAM. The bank can keep its certificates of deposit in the Treasury as they do now.

Mr. BUELL. If you would allow them to keep the certificates bearing 3.65 per cent. as reserve in their own vaults, they would do it; interest would dictate it. They would rather trust the Government than trust other banks with it.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is there any reason why Government should charge itself with the duty of redemption of the notes of the national banks?

Mr. BUELL. None. The sooner Government goes out of the banking business the better for all concerned.

Mr. MITCHELL. Supposing redemption was a necessary thing, is there any reason why the banks cannot carry it on themselves?

Mr. BUELL. None.

Mr. MITCHELL. Why don't you?

Mr. BUELL. Because it is not for our interest, under existing circumstances, to do so. The volume of legal-tender currency, the medium or agent used in payment or redemption of national-bank currency is now greater than the volume of national-bank currency, the thing to be redeemed. Reduce the volume of legal-tenders until it shall be more scarce, and consequently more valuable than the national-bank currency, and you make it for the interest of holders of national currency to require redemption in legal-tender.

The CHAIRMAN. You spoke of the small amount of money used in business compared with bank credit. The clearing-house exchanges for New York are put down as thirty-four billions. What proportion of that do you think was transacted in money?

Mr. BUELL. About 5 per cent.

Mr. PHELPS. Assuming that our legal-tenders are four hundred millions, is it safe for us to rely on free banking?

Mr. BUELL. I should not think so, because I do not think redemption can be made practicable with that volume of legal-tender.

The CHAIRMAN. The truth is, then, that we have no more currency than we actually want, and we have no time to send it in for redemption.

Mr. BUELL. What you assume may be correct, but no man can tell how much currency we do want. The proportion of currency to checks, bills of exchange, &c., used in commerce, is so small that few people conceive of it. We use in New York about 5 per cent. currency; in smaller towns they use 10 per cent.; in still smaller places, from 15 to 25; and when you get back to the agricultural districts it requires 50 per cent. or more. The other 95 per cent. of the commercial transactions of New York City are moved by checks, bills of exchange, &c.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the 5 per cent. cover the shopping and money transactions hotel bills, &c.?

Mr. BUELL. Yes; it all comes to a point in the banks through the clearing-house exchanges. Take your own experience, or that of a merchant who pays fifty thousand dollars by checks in a day, and not more than a hundred dollars for cash disbursements, personal expenses, &c. The volume of currency being so variable, used as it is in conjunction with checks, bills of exchange, &c., it is impossible to tell how much is required. The only way to measure it is by having practical redemption. When it is not wanted, let it go back to the issuer; and when it is wanted, it will come out and do its work, and again retire. We now move our crops by contraction. We used to move them by expansion. For example, to-day there is a plethora of money in New York, and an absence of it in Cincinnati, Chicago, &c. They have grain or other products on hand. They send their paper to New York; it is discounted and currency sent them for it. That enables them to hold and maintain prices. In spring the grain will begin to move to the seaboard; it takes money to move it. Bank balances which have accumulated in New York are drawn for from all parts of the country. Money gets tight. Interest goes up. Holders must sell, in consequence of contraction of loans. Prices come down. The grains or other products come forward, but at reduced prices; and, by various devices, less money and more checks are used. So we now move our products by contraction, spring and fall; whereas formerly, at such seasons, the banks issued their circulating-notes, expanding their loans and circulation thereby for the time being.

Mr. MERRIAM. Do you think any man can say just how much currency we shall use—so much, and no more?

Mr. BUELL. No, sir. An efficient redemption will be a self-adjusting system, which will determine at all times what amount of currency is needed, and nothing else can measure it.

In addition to the points covered by the discussion before the committee, a copy of which is herewith annexed, I would call attention to the following facts, which should be considered in order to comprehend the present status of our currency:

1st. The volume of currency in use more or less actively in the Northern States during and at the close of the late war, as compared to volume now in use in same territory.

2d. The expansive or inflating nature of the old State-bank system, which permitted banks to issue their unsecured circulating-notes for from one and a half times the amount of the capital, to as much as they could by any means put in circulation, as contrasted with the national bank system, which requires the circulating-notes to be secured, and by that means is contractive in its operation as a whole upon the loanable capital of the country, as we will show further on. With the latter there is no possible danger of expansion or inflation to the currency of the country, provided it is redeemed.

3d. The profits to the stockholders of each system contrasted; by which it will be seen that the old State system afforded its stockholders far more profit than does the national system its stockholders.

1st. At the close of the war we had in the Northern States of Government issues outstanding, viz:

Legal-tenders, about.....	$400,000,000
National-bank currency, about.....	300,000,000
Certificates, 5 per cents, certificates of deposit, compound-interest notes, &c., say	300,000,000

Total amount currency at the close of the war.....	1,000,000,000
--	---------------

The various issues of the Government, besides the $400,000,000 legal-tenders, working in and through the currency, including 5 per cents, certificates of deposit, compound-interest notes, &c., was, at about that date, over $400,000,000. We will assume for this argument, so as to be on the safe side, that it was but $300,000,000. But whatever the sum was, now all the issues of the Government except legal-tenders have been withdrawn. We take no account of fractional currency. When the war closed the Southern States were practically without currency, and ours began at once to flow there. It is probable that there are in the Southern States 2,500,000 families; and it is also probable that each family have taken and now have on an average from $80 to $100. If we take the smaller sum, then the Southern States have absorbed of our currency $200,000,000, (which is so much contraction in its effect on the volume in use by the Northern States at the close of the war.) With this explanation let us now put the figures down again and see how much currency we have at present in use in the Northern States.

Total amount of currency at the close of the war.....	$1,000,000,000
Of which the Government has withdrawn all its issues except legal-tenders, (contracted,) say.....	$300,000,000
The Southern States have absorbed, (contracted our volume of currency,) say.....	200,000,000

Making a total contraction of volume of currency since close of war.....	500,000,000
--	-------------

Leaving now in circulation in Northern States a total of.....	500,000,000
---	-------------

And from this $500,000,000, if we deduct amount required by law to be held as reserve by the banks, we will assume, say $125,000,000, the then remaining $375,000,00 only are left for the ordinary demands of commerce; the reserve being called into use upon extraordinary occasions only.

2d. The public generally suppose the national-banking system is as expansive or inflating as was the old State system, which issued its own unsecured circulating notes to any amount they could put in circulation. This is a mistake. Let us illustrate by supposing and stating the case of a State bank, and then the case of a national bank, and see how they compare, viz: The capitalists of a small place contribute for the capital of a bank of their loanable funds, say $100,000. This sum being paid into the bank, it is loaned by it to its dealers, so that the place has as much of this kind of capital as before the bank-capital was paid in. In addition to this, usually the State laws authorized banks to issue of their own unsecured notes one and a half (or more) times the amount of their capital say $150,000.

Now, the practical operation of this is that the place has, by the establishment of a bank, got as loanable capital or credit, all the paid-in capital of the bank, $100,000, and all the circulating notes of the bank that it is able to keep in circulation, say $150,000, making a total of loanable capital of $250,000, where before the establishment of such bank there were but $100,000 loanable capital. The place has been inflated thereby $150,000 or 150 per cent. by the operation.

Now, let us suppose the case of a national bank organized in a small town, say in the State of New York. The capitalists subscribed a capital of say $100,000 each.

The sum is taken to the United States Treasury and lent to the Government, and for which the bank receives in United States fives, at present price, say $84,000.

The United States stock is then taken by the bank and lodged with the Comptroller of the Currency, and he issues to it 90 per cent., national currency, say $75,605.

Of this or its equivalent, the law says 15 per cent. as reserve must be kept on hand, say $11,340.

Which deducted from the $75,600, leaves the bank to loan out to its dealers and obtain interest for but $64,260.

Now, the practical operation of this is that of the loanable capital of the place $100,000, has been contributed and paid in to the bank, and the place has got back, for loanable capital, the bank's own notes for only $64,260. The place, instead of "inflating" its loanable capital by organizing a bank, has got but two-thirds as much as it had before, and what it has got is in the bank's own notes, which it is liable to be called upon to redeem.

3d. Now let us compare the profits of the two systems to stockholders. In order to make the two cases parallel, we will suppose the same rates of taxation, expenses, interest, and the same amount of deposits, &c., for each. The principal sources of profits for banks in small places are interest on capital paid in, on circulation and deposits.

We will state of a State bank first, viz :

1. Interest on capital paid in, $100,000, at 7 per cent.....	$7,000 00
2. Interest on circulating notes, $150,000, at 7 per cent.....	10,500 00
3. Interest on deposits, say $50,000, at 7 per cent.....	3,500 00
Total profits.....	$21,000 00
From which deduct United States tax on capital, $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. on \$100,000	500 00
United States tax on circulation, 1 per cent. on $150,000.....	1,500 00
State, county, and town tax, say 2 per cent. on $100,000 capital.	2,000 00
Salary, office-rent, &c.....	3,500 00
Total taxes and expenses.....	7,500 00
Leaving total balance of net profits.....	13,500 00

Which is equal to a dividend to the stockholders of $13\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., (no allowance for bad debts.) It should, however, be borne in mind that before the establishment of the national system of banking there were no taxes levied by the United States on banks, but in the above estimate we have allowed a United States tax of \$2,000, which properly should not be done. State banks were not required by law to keep reserve.

Now let us take the case of a national bank, and see how its profits compare with those of the State bank above described :

1st. Interest on the United States bonds, $84,000; 5 per cent. in gold is $4,200, which, at 12 per cent. premium, is worth.....	$4,704 00
2d. Interest at 7 per cent. on the $64,260 currency allowed by law to circulate is	4,498 20
3d. We will suppose the bank able to attract say $50,000 deposits, upon which it pays no interest, which is a liberal supposition for banks of this character; deduct reserve required by law, 15 per cent., $7,500, leaves $42,500, which, at 7 per cent. interest, is.....	2,975 00
Total profits, say.....	$12,177 20
From total profits we have to deduct for United States tax on capital not in United States stocks, \$16,000, $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent.....	80 00
Also tax on circulation, 1 per cent.....	756 00
Also tax on \$50,000 deposits, $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent.....	250 00
(In city of New York, for 1874, the State, county, and city tax rate will probably be 3 per cent., and in Albany City 5 per cent. and upward. In smaller cities and villages in the State of New York the rate of tax is from 2 to 5 per cent. In New York and Albany cities banks are assessed upon the whole capital, par value; and by the law of the State are required to be so assessed everywhere in the State.)
State and county and town tax on the capital, say only 2 per cent....	2,000 00
Salary of officers, rent, &c	3,500 00
Total taxes, expense, &c	6,586 00
Leaving a total balance of net profits above paying expenses, taxes, &c.....	5,591 20

Not enough of total net profits left to pay the stockholders a dividend of even 6 per cent. on their capital, and without any allowance in the estimate for bad debts.

N. A. COWDREE, retired banker, of New York, appeared before the committee and made the following statement:

I hold in my hand a bill to facilitate assorting and redeeming national-bank note currency and to authorize the issue of circulating notes to the amount of 92 per cent. in lieu of the 90 per cent. now authorized by law. This simply authorizes some authority to designate a bank at which they shall redeem mutilated currency, and make it an object for the banks to use it by giving those banks that do use it 2 per cent. more circulation. The theory is inexpensive; it costs banks and Government nothing. It costs now from one hundred and eighty thousand to two hundred and fifty thousand dollars per annum to assort mutilated currency. The objection to the bill of the committee (House bill 1572) is that it makes contraction. The country wants expansion. There is a great cry for more currency. The bill of the committee requires the banks to deposit 5 per cent. of legal-tenders in the Treasury. That takes away the ability of the banks to loan $80,000,000, and it is not probable, in my judgment, that the banks will submit to that. The law would not be permanent. The banks would be here very soon to get it changed. The banks do not make enough to allow them to do it. The system proposed by Senate bill 203 is expensive to nobody. The committee's bill makes a large bill to Government for assorting the money. The method I suggest does not cost one cent to any one.

Mr. MERRIAM. Will the banks in New York consent to it?

Mr. COWDREE. Yes, if the President designates some one bank in New York to redeem the mutilated currency, and the law allows banks using that bank as a redeeming agent 2 per cent. additional currency, it will be a success.

The CHAIRMAN. Why not establish clearing-houses?

Mr. COWDREE. This is a clearing-house under another name. The President provides that the banks keep their reserves in their own banks. I think the President is sound on that point. It would prevent this great accumulation of currency in New York, or this seeming accumulation of currency; for very often there is no money about it. It is simply note upon note. I will show you what I mean by illustration: The bank in Watertown wants a reserve in Chicago. They send on their president's note, saying, "We want you to discount and place the proceeds to our credit, holding the same as a reserve for us." This they do. The bank in Chicago then wants a reserve in the city of New York. It sends on the same note to be rediscounted and held there for a reserve for the Chicago bank. This too is done, but there is no legal-tender money, as contemplated by the law, in the transaction. It is simply an accumulation of ledger-credits for reserve. It seems to pile up legal-tenders in New York, but it is a fiction, and a double fiction.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the 2 per cent. for?

Mr. COWDREE. It is to give all the banks that keep accounts their 2 per cent. additional currency.

Mr. MERRIAM. Do you not propose to have every bank deposit 2 per cent. with the redeeming bank?

Mr. COWDREE. There is nothing in the bill compulsory. It is contemplated that any bank preferring to do so may deposit 2 per cent., or may pay a commission for doing the business. They may do that, or may use such other agency for redeeming mutilated currency as they prefer. The proposed bill makes an elastic currency; for when bills concentrate in New York, they will be sent home and redeemed. When the business of the country warrants it, they do not come there. This bill accomplishes exactly what I understand the committee is seeking to obtain, and exactly what they seek to get.

In response to the invitation of the committee, Mr. LONDON, of New York, appeared and made the following statement:

There are occasions in the career of nations when it is the part of wisdom to compromise differences of opinion by some measure which may be accepted by the contending parties without detriment to either. Upon the subject of our currency and our financial policy, our people and their representatives are divided into two parties. One of these parties desires an additional amount of money, which can be obtained upon easier terms than the rates now demanded for the interest on loans, and supposes that an increased volume of paper money, issued by the Government, will accomplish its objects. The other party desires specie payments and a contraction of the paper circulation issued by the Government, assuming that a resumption of cash payments is a result that should be brought about, notwithstanding the suffering which such a course would entail. It is true but few are agreed upon any particular policy, as no one measure has such popularity as to override all others; but the chief points of difference may be traced to those who are debtors and those who are creditors. The numberless propositions now before us are so many unmistakable evidences of the weakness of our financial situation as a nation, especially as to our currency. We must accommodate those who wish more money, as I am ready to acknowledge that this interest is right and must be respected, and it will be clearly shown that the bill for an exchequer meets these wants better than any other proposition. I must also admit that those who deem specie payments just and right are equally entitled to the consideration of their claim, as founded upon an obligation as sacred as any which could bind any Government; and I must say to them that the bill for an exchequer will perfect and bring about a resumption in the only way in which we can resume and maintain specie payments without a calamity greater than the evil which would flow from a continued suspension.

There is no feasible way of resumption upon a paper currency compounded, as ours is, of two discordant descriptions of circulation—one-half issued by banks, which paid it out as a loan, and the other half paid out to settle a debt. The first is discharged by the latter, and of course has the same value. We are unable to pay the legal-tenders in coin, and we must therefore substitute them by a currency having different qualities, so that we may have a permanent resumption upon such terms as will be satisfactory to the great producing interests of the country. We have, first, five or six hundred millions of misplaced credits or money in the United States: compounded of legal-tenders about $400,000,000—a loan due by the Government to the people, which I propose to show cannot constitute a good currency; the surplus in the Treasury of $87,000,000—deduct the gold-certificates, and call it $50,000,000; the bank reserves and their undivided profits and surplus, about $250,000,000. Second. Our currency is constantly fluctuating in value. Third. The rates of interest are high, and in many portions of the United States money is not obtainable even at 1 per cent. per month, while much of that which is lent by the banks is upon collaterals, and not upon legitimate business paper. Fourth. Our currency has positively little or no value in our foreign trade, and there is no institution in the United States that issues paper-money payable in coin, which has sufficient credit, importance, or means to give it currency beyond the limits of the United States. Sixth. Our Government issues, in the shape of legal-tenders, are equally valueless in all our foreign trade. Seventh. The relations between capital and labor are frequently disturbed, and but recently all our commercial relations have been interrupted by a suspension of paper-payments—a singular and fearful catastrophe arising primarily from a short grain-crop abroad, which, by creating a demand for coin on the Bank of England, chiefly to supply the deficiency in the harvest, cut off the demand for our various bonds in the European markets, and thereby brought down many American houses engaged in railroad speculations, and precipitated distrust on our entire system of banking, which, extending itself like a plague throughout the whole country, has left us with the fearful sense of distrust for the future, while uncertainty and gloom cover every enterprise in the country dependent on capital for its prosecution. Such evils, wide-spread and almost universal, demand of us the most thorough investigation and a searching inquiry into their origin, and the most patient and serious consideration of the means by which we may remove the causes which have brought these evils upon us, and learn, if we cannot see, not only the remedy, but the preventive, by which we may secure ourselves against a recurrence of a similar state of affairs.

There can be no permanent ease in the money-markets of the United States unless there be an increase of the means which can be lent. This proposition needs no argument to sustain it; it is self-evident. A further loan from the people to the Government is therefore absurd. An increase of the legal-tender currency, or the swapping of bonds for those now out, or any new issues, will add but little, if anything, in amount to the money which can be lent to the people, since the Government will not lend its money or its credit to the business-men of the country. The right and the privilege now exists, and can be exercised by any one, to sell Government bonds for legal-tenders, or to convert legal-tenders into bonds of the Government in the open markets of the country, and nothing, therefore, can be accomplished in the way of relieving the pressure, by any privileges such as those suggested by the various propositions for swapping the bonds for Government paper-money, and then exchanging legal-tenders back again for bonds, except so far as these bonds or the legal-tenders may pass into the banks and constitute through them a means of extending their loans. The quality of this sum of \$400,000,000, or a large part of it, now in the form of legal-tenders, must be changed from being a debt due by the Government to the people into a loan to the people. This grand capital and primary action is absolutely necessary, and the means by which this is to be brought about is the first step toward relief, and it is this process which is the real difficulty before us; and unless we can substitute a currency which shall have its efflux in the form of a loan for this which represents a debt, nothing but continued perturbations and frequently-recurring shocks in our financial career are before us. A fluctuating currency, which is the second of the evils to be considered, all must assent, should not continue, as a varying standard of values is an absurdity and an evil which must be eradicated, or we cannot hope for that high degree of integrity and faithfulness which should characterize a country having 40,000,000 of population and a production of \$7,000,000,000 annually. While our dollar of paper is the measure of almost every transfer of property as between citizen and citizen, the rates of interest in the United States are about twice that of any nation with which we have commercial intercourse, and that it should be reduced no man entitled to respect can question. Usury laws are useless to stay the cormorant money-lender. All parties must recognize the fact that the best means by which usury can be extirpated is to make money plenty and good, equally accessible in every portion of the country; and since the taxes should be fairly levied and collected, so should the benefits which may incidentally arise from their use or distribution be shared in by every section of our common country, and hence the rates of interest should be the same throughout the country; at least in every institution deriving its franchises from the Government. One of the cardinal defects in the act of 1864 was the omission to make the interest uniform throughout the United States, instead of limiting the national banks to the rates in the several States. But if only a portion of what rumor alleges respecting the exactions practiced by the national banks, either covertly or openly, be true, enough occurs to warrant the inquiry as to the best means for correcting these irregularities. I should oppose any radical change in the present national banks, unless we can offer some measure which will be a judicious improvement. My purpose is to remedy dear money by utilizing all the idle means of the people, the Government, and the banks; and I therefore point to three sources from which relief may be rightly obtained. First. I mean the idle money in the Treasury. Second. The reserves required to be kept by the banks in surplus, and the increase of their issues to the full face-value of the Government bonds which they hold; and I thereby propose to change gradually the quality of that portion of our currency which exists in the form of legal-tenders to the extent of say \$150,000,000 certainly, into a currency which can be lent to the country. These changes made, and the addition to the loanable means of the country will be all of \$350,000,000; say increased issue from the banks, \$40,000,000, by the amount which would be lent by the exchequer, \$210,000,000, and by the sum now held by the banks as reserves in legal-tenders and coin, \$100,000,000; but, in addition, the banks which issue circulation, if limited, as they should be, to twice their capital in their discounts, would convert a large part of their immense surplus and undivided profits of \$174,819,600 into capital, so as to be able to discount by the use of these means; and, inasmuch as the surplus is now counted but once in these loans, we may from that source certainly add \$100,000,000 more to the permanent means for use in discounting business-paper, if the returns sworn to by the national banks are true, and this I am not prepared to question. This increase of \$450,000,000 to the loanable means of the country must satisfy those in favor of expansion. In a common calamity like that which has come upon us, great caution and forbearance are necessary to reach so desirable a result as that of blending in harmonious action so many institutions but recently shattered and disorganized, enabling them to save from the wreck as much as they can and to bring their means again into profitable use. I leave this part of the subject for the moment in order to consider the deplorable want of adaptation to the requirements of our foreign trade which our currency presents from its diversified origin. I cannot forbear a remark or two on some very conclusive evidence for my view that paper-money can maintain itself on a par with coin if its efflux is in the way of a loan or discount of business paper—important facts disclosed by the returns of the Bank of France—that upon a capital of some \$36,000,000, say 182,500,000f., there is a circulation of about \$600,000,000, or 2,892,777,852f. at within $\frac{1}{2}$ of 1 per cent. of and maintain itself at par, or within 1 per cent. even during the great wars with Germany. Those who desire to fix the amount of the circulation by the number of heads in the country, or by any other standard than that of the business requirements of the country, should reflect that every effort has failed to make our own paper-money, amounting to only about \$400,000,000, issued by our Government, with an annual revenue of some \$300,000,000, and property, as far back as 1870, of more than \$30,000,000,000, and augmenting in value daily, pass at par with coin even within our own territory, much less to serve any useful purpose in any foreign country, although our immense bonded debt of more than \$2,000,000,000 is equal to par at about half the interest paid for the use of this circulation for domestic purposes; while the rate of interest in France is only 4 per cent. to 6 per cent., and any departure from these rates by the Bank of France or the community is very rare, and yet the immense circulation in France is maintained at par. Bank-paper issued on the requirements of the business of a country, by a properly-organized institution, has in itself an adaptation for expansion and contraction, as well as for its own support and maintenance, that meets exactly all our necessities, whereas a legal-tender is absolutely destitute of any of these qualities. Their quantity in circulation is measured by nothing but the wants of the Government, fancied or real, and they do not legitimately originate in the business of the country or in the requirements of any accomplished transfers of property. Now, the amount of Bank of England notes which circulate in the foreign trade of Great Britain of course cannot approximate her circulation at home, but as far as that description of currency of any kind can be used, the notes of the Bank of England do go unquestioned, and her three-days' sight bills, payable to the order of the owner, are a favorite means by which travelers supply themselves with an unquestioned credit, and the influence which a stable currency and one unquestioned institution has had upon English credits throughout the world cannot be measured, as a sterling bill will buy whatever any man has to sell in almost every quarter of the world, while a bill on New York, to be current, has to undergo much scrutiny and many calculations as to its gold-value, and even then its usefulness is limited, and, indeed, the currency in which it is to be paid must be specified as in gold coin before anybody wants it, while the pound sterling means so much standard gold, recognized and accepted by and at the Bank of England. It may be asked, why seek to change the present system by which all our importations are carried on upon English credits? Are not their bills as serviceable as bills payable in the United States, and does not the use of sterling bills facilitate the movement of crops with advantage to our agriculturists? I answer that this business of conducting the exchanges of the world is one which has carried to England much of the money of the world, and with it much more of the commerce of the world than she would possess if her financial system was not as perfect as it is, and that to buy and sell with the instruments furnished us by another people costs us too much; and, besides, we owe it to our dignity and honor and our independence to shape our financial arrangements and place them in such form that a citizen of the United States can everywhere use the currency which his Government authorizes with the same advantages with which the citizen of Great Britain can use the currency of his country. A secondary position is one we ought not to consent to occupy to any other nation, and I take it that, however we may differ as to the best means of accomplishing the result, to change the commercial center of the world from England to the United States is an end that would warrant us in adopting almost any measure which would tend to effect so desirable an object.

Certain it is that by making money safe in England untold millions have been left in that country; and if called upon to trace the cause of her great success as a commercial nation, I should say that no single act has so much contributed to her triumph as making money safe, and, following her example, we should at once take such steps as will create for this country some absolutely safe depository for public and private funds, an institution equally as worthy of confidence as the Bank of England, and such an institution is sketched in the bill for an exchequer. If it be desirable to use credit at all, let us place it in that form best calculated to make it useful and available. It is an arduous undertaking to extract the vast annual yield of gold and silver from our mines, now from \$60,000,000 to \$70,000,000, but to allow it to go to swell the immense accumulation of bullion and coin in foreign banks, upon which their credits rest, while we use a fluctuating currency, and are, upon every short harvest in Europe, made to suffer pecuniarily so acutely, does seem to be a monstrous injustice to ourselves. Instead of dispersing our means and credits, let us combine and utilize them, following the example of those whose success should justify us in copying much of that which has been so beneficial to them. We endeavored to copy some portions of the English law in the act of 1864, by requiring our banks to hold a certain reserve in lawful money, legal-tenders or coin, which, in addition to giving apparent stability to the banks, absorbed a large amount of greenbacks. The true foundation for paper-money should be coin, real money, as the last resort in the moments of danger and alarm. The exchequer guards the line of discounts by limiting them to twice its capital, a check upon overtrading which, if established for all other banks who are issuers of paper-circulation, would go far toward preventing panics entirely; but so far as reserves are concerned, they should be kept at the marine or commercial points, where our foreign commerce can make its demands and be accommodated with what may be necessary. In this respect the bill for the exchequer provides as positively as any charter could, its chief office and its branches being located at the commercial centers of each section of the country. Fullarton lays it down as one of the greatest advantages growing out of the Bank of England that its coin is like a vast national granary, and so located as to answer to every foreign demand for coin with which to buy grain, while the interior banks of England, Ireland, and Scotland move on in their career without any inconvenience to the internal trade of the country. Indeed, commercial currency panics, Fullarton says, are unknown in Scotland. Now, a question which I wish to raise, and to which I would ask your special attention, is this: Could it be possible for credits on England to be all over the world as valuable as they are if her circulation was discharged, not with coin, money of gold or silver, but was redeemed by a consol, a bond bearing, say, 3.65 or even 6 per cent.? No; the thing known and expressed on the face of these sterling bills of exchange and on the Bank of England notes is a pound—a gold pound—worth in our coinage to-day, by law, \$4.86 $\frac{5}{16}$. And I desire to put this interrogatory: Can any one expect, in the markets of the world, that foreigners, ignorant of our legal-tenders, our bonds, and our bank-paper, will accept any of these for their property in place of the universally known dollar? No; they reckon on that THE THING which they ought to get for their property is so many gold dollars; but, when told that the words “one thousand dollars” in the United States mean just that amount of legal-tenders which may be sold for gold dollars by giving \$100 off and accepting nine hundred gold dollars for the nominal thousand, or he may get a bond for one thousand dollars, the interest on which is paid in coin, they naturally turn away from transactions so uncertain and cling to an Englishman’s money or a sterling bill of exchange. Again, can we expect foreigners to make their ventures to this country or leave their balances with us when the 10 per cent. discount on our paper to-day may be 15 per cent. or 20 per cent. to-morrow? These illustrations, I hope, will satisfy every mind that we should have one conservative institution, the existence of which among us would clear away from American credit and money that distrust which our fluctuating currency creates in the minds of all enlightened merchants and bankers throughout the world. In this respect the results would be incalculable, but to these benefits we add the facts that, by the establishment of the Exchequer and the adoption of the suggestions which have been germinated by this discussion, we shall increase the loanable means of the country so largely, and thereby reduce the exorbitant rates of interest which prevail in the United States, and lay the foundation for changing the points of settlement for our very large foreign commerce from London to the United States, because we should be creating an institution of greater capital than any now existing in the world, and so organized as to guarantee absolute safety to our currency and to every depositor, coin or its equivalent whenever demanded, keeping here the resulting balances of our commerce with foreign nations. But one of the greatest agents for bringing about friendly intercourse among mankind, and familiarizing the people of different nations who trade together, is the same money. Napoleon I sought to break up local prejudices and aversions by making French coins, French weights and measures, and the French language the language of Europe; but his words were, the greatest of all agents to acquaint nations and communities with each other is to give them the same money. Now, great as would be the advantages of the Exchequer on other grounds, I must be permitted to say that by giving to every section of this vast country one form of currency, one rate of interest for its use, one institution running like a golden chain through every quarter of the United States, we may add another bond of union, another source of attachment, and another chain about the union of these States, but recently endangered by a revolution, the suppression of which has been the primary cause of the very difficulties we now deplore, and caused the loss of much of our renown as a commercial people.

In the issue department the sovereignty of the States is recognized by giving to each State in which there would be a branch the same authority which the Government of the United States would have—a safeguard and protection to the holders of Exchequer notes, and at the same time mingling authorities and reconciling interests which but recently were in antagonism. This feature in the bill must silence the objections of many State-rights men who have complained that the Federal Government, through the late Bank of the United States, invaded with a moneyed corporation their sovereign territory. Now, in the organization of the Bank of the United States of 1816 the bonds of the Government were accepted to the extent of three-fourths of the private subscriptions, the 7 per cent. at $106.50, the 6 per cent. bonds at par, and the 4 per cent. at $60. The privilege was accorded to the bank to sell these bonds as well as the $7,000,000 subscribed by the Government. It turned out that the whole of these bonds were either paid or sold, so that the whole $28,000,000 of United States bonds became so much actual money, and, after receiving the dividends on its subscription, the Government sold to the bank its stock after the charter had expired, at $115.58. Now the Exchequer virtually accepts three-fourths of its capital in 4 per cent. bonds of the United States at par, inasmuch as the subscriptions made to its capital will be three-fourths in legal-tenders and one-fourth in coin, unless subscribed for in coin by foreigners; the practical operation being that, by dividing (as seems to be about the course which should be adopted in the organization) the subscriptions into installments of 10 per cent. each month, the Exchequer would withdraw monthly $7,500,000 in legal-tenders for ten months, and each month, pari passu with these payments on the subscriptions, the Exchequer would discount business-paper to the extent of $10,000,000, thus adding to instead of diminishing the amount of money in circulation. After the subscriptions were all paid up and the institution taking in deposits, a further conversion of legal-tenders would go on up to $150,000,000, the additional circulation passing from the issue department to the banking department, and through its discounts adding the amount of coin, which throughout would be one-fourth, left with the 4 per cent. bonds into which the legal-tenders would be converted, so that the community would enjoy the use of the entire circulation because it would all be loaned out and paid away upon business obligations. But the greatest of all advantages would be that the legal-tenders now borrowed of the people would be converted into a loan to the community, an operation which can be easily performed with as much certainty as anything dependent on the future for fulfillment; and as every Exchequer note would be payable in coin, this must satisfy those who favor specie payments; and without meaning to exaggerate the advantages of such a change, I challenge the criticism of every man who claims the attention of the public for any views he may have on financial questions; and I demand of those who are advocating a currency to be issued wholly by the Government, or a circulation convertible and reconvertible into bonds, how will your schemes compare in this all-important and vital point with the Exchequer? Now, all of these propositions are clearly predicated upon the absurdity that our currency can be made either stable or elastic, while the foundation, the very means of its creation, is purely arbitrary, brought into being without business operations, the true, unquestionable, and sure measure which should limit the circulation and carry it upon all its various duties and bring it back to its issuers with as much certainty as the ebb and flow of the tides. If any principle of finance is settled, it is that all currency, to be stable and elastic, must have its efflux from the issuers in the way of a loan, the payment of which will bring back this circulation as a reflux; and it is equally true that all such issues, if made on the discount of active business-paper, will carry with them this exact quality, and preserve always the elasticity and activity of the business of the country; whereas loans which are postponed or delayed from time to time and not paid, if made by the issuers of paper money as an accommodation, seem instinctively to hurry themselves back to the issuers for redemption and thus warn the banks against this course of business. I speak from some observation of my own in an experience of thirty years, and from the testimony of almost every bank officer and writer in this country or any other. During the discussions respecting the subtreasury we heard many expressions about the introduction of a system which would result in giving to the officers of the Government a currency of coin, while another, exclusively of paper, must be used by the people. We are reminded of these words by the facts we now witness, that the only currency which is accessible to the producers of cotton, grain, tobacco, hemp and woollen goods, shoes, blankets, &c, is, in the entire country east of the Rocky Mountains, of paper. But remember the fact that the bondholders get their dues in coin, and so do our foreign ministers, I suppose; but we have no gold coin in our circulation, while the duties on all imports are all payable in coin, practically fulfilling the declaration that this would be the result. The advocates of the independent treasury were chiefly free-traders and friends of rigid economy on the part of Government, and lost sight of the fact that in the course of events an immense sum in coin might be dragged from its place in the commerce of the country and kept idle in the Treasury, thus carrying away the foundation of our entire credit system, and placing it beyond the reach of hands that could judiciously use it in our trade and commerce. Our present financial situation painfully fulfills all the worst predictions of the opponents of the subtreasury, demonstrating in a form but too obvious that we should not continue a financial system projected for a Government which was never designed to receive or pay away much money, certainly never to hold a large surplus, but which has changed into one of the largest money-dealers in the world, and which at the present time holds in coin, idle, more than all the balance of every kind held by either individuals or corporations in the entire country, and our Secretary of the Treasury really holds absolute control over every dollar of this vast sum, and can, at his will, sell the gold which the Treasury has or buy more; whereas we all know our poor farmers, merchants, and planters are but too happy to get greenbacks or paper money of any kind and to pay from 1 to 2 per cent. per month for their use. It is a painful result from two of the leading financial measures of the Government of the United States—the subtreasury act and bank act of 1864—that the former has locked in the Treasury so large a surplus, (nearly $100,000,000,) while the other has compelled the banks to hold as a reserve a similar amount, about one-fourth of the paper money issued by the Government. We must remedy these defects now by heeding the demands which a suffering population make, and blend, in an acceptable form, these two immense sums of money, and bring them into use in such form as shall meet the necessities of the age in which we live. I come to consider an objection which finds its utterances in the expressions that the great danger is that the Exchequer will of necessity pass into bad hands and become the engine of corrupt men. To this I answer that if great and honest and intelligent men cannot be found as capable of conducting such an institution as those who manage the Bank of England, or the banks on the continent of Europe, then we should no longer claim consideration as virtuous enough to prevent from wreck the most stupendous popular government now existing, and which stands as the hope of republican liberty throughout the world. I deem it the proper occasion to say I do not share in these forebodings, but believe that we have the men and the means to remodel our system of finance, and that we can devise measures that will give to this country a stable currency, obtainable for all legitimate business purposes at 6 per cent. and under, and that we can in time bring to the United States the commercial center of the world. The leading measure, the first step toward these great ends, you should now project by founding an institution, bottomed upon our resources, and which shall harmonize all the means of the people and the Government.

In Italy the banks existing in Tuscany, Naples, Sardinia, and Rome have been brought into one institution practically under the government of Victor Emanuel. The Bank Royal of Prussia, founded in 1765, now occupies a high financial position. The Bank of Vienna is still the governmental agency in Austria; and so in France and England with their banks. Now, the principles upon which these various banks are carried on, as well as the Bank of Constantinople, may vary in many minor particulars, but one purpose, one object, is apparent throughout all of these various institutions. It is this: These institutions are capable of facilitating the state, and of furnishing a currency for the business of the people which is equivalent to coin, upon better terms than many different institutions could do, and, besides, in hours of panic or distress or in war, the means of relief can be much more easily obtained through the agency of one such institution of ample means than from many; besides, if credit is to be used, then the single institution can unquestionably better serve the difficulties of the moment than many dispersed and divided banks. The senseless cry of "Monster" may be raised against the Exchequer, but the reply is but too obvious. What would you think of a commander who, having an army of men to transport to New York from Washington, should, for fear of an accident, select old-fashioned sulkies—wagons or carriages, even—and set out to accomplish the transportation by these, when, by using the railroads, with their ponderous engines, in a few hours the transfer could be accomplished with convenience? So let us in our currency, by blending the means of the Government with the capital of the country, create a currency, organize a financial system as far superior to our present system as the railroad, the iron river, is above those obsolete modes of transportation. The cry of "Monster!" why, have we not more than two thousand banks which are accounting regularly to your Comptroller, and is not the Secretary of the Treasury the Government itself—absolutely so placed by law as to be master of the financial proceedings of every bank and every merchant in the country? The Exchequer will of necessity act in harmony with the credit institutions now existing, strengthen and sustain them, and free us and our finances from detrimental complications with foreign nations, and, instead of our whole system falling down before an adverse commercial current in Europe like a short harvest, we shall be enriched, as we should be, by these demands for our crops. We have a continent rich to an extent that is the wonder of the world. We are, however, so far as our currency is concerned, destitute of our own respect, even so inferior is our money in circulation. We have had peace for nearly nine years, and we are to-day passing out of a commercial tragedy not yet ended, I fear, which could not have occurred if one strong, conservative, and properly organized institution like the Exchequer had existed, and, indeed, the action of the several clearing-houses plainly declares that, without concentration of their means and credits in harmonious action with all of our banks, they would most probably have been forced into absolute suspension, if not into bankruptcy. True, the Government assisted in checking the violence of the tornado, but we cannot infer that men demanded bank-notes or legal-tenders for their deposits because of their high appreciation of that currency and their confidence in it. The occurrences all plainly show that the instincts of the people satisfied them that bank-notes or legal-tenders, for which the Government was responsible, were preferable to a credit for a deposit on the books of banks with small capitals, whether national or private; and this is all that these incidents establish. It is only what every creditor will do if he has sold a bill of goods to a man who is in difficulties; he will, if he can, take back his goods in preference to standing a creditor on the books of his debtor. In war, the general who scatters his forces is seldom, if ever, successful against an equal force, whereas he that concentrates his forces is almost in every instance victorious. The magnitude of the undertaking before us ought not to intimidate a legislator worthy his place in the Congress of the United States, but rather nerve him to fulfill his duty with honor and intelligence. The novel requirement in our system of banks for a reserve in the act of 1864, compelling city banks to keep one-fourth of the amount of their circulation and deposits out of use and 15 per cent. in towns, with the privilege of counting two-fifths of whatever sum the town banks held in city banks, was brought to a practical test in September and October; and if we had been employed years to perfect a regulation exactly improper and wrongly devised, we could not have projected anything so hurtful in the hours of panic and alarm, since, if the banks obeyed the law in cities, they were compelled to collect four dollars for each dollar of their deposits drawn out in legal-tenders after their reserves were reduced to 25 per cent. of their deposits, or when the holders of their notes brought in enough to run down their reserves on their circulation to the same point, and in towns six dollars were called for from the debtors when their reserves were brought down to the legal point. Can we be surprised, therefore, at the universal terror inspired by the failure of some large houses in New York and the partial suspension of the banks at that point? Now, overtrading is one thing. A superabundance of currency is entirely a different affair. Our disease is not too much currency, but a pernicious and unstable currency; besides this evil, we have overtrading and extravagance. The remedy is to bring our currency, our money, to a par with coin, and this can be done through the Exchequer, while the luxury and prodigality engendered by the uses to which the immense expenditures of the war contributed will cure themselves as soon as the real wealth of the country is properly absorbed in the business of the whole country, and not thrown into the whirlpool of stock speculations, which has been fed for years by the transfers of the means of the interior banks to the national banks and others in New York, and there used in call-loans on stocks, bonds, &c. It must be clear that something is radically wrong, however, and it is certainly our duty to endeavor to cure the disorder. Those who may endeavor to build up again with the materials of the present system will, I fear, find that there are too many defective timbers in the débris ever to rear a safe or valuable edifice; whereas by adopting the Exchequer we bring together materials which in other nations have been found invaluable, and with us, even in spite of our unsettled condition, the only things upon which we have had any semblance of reliance for safety. I mean, of course, the money-credit and confidence of the Government, wedded to the capital of the country, sheltering each other, and making common cause in times of peril and danger. Some modifications have presented themselves to my mind as proper in the bill, viz, to limit the amount which any officer, or any concern or corporation, of which he may be a member, may owe to say $10,000, and the amount which may be discounted for any concern, individual, or corporation to say $100,000, except upon obligations of the Government after the discounts of business paper with two acceptable names has reached the gross amount $200,000,000 and the limit of advances on Government obligations as collaterals fixed at their face value and no more. I have deemed these provisions as removing the only plausible objection which will be against the practical operations of the bill. Of course the period of the existence of the Exchequer must be fixed, as well as the number of votes necessary to reject a piece of business paper offered for discount, as well as the rights of the individual proprietors as to the openness and publicity of the condition of the Exchequer, by frequent publications of the return of the whole institution. But of the propriety and wisdom of the measures suggested in the bill I entertain not a particle of doubt. I feel more confidence now than ever that the measure will be accepted by the country as eminently judicious.

There are some eminent men who have expressed the opinion that the use of gold and silver as money is a remnant of barbarism, and that we may judiciously dispense with their use. Such persons ignore the experience of all nations who have ever tried the experiment.

There are others who would discard all paper money and return to a metallic currency. These extreme opinions are equally objectionable; truth lies midway between them. A currency measured by the business of the country and converted into coin at the will of the holder, and issued by an institution of sufficient capital and respectability to give it the confidence of all with whom we have commercial relations, is the perfection of all we could desire; and thus the establishment of the Exchequer will furnish us a result which I think I have shown will not be obtained by the adoption of any of the propositions for converting bonds into currency or currency into bonds. If the bill for an Exchequer were now passed, within the year the entire subscriptions would be completed and paid up. The fractional currency now afloat could be retired out of the coin now in the Treasury, thus furnishing to the poor first, real money on the return toward a currency equal to coin. Legal-tenders to the extent of $150,000,000 could pass out of existence, and $200,000,000 of Exchequer-notes, equivalent to coin, would be lent to the people, as we could, with the establishment of the Exchequer, release the national banks from the restrictions now laid upon them, and thus bring them into the discount-markets with all their means unlocked, and the rates of interest would thus be reduced, and our industries and commerce, awaking from the stupor of uncertainty and doubt which now oppress them, would with vigor assume their wonted activity, while the credits of this country would take a position at home and abroad unknown in our history. The scenes enacted on our exchanges, where the spirit of wild and reckless speculation has for many years held periodical carnivals, would disappear before the steady operation of a well-adjusted system of finance. These are ends which every good citizen must desire. Besides, a worthy ambition and a just and laudable patriotism would be gratified by knowing that we possessed one of the best moneyed institutions in the world, with a larger capital than any now existing, and with the means of securing as high a position for our currency and credit in all commercial marts as that possessed by England, France, Prussia, or any other nation; and this great institution would be a bulwark which would successfully protect us from the effects of financial disturbances in Europe, which have heretofore exerted far too much influence upon our finances; and within the last few months we have witnessed a commercial tornado, originating primarily in a short harvest in Europe, and coming upon us at an unfortunate period of the year, which carried down our merchants and banks with almost as little warning as the thunderbolt shatters the oak.

And now, Mr. Chairman, may I not address you and your associates on this important committee, and, pointing to the honors earned by Sir Robert Peel and those who co-operated with him in 1819 and 1844 in dealing with similar subjects, request from you the exercise of your recognized abilities in bringing the nation back to cash payments through the agency of the Exchequer, by which we will secure good and cheap money? I have not exhausted the arguments in favor of the Exchequer, but I hope I have said enough to induce you to investigate its merits, believing that you will, as others have done, conclude that it should be adopted.

The capitals, loans, and circulations of the banks of England, France, Belgium, and Netherlands, as of June, 1873, were—

Bank of England, £14,553,000, say	$72,765,000
France, 182,500,000 francs, £7,300,000, or	36,500,000
Belgium, as reported by Mr. McCulloch	6,000,000
Netherlands, as reported by Mr. McCulloch	5,500,000
Gross capitals	120,765,000

LOANS AND DISCOUNTS.

Government and other securities, Bank of England held, same date: Govern- ment, £13,398,934; other securities, £25,612,706; together, £39,011,640; converted into dollars, $5 to the pound	$195,011,640
France: Private loans, $229,014,717; government, $300,793,707	529,808,424
Belgium, £11,296,000, or	56,480,000
Netherlands, £9,390,000	46,950,000
Total, exclusive of bonds in issue department	828,250,064

CIRCULATIONS.

Notes issued, £34,871,685, (Bank of England,) or	$174,358,425
France, £111,763,000, or	558,815,000
Belgium, £13,356,000, or	66,780,000
Netherlands, £14,277,000, or	71,385,000
Total	871,338,425

Loans to individuals, nearly four times their capitals; to governments and individuals, nearly seven times their capitals; and circulation of more than seven times their capitals.

The five chief European banks, operating under the countenance of their separate governments—the banks of England, France, Prussia, Belgium, and the Netherlands—show aggregate capitals of about $350,000,000; discounts to individuals, $725,000,000; government bonds and advances, $400,000,000, and circulations at par of $1,250,000,000; while our defective system of dispersed national banks shows, capitals, $491,072,656; individual loans, $944,220,116.34; government bonds, $411,930,250; and circulation, $339,081,799, at 11 per cent. discount of the day. If facts like these will not carry conviction to the minds of every man that our system must be pernicious, certainly, as regards circulation, no facts could; but in our own history we have, under badly organized banks of the United States—one in 1791 and then in 1816—moving under the countenance of the Government of the United States, had a convertible currency for forty years, and in forty-two years, operating under different systems, we have been in suspension for certainly one-third of the entire period. Ponder upon these facts carefully, and let your action be in accordance with tried principles, which the experience of the best-informed nations as well as our own has established as wise, beneficial, and serving all the best ends of commerce, agriculture, and sound national morality. The facts as to these great European banks were unknown to me till within a few weeks, although my time and attention had been much occupied for years with these and kindred questions; and when I had grouped the startling facts together, and ran the comparison between the system which we have and that which prevails with other nations, I was astounded. These foreign banks, with about $335,000,000 of capitals, have a circulation at par with gold the world over of about $1,250,000,000, or nearly four times their capitals. Our two thousand national banks, as by the Comptroller's statement, have $490,000,000 and over, and a circulation of only $340,000,000, or $150,000,000 less even than their capitals, at a discount below gold of 11 per cent., and every day changing. These European banks lend to individuals and governments nearly four times their capitals. Ours lend less than three times their capitals, while our banks lend less than twice their capitals to individuals. May I not assert, without the fear of any contradiction from the people or their representatives, that our great want is accommodation in the shape of loans or discounts; and, if so, then that system by which other nations have secured such beneficial results we ought to adopt, as, by uniting the means and credits of their governments with the capital of the countries in one national banking institution, they have furnished their people with money equivalent to coin at less than half the rates of interest current in a very large portion of the United States. More money, which can be lent the people, is for us a capital necessity, and that which we do borrow at such high rates of interest surely ought to be equivalent to coin. The question before us is not contraction or expansion; it is how we can increase the loanable means of the country, thereby reducing the rates of interest and safely make our currency equivalent to coin and world-wide in its usefulness.

It requires of the sun more than two hundred minutes—three and one-half hours—to look upon the face of the United States of America, and twenty degrees of latitude to measure them. Shall we compel our merchants and people to go to an Englishman (the citizen of a little island more than three thousand miles from us, not so large as some of our States) to get their money or credit before they can enter the marts of any foreign country? Such is the case even at Havana, within sight of our shores. Is not such a state of things a shame? I hope I have shown the way by which this state of affairs may be changed. The notes and credits of the Bank of the United States, from 1816 to 1836, did circulate at par with coin at home and abroad, as the late cashier, Mr. Samuel Jourdan, affirms, and within a week I have seen the man who canceled the notes of this bank, and he tells me they had upon them the stamps and the hieroglyphy of the Chinese and every nation with which we had commercial intercourse. If such were the results from the action of Congress in 1816, with our limited resources blended in one national institution, surely we can now, by using the same principles, accomplish like results. I beg to exhibit one £5 note, Bank of England, a five-franc note, Bank of France, and a ten-thaler note, Bank of Prussia, and for all of which I paid a premium over gold in New York. And I also exhibit one $5 legal-tender, and one $5 national-bank note, worth in coin in New York $4.45, and in England $4.25. Surely we can remedy these things by the establishment of the Exchequer or some such institution, and in no other way, as I affirm and believe.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. If I understand you correctly, you assume in the course of your argument that the only basis of sound banking is coin.

Mr. LONDON. I think the statement is that the only true reliance for paper money is, in the last resort, coin.

The CHAIRMAN. I find, in looking over the charter of the Bank of England, that the sum of £14,000,000 is to be deposited as security. Now, what does this £14,000,000 rest upon, excepting the debt due by the government of Great Britain?

Mr. LONDON. The capital of the bank is £14,000,000. The original amount of bonds was three-quarters and the balance other securities. The bank was organized in 1694. During the Napoleonic wars it had issued money, and in 1819 Robert Peel raised the celebrated bullion committee. The bank said, "We are ready to resume when the government is ready to resume;" and they did resume.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the difference in principle between notes issued by the Bank of England and notes issued by our national banks, predicated upon the bonded debt of the government?

Mr. LONDON. Practically they have the same quality in this respect: A bank-note is the evidence of a debt due from the bank. The operation we call discount is simply a swapping of credits. But, in addition to that, our bank-notes are the evidence of Government bonds in the hands of the Government at the rate of 90 cents upon the dollar, so that practically our bank-notes have to-day for each dollar that is in circulation an equivalent of more than $2 in coin. The note of the Bank of England is issued upon the same principle, and we borrowed that principle from them.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it not a fact that to-day the currency of the Bank of England is subject to a great deal of criticism in England, and that a great many maintain that it is a vicious system of circulation?

Mr. LONDON. If you can find a member of Parliament who will propose in the House of Commons or House of Lords to repeal the charter of the Bank of England, I should begin to think there was some indication of altering their system. Still, it is true that there are differences of opinion; but we must recollect that is the commercial center of the world. But when men talk of repealing the monetary system of Great Britain, they might as well talk of pulling down the throne.

NEW YORK, February 11, 1874.

DEAR SIR: I send by this mail to your address, for your stenographer, copy of my argument before your committee, which contains the table, as nearly as I can restate it, as to the foreign banks, and which should be printed as this copy now sent which occurs on the last page. (The capitals, loans, and circulation of the banks of England, France, Belgium, and the Netherlands, as of June, 1873, were:

Bank—	Capital.	Loans to gov- ernment.	Loans to in- dividuals.	Circulation.
Of England £14, 553, 000, say.....	$72, 265, 000	*$66, 994, 670	$128, 063, 530	$174, 358, 425
France, francs, 182, 500, 000. £7, 300, 000.....	36, 500, 000	300, 793, 707	229, 014, 717	558, 815, 000
Belgium, as reported by McCulloch.....	6, 000, 000		56, 480, 000	66, 780, 000
The Netherlands, as reported by McCulloch.....	5, 500, 000		46, 950, 000	71, 385, 425
			460, 508, 247
Government loans.....			367, 768, 377
	120, 765, 000		828, 276, 624	871, 338, 850

* Exclusive of bonds held by issue department.

Loans to individuals, nearly four times their capitals; to governments and individuals, nearly seven times their capitals; and a circulation of more than seven times their capitals.

In the course of your questions as to the fact that the Bank of England notes were really issued to the extent of its capital or government bonds—and you wished to know why circulating-notes, if issued directly by the government, would not have been just as good—I was stopped, as you recollect, by Mr. Mitchell's introduction of Mr. Buell. The issue of government paper-money has been long discarded in England, because it would have its efflux in payment of a debt; and you will recollect, on pages 60 to 70, Fullarton states that all the European governments that resorted to the issue of assignats lost them entirely; whereas the issues of the Bank of England to conduct the Napoleonic wars were all paid; and to show you how determined Sir Robert Peel was to eradicate entirely all such absurdities—and he was England's greatest statesman for this century—he not only made it a necessity that the issue department should be totally and forever separated from the office of banking, but thus positively put by what could not come into use, the capital of the bank, in government bonds. In the Exchequer we surpass him at this point by putting by the capital, three-quarters in government bonds and one-quarter in coin. True, we allow the same proportion above the capital, whereas he required all coin for notes issued above the capital. But our country is an agricultural one, and can and does use more bank-notes than if we were a manufacturing and commercial people. The present unequal distribution of banking capital may be remedied by the award of the capital of the Exchequer. The Valley of the Mississippi, including Cincinnati, should get about $50,000,000 more loanable means than they now have; Memphis from $6,000,000 to $8,000,000—considerations which ought to be thought of by all who are interested in the West and South.

With regard and good wishes, I am, yours,

D. H. LONDON.

Hon. HORACE MAYNARD,

Chairman Committee Currency and Banking, Washington City, D. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 11, 1874.

GEORGE W. ALLEN, manufacturer, of Milwaukee, Wis., appeared before the committee, on their invitation, and made the following statement:

I did not come to the city of Washington with any intention or expectation of appearing before the committee. I am a manufacturer of leather, and upon the subject of finance and currency, as a matter of course, I have been interested, as a manufacturer, for thirty-two years. I may, perhaps, be called a rather extensive manufacturer in the line in which I am engaged, and my business, as other branches of business in the country, depends largely upon the condition of the currency of the country. For this reason I have given the subject a good deal of attention, although I am not an expert on finance. I am simply one of the common business, floating population, with general ideas upon this subject. I may state frankly, in the first place, that my views are opposed to any expansion of the currency. We have a certain amount of business in this country to carry on, for which currency is needed, to move a certain number of barrels of corn or wheat, dry goods, and other merchandise.

I will not put the amount in dollars. Nothing but the currency of the country can facilitate these business operations. The amount which will be required for this amount of business depends not alone upon the volume of currency, but also upon the value of the currency itself in its purchasing power. And here is a fact which we do not generally bear in mind. At the close of the war it is well known the currency of the country was very largely inflated, and prices, as a matter of course, were very largely enhanced. That was owing both to the taxes placed upon almost every commodity and to the depreciation of the currency. Since that time we have gone on shrinking in these values toward the gold standard. Gold has gone down from 250 or 280 to 10 or 12 at the present day. But the values of commodities remain to-day enhanced 25 per cent., while gold is at 10 or 12 per cent. premium. In other words, the values have not gone down corresponding with the price of gold; consequently the amount of currency required is increased in a very great degree, because the prices of commodities have not gone down. For instance, in my own business our largest article of manufacture is hemlock sole-leather, the price of which is now from 30 to 32 cents, while before the war it was from 20 to 22 cents. So with the other articles of manufacture.

Mr. FARWELL. Has not the demand largely increased since the war, and does not that cut some figure in these prices?

Mr. ALLEN. No, sir; I think not. For several years we had a large surplus in this country. The demand was not equal to the production and the prices remained stationary. They did not give way at all. Now, I take it that this process of shrinking ought to go on further. I think we must get nearer to our pre-war prices; not that prices should ever get back to the exact point where they stood before the war, but they must go down further than they have done. We business men of course dislike to have our goods to shrink upon our hands, but it has got to come, and may as well come now as at any other time.

We may say there is not currency enough in the country to meet the requirements of the business of the country. To meet this difficulty two remedies are suggested. One is to have prices shrink further, and thereby require a less volume of currency to transact the same amount of business, having the same effect in that regard as increasing the volume of the currency.

Mr. RANDALL. Is that shrinking you speak of going on now?

Mr. ALLEN. I think it is going on every day.

Mr. RANDALL. Then the present volume of the currency is becoming more and more sufficient for the transaction of business?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes. In other words, the amount of currency for the transaction of business has been increasing every year since the close of the war by a corresponding reduction of prices. I say that one remedy is to allow prices to go on shrinking until they shall correspond with our normal condition, and that is my preference. The other remedy is to increase the volume of currency in order to meet the requirements of business. But I think we, as business men, defeat our own purpose by advocating such a policy. I have stated that while gold is to-day at 10 or 12 premium, prices remain 20 to 25 per cent. above where they were when our currency corresponded to that of gold. In other words, if you advance currency 10 per cent., you advance prices 15 per cent. beyond. That is inevitable under the operation of laws of finance well understood in the business of the country.

The CHAIRMAN. If you brought your currency to a specie basis, would that bring prices down 25 per cent.?

Mr. ALLEN. I think they would gradually come down until that point had been reached.

The CHAIRMAN. And when they touched bottom you think that would be 25 per cent. below where they are now?

Mr. ALLEN. I cannot state the absolute percentage. I cannot speak so definitely now in regard to agricultural products, but I can say that merchandise generally bears a rate of 25 per cent. above the rate before the war. The result of such a shrinkage would be that we should have more currency for actual use than we have now, because if you increase the value of the currency 10 per cent., you thereby reduce prices and increase the volume of currency for actual use; while if you increase the volume of currency, you enhance prices 15 or 20 per cent. beyond; and when the increase of currency gets into the business of the country and becomes assimilated, you really have 5 to 10 per cent. of currency less, in proportion to the wants of the business of the country, than you had before. Now, it is claimed that we must have a further increase of currency because the business of the country is so much enlarged. It has not been enlarged at all. If you were to go on increasing the volume of currency and increasing the prices at a correspondingly enhanced rate, after awhile you would not have any currency at all. In other words, it would become valueless and powerless to move the crops of the country.

Mr. FARWELL. In Germany, since the late war, prices have advanced very largely, more than in this country. That has been under a gold basis. Can you explain that fact under your theory?

Mr. ALLEN. The emigration from Germany to this country has been very large. Then, again, the war destroyed a great many men, and they have been very short of labor in Germany, enhancing of course the price of labor. While I was in Berlin during the last season, seeing a number of brick buildings going up, I inquired the wages paid to the mechanics, and learned that it was as high as three dollars and a half a day in greenbacks, and this high price was obtained because of the scarcity of labor.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there not some people of your acquaintance who attribute all commercial and financial disturbances to the disturbed condition of the currency, and who make no allowances for any other disturbing causes?

Mr. ALLEN. It is possible there are men who think so. We know that the disturbances in our financial matters occurred because of the war, and that they continue because we have not yet recovered. There are of course a great many intelligent men who entertain the idea that an increase of the volume of the currency would remedy the difficulty. But it is just like a man who is drunk, (we have been drunk upon paper during the war.) A man, when he has the delirium tremens, does not think anything will relieve him but brandy, and his whole cry is "Brandy, brandy." And so with us; when we get apparently short of currency, our cry is for more currency, and we think that is the only thing which will relieve us.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you think the people of Germany are drunk on gold?

Mr. ALLEN. No. I speak now of our own country.

Mr. MITCHELL. Does not the condition of affairs in Germany show that high prices are quite consistent with the maintenance of the specie standard?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. FARWELL. You have not yet made it quite clear why it is when gold is 10 per cent. premium that the prices of commodities are 25. I have had the impression that the measure of inflation is the difference between the price of gold and the price of currency.

Mr. ALLEN. The experience of every business man shows the truth of what I have been stating. You, gentlemen, know that perfectly well, whenever you buy a hat or a pair of boots. Before the war I could buy a good hat for $3 which now costs $5, and so with every other article or merchandise.

Mr. FARWELL. Take, for instance, our imports of coffee and tea. There is no duty on them, and they are purchased with gold. Does not the increased business of the country account for the difference in the price of these articles?

Mr. ALLEN. I will explain myself in this way: Whenever you have a plethoric currency you also have high prices. That has been my experience for the thirty-two years I have been in business. That was true in 1857, and was the cause of the revulsion of 1857; and revulsion has been the result of every inflation that has ever taken place.

The CHAIRMAN. That in 1857 was a revulsion under the gold basis, however?

Mr. ALLEN. It was on a gold basis, and will be so upon any basis where inflation takes place.

Mr. RANDALL. Was it true during the war, when gold was at 250 and 280, that the price of the goods you manufactured was relatively enhanced?

Mr. ALLEN. Not at all. And that is an illustration of the fact that the law of prices does not always follow the increase or decrease of the volume of currency.

Mr. FARWELL. You say that during the war as the volume of currency was increased prices advanced. The volume of currency was increased, until, it has been said, it at one time amounted in its various descriptions to nineteen hundred millions. Now, when Richmond fell the volume of currency was not for some time materially reduced, but the commodities in your trade as well as mine decreased in prices 50 or 75 per cent. How do you explain that fact?

Mr. ALLEN. There are a great many causes which combine to produce these results. I am only explaining the inevitable effect of the expansion or contraction of the currency, and I am not combining with that these other causes which have the effect to produce sometimes quite different results. Living as we do in the Northwest, while this apparent want of currency was upon us to such an extent during the late autumn, I conversed freely with the intelligent business men of my city and State as to what they believed to be the proper remedy, and was surprised to find among our more intelligent manufacturers and merchants not a single one who proposed inflation of the currency as the remedy. They ascribed the panic to other causes. The fact is we have panics, and break down, and will have them as long as the world exists, for anything I know, because business men will subvert the laws of finance and trade by wild speculations, until they bring on a revulsion and all of us have to succumb.

The CHAIRMAN. You mean to say that we plain, honest people in the country, moving along in our ordinary course, have no remedy for these disasters?

Mr. ALLEN. That is about it. I think you have to come in with the rest of the human family and take the consequences. I was stating that the prevailing sentiment among the business men in my own city and State is that the remedy cannot be found in an extension of the currency; but the opinion prevails that our September and October difficulties did not occur for want of currency, but rather in consequence of the plethora of currency resulting in wild speculations.

The CHAIRMAN. Was there not a stringency in the money-market the year before and the year before that?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, because of lock-ups of the currency and from various reasons. Such things will occur from time to time.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you think we can have a superfluity of currency when some unscrupulous man can get hold of five or six millions and throw the whole business of the country into disorder by locking it up?

Mr. ALLEN. I have no doubt that if one hundred millions more had been in circulation during the late panic the same thing would have occurred. I had it from the president of the Park Bank of New York, that when the President and Secretary of the Treasury put into circulation a portion of the forty-four million reserve no effect whatever was produced, and in the opinion of this gentleman the cause of the breakdown was not because there was a lack of currency at all.

The CHAIRMAN. Suppose it had been known that money could have been obtained in an unlimited amount for satisfactory security: do you think there would have been any panic?

Mr. ALLEN. I do not know about that. A great many men were hard up at that time and could not get what they wanted. I presume there would have been no panic if the failure of a few men had not produced it. I think the difficulty Jay Cooke and others got into was caused by a plethora of currency, which they put out in all sorts of speculations, in moonshine railroads and everything else, because it could not be so profitably used in legitimate business, and then when the money was wanted to move the crops, it could not be obtained, because it had gone beyond their control.

The CHAIRMAN. How do you account for the fact that during the panic money was not accessible even by business men of the highest credit, and who had the best securities to give for it?

Mr. ALLEN. Everybody was panic-stricken, and put the money into their own pockets, because it was better security than anything else.

The CHAIRMAN. Then if the business men of the country had known that an unlimited supply of money could be obtained upon good security, do you think the trouble would have occurred?

Mr. ALLEN. If the supply of money had been without limit, it would not have been good for much.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you think men would give security for more money than they could use for their business purposes?

Mr. ALLEN. Of course not; but if you make money so plenty that it can be obtained for any use for which it is wanted in the country, it will have very little value. I always apprehend the danger of too much currency.

Mr. MITCHELL. Do you not regard it as an evidence that there is too much currency when it is at a discount?

Mr. ALLEN. Always.

Mr. MITCHELL. And whether the premium on gold is 10, 20, 30, 40, or 50 per cent., it is a test of whether there is too much currency or not?

Mr. ALLEN. Exactly.

The CHAIRMAN. It is stated that before the war, in the State of Indiana, gold was at a discount of from $\frac{1}{2}$ to 1 per cent., as compared with the notes of the State Bank of Indiana. How do you account for that?

Mr. ALLEN. That was merely because of the inconvenience, I suppose, of using gold as currency.

Mr. FARWELL. I understand you to say that you are not in favor of extension of the currency. What would you suggest on the subject of currency at this time?

Mr. ALLEN. I am a conservative, and am afraid of changes which will disturb the business relations of the country. For that reason I do not want anything violent or radical done. I do not want a contraction of the currency nor an expansion at the present time. But that a difficulty exists and some remedy is needed we all agree. There is one suggestion in connection with the present banking system I will venture upon, which, it seems to me, would afford some relief to the business of the South and West, and prevent the speculation which has occurred in the large cities in consequence of too much money in the last dozen years. I refer to the practice of keeping deposits of the country banks in New York City and of paying interest upon them. The result is that when currency becomes plenty in the summer, while the country banks want it just as much as the city banks do, it comes into New York City in such amounts that they do not know what to do with it, and it therefore goes into schemes of the wildest speculation in order to use the money profitably. But in regard to the proposed requirement that the country banks shall keep their deposits in their own vaults, there may be one difficulty. I was told the other day, by the president of the bank in Walworth County, Wisconsin, that the funds in every bank in the county except his own had been scooped out by armed men, and that twenty men could come into the village of Delavan, where his own bank is located, kill his cashier, take the funds of the bank, and the people of the village would be helpless to prevent it. I asked him if it would not be a remedy if the deposits were retained in the larger western cities; to which he replied, "O, yes; we send our surplus to Milwaukee and Chicago, where they are within a few hours' call."

The CHAIRMAN. I understand you to say that the fact of currency being at a discount as compared with gold is an indication that there is too much of it. Would it not be true that the existence of two currencies, one of which is valuable for two and the other for three purposes, would make a difference in the values of the currencies? In other words, as long as you have gold which will pay duties on imports while currency will not, will not the gold be most valuable, and does not that account for a large portion of the margin between the two?

Mr. ALLEN. A great many causes enter into our business relations which are independent of the abstract laws of finance, and it makes it difficult to determine absolutely the cause from the effect in any given instance. In 1857, when paper was so depreciated that for a small amount of gold you could get a very large amount of it, the panic was not the result of too little currency; and so I say there are a good many things which enter into these business relations which combine to effect the result.

WASHINGTON, January 13, 1874.

ABIEL ABBOT LOW appeared before the committee, and was examined as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Please state your residence and business.

Mr. LOW. I reside in Brooklyn, N. Y.; my business is with China, and has been for thirty years.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there, in your opinion, any defects in our present banking system? If so, please state what you consider them to be, and how they may be remedied.

Mr. LOW. The grand defect of the system is that it is based upon paper rather than upon coin. The banking system has always seemed to me to be a good one. I am not so conversant with its working as to claim to be an expert with regard to it. Its principal features, I think, are well approved by business men. I think it is satisfactory to business men in general. At the moment I should not know what improvement to suggest in the banking system.

The Chairman, by another question, threw open the whole subject of finance.

Mr. LOW. Your general question is so comprehensive that I hardly know where to begin or where to end. It is, perhaps, one of the imperfections of the banking system that it limits the rate of interest in New York to 7 per cent. I think if such a law as governs the Bank of England in this respect were adopted, and the banks were allowed to take a higher rate of interest when money is scarce, as they are compelled to take a lower rate when it is plenty, this would afford a check upon any tendency to inflation. My own belief is that the prosperity of the country and the true interests of the country demand that some steps should be taken early to restore the country to specie payment. During the last few months we have been going backward rather than forward. From 1865 to 1868 there was a reduction in the amount of paper-money. Within a few months the legal-tenders then withdrawn have been returned in part to the circulation again; so that we are worse off than we were five years ago. The evil effect of this is that at home and abroad this re-issue by the Treasury Department is construed into a disposition to inflate, and necessarily the belief extends abroad, as well as at home, that there will be further inflation, and those who have money here, owned in other countries, will be inclined to withdraw it. I dare say, as a matter of fact, since the panic which occurred in September, a good many stocks have been sent here from Europe for sale, and the proceeds have been withdrawn from the country, because of the general belief that a further inflation is to occur.

It is very well understood that the foreign indebtedness of the country is large. No inconsiderable part of it is the indebtedness of our railroad corporations, much of which is payable in gold, and the consequence is that a very large amount of interest is payable by these corporations in gold, whose earnings are not changed in consequence of fluctuations in coin, whose rates of freight and fare are fixed, and it matters very much to them whether a dollar of receipt will pay a dollar of indebtedness abroad or not. The inconveniences of the system of course are very great. We are compelled to do business in two currencies, and often without knowing at what cost for gold we are to liquidate for goods sold in currency. Gold varies day by day and week by week. Goods brought here from abroad are generally paid for by bills on England, drawn from at four to six months' time. On arrival they are sometimes salable for gold, and sometimes for currency; for instance, tea and silk from China. Silk is sold almost universally for currency; teas generally for gold, both being fixed for with bills drawn at six months' sight on England. If the price of the silk is fixed to-day in paper, according to the value of gold, when the remittance is made to cover some months hence, gold may be worth 10 or 20 per cent. more; so that, the price of silk being based upon the present rates of gold, there is a loss of the difference; or else, having paid 2 per cent. for credit in England, we remit as soon as the goods are sold, and no material benefit is derived from the six months' credit. These fluctuations are constant, and are severely felt by persons doing business with foreign countries.

Then, again, the loss in other ways is very great. All our local bonds, of State and city, are sold at prices which are lower, I think, in currency, than the prices which obtained before the war in gold or currency based upon gold. They are bought by the Germans and other foreigners at 12, 15, or 20 per cent. below the prices they formerly brought, because of the premium on gold realized in drawing upon their own countries in payment.

Then, again, if we are ever to entertain the idea of a return to specie payments, all these bonds will have to be remitted for in gold. I do not mean to say that interest on our local bonds will have to be paid in gold, but the principal will have to be so paid if we return to specie payments. My impression is that our country is parting with bonds in this way at the rate of $100,000,000 to $150,000,000 a year, and if we are to return to specie payments, it will be found to be a rather expensive system.

As I said before, our railroad interest is a very large one, and the earnings of our roads are to a great extent fixed. In my own State they are to some extent limited by law, and consequently, in remitting gold, the premium paid operates as a tax upon their earnings, instead of a dollar of earnings meeting a dollar of interest.

Another of the evil results of this condition of things is that gold is the constant subject of speculation. I have been informed that awhile ago the gold required to liquidate custom-house duties for a specified time was $13,000,000, while the amount actually sold at the gold-exchange reached $1,800,000,000. It has been the policy of the Government to keep a large amount of gold in the Treasury, and therefore there is but little accessible for the uses of commerce. The needs of gold in the transaction of business are very many. Gold is needed in the payment of all goods purchased abroad. The Treasury retains nearly all, and the small amount remaining is controlled, to a great extent, by those who speculate upon the needs of the commercial community. Until there is some method of relaxing the hold upon the gold, and placing it at the command of those who require it for the purposes of commerce, of course it will be kept at a premium, and the premium will not be invariably in proportion to the supply and the natural demand, because the speculator comes in and exaggerates the demand and forces up the price.

One of the popular theories on the part of those who desire to return to specie payments is that, in order to prepare for such resumption, a large amount of gold should be permitted to accumulate in the Treasury; another is to compel the banks to retain the gold received for interest upon their bonds. Now I would like to ask those who entertain such ideas where the merchant, in the mean time, is to get the gold to pay his duties and to pay for his purchases abroad?

Mr. MERRIAM. The general reply to this is that the merchant must send to Europe and buy it.

Mr. HAWLEY. Is not another reply that the Government should send to Europe and buy it to pay its own obligations with?

Mr. LOW. I believe that would be the proper way. I think, instead of accumulating in the Treasury all the gold there is in the country, or requiring the banks to retain all they receive for their interest, that the true method would be for the Government to obtain the gold to meet future needs from abroad.

Let the Government negotiate for a supply of gold to be placed on deposit in the Bank of England or somewhere else, and make it useful in redeeming our legal-tender notes. I have never believed it necessary to retain so much on hand in order to redeem the legal-tenders, as many people do. The legal-tender notes are in circulation; they are not in the banks. Many persons believe that, if the Government should declare its intention to redeem its currency, say in January, 1875, as has been proposed, that the tendency of things will be to prepare the country for that result. We have seen the premium on gold fluctuate from 20 to 10 per cent. without any great inconvenience to the trade of the country, and I know of no reason why it may not go from 10 per cent. to par with small inconvenience. I do not sympathize entirely with Mr. Merriam's view in regard to the bill introduced by him, although, in certain quarters, I am aware the suggestion of making a deposit of 5 per cent. in the Treasury for the redemption of United States notes is well received; but I have never seen the unwisdom of requiring a reserve of 15 or 20 per cent. by the banks. It has been seen that neither the law of prudence nor the statute of Congress has been sufficient to keep the banks under the restraint imposed upon them.

It seems to me that if these restrictions were removed, the whole mass of securities in Wall street would assume the character of currency, because, if there was no restraint upon the banks, the prices would be carried up by speculation and the loans thereon would be in proportion to the market value. It is a fallacy to say that money is absorbed by the high price of stocks. The truth is that money is made abundant by the high price of securities. For instance, if a hundred shares of Central Railroad stock are worth $100,000, a bank in

New York will lend upon them $80,000, or 80 per cent. of the value thereof; and there is so much money created by the loan; but if the same stocks are advanced by speculation to the value of $150,000 instead of $80,000, $120,000 can be had on them; so that the difference between $80,000 and $120,000 becomes an increase of available money. On the contrary, if these stocks fall in value, in apprehension of a panic, the supply of money will steadily decrease, inasmuch as the amount obtained from the hundred shares, instead of being $120,000, will fall off $40,000 more or less, and the owner will be called upon to make up any deficiency consequent upon the depreciation of his stocks.

It seems to me, therefore, that it would be unwise to diminish the restriction upon the indebtedness of our banking institutions. On the other hand, I wish it were larger, and that the banks were required to redeem at home.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me inquire whether you would suggest any change in the character of the currency or in the amount of it. I speak of the currency as it now exists.

Mr. LOW. Under certain conditions I see no objections to what is called free banking or to increasing the number of banks in accordance with the terms and conditions of the banking law as to redemption. I think our currency, or what we call currency, viz, national-bank notes and legal-tenders, has been fully occupied, when the country has been in a condition of prosperity, viz, for several years past. I do not see myself that danger comes so much from the volume of currency as from bank expansion, and that bank expansion, I think, would be increased without legal restriction; because, as I have said, with the legal restrictions we have seen our banks all the time falling below the requirements of law as to their reserve. The national banking law, in supplanting other local systems, has given us a currency of uniform value throughout the Union. What is needed to perfect its usefulness is the equalization in value of United States notes, national-bank notes, and gold by means of the redemption of the first by the Treasury Department. The operations of commerce would be greatly facilitated by so important a step. As I have said before, the amount of gold available for the purposes of commerce is inadequate, and, being so limited, is subject to unceasing speculation. Tried by the value of foreign merchandise for some months past, it has not been worth any premium at all. For a year past some of the great staples of import have been selling for less money in currency than they cost in gold. There is scarcely an article in the China trade which, during all this time, has returned its cost. On the contrary, the loss on tea has been such as was never known before. On the stock held July 1, 1872, and the subsequent import, it cannot have fallen short of $10,000,000. The immediate cause of this heavy loss was the taking off of the duty of 15 cents per pound. A speculation inaugurated at home was followed by an advance in China; so that the Chinese got the advantage of the repeal of the duty, and the American merchant lost it.

Mr. MERRIAM. In your opinion, if we should restore the tax upon tea, would the price continue as low as now to the merchant and consumer?

Mr. LOW. It would not be as cheap to the consumer, but we should not pay 15 cents a pound more than its worth to the Chinese, as we had to last year.

Mr. HAWLEY. Do you think the price would go down again in China by the full amount of the duty, or would it be shared?

Mr. LOW. I do not think it would go down to the full amount of the duty. The Chinese are too smart for the foreign buyers. They band together as one man to sustain the value of their great commodity. Under all the influences of our recent panic it has not been possible to bring down the price of tea very much in China. The first effect of the repeal of the duty was to send an increased supply of tea to this country, so that we now have and are likely to have an excess on hand.

The CHAIRMAN. You have already spoken of returning to a specie basis. Please tell us when, in your opinion, you would make that change, the reason you may have for the change, and how it should be made.

Mr. LOW. I do not know what the feeling may be here; but in New York the great trouble attending a return to specie payments lies in the indisposition of the people. It has always seemed to me an easy thing to regain the lost ground by retracing our steps. If a small part of the duties on imports were collected in legal-tenders and these were canceled when so received, the process would be simple and sure. A single step taken in that direction would produce a better public sentiment; but while inflation is in the mind of everybody, demoralization is the consequence. When a return to specie payment is the recognized policy of Congress, persons having money in the country will leave it here for a better time, as they now withdraw it, in constant apprehension of something worse. If foreigners who have money here think gold will advance to 15 or 20 per cent., (and such is the general feeling,) they will have their money remitted when gold is at 12 per cent. and not wait until it may cost them 15 or 20. The very expectation of further inflation produces demoralization, and an inevitable tendency downwards. From what I am told of the action of the House yesterday, it is probable gold will be higher in New York to-day.

Mr. FARWELL. I understand you to suggest, as the only mode of resumption, the gradual withdrawal of greenbacks.

Mr. LOW. I think that would be one important step.

Mr. FARWELL. Will you state what, in your judgment, after the fall of gold some time in September last, was the cause of locking up of greenbacks and national-bank notes all over the country?

Mr. LOW. The locking up was doubtless caused by panic. To return to the subject of gold, permit me to say that, when I left home, it was costing 7 per cent. to carry gold, the lender receiving the equivalent in currency and paying 1 per cent. to have it carried for sixty days. If the Committee on Banking and Currency would prohibit the banks from loaning money on gold, there would be less depreciation in greenbacks, or the difference between gold and greenbacks would become less than it now is. It would discourage the speculator in gold and lessen the fluctuations. Our banks are accustomed to loan money on gold, and the gold is counted as a part of their legal reserve; so that, while the requirement of the law as to a reserve is apparently fulfilled, it is virtually evaded, and by means of these loans speculators are enabled to keep up the price of gold.

Mr. MITCHELL. As the price now is it requires money to carry gold, the same as any other commodity.

Mr. LOW. Yes, and it costs money to handle it. In answer to Mr. Farwell's question, when gold commences to fall it becomes a common belief that it is going lower, and when it is rising the belief becomes as general that it is going higher. In the late panic, owing to the locking up, money was very scarce. It was not readily available for the purchase of gold or to assist in carrying it. The consequence was that gold, like other things, was forced down in price. There was not money enough in circulation to meet the necessary wants of the community. Gold went down because those who held it were obliged to sell.

Mr. FARWELL. Was it not true that, during the month of September, from $8,000,000 to $12,000,000 of gold came from the other side, a condition of affairs that has not existed in this country for twelve years?

Mr. LOW. That was true; but the low price of gold did not bring it here. It was brought here because exchange on England was unnaturally low, so that it afforded a profit of 5 or 6 per cent. to bring gold here and remit in bills of exchange. It was very difficult to sell exchange, and for that reason the money may have been sent by parties in Europe to correspondents in New York for the purchase of exchange, and it may have been sent for the purchase of breadstuffs and cotton, because it was better to send it than to pay with exchange.

Mr. FARWELL. Suppose that condition of things should continue, and we should get $2,000,000 of gold per week more than we sent out. If that should occur, do you suppose the reduction of the paper circulation of the country would cut no figure in specie resumption?

Mr. LOW. In the first place, I do not believe there is any possibility or probability of any such state of things occurring, because no such event has occurred in the past, except for a very brief period.

Mr. FARWELL. Suppose, on the other hand, that $2,000,000 goes out of the country more than comes in; how long could we continue specie payments on any basis?

Mr. LOW. With such an export, I think it would be very difficult.

Mr. FARWELL. Would not a suspension inevitably occur if the result I have suggested, of sending out of the country $2,000,000 a week more than comes in, should follow?

Mr. LOW. Of course we could not continue specie payments with such a balance of trade against us; but if the Government would fix the period at which the redeeming of legal-tender notes should occur, I think the importations and prices of merchandise would be accommodated to that condition of things. I believe the country would diminish its importations. Then, if the banks were permitted to charge such a rate of interest as would put a check upon imports, I believe we could get along without any disaster coming upon us. We are certainly an extravagant people. We have run in debt very largely, and we are going on increasing all the time. We are not improving.

Mr. FARWELL. What I would like to get from you is some opinion which would enable the committee to prepare a bill such as would regulate the matter of the currency properly.

Mr. LOW. I of course cannot say that if the Government should declare its intention to redeem the legal-tenders on the 1st of January next the measure would be attended with certain success. I do not suppose any man can say that. If the difficulty comes from the too great abundance of paper money, then I say the remedy is to lessen the quantity. By taking a part of the duties upon imports in greenbacks, and such a part as would not interfere with the payment of interest on the public debt, or the other requirements of the Government, and the cancellation of that part, you would be getting back, by a slow but certain process, to an amount of paper which the Government could undertake to redeem. I do not believe the process of redemption is so difficult as it is generally held to be. The balance of trade has till lately been running uniformly against us; and my opinion is that we have been reducing the amount of gold held in the country steadily until the present year. The export of coin recently has been arrested, and the balance of trade is in our favor, and apparently not soon to turn against us. Those who claim to know state that we are producing at the rate of sixty or seventy millions of bullion annually; and, with such a production of the precious metals, under favorable conditions, there should be no lack of recuperative power.

Mr. FARWELL. Do you believe that specie payments can be continued so long as the balance of trade is fifty millions or more a year against us?

Mr. LOW. I should say not, unless we produce more than that amount of the precious metals. But I am confident that our Government could enter upon specie payment successfully without any such disastrous result; that it could have been done, that it can be done, as I have already stated, by negotiating a loan abroad, and by meeting any deficit that might occur in consequence of resumption by drafts upon England.

Mr. FARWELL. Is not that putting off the evil day? What I want is to put our legislation in such shape as shall remedy the evil and not simply postpone it.

Mr. LOW. It would be substituting the payment, at a fixed time, of what we have promised to pay on demand, but do not pay; and it seems to me that if it costs something for the Government to redeem its promises, it would be to the credit of the country to honor its obligations, even if it should be at the cost of a few million.

Mr. MITCHELL. Does not the present system of irredeemable paper currency tend to promote extravagant and excessive importations?

Mr. LOW. Unquestionably.

Mr. MITCHELL. Then that tends to keep the balance of trade against us?

Mr. LOW. Unquestionably it perpetuates the evil, and the evil is constantly growing, or at least is promoted by every measure of inflation.

Mr. FARWELL. Is it your opinion that the condition of the country for the past ten years has been prosperous or otherwise?

Mr. LOW. I think the country has generally been prosperous; but from the abundance of paper money we have undertaken to do too much. I think we are extremely extravagant in our habits.

Mr. FARWELL. Then the reduction of the volume of paper currency would tend to make the country less prosperous, would it not?

Mr. LOW. It would tend to make it more moral.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have a few propositions on which I want to ask your opinion. The precious metals furnish the best standard of value for a medium of exchange, do they not?

Mr. LOW. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAWLEY. The proper currency is one composed of gold, silver, and paper convertible at presentation into coin?

Mr. LOW. Yes.

Mr. HAWLEY. The National Government should steadily aim at resumption of specie payment?

Mr. LOW. It should.

Mr. HAWLEY. There is no path to resumption through an expansion of the volume of inconvertible paper money?

Mr. LOW. None that I can see; quite the reverse.

Mr. HAWLEY. The National Government can easily find a road that will reach resumption in a reasonably short time if it shall firmly determine to do so?

Mr. LOW. Undoubtedly.

Mr. HAWLEY. A favorable balance of trade would aid resumption?

Mr. LOW. Of course.

Mr. HAWLEY. Is it indispensable that we should wait for a favorable balance of trade before trying to resume?

Mr. LOW. I do not think it is. I said that we could not expect to resume without ceasing to export coin, unless the product of the precious metals is sufficient to make up the deficit. I think most of the precious metal we have exported during the last year has been silver, and that the gold in the country has of late been steadily increasing. I believe there is more gold in the Treasury now than there was a year since, although less, perhaps, than three or four years ago.

Mr. HAWLEY. I understand that you would begin to work for resumption without reference to the balance of trade. Do you think it is the duty of the Government to proceed toward resumption without waiting for that?

Mr. LOW. Of course; because the country would then accommodate itself to the new condition of things.

Mr. HAWLEY. How would you do that?

Mr. LOW. Whenever the Government declares its intention to redeem its legal-tender notes, the merchant will put his house in order for the change; he will restrain his imports under the natural expectation that on the resumption of specie payments lower prices will prevail.

Mr. FARWELL. Then, what you would do would be to ask Congress to declare that at some future time they will resume specie payment?

Mr. LOW. Yes; and I think the country would be ready for it when the time arrived.

Mr. FARWELL. It would not be necessary, in your judgment, to make any preparation?

Mr. LOW. Yes; as I have said, I would suggest the negotiation of one hundred million of dollars of bonds abroad, and use the money to redeem the pledges which have been made but are not redeemed.

Mr. HAWLEY. Do you not believe that specie-payment persistently maintained is a powerful means of securing a favorable balance of trade?

Mr. LOW. Yes.

Mr. HAWLEY. And that irredeemable paper-money, with the resulting inflation of prices, tends strongly to cause an unfavorable balance of trade, and almost inevitably causes the payment of that balance in the precious metals?

Mr. LOW. Certainly; we have seen that for years; for many years we have been exporting too largely of gold from the country. I think if the country will send to Cuba just at this time, they can get some instructive lessons on the subject of paper-money.

Mr. HAWLEY. State whether, in your judgment, the continuance of national banks of issue must for the present be accepted as unavoidable, and this without touching the question whether or not it would be wise for the Government to provide all the currency.

Mr. LOW. I think it would be quite an assumption of power for the Government to undertake to-day to substitute its paper for the national-bank paper of the country. I do not see how it is possible to dispense with the banks. I think, as I said before, that our banking system is exceptionably good; and I do not see how it can be greatly improved. It gives a uniform currency throughout the country; it is calculated to meet all the requirements of the merchant, manufacturer, and trader; and I do not know what more is wanted. There has been a financial panic in the country, but during it all no apprehension of the safety of our national-bank notes; and I would be in favor of free banking, under certain restrictions. I would not remove that restriction which limits the indebtedness of banking institutions, because I think our financial ills come from bank expansion, and not from an excess of currency. On the contrary, I think it is manifest that there has been too little rather than too much currency. Everybody carries more or less in his pocket, and in some portions of the country it is hoarded.

Mr. FARWELL. You think, then, it would be unwise to provide more currency than is now in circulation?

Mr. LOW. With the growth of the country more currency will be needed. I am in favor of an increase of currency, but I think it should be redeemable, if not in gold, certainly in greenbacks. Why there should be any restriction of currency in the country under proper safeguards I do not understand. The national-bank notes are based on gold-bonds, and the liability of the stockholders added thereto gives them absolute security. There is one feature of the banking law I have not referred to—I mean that which makes the Government responsible for the redemption of national bank notes. If an attempt should be made to return to specie payment, and a large number of the banks should be crippled, it might be a larger undertaking than the Government would be prepared for, to redeem all the notes of these various banks. But if the Government should advertise that at a certain day it would redeem its legal-tenders, there would be no probability of any immediate and extensive demand on the Treasury; because legal-tenders are held largely by the banks, and they are required by the banks for the redemption of their own circulation as well as the maintenance of their own reserve. If, however, combinations hostile to a return to specie payment should be formed for the purpose of breaking down the Government in its attempt, first calling upon the banks to redeem their bills with legal-tender notes, and then upon the Government to redeem these notes, trouble might follow; but under any proper or probable condition of things, I do not see any difficulty in the undertaking. My belief is that if the Government should announce its intention of redeeming its legal-tenders on the 1st of January, 1875, there would be no difficulty in meeting the calls that would be made, and the result would be, as I have stated, that those holding funds in this country would be less inclined to remove them from the country, while the uses of gold would be limited to the liquidation of the balance of trade. There would be no other call and no other need for gold, unless the call should result from combinations to break down the banks or to embarrass the Government.

Mr. FARWELL. Suppose the Government should provide itself with two or three hundred millions of gold, and announce a resumption of specie payment: would not the fact that we are in the power of foreign creditors render the Government liable to have its reserve absorbed in a month, and make suspension inevitable?

Mr. LOW. In answer to that, I ask whether there is any reasonable apprehension of any such attempt from that quarter; and I again ask, are we to abandon all idea of ever returning to specie payment?

Mr. FARWELL. My answer to that is, not until the balance of trade is steadily in our favor.

Mr. LOW. Then we will have to wait until the millennium. I do not believe that any unusual demand would be made upon the Treasury from abroad in consequence of a return to specie payment. On the contrary, I believe the securities of this country would be held with such tenacity as we have never seen; because we should be then looked upon by the world as not only a more sensible but a better people than we now are.

Mr. MERRIAM. If what you say in regard to the liability of the Government to redeem the notes of national banks is true, then how would a resumption of specie payment make our loans any more desirable abroad, we now holding the bonds as collateral for the circulation of the national banks to redeem their notes?

Mr. LOW. What I said was in consequence of an apprehension expressed by another gentleman, who seemed to think that feature of the banking law a dangerous one for the Government; that it might bring upon the Government the necessity of redeeming national-bank notes in gold as well as legal-tenders. I do not share in that apprehension at all. I do not believe there is much to fear from the present national-bank system; but, on the contrary, that there is everything to hope from it.

Mr. MITCHELL. Let me ask to what cause do you attribute the fact that our currency is now worth less than 90 cents on the dollar?

Mr. LOW. I can tell you why I think gold is worth 12 per cent. more than currency. It is a consequence of speculation, based upon the restricted supply at hand for the purposes of business. We have eighty-five millions of gold in the Treasury, about thirty millions of which are represented by gold-notes; the amount is known exactly to the speculator. Now, regarding gold and legal-tenders equally as money, let me ask you what would be the effect of locking up two-thirds of the legal-tenders and contracting the supply to this extent? The locking up of three or four millions of greenbacks is complained of, and sometimes is seriously felt. Is it strange that the locking up of two-thirds of the whole supply of gold in the vaults of the Treasury should be both inconvenient and costly—making gold both scarce and dear? I give you another reason. Our banks lend their money upon coin as collateral, which I think they ought not to be permitted to do, as it facilitates speculation in gold.

Mr. MERRIAM. In connection with that I would like to ask your opinion upon the policy of taxing sales of gold; as I understand you, sales to the amount of eighteen hundred millions occurred in New York in sixty days.

Mr. LOW. Yes; and during that time only thirteen millions were required to meet the payment of duties on imports.

Mr. MERRIAM. What would be the effect of placing a tax of a quarter of one per cent. upon the sales of gold?

Mr. LOW. If you could enforce its payment, I think the effect would be good.

Mr. MERRIAM. Would it not have the effect of bringing down the price of gold?

Mr. LOW. If you could stop gambling in gold, it certainly would. There has been really no such difference as has existed between the value of gold and of currency, when the test has been a comparison with other things.

Mr. FARWELL. A good deal has been said about the currency of the world. In your business relations is it not a fact that there is no such thing as a currency of the world? Do you not pay for your tea in cotton or bullion that has to be adjusted, according to its weight, to the standard of the country you send it to?

Mr. LOW. Gold or silver is the standard of value all over the world.

Mr. MERRIAM. But you cannot pass a double-eagle in England; it is not legal tender there; it must be recoined.

Mr. LOW. That is true; and let me say that my attention has been called to the fact that the Secretary of the Treasury has found warrant in some act of Congress to call the tael of China a dollar and sixty-one cents; and in that way indirectly there is an advance of duty upon everything which comes from Shanghai, and is liable to duty, to the extent of the difference between a dollar and thirty-five cents, as fixed by statute, and a dollar and sixty-one cents. I called upon the Secretary this morning to say that there is no such coin in China at all. There is a tael of account, which has a value of a dollar and thirty-five cents, but there is no such coin as a tael; and therefore the statute to which he refers does not apply. There is a commercial tael in use in China, the value of which, in our money, is determined by the pound sterling.

Mr. PHELPS. You suggested that it might be proper to receive for duties a certain amount of greenbacks. What percentage would you suggest?

Mr. LOW. I think 5 or 10 per cent. would be enough and leave a sufficient remainder for the payment of interest and for other purposes of the Government. I believe there is some provision under existing laws for funding 1 per cent. of the public debt; and the cancellation of these greenbacks would be equivalent to funding or would, at least comply with the spirit of the law.

Mr. PHELPS. There is a bill now pending before the House proposing to pay one-half the duties in greenbacks.

Mr. LOW. That, however, does not provide for the cancellation of the greenbacks.

Mr. FARWELL. You have stated that you thought the currency of the country should be increased as the population and business increased. How do you reconcile that statement with your proposition to reduce the currency of the country by the cancellation of greenbacks?

Mr. LOW. I am in favor of increasing the amount of bank-notes, but not of the national currency or legal-tender notes.

Mr. MITCHELL. Would it not be very desirable to have an increase in the shape of coin—more coin and less paper?

Mr. LOW. Of course; and we should need less paper if we had more coin.

Mr. HUBBELL. You say it is desirable, in the present condition of things, to take steps toward the resumption of specie-payment. Now, if resumption is to take effect on the 1st of January, 1875, would there not be a liability to speculation on the part of the speculators of Wall street for the purpose of producing a panic, as there is now for putting the price of gold up?

Mr. LOW. I think not; for the reason that gold would have the same value as paper. The action of Congress, by promoting inflation, will not encourage speculation.

Mr. HUBBELL. Suppose you return to specie payments, I ask you again, will not the danger of a panic, by speculating in gold, be increased?

Mr. LOW. I think not. Before the war we had specie payments, and our banks, with a reserve of eleven million dollars, carried one hundred and eighty millions of circulation and other indebtedness, chiefly local. If they were able to maintain specie payments in that condition of things, with coin amounting to not more than 10 or 15 per cent. of their indebtedness, I do not know why the Government, with one hundred millions of reserve, cannot resume against three hundred and fifty millions of indebtedness, half of which will be held by the banks as their legal reserve. I grant you that we have become greatly demoralized by the expansion that has taken place, and it is because we have become so demoralized that it is time to retrace our steps. I admit that we are not as virtuous a people, in some respects, as we were before the war.

Mr. MERRIAM. Is it not desirable for us to keep, as nearly as possible, the value of greenbacks and of national-bank notes the same?

Mr. LOW. I think they are of one value.

Mr. MERRIAM. But will not the process of paying a portion of the greenbacks for duties immediately separate them and place the legal-tenders at a premium?

Mr. LOW. I think not; there are too many of them to be affected by the small percentage that would be paid for duties.

Mr. MERRIAM. There has been a time within a month when they were at a premium of three-quarters of one per cent.

Mr. LOW. If there is a tendency in that direction it would approximate them more nearly to gold. I think the tendency would be to appreciate the value of the greenback when it is put upon the same footing with gold, and made to perform the same office even in a small way.

Mr. MERRIAM. Is it not desirable for us to legislate as far as possible to prevent panics in the country?

Mr. LOW. Certainly. But I do not believe any panics would necessarily follow an attempt to resume specie payments.

Mr. MERRIAM. If we should resume specie payment with the amount of gold we have in the country and there should be a loss of a crop of cotton in the South or of wheat in the West, would not that have the effect of so changing our balances of trade with Europe as to bring upon the country such a panic as occurred in 1857?

Mr. LOW. Possibly. In the views I have expressed I wish the committee to understand that I am perhaps rather peculiar in the opinions I hold. I have more faith in the ability of the country to return to specie payments than perhaps a majority of the commercial men have. Still, I hold my opinions with confidence, and do not propose to abandon them because others differ from me. I think the grand difficulty in the way of returning to specie payments springs from the indisposition of our people; and that the difficulty in Congress is that you gentlemen are representatives of the people in this respect. I believe, further, that the indisposition to adopt some measure for a resumption springs from the demoralization of the people, and that the evil under which we are laboring is yearly becoming greater and greater. You will have gentlemen before you who will present other views than those I have expressed.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me ask you whether there is any considerable demand for coin or for gold except for the payment of duties and for the foreign trade?

Mr. LOW. No; I think not.

Mr. MERRIAM. During the late panic it was impossible to get the currency required for the transaction of the business of the country. The difficulty was felt by every merchant in New York and all over the country. The Secretary of the Treasury was implored by New York merchants and bankers to issue more currency; and let me ask you whether the issue of a portion of this forty-four millions, which the people of New York have since complained so much about his issuing, did not tend to restore confidence and to commence business again?

Mr. LOW. Yes; it restored confidence and encouraged inflation.

Mr. MERRIAM. Have not the manufacturers started in consequence of that issue?

Mr. LOW. Yes, doubtless; because they were in great want of currency, &c. The want has been supplied. The currency of the country had been hoarded. I think a portion of that reserve in the Treasury may have been used to advantage; but I also think it is unfortunate that a resort to it was necessary or thought to be so. There was a universal apprehension on the part of the people, and the people at such times are not reasoning. I have no doubt it was advantageously used. I was abroad at the time.

The CHAIRMAN. You were speaking of our foreign debt. Have you ever considered what is the probable aggregate of that debt?

Mr. LOW. I have no means of knowing; I have only heard it estimated at probably fifteen hundred millions.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you think there is a large private indebtedness abroad?

Mr. LOW. I should think not very large. There is an indebtedness growing out of the prosecution of our foreign trade, which is generally done by means of credits on London.

The CHAIRMAN. You think there is not much capital here loaned by private parties abroad?

Mr. LOW. I think there is a good deal of it. Houses in this country are so intimately connected with those on the other side, many European bankers having branches on this side, that a certain amount of indebtedness will always exist so long as the present business relations continue. There are a great many questions of that kind which it would be impossible to answer.

The CHAIRMAN. What is your opinion of the policy of endeavoring to pay our debt or to keep payment in progress?

Mr. LOW. I think it has been beneficial to the credit of the country. It is an open question whether the money could not have been more profitably applied in the cancellation of legal-tenders. Still I have no complaint to make of the discharge of the national debt that has taken place. I think hereafter it might proceed more moderately and our resources be more wisely applied in redeeming United States notes. The national debt is now within a moderate compass; it is useful as the basis of our national banking institutions and savings-banks; and it seems to me better not to increase taxation and multiply burdens for the purpose of continuing as rapid a reduction as hitherto.

The CHAIRMAN. As the policy of the Government, would you think it better to look at the debt as a permanency for all future time?

Mr. LOW. I think it is always a good plan to pay debts, but it would be better to discharge our national debt by moderate degrees rather than by precipitous progress. I think we might have gone wisely a little more slowly. The condition of the country has been spoken of as prosperous these latter years. It has seemed to me in the last two or three years that the actual profits from business have been very slight. I know that the foreign business has been unprofitable; the country has overimported. Under the influence of high prices we have brought too many goods here and they must finally go down. It is to be borne in mind that a great change has been going on. Formerly it was easy for a merchant to import goods and wait his time to sell them; now the exact condition of the markets of the world one day is known everywhere the same day or the next: and when a dealer or consumer wants anything from a foreign country, he has but to telegraph the order and it is immediately shipped. The course of business heretofore pursued is changing, and it has become more dangerous than ever to hold large stocks of goods when a knowledge of foreign markets is so generally and instantaneously disseminated.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 14, 1874.

Mr. A. A. LOW again appeared before the committee, and his examination was resumed as follows:

Mr. MERRIAM. What would you think of a law requiring rotation in office of the directors of banks, as in the Bank of England?

Mr. LOW. I should of course think, if you could displace a poor man with a better one, that rotation in office would be a good thing; but, generally speaking, our bank officers are wisely selected, and experience makes them valuable in their position. In the bank with which I am connected in New York there have been two or three vacancies in the direction for some time, and I can testify that it has been difficult to select men to fill these places who are deemed wholly desirable. There are a good many banks, and of course a great many selections to be made, and when they are properly made I do not think a system of rotation would improve the efficiency of the board and at the same time promote the safety of the institution.

The CHAIRMAN. Returning to the subject under discussion yesterday, please state what, in your opinion, was the cause of the late panic, and whether it might have been avoided.

Mr. LOW. I think the direct cause was the undertaking of large enterprises without adequate means, which were bound to go to pieces; and the enterprises to which I refer being such that they could not be suspended without creating financial panic and disaster.

The CHAIRMAN. What enterprises do you refer to?

Mr. LOW. Such as the Northern Pacific Railroad and others of lesser scope.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you limit your remark to railroads?

Mr. LOW. I think they were the main cause of the panic, because the panic has not been followed by many commercial failures, saving one or two, of great significance, but generally of a temporary character and not resulting in financial bankruptcy; such as the Spragues and Claflins. They were compelled temporarily to suspend, but will probably pay their debts in full.

Mr. MERRIAM. If these large enterprises you allude to had been wholly legitimate, and had been required by the wants of the country, do you think the same panic would have occurred?

Mr. LOW. I think some of these enterprises were legitimate enough, and could perhaps have been carried forward to successful completion if the demand for bonds abroad had not been suspended. There was no longer any way of negotiating bonds, upon which the life of these enterprises depended. There was no way of carrying them on.

The CHAIRMAN. Then I do not understand you to attribute the late panic to any vicious feature in our financial system?

Mr. LOW. Except that the financial system had encouraged enterprises which were beyond our ability to complete.

Mr. HUBBELL. Are the panics occurring in England from time to time ascribable to their financial system?

Mr. LOW. I think they are generally attributable to speculation. There is no means of procuring any system of finance which will meet all emergencies. I do not suppose it is possible to devise, in this country or in England, any system of finance which will be superior to all the indiscretions of men.

Mr. HUBBELL. Is our financial system any more liable to panic than the English system?

Mr. LOW. It is in this respect: that the currency is based upon irredeemable paper; and because there is a constant apprehension of a still further inflation, and unfortunately the action of Congress in this respect has been backward rather than forward; toward demoralization, not toward improvement.

The CHAIRMAN. Please state whether, in your opinion, the panic has passed away.

Mr. LOW. I think that all in the nature of panic is passed. Some of the effects of the panic continue to be felt.

The CHAIRMAN. The panic of 1857 occurred when we had a currency resting on a specie basis. Was not that more widely extended and disastrous and ruinous than the panic of 1873?

Mr. LOW. I think that perhaps in some respects it was more disastrous, and it certainly was more wide-spread in its character. But it was probably less disastrous than that of 1837, which came in an earlier period, when the country was less wealthy and less able to meet disaster. I do not imagine that we will ever be able to avoid panics. They will come from the indiscretion of the people. I merely explain what I conceive to be the cause of the last panic.

The CHAIRMAN. I wish you to tell us whether a recurrence of a similar panic can be prevented; and, if so, what means would you adopt in reference to the finance or currency of the country?

Mr. LOW. I would avoid what led to the other panic, and not undertake any enterprise of so gigantic a character, which, in the nature of things, cannot be completed. Primarily, let me say, I think these enterprises should not be encouraged by legislation, giving corporations immense grants of land, and so encouraging enterprises of this character.

The CHAIRMAN. Has there not been, during the last fall, in England, Berlin, and especially in Vienna, a state of financial panic almost as serious as in this country?

Mr. LOW. I have no means of measuring the seriousness of panics. I only refer to what I have seen. There may have been panics in Berlin and Vienna, caused, perhaps, to some extent, like ours at home, by a great inflation in the value and subsequent decline of commercial stocks. And I suppose that while men are imperfect such things will continue.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you remember how high the Bank of England raised its interest during the fall?

Mr. LOW. I think to 9 per cent.

The CHAIRMAN. Would you consider that a symptom of financial alarm?

Mr. LOW. It is generally understood to have been raised to prevent the export of coin to this country, where it was naturally tending under the adverse rates of exchange ruling here.

Mr. MITCHELL. You have given us your decided opinion, that the currency of the country ought to float back to a specie standard. You state further your opinion that the country has no more currency than is required to meet its needs, and that, in fact, the volume of currency ought to be increased. Will you please explain this seeming conflict in your views?

Mr. LOW. What I said was this: that at existing prices, such prices as have ruled latterly, it has seemed to me that the supply of currency was not in excess. The country is very large; its industries are numerous; its population is steadily increasing; and I said that I saw no reason why there should not be the means of increasing the currency with the growth of the population and increase of business. I think, in a country whose population and industries are increasing as rapidly as ours, there should be an increase of currency to meet its wants, and, on a return to specie payment, we should have $140,000,000 in gold, which is now demonetized, returned and added to the currency in circulation; so that there would be an increase rather than a diminution of the volume of currency by a return to specie payment. This, again, will make the greenback equal to gold. The prices of commodities will considerably recede, and consequently the amount of currency required will be comparatively less.

Mr. MITCHELL. Then it is your opinion that specie payment may be returned to without any reduction in the volume of paper money?

Mr. LOW. I have a belief that under a certain condition of things the Government should redeem its legal-tender. I was asked yesterday if I had any suggestion to make in regard to the finances of the country. It has occurred to me that I should say yes, because, in a memorial which has come before Congress from the Chamber of Commerce, and which went to the Chamber of Commerce bearing my signature, there were suggestions made, among which was this, viz: that the banks should be compelled to keep all their reserve in legal-tenders. And the memorial contained a recommendation to Congress that it should direct the redemption of legal-tenders on the 1st of May next. That time was fixed for the reason that business then was much depressed and exchanges were low, and it was thought wise to select a period anterior to the time when the shipment of cotton ceases. The banks should be required to hold their legal reserve in legal-tenders.

Mr. MERRIAM. That is the law now.

Mr. LOW. It is not so understood to be the law, or, if it is, not acted upon by the banks. I explain to the committee that it is the custom of some of the banks to loan their money upon gold, and then to consider that gold a part of their legal reserve, although it is absolutely not within their control.

The CHAIRMAN. Then that practice is a fraud, is it not?

Mr. LOW. You can put what construction you please upon it; it is a fact. Therefore the memorial recommended that the banks should be required to retain their reserve wholly in legal-tender notes. Then, if they loan money upon gold, the gold will not be counted as a part of their reserve. Then, the banking law requires that the country banks shall hold 15 per cent. as a reserve, but that three-fifths of the amount may be deposited in New York. Under the feature of the law we may suppose the country banks owe $60,000,000, and to protect this indebtedness hold a reserve of 15 per cent., or $9,000,000, of which three-fifths, or $5,400,000, are lodged in the city banks; and that these deposit banks loan three-fourths, retaining only one-fourth to satisfy the law of redemption as respects themselves, and you have the practical result, viz, $3,600,000 of legal-tenders kept at home, and $1,400,000 placed on deposit in the city banks are held to be sufficient security for the redemption of $60,000,000 of indebtedness on the part of the country banks. Such is the operation of the law.

The CHAIRMAN. State whether, in your opinion, national banks should be allowed to pay interest either on Government or general deposits.

Mr. LOW. I can only say that the bank with which I am connected, one of the largest in the country, has never thought it wise to pay interest on deposits. If there has been any exception it has been in the case of two or three savings-banks, and then only in cases where there is not likely to be a sudden call for the deposits. I believe the bank referred to has no other interest-bearing deposits. It has been said that if you prohibit the paying of interest on deposits, money will be withdrawn from New York and sent to Boston and other places. I do not believe there is much force in the suggestion. In respect to the proposition to require the legal reserve to be in legal-tenders exclusively, I desire to say that the effect would be to compel a retention by the banks of $200,000,000 out of $356,000,000, leaving only $156,000,000 liable to be presented for payment at the Treasury: so that in case the Government should, at any fixed time, undertake to redeem its legal-tenders, they could only be presented at the Treasury in that amount. As regards the balance of trade, I think that will take care of itself whenever the Government is ready to take care of its greenbacks. I wish to make one suggestion in regard to the apprehension expressed by financiers as to the effect of resumption.

It is to be borne in mind that financiers are perhaps the most timid men in the world. Nothing is more common than the remark that the immediate effect of resumption would be financial disaster to the country; that nothing worse could happen than to attempt to resume and fail in the attempt. Well, there is just one thing which is worse, and that is the failure to attempt resumption at all. If our soldiers had been as timid in war as our financiers are in time of peace, we never should have had a victory, because they would never have ventured a battle. England once attempted resumption and failed, and that is often quoted for our discouragement. Let me say that when England fails once, England always tries again, if the end to be gained is worth striving for. Englishmen are not prone to give up because of one failure, and we had better fail twenty times and finally resume than not to make any effort to resume. I say this because a class of men may come here to testify in this matter who are guided by their fears. Some men are more afraid of their money than others are of their lives.

Mr. MERRIAM. If the Government should resume and fail, would it not create a widespread panic through the country?

Mr. LOW. I do not think it would at all. If it did, it would only show that we had more bad men in the country than good. I believe we have good men enough in the country to sustain the Government in every attempt it may make to restore a sound financial condition, as it had good men enough to stand by the Government in the time of the war. I do not believe this Government can undertake to give its people so great a boon as a return to specie payment without being sustained by the better part of the community.

Mr. MERRIAM. You say that men regard money as more valuable than life. For that reason, would not selfishness overrule their patriotism, in case of an attempt by the Government to resume?

Mr. LOW. I am one of those who believe in the patriotism of the people at large. I referred to a class of financiers as proverbially timid. The experience of our banking institutions in 1857, encourages the belief that an effort on the part of the Government would be sustained by our moneyed institutions and by the people. In 1857 a meeting of all the bank officers in New York to consider the feasibility of resumption decided against it. Four bank presidents more courageous than the rest decided to resume regardless of the others: and the result was that in a week all resumed.

Another matter referred to incidentally in the memorial of the Chamber of Commerce is one over which I am not sure whether the Government has control or not. For a great many years the merchants of New York have been aiming to get the State legislature to do away with the usury laws, which are unceasingly violated. Now, whether the General Government can permit the banks to charge a high rate of interest when money is dear, as they are obliged to accept a low rate of interest when money is cheap, and so override the law of the State, I am not sure.

The CHAIRMAN. I wish you would give the committee your opinion whether the general rate of interest allowed by law in the country is too high for prosperity in its trade or business.

Mr. LOW. I think, whether the legal rate be 6 or 7 per cent., it is high enough. I think that should be the legal rate for transactions where no special rate is agreed upon; but I can see no reason why the banks should not be allowed to charge a greater rate when money is worth more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is or is not capital, in the form of money, at either 6 or 7 per cent., more profitably employed than capital invested in any other species of property?

Mr. LOW. Sometimes it is. Many think that money invested upon bond and mortgage at 7 per cent., is the best form of investment for a life-time; but in advocating the right of the banks to charge a higher rate when money is worth more, I advocated it as one method of checking excessive exportations by increasing the cost of money, just as we now check importations by advancing the price of gold. If we are importing too much, the supply of gold becomes reduced and the price goes up. One method is to create a stringency by refusing to lend money; the other and better way, in my opinion, is to advance the rate of interest, and check excessive importations by increasing the cost.

The CHAIRMAN. It would then be in the interest of bankers and moneyed men who are speculators to produce panics in order to increase the rate of interest, and, of course, the profits on their money. Is that the position you assume?

Mr. LOW. No; the object of increasing the rate is to impose a check upon importations by advancing the value of money to the importers and so prevent overtrading, just as in England the Bank of England advances its rates to prevent coin going out of the country.

Mr. MERRIAM. In England the effect of raising the rate of interest has been as you say; but in New York, when money has brought 1 per cent. a day, stocks have continually advanced in price, so that increased cost of money does not prevent the operation of stock-speculators or the appreciation of their values.

Mr. LOW. It is true that money is paid for at these exorbitant rates in Wall street by a set of men who are speculators, or who act in the interest of speculators, and that there is a class who are not deterred by the law from accepting usurious rates; but the result sooner or later is seen in failures that occur in New Haven, Cincinnati, and other places, of men who have lost all their money by these operations in Wall street. It is notorious that a quarter, and even a half per cent. per day has been paid for money by Wall-street operators to carry stocks; but it is not to be imagined for a moment that the result is other than bankruptcy and ruin somewhere.

Mr. MERRIAM. Is it not true that merchants often pay these high rates of interest?

Mr. LOW. I think not for the legitimate purposes of business.

Mr. FARWELL. What would be the result of the repeal of the usury laws in New York?

Mr. LOW. My belief is that money would always be obtainable in difficult times at cheaper rates than now. Our banks cannot, without a violation of law, loan money at more than 7 per cent. interest, and the result is that a broker can go into his bank and borrow money at 7 per cent. and turn around and loan it in times of stringency at 12 to 14 per cent., or more frequently, perhaps, will discount in advance at the higher rates, and then place at bank the same security at 7 per cent.

Mr. FARWELL. Does this usury law prevent money from coming to New York for investment?

Mr. LOW. Those who are scrupulous would not of course send money to be invested contrary to law.

Mr. FARWELL. I understand that you advise this committee to favor authorizing national banks to loan money at its value?

Mr. LOW. I believe it will have the effect of reducing the rate at which money is now loaned.

Mr. FARWELL. Do you not believe that in the case you speak of, where the broker loans money at 14 per cent., the bank would loan at 14 per cent. instead of 7?

Mr. LOW. No, I think not. It is possible that some of the banks might squeeze their customers under pressure; but my belief is, and I think the belief of every merchant is, that the repeal of the usury laws in New York would cheapen the value of money; would reduce the rate of interest rather than increase it.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you ever know a bank refuse to take all the money it could get?

Mr. LOW. I never knew the Bank of Commerce take more than 7 per cent.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me ask you whether, in your opinion, there should be any change made in the organization or management of the banks, and particularly in connection with the suggestion made by the Postmaster-General in his report recommending the use of post-offices for savings-bank purposes?

Mr. LOW. I have not seen his report, nor do I know of any general changes which are necessary. I have sometimes thought that savings-banks, instead of accumulating a large surplus and resorting to extra dividends to dispose of it, should be made to pay taxes like other banking institutions. I think they might be taxed and still show a fair return for their money. I should doubt the expediency of combining our savings-banks with the Post-Office Department.

Mr. PHELPS. I would like to ask whether, at the present time, you are in favor of increasing the currency in circulation, as the law now stands?

Mr. LOW. If you will allow me to answer in a general way, first I will say that, after the war, I supposed the Government would enter upon the redemption of its pledge to redeem legal-tender notes in gold. The issue of these notes was understood to be a war measure, and it was generally supposed that the Government would, as soon as possible, retire the greenbacks. I have suggested, as a member of the Chamber of Commerce, that the best mode of recovering our lost ground in this regard would be to receive a small portion of the duties on imports in legal-tender notes, and by a cancellation of these notes, gradually remove them from the currency of the country. I do not want the committee to understand me as expressing any change of that opinion. I believe that is the best way. More recently I have made up my mind that it would be wise to take the first step in another direction, because I believe from my observation during the few months past, that, while the banks hold largely of legal-tender notes, all the currency of the country has been fully occupied. I would not, therefore, advocate the withdrawal of currency which appears to be needed; nor would it be the effect of exchanging legal-tenders for gold to reduce the supply. I have expressed my belief in the ability of the Government to redeem its legal-tenders and make them equal to gold, provided the banks were required to keep all their reserve in greenbacks, as there would not remain out of bank over $150,000,000 or $200,000,000 liable to be presented for redemption, and these scattered over the whole Union.

Mr. FARWELL. Suppose the banks should prefer not to hold legal-tenders, but should decide to hold gold?

Mr. LOW. That would not meet the requirement. I propose that they shall be required to hold their reserve in legal-tenders until these shall have become equal to gold through redemption. When the success of resumption is fully assured, gold may be substituted for legal-tenders to the same extent. But for a time legal-tenders may be made auxiliary to gold. During the transition state there may not be gold enough for all the requirements of the country, and therefore legal-tenders, redeemable at the Treasury of the United States, will answer the same purpose as gold in the redemption of national-bank notes.

Mr. PHELPS. I understand you now to say that, provided we were upon a gold basis, and provided the legal-tender notes are redeemable at all proper places in gold, you would have no objection to increasing the currency to any extent. What I want to ask you is whether, with the currency as at the present time, you would increase its volume by the issue of more greenbacks.

Mr. LOW. I should deprecate the issue of any more greenbacks. I have no objection to an increase of the number of banks and the amount of bank currency under present legal restrictions, whether we resume or not, if the country requires it; but the issue of more national-bank notes and the issue of more legal-tender notes are two very different things.

Mr. PHELPS. You say, then, that while you would be opposed to issuing any more greenbacks, you are of the opinion that all restrictions should be taken from the amount of bank-notes issued under the present law?

Mr. LOW. I do not see why there should be any restrictions which are not imposed by the necessities of the country. If there are men in the country willing to invest their money in establishing new banks, depositing bonds, and complying with the restrictions of the bank law, I see no objection to it. Moneyed men will not do it unless they find a profit in the transaction. If the Government redeems its legal-tenders in gold, and bank-notes are redeemable in legal-tenders, then the national-bank notes become as good as gold. I explained yesterday that our financial troubles do not arise from the increase of bank-note circulation, but from bank expansion by the lending of money upon stocks which are forced up to fictitious values. I explained that the advance of stocks from day to day increased the amount of money in circulation, and that, as they fall, the amount is diminished. When prices are high, money becomes penty. When prices are low, it becomes less abundant, because it is obliterated by as speedy a process as that by which it was made. High prices for merchandise, on the contrary, absorb money in the natural course of business, and employ more or less, according to the high or low value of commodities.

Mr. PHELPS. Would you be willing now that as many people as desired should go into the banking business, under the present restrictions of the law, requiring notes to be redeemed in legal-tenders, which at present is no redemption at all?

Mr. LOW. I would not express any wish in the matter. I merely stated that I did not see why there should be any restraint upon national banks so long as they are required to deposit the bonds of the Government as security for their circulation. At present I believe there is an excess of bank-paper, and there would be no new banks created if the restrictions should be removed. But we are passing out from the depressions of prices, and of business caused by the panic, and new banks might after a while be created if the restrictions should be taken off.

Mr. MERRIAM. During the late financial panic the Government ceased to buy its bonds after thirteen millions had been purchased. It was at that time impossible to borrow money upon Government bonds or to sell Government bonds after the announcement was made that no more would be purchased by the Government. Now, if there had at that time existed a law which would have enabled the Government to loan greenbacks upon Government bonds temporarily, under the exigencies of panic, would it not have afforded a relief?

Mr. LOW. I think it very likely. I was not in New York at that time; you were there, and I think the committee can be better guided by your opinion than by mine. I think, however, that is a dangerous power to confer upon the Government, and that the community had better be left to the regulation of their own affairs. I do not think it would be wise to legislate with reference to panics that come once in seven or fourteen years.

Mr. MERRIAM. You must remember that the duty of legislators is not only to regulate the currency, but that public policy demands of us that we shall so shape our legislation as to make it impossible to have riots and disturbances among the laboring-classes. Now, I understand that if the Government had had power at that time to have loaned $100,000,000 to the national and savings banks at 8 or 10 per cent. interest upon Government bonds, it would have prevented the panic which has cost the country $1,000,000,000 and produced the demoralization which we see in our large cities, by throwing laboring-men out of employment. The Government by such a step would have taken no risk, and the banks would of course return the money at the first practicable moment rather than continue to pay such high rates of interest.

Mr. LOW. If the Government can invent a panacea for financial ills, of course it should do it. I do not think it is in the power of Congress so to legislate that we shall have no more panics. I think that whenever the Government undertakes to legislate to prevent pecuniary disturbances, there will be two occasions for governmental aid where there is one now.

The CHAIRMAN. I understand Mr. Merriam's point to be that in the present condition of affairs it is in the power of a very few men to throw the country into a state of financial trouble, involving the ruin of an immense number of innocent people. Now, what I want to ask you is, whether that is one of the inevitable evils which we must submit to, or whether there is any possibility of providing means for disarming that power?

Mr. LOW. Give the country a good financial system, and I think it will take care of itself. The difficulties that come from inflation may and ought to be remedied, and our system brought into harmony with the financial systems of the foremost nations of the world. We may expect a return of trouble if we are to have more inflation.

Now, if the committee will allow me, I want to recall their attention to one observation made yesterday. I said that the price of gold and the depreciation of currency grew out of the fact that on one side a large part of the gold is held by the Government away from the uses of the people, while it is suggested, as a means of preparation for a return to specie payment, that the banks shall retain all the gold received for interest. If such a policy is to be pursued, I do not see how merchants are to obtain gold to pay duties at the custom-house. One of your committee said that it was expected that the merchant would import gold to pay his duties. I would like to know how, with the balance of trade against the country, the merchant is to import gold; how he is to pay.

Mr. MERRIAM. The same difficulty would arise against the Government importing gold, as was suggested on the other side.

Mr. LOW. The United States can borrow gold for bonds having thirty years or more to run; the merchant cannot. Besides, it is not the business of the merchant to supply gold, which is only wanted because the Government dishonors its promise to pay its notes which are due on demand.

Mr. MERRIAM. You could pledge your credit in England in the same way that you do for the payment of goods.

Mr. LOW. I think it would be very difficult to borrow money on that basis.

Mr. HUBBELL. Do you consider it a safe and prudent financial measure for the Government to undertake to return to specie payment, while gold is worth a premium of even 2 per cent., with the balance of trade against us?

Mr. LOW. I do not mean to say that on the instant you could do it. What I say is that if the Government will give notice that at a certain date, not very remote, it will redeem its notes at par, before that date is reached the premium on gold will diminish. Of course the committee will understand that I attribute the present price of gold to the general feeling in Congress and in the country in favor of inflation. Whenever the Government moves in the opposite direction and manifests a disposition to resume, everything will conform to that recognized purpose, as now all things conform to the feeling that Congress will inflate; and that feeling prevails both at home and abroad.

WASHINGTON, January 14, 1874.

GEORGE S. COE, president of the American Exchange Bank, New York, appeared before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you please tell us whether in your opinion there are any defects in our present financial system; if so, what they are and how they may be remedied?

Mr. COE. These are two very important questions. First, the defects. The defects in our financial system, doubtless, are that we are out of harmony with the commercial world in respect to our measure of prices; that is to say, we are not upon a specie basis. The remedy is a very much more difficult question to determine. We are brought into this position by an extravagant issue of paper money, so called, which paper money did not originate in the natural order of commerce; and here, in order to make a basis for what I have to say, I must explain. All paper used as money should be essentially in the nature of a bill of exchange. It must follow and grow out of trade. It cannot be injected into it by any possible means, and still preserve specie payments. Paper money consists really in orders for things exchangeable between men, whether that money be in the form of a bank-note or in the form of a bill of exchange or in the form of a bank deposit. It is drawn on things requiring exchange in the business relations among men. The consequence of that statement is this: that where articles are upon a specie basis in harmony with the world's commerce, every piece of paper issued must follow the article, and not precede it. That is a condition vital to the harmonious commerce of the country and of the world; and while that relation continues to exist, there can be no derangement in commerce or suspension of specie payment. But our position is this: The Government, in the war, found itself in an exigency needing more money. It was in fact short of those materials of commerce which constituted the basis of money. It was, therefore, compelled, from very necessity, to issue evidences of debt. Call it what you may, it was the issue of a debt bearing no interest, converted into money. Now, so far as they were debts, they grew out of the poverty of the Government. The Government had not in itself substantially the thing signified of which this paper was the promise or sign; consequently, the first note issued by the Treasury was a promise which did not mean that the money was in the Treasury, but that it was not there. It represented the absence of it. Consequently, as soon as the new paper became infused into commerce, it worked a dilution of the whole currency. The effect was, in some respects, similar to the dilution or deterioration of coin by infusing a foreign matter not intrinsic into it; not growing out of the relations between men to each other in respect to their wants; not growing out of commerce in its natural operations; but requiring a law to compel these notes to circulate as money. I therefore say that the issue of every one of these notes was a dilution of the currency; and the deterioration became greater and greater with the quantity emitted, just as gold coin would deteriorate by introducing into it two parts of alloy instead of one. In that way the whole mass of paper currency became deteriorated, and specie payment was suspended. Our paper money was not exchangeable among men in the commerce of the world; and that debased element must be eradicated before we can get back to the normal condition of commerce.

Mr. FARWELL. You mean by that we must redeem the greenbacks?

Mr. COE. We must redeem the greenbacks as a necessary consequence, and I want to give a reason for that. These greenbacks not representing the commercial value they purport to represent, that value must be put into them by placing the gold into the Treasury. They will then come into proper relations with the commerce of the world. In other words, they will represent things in trade, and will be restored to their true position.

Mr. HUBBELL. Your idea is, then, that greenbacks should be redeemed and taken out of circulation?

Mr. COE. It is. It should not be done suddenly, because the present condition of the currency is the growth of years. No sudden return can take place without violence and disturbance in our financial system. I would return as gradually as possible, and continue the process until the adulteration is removed.

Mr. PHELPS. Your dislike to this financial element injected, as you say, into the currency, adulterating the currency, would not be so great if it should be made exchangeable with the good element. In other words, if the greenback currency was made redeemable, you would not care to have it go out of circulation.

Mr. COE. I would not like to answer that question specifically, except by saying that I have great doubt whether the Government has the functions of a bank, by which it can issue circulating notes at all, except as they issue gold certificates now—a certificate which states that they hold in custody that amount in coin. I have great doubt whether the Government can possibly issue currency otherwise than as a certificate of money in the Treasury, in a normal condition of things.

Mr. FARWELL. What is your panacea?

Mr. COE. That is a question I would hardly like to answer. I have no remedy except this: I think these legal-tender notes should be withdrawn as rapidly as can be done without interfering violently with the course of trade, by funding them, as was the original intention. You will remember that originally every one of these notes was fundable into 6 per cent. bonds; and I think now they should be funded, or the specie put into the Treasury to redeem them; but, as I said before, only by easy stages.

Mr. FARWELL. You would give the holder the option of funding them?

Mr. COE. That is one of the financial problems which it is difficult to solve.

Mr. PHELPS. I would like to have your opinion as to the comparative advantages of the two schemes of getting rid of the legal-tenders. Yours is gradually to withdraw the legal-tenders directly by taking them out of circulation; another is, instead of withdrawing the legal-tenders piecemeal, at the rate of two or three millions a month, to gradually accumulate gold in the Treasury until a sufficient amount has been obtained to redeem them all?

Mr. COE. In the first place, I do not think it would be safe to undertake any such wholesale redemption with less than from two to four hundred millions of gold in the Treasury; and to undertake to accumulate that amount immediately would seriously interfere with and derange the commerce of the world. I doubt whether it would be practicable to import even two hundred millions, and lock it up in the Treasury of the United States, without producing too great an agitation in the course of trade.

Mr. PHELPS. Suppose, instead of borrowing it, we retain it as it comes in in the shape of duties. We have already paid out in the purchase of bonds more than enough to redeem the entire volume of greenbacks.

Mr. COE. It has always appeared to me that the Government did not act wisely in allowing its coin to be sold in payment of its bonded indebtedness, instead of using it to redeem its promises payable on demand. There was a time when one hundred millions was retained in the Treasury without any violence to the course of trade or commerce. If the course had been pursued of allowing it to accumulate, we could have resumed specie payments before this time. Undoubtedly, between the two plans you mention, the system of retaining the currency at its present volume, and, when a change is made suddenly, to replace one quantity of currency by an equal quantity of gold, would be the best.

Mr. MITCHELL. I take it that we could not resume until currency comes almost to an equal value with gold; in that event gold will come in to discharge the functions of money instead of remaining, as at present, demonetized by its increased value.

Mr. COE. That is true. In the mean time there must be a gradual adjustment of prices in the whole country before you reach that position. In other words, our commodities must descend in price until we come into harmony with the world's prices. There is no escape from that whatever, and that result is to be reached by economy.

Mr. HAWLEY. It seems to me that for the Government to buy gold in Europe and bring it here in great quantities would involve much disturbance in the market. What would you think of the plan of allowing say ten millions a month to be received for duties and issued again redeemable in gold, say the 1st of January; then ten millions more redeemable in February; another ten millions in March, and so on; each issue having on it the date at which it is to be redeemed?

Mr. COE. The practical operation of that would be to so vary the prices of these different classes of legal-tenders as to take them out of the currency for the purposes of trade. No person carrying on a large business could receive in payment for his goods currency differing so greatly in value.

Mr. HAWLEY. I understand your theory, however, to be that any steps on the part of the Government toward specie payment would so appreciate the value of greenbacks to that of gold that there would be no substantial difference in the price; at least that it would be so slight as to create no disturbance.

Mr. COE. That suggests another question. These legal-tender notes being promises of the Government to pay at an indefinitely future time, not having now any representative in value in the Treasury, are worth just the discount for the time at the close of which they will probably be redeemed. If I receive a note having no time fixed for its payment, it is worth exactly the same as a note payable in two years, provided two years is the time when in my judgment I can get pay on my demand-note.

Mr. HAWLEY. There is another circumstance, however, which enters into the value of this demand-note—that it has gone into the currency of the country.

Mr. COE. That is entirely true.

Mr. HAWLEY. If the note, however, is even convertible immediately into money, it depreciates if more is issued than is needed for the business of the country.

Mr. COE. In other words, trade is like the blood in a man's body; the currency is a thing that is the consequence of vital action. Paper money properly issued must be the representative of something else given in the transaction. If I have a transaction with the chairman of this committee, receiving from him some valuable commodity, and I give a note in exchange, that note is a bill of exchange. But money issued without any representative value behind it is nothing but a debt payable in the future; it represents the inability of the man to pay, and not his ability; and so the currency of the Government represents, not the ability of the Government to pay, but the inability, and therefore it is a debt converted into money by force of law.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me ask you, as an abstract proposition, whether you think it desirable at the earliest practicable moment to return to the financial system of the Government before the war, requiring all the operations of the Government to be transacted in coin; the currency of the country beyond that being supplied by the promissory notes of private parties or of bank corporations.

Mr. COE. I would like to follow down the train of thought I was pursuing a moment before answering that question. Aside from the defect in our financial system which I have mentioned, the Government of the United States has authorized another class of notes to be issued by corporations. These notes are guaranteed by the Government, the Government becoming substantially the indorser of them. Now, I conceive it to be perfectly impossible for the Government properly to direct its attention to its own obligations until it has disposed in some way of these indirect obligations in respect to the national-bank notes. The law requires the Government to pay every defaulting bank note at the Treasury. It is like this: Suppose I was in a very large business, and unable for the moment to meet my obligations, but I find that besides my direct obligations I have indorsed for other men accommodation-notes which they have issued. My first duty is to dispose of those indirect and incidental obligations and to extricate myself from them, so that I may give my entire attention to the payment of my direct obligations. I regard it as indispensable that the Government should first in some way relieve itself of the obligation of redeeming the currency of the national banks at the Treasury. It is perfectly clear that if we undertake, in resuming specie payments, to provide for the redemption of four hundred millions of legal-tender currency, we shall not succeed if on the top of that is to come all the bank-note circulation, amounting to nearly four hundred millions more, making eight hundred millions of dollars in all.

WASHINGTON, January 15, 1874.

GEORGE S. COE again appeared before the committee for continuation of his statement.

The CHAIRMAN. Please state whether you can suggest any change either in the amount or character of our currency which would be desirable.

Mr. COE. Allow me to resume at the point where I left off yesterday. The points presented by the committee were, what are the defects of the present system, and how to remedy them. My answer was that the defects of the present system consisted in the fact that we as a nation were dislocated and out of harmony with the currency of the world as it is expressed in prices: that is, we are not on a specie basis. The other part of the question was more difficult to answer. In giving an opinion as to what remedies should be suggested, I endeavored to state what I supposed to be the true basis of currency, showing that we were out of harmony with that basis. And then came the question how to remedy the difficulty. I stated that the currency of the country consisted of two parts: first, the direct issues of the Treasury of the United States, called legal-tender notes; and, secondly, another class of currency issued by the national banks; that the second class involved the contingent liability of the Government as guarantors for every dollar of it; that it was necessary, in looking to any return to specie payment, first, that the country should clear itself of that incidental liability. I want to dwell a moment on that single point.

These promises of the national banks are issued by corporations, which promises are substantially indorsed by the Government, and, therefore, in providing for the direct liabilities of the Government for the legal-tender notes, we must pay proper respect to this incidental liability in regard to the bank-notes; otherwise we shall find ourselves embarrassed from the start. How, then, shall that provision be made? Very clearly by requiring these banks to put themselves in an attitude where they shall take care of themselves. These notes were issued after an issue of legal-tender notes had been made and an inflation of prices had been produced, and they have to be paid like all other debts. Hence, in a resumption of specie payment, they must be taken into consideration. It may be said that these bank-notes were not issued with the expectation practically that they would have to be provided for; they constitute a volume of three hundred and fifty-six million dollars of paper money put out without any regard to redemption, because the requirement of redemption has never been imposed upon them; and these bank-notes therefore lie upon the country as a general debt, like the legal-tender notes, in respect to which no immediate provision for redemption has been made. Now, a bank is prosperous and in good condition just in proportion as it frequently redeems its own obligations; that is to say, in proportion as its business is conducted upon short credits, with its assets so held as to be available upon short notice. Frequent redemption constitutes the vitality of all good credit. The redemption, therefore, of bank-notes in some practical form is a thing to be desired, both as to the safety of the Government and to the purity of the currency. These bank-notes having been out without any provision for immediate liability of redemption, they are loaned on long credits and upon property which is not readily convertible as other property, such as produce and merchandise is. I think it will be found, upon a careful investigation, that a large amount of the assets of the national banks of the country consists in long credits and in property unsuitable for immediate conversion; and that is the natural result of the issue of this paper, without immediate redemption being impending over it all the time. Now, these banks are to be put into a condition of self-sustentation, by making them feel that there is this liability continually impending over them; that they can be always called on for actual redemption. When there is a constant apprehension on their part that their notes must be redeemed when required, they will keep their assets where they will be available for payment, and they will not loan so much upon what are called accommodation-notes and upon property not available for conversion. They will not loan for the purpose of railroad enterprises, buildings, and other property not easily convertible into the means of paying. As soon, therefore, as you restore that liability, you make the bank-note a more perfect representative of property than it now is; it comes nearer to property, and is resolvable and exchangeable into something by which it may be paid. And furthermore, as I have stated, you purify the bank currency in that way; in other words, you put the bank upon the position of sustaining itself.

If I have made myself clear upon that subject, it is very plain that no effort to resume specie payment can be made successful without removing this indirect liability, and to produce that result it is required that the banks shall redeem their notes frequently. I might add that the national banks can only resume in what is recognized as the money of the country at the time; and as that money becomes more and more elevated in its value, they themselves will rise with the whole system to the level of the basis established for the country, whatever that level may be. For instance, if legal-tender notes, after the redemption has commenced, have risen more nearly to a specie basis, have improved in their credit, bank-notes will also improve in their credit.

One other remark I should like to make in this connection. If I made myself understood yesterday in the idea that on a true basis currency must be resolvable into property in order to be sound, it follows that the idea of fixing the amount of currency per capita—of basing it upon population—is erroneous. You cannot say that, because a community has required, at a given time, a certain amount of currency, that therefore you can infuse into the mass of currency so much per head of Government credit which has been made by law a legal tender; because currency is regulated in respect to its needs by the laws of industry, and in connection with improving its value comes the stimulation of industry by producing more property, which only can be done by greater industry and greater economy both on the part of the Government and the individual. Each man must do his part to restore the currency of the country to its proper basis. And that explanation, if I have made it clear, points out one difficulty of resumption.

Now, then, how to resume is a very much more difficult question. It may be done, I think, by one of two processes: First, the extinguishment of the legal-tender notes, which, as I said yesterday, are pure credit, and by placing under them property which they purport to represent, but do not represent; that is, by putting under them property in the Treasury, which must of course be gold. Then, as the currency rises, if we find when we are approaching specie payments that we have more currency, coin, and paper than we need, the inevitable result will be that the currency which is exportable, and which is gold, will flow out of the country, and we shall lose it. If, however, we have not sufficient currency, gold will be retained here, because our trade requires it. Gold represents property. A piece of gold is like a basket or a pair of boots; it is the product of industry. If we have an excess of it, it will simply go into the channels of trade and commerce and be exported. If we resume specie payment with too much gold, the gold will go abroad. If we resume with too little gold, it will come hither.

Then suppose the Government should redeem its legal-tender notes, and it should be found that we have too little currency, what will be the result? National-bank notes will be issued to take the place of legal-tenders which have been canceled, and the exact quantity of gold will be retained, while if we have too much currency it will be reduced, because it will have to be redeemed in coin; and therefore the proper level will be reached and maintained. I think our position is very much like this: We have isolated ourselves in a lake, separated by an embankment which we have constructed between us and the ocean. If the embankment is removed, the level will be immediately regained; the average will be secured. If there is an excess, it will pass out into the great ocean of commerce, and the level will be reached. If we have too little, the deficiency will be made up from the same great reservoir.

The CHAIRMAN. Sometimes the cutting of a sluice from the lake to the ocean drains the lake perfectly dry.

Mr. COE. That depends upon whether the level is below the surface of the great reservoir or above it. I think, however, that figure is a perfectly just one in this particular.

Mr. FARWELL. What is your method for practical redemption at this time?

Mr. COE. We cannot conceal from ourselves the fact that practical redemption cannot be secured without trouble. It is not an easy thing to do. How came we where we are, is the first question. Clearly by an excessive issue of paper money in its various forms, which excessive issue is the instrument of excessive expenditure. We are able to expend just so much more, whether the dollar be false or true; so long as we expend it, it is the means of our impoverishment. In this way, while we have felt rich, we have expended money with great prodigality. The whole community has expended beyond what was really its legitimate income. In the next place, it has been expended by putting it into fixed forms of property, such as railroads, houses, and other forms which cannot go into commerce again by exchange. We have expended a greater amount here than the actual savings of the country would justify. Then, how are we to get back? By reversing our steps exactly. The practical question is, therefore, with what rapidity this reverse action shall take place—whether we shall go rapidly or slowly into resumption. Whether rapidly or slowly, we shall find it a hard, rough road. It is a question of manhood, as the war was a question of manhood. It is one involving self-sacrifice. To a large extent it is a moral question whether we have the manhood to go through with it or not. But just as surely as we commence the work, depending upon Providence, I am absolutely certain we shall find greater helps in every direction than we can now look forward to.

Mr. FARWELL. Is it a fact that in the last ten years the country has been in a prosperous condition in its industries, commerce, and agriculture, or not?

Mr. COE. I know the statement is frequently made that we have been in an unusually prosperous condition; but I think if you will examine the subject carefully you will find that very much of the prosperity of the last ten years has resulted from converting exchangeable capital into fixed capital; in other words, that a large amount of that prosperity has been the result of the creation of property, which under a solid basis would not have been done. The building of houses, of railroads, and other like great enterprises, has been stimulated by the inflation of the currency, causing a feeling in the community of great prosperity. I think in a very large degree these great enterprises have resulted from that feeling, which has kept the country in a condition that seemed to be prosperity; but I apprehend the result will be, when we come to resumption, that we shall find very much of that prosperity like that of a man who builds a house without money to pay for it; it is built upon credit. While the work has been going on he has stimulated a great deal of industry in the employment of mechanical and other resources in his vicinity which have contributed to the structure; but when the building is finished the question arises whether he was justified in making that expenditure. I think a great deal of the industry of the country has been employed in that way during the last ten years.

The CHAIRMAN. As I understand you, then, it would have been better if the industry and capital of the country had been employed in something which would have been consumed or eaten up rather than putting it in the form of these permanent enterprises of which you speak?

Mr. COE. I think we are a little ahead of time in many of these great enterprises. I think it would have been better if the industry of the country had been directed to the production of such things as would be exchanged in commerce, such as cotton, wheat, and other articles entering into trade and commerce.

Mr. MITCHELL. What you mean is that property has been put into forms from which it cannot be easily returned or exchanged?

Mr. COE. That is it.

Mr. FARWELL. I should like to hear an answer to my question whether the country has been prosperous or not in the last ten years.

Mr. COE. I could not answer that question directly without making the explanation I have made. To answer the question directly, industry has been very active and the country has been apparently prosperous, but I do not think it has been that solid prosperity which we should have had upon a specie basis.

The CHAIRMAN. What do you call the prosperity of the country? Does it consist in the employment of labor at remunerative rates, or in the employment of capital at high rates of interest?

Mr. COE. Neither one nor the other. The prosperity of the country is the same as that of an individual: if he makes a little more than he spends, if he saves a little every year, that is prosperity; if, however, he spends a little more than he makes, and gets into debt every year, he is not prosperous.

Mr. MERRIAM. I understand the result of the industry of the last ten years has been that men have bought farms, paid for them, and own them to-day, furnishing a basis for all future time for the labor of the country, and the increase of deposits in the New York State savings-banks from $72,000,000 in 1862 to $274,000,000 in 1872, an increase of over $200,000,000. Would you regard that as an evidence of prosperity or not?

Mr. COE. Undoubtedly; unless in connection with it there have been entailed debts which in future will add more to their embarrassment than the investments they have made will to their advantage. Your proposition as stated is undoubtedly true.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me ask whether, in your opinion, the ability of the Government to resume does not depend exclusively upon the question of its revenues?

Mr. COE. I suppose it does.

The CHAIRMAN. And the revenues of the Government depend entirely on the taxes imposed upon the citizens?

Mr. COE. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. Does not resumption, then, depend upon taxation adequate to the necessities of resumption?

Mr. COE. Clearly so. Now, then, (if you will allow me to go on,) having shown how the indebtedness of the country for these promises to pay has occurred, the only point is how we shall relieve ourselves of that liability in the best possible way. Another difficulty in inconvertible paper money has been that we have expended a larger amount of it to produce the same result than we should have done upon a specie basis, and have therefore increased the debt. The question of resumption, then, finally comes to this: whether we shall resume by increasing the amount of gold in the Treasury, having placed the national banks upon a solid foundation, or whether we shall do it by funding these notes into a debt, or both. My impression is that both means would facilitate the result.

Mr. MERRIAM. What would be the best means of practical redemption for banks before we resume specie payment?

Mr. COE. I have read the bill, which passes under Mr. Merriam's name, for practical redemption, and it has struck me very favorably as a practical measure calculated to promote the result.

Mr. FARWELL. Let me ask you your opinion of the effect upon the money-market, in the large commercial centers, of removing all restriction upon the rates of interest.

Mr. COE. That would undoubtedly produce a favorable result. I think it would make money cheaper.

Mr. FARWELL. You recommend, then, that some provision be made, leaving the banks free to charge such rate of interest as money will bring?

Mr. COE. I should recommend that, unquestionably.

Mr. FARWELL. Please explain to the committee how the banks really get more than 7 per cent. under the present laws, when money is worth more.

Mr. COE. Almost every bank under the present system has a certain number of what are called customers—persons who deposit their money with them. When the directors meet for discount and the paper offered is presented to them, they take into consideration, first, how much have they to loan; secondly, how many offerers there are for it. In taking these offers one by one, let us suppose that one customer has an average deposit of $10,000 in the bank. He has a discount, say, of $10,000 already; he offers $20,000 more. The bank loans him the twenty thousand, making an aggregate loan of thirty thousand on which interest is paid, but really ten thousand of it is a loan back to him of his own money. Another gentleman, who has an average deposit of $5,000, has already a loan of thirty thousand. The board will say that the latter has no claim to any more; that the first man may have all he then asks for; the second nothing. Of course the character of the paper comes into consideration; but I am now supposing that both are equally good. In this way the bank actually receives more than 7 per cent. by loaning to its customers in part their own money on deposit; and for that reason offers are rejected of equally good paper as that discounted, because the person making the offer keeps no deposit in the bank.

Mr. Merriam's bill, I think, provides that so much money shall be kept in the Treasury of the United States as a redemption-fund, and that national-bank notes, as fast as they are presented by any person holding them, shall be paid by the Government, and that this 5 per cent. fund for redemption shall be constantly renewed and kept for that purpose. It strikes me as a happy idea, because, the Treasury being always available, redemption will take place; while the Government itself, having the securities of the banks, is amply protected.

Mr. FARWELL. Please state whether, with that arrangement for redemption, there is any objection in your mind to giving the banks the additional 10 per cent. of currency on the par value of the bond.

Mr. COE. I think that would be unfair to the Government; because the onus is imposed on the Government of taking care of these notes under any circumstances.

Mr. FARWELL. The Government assumes that in any event.

Mr. COE. That is true, but they have 10 per cent. margin to do it with.

Mr. FARWELL. Mr. Merriam's bill adds 5 per cent. to the 10 for redemption.

Mr. COE. But that 5 per cent. is a variable quantity, and I should not regard that.

Mr. MERRIAM. I should like to know your views as to the danger of free banking in connection with this proposition.

Mr. COE. By free banking you mean a removal of the limitation which now exists upon the amount of bank-notes which can be issued. I suppose the redemption of bank notes in the way spoken of will operate to counteract any tendency to expansion by the removal of the restriction. The present law, which makes bank-notes substantially a legal-tender in respect to the indebtedness of banks to each other, and in respect to debts due them from the public, often causes great inconvenience. For instance, in my own bank, when I left home, so large an amount of national-bank notes had accumulated that we were selling them at one-eighth or one-sixteenth per cent. discount. Now, if we had the power of going to the Treasury of the United States and exchanging them for legal-tender notes, we could do that every morning, and the tendency of the proposed measure would be toward the contraction of the national-bank currency rather than to its expansion.

Mr. PHELPS. Why would you rather have a legal-tender note than a national-bank note?

Mr. COE. Because they are by law made the basis of our business, and in making up our statements the bank appears to better advantage with a large reserve of legal-tender notes.

Mr. PHELPS. Then your only reason is in the provision of law requiring the reserve of legal-tender notes?

Mr. COE. There is no other substantial reason.

Mr. PHELPS. And a private business man would have no object in retaining legal-tenders rather than bank-notes?

Mr. COE. I do not think they are held by private parties to any great extent. They float naturally into the banks; and with this provision of Mr. Merriam's, redemption would be going on continually.

Mr. PHELPS. If, under these circumstances, your banks would be eager to make the exchange, why are not legal-tenders demanded from the banks themselves in exchange for their bank-notes?

Mr. COE. The principal reason is that our banking currency is issued by two thousand national banks, and the mechanical labor of selecting the notes of each individual bank, and presenting them for redemption, would be so great that it would not be worth the trouble. We are doing it through our clerks to a limited extent; but no individual bank can afford to go through the labor of the separation of so great diversity of notes as exist.

Mr. HUBBELL. If Mr. Merriam's bill should become a law, the national-bank notes, on reaching New York, would be redeemed?

Mr. COE. Almost immediately.

Mr. MITCHELL. You admit that legal-tenders are in no way superior to national-bank notes, except in their artificial value, produced by their being made legal-tenders, and other advantages incidentally flowing from that?

Mr. COE. I do not think there is any intrinsic difference; and, if there is any, it is in favor of bank-notes.

Mr. MITCHELL. Do you think there would be any motive outside of the banks in presenting these bank-notes for redemption? How can an effective, healthy system of redemption be carried on when there is no motive on the part of the public generally to assist it?

Mr. COE. That is one great difficulty.

Mr. PHELPS. In order to make redemption practicable, the thing to be redeemed must be a great deal more valuable than the thing redeemed. Now, there is so little difference between the value of bank-notes and legal-tenders that the trouble will be in making the exchange. In other words, is there not too much risk when, by free banking, an unlimited number of bank-bills may be sent out, that they will stay out while they answer the purpose of money, and are just as valuable as legal-tenders?

Mr. COE. It must be confessed, in answer to that question, that this whole business is one of patch-work. You must remember that we are not on a specie basis. We are proposing one expedient to cover another. But I do not believe that, as long as legal-tender notes are given superiority over bank-notes, by requiring the banks to keep them for their reserves, the banks will retain them, because a bank having a large reserve of legal-tenders is regarded as a stronger institution.

Mr. FARWELL. Suppose we repeal the law requiring the banks to keep any reserves at all.

Mr. COE. I think then the motive for redemption will have passed away, except so far as the public have been educated to the idea that a certain amount of legal-tender reserve is an indication of strength. Intrinsically there can be no difference.

Mr. MITCHELL. We have now in circulation three hundred and seventy or eighty millions of legal-tenders against three hundred and fifty odd millions of national-bank notes. Is it your opinion that a circulation of one or two hundred millions of bank-notes in addition could be sustained with this basis of legal-tender notes for redemption?

Mr. COE. At present there is absolutely no redemption, and therefore it makes no difference what amount of bank-notes may be afloat, so far as redemption is concerned.

Mr. MITCHELL. Assuming that there is an effective redemption, is it your opinion that, with the present amount of legal-tender notes, a largely-increased bank-note circulation could be sustained?

Mr. COE. My impression is that the tendency would be rather to diminish than to increase the quantity.

Mr. MITCHELL. When coin was the basis of circulation, was not a large amount of currency in excess of the amount of coin safely kept afloat?

Mr. COE. Yes, sir.

Mr. MITCHELL. Then, may we not maintain an equally large amount of circulation in excess of the legal-tenders?

Mr. COE. I do not know but what we could. It would depend entirely upon the state of trade. If we were under a specie system, there would be no difficulty. I do not think your question could be answered with any certainty; it would be a matter of experiment.

Mr. PHELPS. Has not experience shown that in banking upon a gold basis you can with safety issue three or four times as much paper as you have gold with perfect safety? And is it not, therefore, fair to presume that with a legal-tender basis you may safely keep out three or four times as much circulation as you hold legal-tender reserve.

Mr. COE. There is this difference: the Bank of England, or any other bank upon a specie basis, when it has discounted notes, has issued that which represents coin, or its equivalent in the commerce of the world. The bank, therefore, in its discretion has only to contract its loans, and immediately the 75 per cent. which has been in circulation comes back into its vaults in gold or its equivalent. Now, then, the difference between coin and the legal-tender note is this: that coin is always at hand for any person or any nation which has the property to give for it. I can issue one hundred bales of cotton, which is in fact so much gold, and I receive the same equivalent for it as for so much gold. But currency based upon paper which is not redeemable has this difficulty, that your replenishing has to be done within your own country; and when you want to contract and draw in the 75 per cent. of circulation, you have not the world to draw from; you have only your own country.

Mr. MITCHELL. You have 75 per cent. of bills receivable which are as likely to come in as under a specie basis?

Mr. COE. Not so likely; because they are based upon property not so resolvable.

Mr. PHELPS. Your proposition resolves itself into this: that if a man does not buy with gold he does not buy the same thing as if he had the gold.

Mr. COE. It may be that you are right; I do not insist very strongly upon the point I make. I think there is a difference, although perhaps not a very great difference.

Mr. MITCHELL. You have said that one way to return to specie payment was a gradual withdrawal of the greenbacks. Suppose this process is commenced, the greenbacks being the basis upon which national banks rest, the gradual withdrawal of the greenbacks and substitution of coin will go on until the banks themselves are on a specie basis?

Mr. COE. That is inevitable. Then, in regard to the question of free banking; whether the result will be to expand rather than to contract the currency, as I said before, is simply a question of experiment. My impression is that the tendency would be to contraction; but it is merely a matter of opinion, which can only be determined by actual experiment. I am simply governed in my opinion by the law and by our experience of the rapidity with which bank-notes accumulate in our banks.

Mr. MITCHELL. That relates, however, only to the banks of New York City. The country will absorb the bank-notes as readily as they will legal-tenders?

Mr. COE. There is a difficulty in that question which will be answered differently by different persons. My own impression is that if you will allow the two systems of free-banking and practical redemption to go out together, the volume of currency will regulate itself. Mr. Merriam's plan of redemption furnishes such facilities for redeeming bank-notes that in my judgment the provision for redemption will be fully equal to that of expansion under a free-banking system, and that one will counteract the other.

Mr. MERRIAM. Are there not times when we have not currency enough? For instance, in New York City, when five millions were locked up by the brokers, very great demoralization in commercial circles occurred. Was not that evidence that we have not currency enough, particularly at the season of the year when we are moving southern and western crops?

Mr. COE. If I am right in my opinion that your proposition for redemption in the form indicated in your bill will operate to contract the currency rather than to expand it, then it is very clear that, allowing the measure for redemption and for free banking to go out together, the currency will regulate itself. While the crops are being moved it will expand, and afterward it will return again to the banks which issued it. If, on the other hand, Mr. Mitchell is right, that the tendency of free banking will be to absorb the currency, then of course the whole measure of redemption is a bad one; but, assuming that measure to be good, as I believe it is, it will result, as you state, in supplying just the amount required for the trade and commerce of the country when wanted.

Mr. MERRIAM. Under this plan of redemption you are not afraid that it will reduce the reserves below what the law requires?

Mr. COE. I am not; from the fact of the banks being compelled to redeem, which will necessarily compel them to preserve the ability on their part to redeem.

Mr. FARWELL. Was it not a fact that, during the late panic, private banking institutions maintained their positions equally well with national banks? In other words, does your experience all go to show that this reserve requirement of the Government is nugatory and not all necessary?

Mr. COE. It is necessary either as a self-imposed law or as the law of the land. My experience in banking is, that no institution in a large commercial city can conduct its business safely unless it has at least 25 per cent. reserve on hand. The only thing that can justify such a requirement on the part of the Government is that these corporations are the creations of Government, and, being artificial persons, it is entirely legitimate, when the Government gives them their living power, that it should impose such restrictions as the whole community may regard as safe.

Mr. FARWELL. Does the Government confer any powers of any nature or description upon these associations of persons for banking purposes?

Mr. COE. It gives them the power to issue and circulate their notes.

Mr. FARWELL. Outside of that what privileges or immunities are guaranteed by Government?

Mr. COE. Nothing that I know of. It imposes the restriction referred to as to their liabilities.

Mr. FARWELL. I am speaking of the privileges conferred by the Government.

Mr. COE. None in the world that I know of outside of that of circulating notes. The principle you lay down is that the right of the Government to restrict has the concomitant one of privilege. It has conferred nothing, and therefore it should restrict nothing.

Mr. MITCHELL. Do you think it is wise for the Government to require this reserve to be kept on hand?

Mr. COE. I have never supposed the restriction in respect to the reserve was of any consequence in any well-regulated bank. Any properly regulated bank will always exceed the amount of reserve required by the Government. Therefore I have never considered that restriction onerous or of any consequence at all.

The CHAIRMAN. Please state whether you think it not wise to restrain unskillful and imprudent persons from conducting national banks in an unskillful and imprudent way.

Mr. COE. I think it is. I do not believe, as I read the law, that the reserve required was intended to be an iron restriction of so much per cent. You perceive that the penalty for non-observance of the requirement allows thirty days to make up the reserve. That seems to belong to the nature of the case, and it implies the general principle that 25 per cent. for cities is a proper reserve. But to make that or any other percentage an iron restriction is nonsense. I repeat that the general provision, I think, is a wholesome one. In the panic of 1857 our banks in New York all came together and resolved sacredly never to allow our reserves to run down below 25 per cent. The question simply is, in doing a certain amount of business, how much cash in hand does prudence require. The same question applies to you as a business-man as to me as a banker; the difference being that with you the reserve is a deposit in the bank, while with us it is one of so much cash on hand.

Mr. MERRIAM. Is the requirement of reserves under the present law, which is seldom enforced, and which practically involves no penalty, as effective as the requirement of practical redemption would be?

Mr. COE. This reserve now restricts two classes of debts: currency and deposits. A reserve required simply for redemption would be comparatively small, and the actual requirement of a reserve is really for the protection of deposits.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there much necessity under the present banking law of looking out for the note-holders? Are they not abundantly secured by the Government, the Government being in its turn secured by the bonds deposited?

Mr. COE. That is certainly true.

Mr. HUBBELL. And therefore the reserve is only required for the protection of the depositors?

Mr. COE. Certainly. In other words, when you get below your reserve you stop discounts, but you do not stop paying checks.

Mr. MERRIAM. Would it not have a good effect in stimulating redemption if we should repeal the clause which allows the payment of indebtedness of one bank to another in bank-notes and require it to be made in legal-tender notes?

Mr. COE. It would stimulate redemption to a certain extent.

Mr. MERRIAM. But would it not lessen the value of bank-notes as a universal medium of circulation in every part of the country?

Mr. COE. No; the safety in taking them would be greatly enhanced, from the fact that you could turn around and put them into the Treasury for redemption. The great difficulty in carrying out that provision now is the mechanical labor in separating the bills of the different banks. The one great idea in the formation of the present banking system was that of securing uniform currency which should circulate everywhere, and the notes were, therefore, made to bear a common likeness.

Mr. PHELPS. Do you think of any way, aside from redemption in gold, of making legal-tenders more valuable, so that the tendency to redeem upon the part of the holder of bank-notes would be stronger?

Mr. COE. That is a very difficult question to answer. Our whole legislation in regard to currency is a matter of patch-work. The currency itself being abnormal, it is a question of expediency as to whether you shall put a patch on here or there; and every time you make an effort to remove one difficulty you create a new one which was unforeseen. I do not see at this moment what quality you can give to legal-tenders to make them more valuable than now except by their redemption in coin. They are now a legal tender for all debts.

Mr. HUBBELL. You might make them receivable for duties.

Mr. COE. That would be to convert them into specie, and the thing you aim at is not to bring your funded debt down, but to bring the national currency up. The national debt is all right, being payable in coin, and that constitutes its greatest value in the world. The Prussian government, which has done the most flattering thing ever done for this Government, by investing $20,000,000 of the French indemnity in it, does not want your legal-tender notes and would not take them. I can conceive of no way of making legal-tenders valuable except by their redemption.

Mr. FARWELL. You stated that you were in favor of converting greenbacks into bonds at the option of the holder. I ask you now if you are in favor of the converse proposition?

Mr. COE. I am not. In other words, I have a certain amount of legal-tender notes which I want to put into bonds, with the condition that when I want the notes I can receive them again, which means that when I have no use for my legal-tender notes I place them on interest, and when I want them again I get them, but the interest stops. I can see no sound reason for making the Government pay interest on idle money, provided they do not convert the money into a debt. The great difference between the two things is that everything that bears interest is a debt. But to convert this legal-tender money permanently into interest-bearing security by funding it, and looking toward its cancellation, would, in my judgment, be wise; but I cannot see any practical good coming from the temporary conversion or reconversion. The difficulty is that bonds would be just as absolutely money with me when I have a certainty of converting them at pleasure into money as if they had remained all the time in currency.

Mr. FARWELL. Would it not be a measure of contraction?

Mr. COE. It would to a certain extent be a measure of contraction; but I repeat that the bonds would all the time be practically just as much money as if the currency were actually in my vault.

Mr. HUBBELL. What quality, in your judgment, of these bonds would be taken up by the people in case such a measure were adopted?

Mr. COE. If you allowed the banks to hold these bonds in the form of interest, as a part their reserve, of course a very considerable part of it would be so invested. They could safely consider that a part of their reserve, because the interest-bearing notes could at a moment's notice be converted into currency. I suppose that the amount so invested would probably be from $75,000,000 to $100,000,000 by the national banks.

Mr. MERRIAM. How much would be retained by the savings-banks?

Mr. COE. My belief is that $150,000,000 would cover the whole thing.

Mr. HUBBELL. Why could not, say, 75 per cent. of the amount be invested in gold-bearing bonds and then cancel the bonds?

Mr. COE. That would amount to funding and final cancellation of the legal-tender notes.

Mr. HUBBELL. I mean take the notes, buy bonds, and cancel the bonds?

Mr. COE. If the notes were reissued, that would increase the currency just to that extent.

Mr. HUBBELL. As a financial measure for the Government, would it not be a good one?

Mr. COE. It would be a bad one. It would amount to converting so many gold-bearing bonds into so many new legal-tender notes, and, in my judgment, would be a ruinous policy for the Government.

WASHINGTON, January 16, 1874.

Mr. GEORGE S. COE again appeared before the committee for an addition to his statement.

Mr. FARWELL. I wish to ask Mr. Coe whether any resumption of specie payment can be successful while the balance of trade continues to be against the country?

Mr. COE. I suppose not. When the balance of trade is decidedly against the country, that balance can only be paid in the products of industry or must be paid in coin; consequently the depletion of coin would arrest specie payments.

Mr. MERRIAM. There has been submitted to me a section of some bill which I would like to have you examine and state your opinion in regard to it.

Mr. COE. After leaving the committee-room yesterday I listened to an interesting discussion in the Senate, continuing the same train of thought in which we are here engaged, since which I have been endeavoring to see wherein I have not been logically correct in my answers before this committee. In answer to a remark that, preparatory to any resumption of specie payments, the Government being a direct debtor for its own notes, and being a guarantor for the notes of national banks, like any other concern doing a large business, it must first relieve itself of any contingent liability before it can address itself to its direct liabilities, the question was asked me whether, in converting national-bank notes into legal-tenders, the process could not be stimulated if legal-tenders were by some means raised to a higher standard of excellence, so that one would be preferable to the other, and I was asked, further, whether I could suggest any means of raising the legal-tender to a higher standard. In thinking the matter over it occurs to me that that could be done by two methods—one by the accumulation of coin in the Treasury, and instead of applying the excess to the purchase of bonds, as hitherto, to retain it as a reserve in the Treasury applicable ultimately to the redemption of the legal-tender notes. That would be one way of strengthening the legal-tenders and making them more desirable. Another way is this: A suggestion has been made that the legal-tenders should be, by slow degrees, converted into compound-interest-bearing notes or bonds, at the rate of two millions a month, or at whatever rate of speed you may choose to fix. This plan of compound-interest notes was adopted some years ago and worked practically well. Now, suppose you should pass an act making two millions a month of the legal-tender notes convertible into compound-interest notes, the compound-interest notes being a legal tender for their face value, then, as they should augment in value they would be gradually withdrawn from circulation and retained by individuals and by savings-banks and the banks of the country as their reserve, and being on their face legal-tenders, they would be paid out again whenever the necessities of the country should require, as gentlemen remember perfectly well was the case with the compound-interest notes which were issued some years ago. The effect of that would be to strengthen the legal-tender notes, and they would be still further strengthened by the certainty of their being redeemed in gold at some future time by the gradual accumulation of specie in the Treasury, while, on the other hand, having compound interest attached to them, their value would be still further augmented. In this way I answer the question how legal-tender notes may be made more valuable, so that it would be an object to convert bank-notes into them. In that way, it seems to me, we could set in motion a force which, by slow degrees, will raise the standard of the currency until it will ultimately grow into specie payment. In the mean time, if it should so happen that the country wants more currency, the free-banking system referred to yesterday would supply that deficiency, furnishing just as much as the country requires, so that while this system in its operation would lead to the ultimate extinction of the legal-tender notes, it will supply the country with whatever currency the necessities of trade and commerce may demand. I have placed my views in the form of two separate propositions. One is that any gold in the Treasury, after paying the interest on the public debt and supplying the necessities of the Government, shall be retained as a special reserve for the redemption of legal-tender notes, to be applied for that object when an amount shall have accumulated sufficient for that purpose. The second authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to issue compound-interest notes not exceeding two millions per month, bearing 3.65 per cent. interest, which shall be issued in exchange for a like amount of legal-tenders, which legal-tenders are to be canceled, and which compound-interest notes shall be a legal tender at all times at their face value, and after three years, with the interest accumulated, shall be converted into 5 per cent. bonds of the Government, payable in gold. In other words, when these legal-tender notes have been exchanged for compound-interest notes, the latter will still retain their legal-tender character, and may never come back again into their former condition; and, as you see, the steps are progressing everywhere toward the ultimate resumption of specie payment. These suggestions are the only practicable ones that occur to me as the result of my reflection.

Mr. MERRIAM. Does it occur to you that this process requires sixteen years before you reach the ultimate redemption of the legal-tender notes?

Mr. COE. That would depend upon how much specie would accumulate in the Treasury in a given time.

Mr. MERRIAM. I want to ask you if the practical effect of this plan would not be to stop a threatened panic by throwing into the currency these compound-interest notes which are a legal tender at their face value, and which may be relied upon for that purpose at all times, in case of an emergency, to stop a panic?

Mr. COE. That is true, and is a reason why they are recommended. I want to say, however, that all these suggestions are in my mind connected with free banking. It is quite evident that you would strangle the whole business of the country if you attempted to withdraw the currency without providing a substitute; but I think that, taking these measures together, they will operate on one hand to provide a proper restriction, while on the other they will furnish the necessary currency under any circumstances.

Mr. PHELPS. Your proposition now is to issue 3.65 compound-interest notes which are to take the place of the legal-tender notes, and which are to be a legal tender at their face. Do you mean by that principal and interest, or simply at their par value?

Mr. COE. I mean principal without interest.

Mr. PHELPS. Then I would like to ask what would be the influence of this plan upon the gold-market—whether it would not have the effect of raising the price of gold which your scheme proposes to accumulate in the Treasury; whether it would not take from the supply in the country such an amount as would not leave a sufficient supply for the wants of importers and of commerce?

Mr. COE. I think not. Under the present system of taxation the excess of revenues would not be sufficiently changed to make the accumulation at all rapid. The process would be very slow, and I think its effect would be imperceptible so far as commerce is concerned, and the mere effect of the large accumulation of gold in the Treasury, I think all would agree, would increase the value of the mass of the paper currency of the country.

Mr. PHELPS. You state the amount to be exchanged each month from legal-tender notes to compound-interest notes as two millions. I want to ask what there is in that specific amount which constitutes a charm in your mind, or do you merely indicate that the process is to be slow?

Mr. COE. I would prefer to leave the amount in blank, and have only named two millions a month as a practicable sum. The exact amount proper to be substituted can only be determined by experiment.

Mr. PHELPS. Then, with this method of increasing the difference in the value of the bank-note and legal-tender note, is there not danger that if we take the limit of circulation from the bank-notes they would not be presented for redemption except by the national banks. So long as they are recognized as legitimate currency by the people and as perfectly secure, being guaranteed by the Government, would the people be likely to send them up for redemption?

Mr. COE. So far as they are concerned, probably not. With the public, I think, there is no preference between the two, one over the other, now.

Mr. PHELPS. Then, do you think the part which the banks play in managing the currency of the country is sufficiently important to make the redemption you provide for a sufficient balance for unrestricted circulation?

Mr. COE. I think the operation of the banks in respect to redemption is very much more active than it first appears. As a matter of fact almost every bank-note which comes into circulation passes through some bank two or three times a year, so that the banks will prove to be a sufficient agency in the country to perform this office, and a law authorizing the redemption, as I propose, would not stand upon the statute-book as a dead letter.

Mr. PHELPS. One other question in regard to the balance of trade. I wish you would state what, in your opinion, is the influence upon the course of trade of a country having paper money dealing with the others; in other words, whether the balance of trade must not always be against a country which uses paper money at home.

Mr. COE. The answer to that question will require considerable reflection. The effect of paper money in any country is to promote expenditure, and, of course, promoting expenditure, promotes importation of articles, especially into the country, of what may be called luxuries; and the tendency to an undue expenditure, when articles are to a great degree imported, carries a balance of trade against the extravagant country; in other words, paper money tends to extravagance, because it supplies an abundance of money, while specie payment tends to economy; the result, therefore, unquestionably brings the paper-money country in debt to the other; that is the natural result of an extended currency.

Mr. PHELPS. Would you be willing to resume specie payment with the balance of trade against us, relying upon the principle you have just enunciated to change the balance of trade?

Mr. COE. I would, with sufficient resources. Of course that would depend upon the amount of means with which the Treasury proposes to pay its outstanding obligations. I have no idea it would be safe to promote the elevation of the currency or make any such attempt without a large amount of coin in the Treasury, or without resources which would bring in the coin as required.

Mr. PHELPS. Now, as to the amount of gold which, in your opinion, the Treasury should have to make it safe to give notice that it will redeem its four hundred millions of promises—will you state what amount, in your judgment, should be on hand?

Mr. COE. The answer to that question must be purely hypothetical, and could not be stated correctly without going over again the ground we have been covering.

Mr. PHELPS. Why would you consider it more difficult for the Treasury to resume with a small amount on hand, than for the banks, under the old system, to continue specie payment with a small amount of specie in their vaults?

Mr. COE. In other words, you want to know why it is safe for a bank, with four to one of indebtedness, to continue specie payment, and not safe for the Government to do the same thing. The reason is this: The bank has within itself and represents absolutely, in the nature of mortgages upon property, that which is equivalent in commerce to the whole amount of its outstanding notes; the assets of the bank, properly managed, are all convertible into coin, and are absolutely as good as coin in the bank. Consequently if it has $3,000 of debts so convertible and $1,000 in coin, it can meet the $4,000 of its notes, because, from the nature of things, not more than one-fourth the amount of the notes are likely to be presented at one time, and, if they are demanded, the bank has only to take the assets, which consist of bills receivable, and wait until they are mature, and convert them into gold; in other words, the bank has one part in cash and three parts in property convertible into cash, while at the same time these notes are performing the offices which the community require to be performed. That is the reason why a sound bank can expand to this extent, retaining its indebtedness in the shape which is almost immediately convertible into coin. Indeed, there is no limit to the proper issue of bank-notes, so long as banking is conducted on this plan, to this expansion under the laws of trade. Now why cannot the Treasury do the same thing? Simply because it has put out its promises to pay, without any property whatever in the Treasury to balance it, and when called upon to redeem its notes, it is without any provision for it. Except by taxation, it has no means of redeeming the three parts which are out in the shape of indebtedness; no provision can be made for the 75 per cent. unless it is made by taxation. Whenever the Government will impose sufficient taxation to provide an amount of coin in the Treasury sufficient to redeem its indebtedness it will be as good as a bank, but until it does this there is the greatest discrimination between the notes issued by a government and a bank.

Mr. PHELPS. I wish to know whether we cannot derive from the banking systems of the world the necessary information by which we can ascertain what amount of gold the Government must have in its vaults to redeem in specie its four hundred millions of Treasury notes?

Mr. COE. People differ so widely upon that subject that I should hardly care to express an opinion, except to state the general principle. The exact amount must be left to the conjecture of every man. What we want is enough specie on hand to enable us to bring our currency into harmony with the commerce of the world. I can hardly say how rapidly these legal-tender notes would come in. It is very plain that, having been issued upon a deficiency of money, they have the effect of diluting the currency to their full amount. Suppose, instead of issuing paper money, the Government had adulterated its coin, infusing into it twice the amount of alloy, making two eagles out of one, the effect would be precisely the same as issuing paper money without having any equal representative in the Treasury. The stamp upon the paper money issued by the Government is not only a promise but an actual engagement on the part of the Government that when the time arrives they will restore it to its full value; and that would be the promise in case of the adulteration of the coin. Let me say, in answer to the question propounded by the chairman day before yesterday, that I am not specially in favor of the old State banking system. The national-bank system will answer the same purpose, and that is better, because it is national.

Mr. HUBBELL. In the plan you propose of issuing compound-interest Treasury notes in lieu of greenbacks, I understand that you also propose that these notes shall, as soon as possible, be exchanged for the same amount of gold.

Mr. COE. Not necessarily.

Mr. HUBBELL. Does it not contemplate accumulating an equal proportion of gold?

Mr. COE. That will be just as it happens; there is no relation between the two.

Mr. HUBBELL. What amount of gold do you propose the Government shall retain?

Mr. COE. My proposition is that instead of using the gold which comes into the Treasury, as at present, in buying bonds of the Government and canceling them, it shall be used for the redemption of these compound-interest notes. We have been purchasing our debt, which is payable with interest. I would let that alone, and would apply the excess of gold, as it accumulates, to increasing the value of the legal-tender notes.

Mr. HUBBELL. Then your plan is that the Government shall pay an equivalent of coin, and retain also the 3.65 notes, paying an interest on its reserve of legal-tenders. Do you think it worth while for the Government to make greenbacks available at that expense?

Mr. COE. Yes, sir; you understand that the legal-tender note is a forced loan without interest, and every dollar of coin you accumulate in the Treasury is losing to the Government the interest which it is saving on the legal-tender notes. A better thing, if it had been practicable, would have been to borrow every dollar required to carry on the war than to have issued any paper money at all. The whole system of paper money was entirely a war measure; it never would have been proposed except through sheer necessity, and is apologized for solely on that ground.

Mr. HUBBELL. In answer to Mr. Phelps's question as to the effect upon the balance of trade, when one government dealing in paper money is in commercial relations with the others, do you consider that this country has now an inflated currency?

Mr. COE. I do.

Mr. HUBBELL. By how much?

Mr. COE. That is a very difficult question to answer. You may be very sure of this criterion, that whenever the currency of the country is not convertible into gold at the discretion of the holder it proves inflation. It proves that we are out of harmony with the world's commerce, because we are out of harmony with the world's measure.

Mr. HUBBELL. Then why do you recommend free banking, which will keep in circulation the same amount of currency?

Mr. COE. For this reason: In the first place, it may be a question whether or not the laws of commerce will not bring down the currency to a proper volume. I believe it will. My own judgment is perfectly clear that free banking, looking to the extinguishing of legal-tender notes, will reduce the currency to where it may be convertible into coin, which is the great point to be obtained.

Mr. HUBBELL. Is it not true that some months ago the currency of this country was so inflated that you could not get a dollar of it?

Mr. COE. That was not because the currency was so much better, but because the bank credit was so much worse. Everybody was afraid the banks had not reserved enough of their deposits to convert into currency as it was required, and therefore they attempted to do it all at once.

Mr. HUBBELL. Is not the balance of trade between nations always settled in gold coin or its equivalent, without regard to the currency of either nation?

Mr. COE. That must be so of necessity. You cannot pay foreign debts in greenbacks. You must pay them in the export-products of industry or in gold.

Mr. NILES. Has not the balance of trade during the last five years been against us?

Mr. COE. This question of the balance of trade is a very difficult one to understand. I do not suppose, in the way our statistics are now kept, any man can state the real facts as to the balance of trade. The figures make it appear that the balance of trade is against the country, when in fact it is not. They don't take into consideration the question of transportation, of indirect exportation, or of many other expenses which go to make up the true balance; the question is a very complicated one. I suppose the real balance between this country and others is like any balance between yourself and myself. I owe you more than you owe me; you will demand payment, and there is no escape from it.

Mr. MITCHELL. I understand you to say that a depreciated currency in any country is calculated to beget extravagance and to produce a balance of trade against that country. Thus, if a country in that condition never brings its currency up to a true standard, it will be a very long time before a balance of trade will turn in its favor?

Mr. COE. Yes, sir; you will have to wait till eternity. Providence and the laws of trade are all against you.

Mr. MITCHELL. Then the only practicable method of turning the balance of trade in our favor is to elevate the currency to that standard?

Mr. COE. That is it. An inflated currency is delusive in its effects. We think we have money when we have only promises to pay, and it stimulates extravagance on our part.

Mr. MITCHELL. Are you aware that the statistics show a balance of trade very largely against Great Britain when they continued specie payment?

Mr. COE. That is true, and that is an illustration of the statement I made, how unreliable the statistics are as given to show the actual condition of facts. They are calculated to mislead rather than to assist one to come to a proper conclusion.

Mr. DURHAM. Mr. Low, who was before the committee, expressed the opinion that it would be desirable to allow 5 or 10 per cent. of the duties received on imports to be paid in greenbacks for the purpose of cancellation. What would you say to that?

Mr. COE. I should say it would be a good idea only inasmuch as it looks to the extinguishment of the legal-tender notes; but I think 10 per cent. would be too large a proportion. The process would be too violent. The method I suggested is another way of producing the same result of extinguishing the greenbacks by slow degrees. It is a mere question of the speed at which this can be safely done.

Mr. DURHAM. Would you recommend the receiving of the duties on imports in greenbacks?

Mr. COE. No, I would not. I think the stability of our national debt has been very fortunate in its results. Every Congress has recognized the necessity of maintaining the integrity of that national debt by carefully reserving all the gold received to meet it; and I should deprecate any measure looking in any way to the weakening of that obligation.

Mr. DURHAM. Suppose specie payments should be resorted to with the balance of trade running against us; could the national banks maintain themselves in that condition of things?

Mr. COE. The effect would unquestionably be that money would become a little scarce; every man would be compelled to practice economy in his personal expenses, and every man, therefore, would be stimulated to industry for the purpose of producing something to export and to supply the deficiency. The whole thing really comes finally to a question of work and of economy, whether applied to individuals or to a whole nation of individuals.

Mr. HUBBELL. If you consider the currency inflated, why are you not in favor of retiring some portion of it in payment of duties?

Mr. COE. For the reason that I stated; if we could restore specie payment without violence to the industries of the country, everything would return to its own natural courses; but we have now an extended currency, and our whole society is complicated with it. I think every true man would deprecate a destruction of the industries of the country; and therefore, in rectifying the currency, we must be careful to do it in such a way as will not break down established institutions of the country.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 16, 1874.

S. B. CHITTENDEN appeared before the committee, and, in response to the chairman, stated that he resides in Brooklyn, N. Y.; is a merchant, and has been in business for thirty-seven years—thirty-two years of that time in New York.

The CHAIRMAN. Please state whether, in your opinion, there are any defects in our present banking system; if so, what they are and how you think they might be remedied.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. I did not suppose, Mr. Chairman, when I came here this morning that I should be asked any questions. Being a merchant, who has had absolute control of his own business for thirty-seven years, you must naturally expect me to speak in a very practical way. I shall probably occupy but a few moments with what I have to say in response to that question.

I firmly believe that all the legitimate business of the country is seriously—I had almost said hopelessly—demoralized, and that the demoralization comes from an irredeemable currency. I believe that while the present banking system may have been the best possible system in the exigencies of the war, and better calculated than any other to float an enormous national debt, it is now the great demoralizing influence to which I have referred. Banks are conducted by men just as commercial establishments are; and if my observation and experience are good for anything, there are no nineteen hundred associations of men to be found anywhere in the world (there are nineteen hundred national banks) that can be trusted for twelve years, more or less, to issue promises to pay where payment is never demanded. Such license necessarily results in a large proportion of cases in loose management and loss. I believe that of those nineteen hundred national banks there are not two-thirds of them sound to-day; I mean not two-thirds in number. In the vast proportion of them the capital is very small. I know, for instance, how one national bank was established, and I presume there were hundreds established in the same way. That is why I was so much astonished at the general drift of Mr. Williams's remark, because I have known him as president of the Metropolitan Bank of New York ever since the bank was established. I say I know a national bank of $100,000 capital whose broker in New York purchased $100,000 of Government bonds and paid for them. The owners of the bank furnished the margin between the 90 per cent. in currency which they were allowed on the deposit of the bonds and the cost of the bonds, and that margin was all the capital that was ever put into the bank. The broker sent the bonds to Washington, got his 90 per cent. on the dollar in currency, and got the margin from the gentlemen who established the bank. That bank, in the late crisis, was one of the first to suspend, but resumed again shortly, and is going on as before. It has a banking-house which cost over $30,000, and it issues certificates of deposit bearing all rates of interest up to 7 per cent., and perhaps more. I instance that case. It cannot be new to gentlemen here. The point I make is that the system is of necessity a demoralizing one, and that you are to-day confronting a question which perplexes and dissatisfies the whole nation, and that the reason of it is that the Government is the foster-father of a large number of just such institutions as that. While under the law there are many national banks which are legitimately conducted and are sound and useful and should be encouraged, there are, on the other hand, very many national banks that are insolvent and should be put in liquidation. The case is as simple to me as would be the case of my having two children in the house, one living and the other dead. I would bury the dead, and I would nourish and encourage the living. Such I believe to-day to be the present condition of the banking system. I was a bank-director in New York until the bank made its first dividend out of its capital, having no profits to divide. Notwithstanding my protest, eleven of the twelve directors insisted on making a dividend, and I resigned. It was a bank which I helped to establish under the old safety-fund law. That bank is still in existence in New York State. Now, I believe that Government has too much to do with the banking system of the country, and that the matter should be remitted to the people. It is the duty of the Government to provide an absolutely safe circulation. I do not believe that the people of this country will ever again consent to have any paper circulation that is not secured by the Government, (whether that should be by greenbacks or by bank currency I have no opinion to express at present.) But my judgment drifts directly to this point. I assume that it is incontrovertible that the honest, legitimate business of the country is demoralized and almost hopelessly so, and that it will go from bad to worse until we have a redeemable currency. I assume that a large proportion of the banks are unsound. I believe that a bill appealing to the simple, ordinary laws of business, the laws of supply and demand, (such a proposition, in general, as my friend Mr. Freeman Clarke made two or three years ago under the name of free banking,) a proposition that is so easily understood, would commend itself to the country. I would pass a law to-morrow, if I had the authority, according in substance with the bill which Mr. Merriam introduced last December. I read it for the first time a week ago in the Journal of Commerce of New York, and, if I read it correctly, it proposes to abolish all restrictions on the national-bank currency, and to permit all the banks to issue without limitation, requiring deposits of Government securities for their circulation, as under the present law. It also proposed a method for the practical redemption of this rotten, irredeemable, ragged currency in legal tender. The first proposition alone will probably enforce redemption. The moment you remove restrictions on the amount of circulation, the banks will not hold, as they do now, national-bank currency locked up in their vaults for the benefit of other banks that are at liberty to issue currency without limitation. But the two propositions are better together. Let the restriction on the circulation be removed, and let effective measures for its redemption in legal-tenders be instituted, and I hold that we shall secure the end desired, without entering into the complicated question which Mr. Phelps invited Mr. Coe to answer. That question, as I understood it, was, How will you make the legal-tender so much better than the bank circulation as to induce the presentation of the latter for redemption in legal-tender notes? Now, I think that the ordinary laws of business answer that question. If there is too much currency—if the Metropolitan Bank, for for example, has to-day half a million of the circulation of the Bank of Commerce, and has no use for it, it will send it in to the Bank of Commerce, under that law, and get its legal-tenders in exchange, and so you have a contraction of the currency to the amount of $500,000. Mr. Williams will send this half million in for redemption, not because the legal-tender notes are any more secure than the national-bank circulation, but because while he holds the national-bank notes he loses the interest upon them, and because he knows the Bank of Commerce makes the interest. He therefore will not keep its circulation in his vaults for the benefit of the Bank of Commerce.

I believe that the present amount of currency in the country is beyond the requirements of all the legitimate business that will be done in 1874. We have diminished the building of railroads by six or seven thousand miles per annum, and the great industries that depend upon the construction of those railroads, the ordinary labor, the iron, the steel, and the car-factories, and the interests that depend upon them, are certainly checked temporarily; and until the building of these roads is resumed we will not want so much money. Most individuals are economizing in domestic matters; some from necessity, others on principle. Nothing but industry and economy can ever restore the country to a sound and prosperous business. I employ a million and a half capital in my business. I have never been obliged to go upon the street to raise money at above 7 per cent. interest, and yet I have not made a dollar these last two years, and I never expect to make another until the Government has remitted the banking business to the people, except only so far as making a good currency is concerned. I believe that banking has no more right in these halls than my business has, except only as before. I think that all discussions about distributing currency are just as ridiculous as it would be for somebody to propose a bill that Mr. Claflin or Mr. Stewart may send $25,000 in silks to Louisiana and $50,000 of silks to Massachusetts. If you legislate on such principles, if you are consistent and persist in them, you must say how much goods Massachusetts should manufacture to be exchanged for the currency permitted to be circulated there, and how many bales of cotton Louisiana shall produce and send out in exchange for the currency permitted to be circulated there. If Congress would pass Mr. Merriam's bill, or something like it, and then postpone the subject of finances for six months, it would get new light. The moment you attempt to go to the bottom of this thing, and to construct a system from the foundation to the topmost stone, you find that no two men agree about it; no more than they did in the discussions of the question of slavery from the foundation of the Government until the first gun was fired at Fort Sumter, when that settled it.

The statesmanship, intelligence, and brain of the first men that the country ever produced were all exercised in vain to produce a unity of sentiment in regard to slavery. It is just as useless to attempt to construct a complete system now which shall redeem this country from the curse of an irredeemable currency. You have got to begin somewhere, and hence I am quite certain that you ought to begin with the great demoralizing influences of the national banking system. In that you will find an amount of insolvency that will be a new revelation to the whole country. I have no hesitation in predicting that if Congress passes a law—call it free banking, or what you please—enforcing redemption and letting the circulation go free on the deposit of Government bonds, you will have a large contraction of the currency, and you will have a number of the present national banks going quickly into liquidation one after another. You will by such a bill separate the good from the bad, beginning in the right place. The currency too, under such a law, will expand and contract according to the law of supply and demand. In this coming summer, with the present diminished industries, the currency will contract very largely. It must necessarily do so. There are certain portions of the country where they want the currency, and where it can be used very profitably, and some people will take it there and establish banks there. But in New York City the national-bank currency is to-day a great burden, and is becoming more and more so. I think it quite possible that the $14,000,000 of increased deposit last week, and the $10,000,000 of increased deposit the week before in New York, will go on for the next six or eight weeks to a point which will change the whole course of the argument on this subject. I believe that the business of New York City this half year will not be more than 65 per cent. of what it was last year; and from all I learn from my correspondents through the country, I should say that there is at least 30 per cent. less currency being paid out in the aggregate than there was a year ago. Nevertheless, we have just the same amount of currency, and $44,000,000 more legal-tender threatened, involving new bank-credit power of about $220,000,000; all this in connection with the suppression of railroads and the diminished business. Now, this policy will do one of two things: it will break down quickly of its own weight, or it will produce a degree of expansion and speculation in the country which, in its culmination, will carry with it not only all the insolvent concerns that have been bridged over in this late panic, but also ruin everybody who is unfortunate enough to be found in debt when it comes. On the other hand, if Congress were to notify the people of this country promptly that banks hereafter, except in regard to their circulation, were to be left, like merchandise, to the intelligence, enterprise, and integrity of the people, and that Government would take its hands off them as soon as possible, and begin by the simple process which Mr. Merriam's bill proposes, we should have contraction of the currency for the present; and when it is wanted for legitimate purposes it will expand again. This restoration of the currency and banks to a sound basis is like building an immense cathedral. You must have solid ground before you lay the first stone. I would therefore begin with a law touching national banks which would be sure to separate the sheep from the goats.

Mr. MERRIAM. In case we should legislate to authorize the Government to loan national and savings banks, in a time of public exigency like the last crisis, say 90 per cent. of bonds deposited, would that be of any great advantage in stopping a panic?

Mr. CHITTENDEN. Some elasticity to the currency is absolutely necessary in a panic. My method would be the simplest and the easiest comprehended by everybody. I have noticed various propositions of this sort, and they are complicated. They are not so simple as the one which admits absolutely of freedom. I want to say one thing of this absolute removal of limitations on the circulation. The removal of limitations on the issue of currency based upon United States bonds must be perfectly harmless. There can be no excessive issue in the existing state of things in regard to bonds. I know a trust company in New York which, about three weeks ago, wanted to buy a million of United States bonds. They were two weeks in buying them, and the bonds advanced within that time $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., and were very rarely obtained more than \$10,000 at a time. There is just exactly the same danger, if you make this thing free, that people who own United States bonds, or who have the means to buy them, will recklessly buy them, and go to banking illegitimately, as there is that merchants will do their business illegitimately with solid capital. United States bonds are not so available at any reasonable price as to tempt any person to invest in them carelessly for the purpose of banking. You will find numerous cases where banks will prefer to sell their Government bonds rather than keep their circulation out. But at any rate, with practical redemption secured, you cannot get an excessive currency based on United States bonds. The issue of currency on this plan cannot be beyond the legitimate demands of business. It is not a speculative basis. A United States bond is the next thing to gold, and a currency based on it, and redeemable in legal-tender, cannot be unduly inflated, provided your legal-tender is taken care of. Looking at it in a simple business point of view, if I have United States bonds, I know that they are good security. And the people who own them are especially convinced of that. The savings-banks have not any United States bonds to spare. Those in New York have too many city bonds which are under par and too few United States bonds, and their tendency will be rather to increase the latter, because their deposits are very large.

Mr. MITCHELL. To use your own illustration, you want to start on a good foundation. The present foundation of bank circulation is in round figures $400,000,000 of greenbacks. Under free banking, is not this foundation capable of sustaining a vast increase of bank circulation?

Mr. CHITTENDEN. Four hundred millions of greenbacks (if I understand the drift of your question) is more than ample to redeem four, five, or six hundred millions of national-bank notes circulated in all parts of the country. There are no gentlemen who propose a resumption of specie payment who can tell what proportion of gold is needed. It is certainly not more than one-half to two-thirds of the circulating medium. I think that Mr. Coe's statement of that case was very clear. But when you come to the paper, if you assume that your bank circulation will increase $200,000,000, even then the $400,000,000 of legal-tender notes will be amply sufficient, especially if you apply all the other bank reserves than the 5 per cent. to redemption. It is the bank reserve that taught Fisk and Gould how to break the banks at pleasure. If you remove the bank reserves, and let the $400,000,000 of legal-tender notes go free as a basis of redemption, it will certainly, for the present, contract the national-bank circulation.

The CHAIRMAN. You spoke of national banks being established on an unsound basis, and you instanced one which was started on the margin between the price of the bonds deposited for circulation and the amount of the notes. What injury results from such an establishment of a bank, and to whom?

Mr. CHITTENDEN. It may be said generally to have a very demoralizing influence. It is as if I should indorse a note of some trickster or adventurer, making his note good simply because I indorsed it, while everybody knew that the moment my name was off from his note it would be good for nothing. But still, by the fact of my indorsing it, he is held up before the community as a responsible person. But a better answer is that this bank established on a capital of $30,000 had all the authority of a national bank. The poor minister's widow who had $50 to deposit said to herself, "Here is a national bank, and it is a safe place for me to deposit my money." And so the Government supports a vicious system, to the great loss of depositors.

The CHAIRMAN. The common understanding and popular mode of dealing with it is to say that the note-holder is protected and the Government is protected, and that all the depositors must take care of themselves. You think that that is not a sound proposition?

Mr. CHITTENDEN. I do. If Government is father of nineteen hundred national banks, it should make them all good all the way through. If it stands responsible for them, or if the public assume and believe that it is responsible for them, the Government should protect them.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you given any thought to the postal-savings system?

Mr. CHITTENDEN. I have not. I have read carelessly the address of the Postmaster-General on that subject; but I have formed no opinion about it.

The CHAIRMAN. Please tell us whether, in your opinion, the present rate of interest in the country is or is not too high, and whether you think there should be any legislation looking to the regulating of it.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. I believe that all the usury laws might wisely be dispensed with. I believe that the atmosphere and resources of this country are free, and that the freer they are kept the better. I think that the business of the country at this hour is perplexed and surrounded by difficulties, because people are looking to Washington to meddle with everything. They want Congress to build railroads, to transport grain, (in the face of a reduction of nearly one-half the price of freight on the railroads within five years, in spite of the inflation of the currency,) are asking from Congress every strange and improper thing, all based upon the theory that there is plenty of money at your disposal. As a Kansas man said yesterday in Baltimore, "You have plenty of money East; we want money out West;" and swinging his arms wildly, he said, "We have got a great abundance West, and we must have cheap money." Specie payment, he said, was a humbug. He used a little rougher language than my friend Mr. Williams did. Somebody asked him, "What have you got to buy the money with?" He replied, "I only know that we must have cheap money. I do not know how we are to get it." He is a fair specimen. The West has enormous resources, but every man who owns a farm out West feels as though his particular farm or his iron-mountain should be developed immediately. And he wants the Government to help him to develop it. All that the people of the country should ask is that Congress will let them alone. They will do their banking and will build their railroads; will mine their iron mountains and develop the resources of the country as rapidly as they can be legitimately developed. Everything in New York to-day is dependent upon what this committee is going to do. Stocks go up 2 per cent. in a day or down 2 per cent., according to some rumor. If this committee will agree to some simple thing, which will tell the people of the country that the Government will resume specie payment as soon as it possibly can, and that, for the rest, the legitimate business of the country is in the hands of the people, we shall prosper and go on prospering. But until Congress takes off its hands we shall certainly go from bad to worse.

Mr. HUNTER. Can you tell me why it was that the pork in the West this fall was so much cheaper than it was last fall, and cheaper than it is now?

Mr. CHITTENDEN. In the panic in New York my merchandise went down below specie basis. At the meeting at the Chamber of Commerce, when Mr. Low pressed his memorial for the resumption of specie payment on the 4th of May, I was offered railroad-iron at $62 in greenbacks, which had cost $64 in gold. I did not advocate all Mr. Low's propositions, but I advocated the principle on which they were founded. I said that of all the two or three hundred articles that I dealt in there was not one that I would be glad to sell at a specie basis; that we had endured all the pangs and trouble of resumption, and all we wanted was the liberty to act on that principle. Merchandise, iron, and almost all imports were down to the specie basis, and I presume that the panic affected raw pork materials in the same way.

Mr. HUNTER. Was there money enough at the opening of the hog crop this year to move that crop.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. I presume there was not at all points. That reminds me of Mr. Williams's proposition that this Government should undertake to discover how much circulation was needed by the increase of business in the country. Nothing more absolutely contrary to all business laws could possibly be proposed. This Government can no more determine the extent of the legitimate or illegitimate commerce of the country, its enterprises and its successes, than it can measure the waters of the ocean. And every time that an attempt is made to equalize things, it is a failure.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Williams's proposition was to have this thing done by a commission of gentlemen in New York.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. He did not say New York, I believe. Is it at all more improper that you should legislate as to the amount of merchandise which I may sell to Louisiana than it could be that you should undertake to distribute the amount of circulation which shall go there or shall go to Texas? Mr. Williams's proposition involved exactly that process. He wants the Government to go into it as a business, and to determine every three years how many railroads will be built, and how many coal and iron mines will be developed, and how much things will go down or up. It is impossible to do that. These things have all to be left to the native energies of the country. The reason why we are, nine years after the close of the war, further from the restoration of specie payment than we were nine years ago, is because the Government is the father of the banks and an irredeemable currency, and the energies of the people are suppressed and cramped and hampered, because everybody is looking and waiting to see what the Government will do.

Mr. HUNTER. If we had free banking, would not the Government be the father of the banks as much as it is now?

Mr. CHITTENDEN. I believe that if you passed a simple bill leaving the circulation to go free, with a stringent provision that 5 or 10 per cent. shall be kept on deposit in the national Treasury for redemption of bills, the revolution it will make will be such as to furnish a new departure and in the end result in a system of which the Government need not be ashamed.

Mr. DURHAM. On this question of equalizing the currency, do I understand you to say that if every national bank were established in New York and the New England States the circulation would be the same and the profits would be the same as if they were actually distributed all over the United States?

Mr. CHITTENDEN. No, I did not express any opinion with reference to the profits of banking.

Mr. DURHAM. I understood you said you hoped you were not ignorant of the question of the equalization of currency. Would it be equalized as well if all the national banks are in New York as if each State should have its fair proportion of them?

Mr. CHITTENDEN. As long as national banks exist let them be established wherever they are required. I would not have the least obstruction in the way of establishing a bank at any point. I only require that the circulation shall be based upon United States bonds, which circulation shall be wherever it is needed; but always practically redeemable in legal-tender, whether that be greenbacks or gold.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 16, 1874.

Mr. JAMES BUCHANAN appeared before the committee and, in response to the chairman, stated that he resided at Indianapolis, Ind., was an attorney at law, and was also engaged in the loaning of money. He had prepared a bill which he proposed to have introduced into the House next Monday, and some sections of which he proceeded to read to the committee. The plan contemplated the establishment of depositories, at which United States bonds might be exchanged for notes, which notes might be retained by the borrower as long as he chose to use them, the bonds in the mean time remaining in the custody of the United States, and the interest accruing from them to be retained by the United States and passed to the sinking-fund account, until, with the other coin accumulating in the Treasury every year, the amount of accumulation reached $400,000,000. The redemption of the bonds is to commence at the time when this $400,000,000 is accumulated in the sinking fund. One-half of the amount, $200,000,000, is then to be taken out of the sinking fund and distributed to these various depositories, in proportion to the amount of interest which had accumulated in each, (or, in other words, to the amount of business done in each,) and put to the credit of the redemption account. Then the assistant treasurer at each of these depositories is to give public notice that on a certain date he will redeem, on presentation, a given amount of these gold-bond notes, which amount is to be equal to the coin placed in the depository for redemption purposes. That was the mode in which the redemption was to be commenced; and Mr. Buchanan claimed that there could of course be no depreciation of the paper money. His own opinion was that $200,000,000 of the total amount would never be called for. He stated that by another section of the bill the same notes were made legal-tender for their face value, but only at such times and during such periods as they were not themselves redeemable in coin. He said that that was on the same principle on which the Bank of England operated now. He claimed that if ever specie payment could be resumed on any basis whatever, it was on this basis.

The CHAIRMAN. In the first place, you propose to prepare two thousand millions of these bond notes, which is about equal to the present bonded debt?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And you would then say that any person who holds a United States bond may go to one of these depositories and exchange it at par for those gold-notes, and take a certificate to that effect?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And if he wishes to hold his notes or to pay them out and to let the transaction close here, so far as he is concerned, he may?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. In the mean time the Government retains its bonds, and the notes are outstanding?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. If, however, after awhile, he thinks it proper to get his bond, he may gather up his notes, and go back and get his bond, minus the interest accrued?

Mr. BUCHANAN. That is it.

The CHAIRMAN. And the Government is required, instead of selling gold from time to time, to retain all the gold which is not needed to pay its interest, and when $200,000,000 has accumulated in the Treasury, it is to be distributed pro rata among these several depositories, and notice is to be given as to the securities that will be redeemed?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And when that coin is there for the redemption of the notes, the notes are not to be a legal tender, but when the coin is exhausted the notes become a legal tender?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes, sir; that is it precisely.

Mr. MERRIAM. Do you believe it is any use to discuss a question which changes the whole bonded and banking interests of the United States; whether it is worth while for this committee to give its time to the consideration of a question which we know to be utterly impossible to compass, from the fact that centralization of power in the Government immediately meets opposition at the hands of the people, and that any change in financial matters is looked upon with great distrust; that it is impossible to pass any measure of finance which contains more than ten lines without great difficulty?

Mr. BUCHANAN. As to what may pass through Congress, that is not a matter which I am proposing to discuss, but only what ought to pass Congress. The proposition I submit comes after a very careful consideration by the business men of our locality, and after a very full correspondence with business men in other parts of the United States. The money which is now furnished to the business of the country by the national banks is too expensive.

Mr. MERRIAM. What do you mean by "too expensive?"

Mr. BUCHANAN. The $354,000,000 of bank circulation costs the business of the country $68,000,000 a year, and that expense cannot be borne by the business of the country. The one reason why the financial crash did not come years ago was that the country had a large legal-tender issue direct from the Government, without any cost whatever. The question is, what does this national-bank circulation cost the business of the country in the aggregate? First, it is based on a deposit of $400,000,000 of bonds in the Treasury, on which $24,000,000 is annually paid in interest. That comes out of the business of the country.

The CHAIRMAN. Does that cost the country any more than if this $24,000,000 of interest was paid to A, B, and C?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Certainly not. There is no doubt about that. But there is $24,000,000 of interest paid to the national banks on their bonds deposited to secure circulation. Then circulation is issued to the amount of 90 per cent. on that, and that circulation is used by the country, at an average expense of 12 per cent., and that makes $44,000,000 a year, which, added to the $24,000,000, makes, as I say, the annual cost to the country of this national-bank circulation $68,000,000. That is the serious objection which our people make to the national banks. But suppose these banks should loan their money at 6 per cent. a year, even then their circulation would cost the business of the country 12 per cent.; that is, 6 per cent. on the bonds and 6 per cent. on the money issued.

The practicability of the plan which I propose, so far as the business of the country is concerned, is, I think, a fixed fact. Mr. Farwell, whom I have known as a business man in Chicago, knows that if it could have been fixed in that shape Chicago never would have felt the late panic. That panic never would have got outside of Wall street, and never inside of it either, because it would not have been possible to corner the money-market until the volume of bonds were reduced so as that it could be cornered. It is an elephant now of such proportions that the cornering of it would not be proposed by anybody. As things are now, there is no business man in the country with power enough to conduct his business so that it will not be crushed by the failure of somebody else.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me see whether I understand you. I hold say $10,000 of bonds. I go to one of your depositories and exchange them for $10,000 of Treasury gold-notes. That is money in my hand, which I propose to loan out. I am forbearing 6 per cent. in gold, which I lose on my bonds. Now, I must loan these notes to my customers for enough to repay me what I lose on the bonds, and a profit besides. Is it possible, therefore, that I would loan it at any less rate than bankers loan money now, whose rate you say in your community is 12 per cent.?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes; until they are able to corner the bond-market.

Mr. MERRIAM. How?

Mr. BUCHANAN. As long as bonds appear in the open market we can secure them through the means of trade. We can sell our wheat and our pork and take the bonds and use them. Time is the great question in business more than the rate of interest. We do not need your usury laws.

Mr. MERRIAM. Is that the sentiment of the people in your country?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HUNTER. It is not the opinion of the people of my part of the country.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The people want relief. As a business man and as a lawyer, dealing with this thing for several years, I have seen the usury laws pleaded in a court of justice, but never saw it done except to perpetrate a fraud. Men who propose to build up a business reputation stand on the matter of honor in these things rather than on the usury laws.

Mr. MERRIAM. Do the people in your country accept that as a fact, or are they prejudiced against the abolition of usury laws?

Mr. BUCHANAN. There are a great many people in the rural districts who regard the usury laws as a kind of palladium—a protection to them. But every man who is engaged in trade, cattle-dealing, pork-packing, merchandising of any kind whatever, recognizes the fact that if he wants money he has to pay the price asked for it by the party who has it to loan, and that the usury law does not make it any cheaper, but operates, if at all, in keeping the money out of the State. Our laws now allow 10 per cent. on contracts and on judgments; 12 per cent. has been made the bank rate of discount. But the great point to be gained by the country is the question of time. No banker will loan you money if he knows that the money he loans you is all the money you have (no matter how much additional property you may have in the way of real estate) to go into merchandising business. He knows that it is not possible for you to make, within sixty days, profits to the amount of interest you pay. It could not be done as a matter of business. The time that business men want to use money is such a time as is necessary for them to prosecute their business and reach the consumers. All other loans are simply consumers of the principal. No man can make that money in sixty days' time in legitimate business. Most of the bank loans are made simply to parties to turn corners.

The CHAIRMAN. I ask you to state whether, in your opinion, money that draws even 6 per cent. interest is not more profitable than capital invested in any other form—in lands, or houses, or merchandise?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I think it is. That, however, depends on a variety of circumstances. In some localities in the United States it is; in other localities it is not. An investment in western lands at $1.25 an acre is much better than a 6 per cent. loan; but in the Eastern States, where there is no appreciable rise in the value of land, a 6 per cent. loan is a better investment than the purchase of real estate.

Mr. HUNTER. You say that if a man gets hold of a bond he will deposit it in one of these depositories and draw the money at the face of the bond, paying 6 per cent. for the use of the money. Why would it not be just as well for him to take the bond to New York, and, instead of getting the amount of the face of the bond in currency, get its market value for it without paying any interest at all?

Mr. BUCHANAN. The difficulty about that matter is that he has got no sure thing about having the money in the future. Money accumulates at certain seasons of the year. Then there comes a stringency when money is dependent on a thousand other things, and you cannot control it. When he has got his money in flush times he will take his bond out of the depository.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. Is this the security against inflation under your system?

Mr. BUCHANAN. The inflation, I think, would not come beyond the necessary demands of business. No man will want to pay 5 or 6 per cent. for the use of currency when he has no use for the currency. In 1859 gold sold in the West at 98 cents on the dollar, and silver at 95 cents, payable in good paper money. Inflation is a bugbear, which sounds a good deal louder than it is going to hurt. There is more danger from the noise of that gun than from its actual execution. The cry of inflation assumes that business men have got no sense, and that they are incapable of telling how much money they want. I undertake to say that the business of the country is the only proper judge to determine the question which Mr. Williams proposes to have determined by a commission. God has not made the man who can fix just exactly the amount of currency that will be required to meet the business wants of the country. That must be left to be regulated by the law of supply and demand.

The CHAIRMAN. You think that, under your system, when a man wanted money, if he could get hold of bonds he would get the money for them, and that when he ceased to want the money he would go and get back the bonds?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Exactly that.

The CHAIRMAN. You have said that, though your profession is that of a lawyer, you have been engaged in loaning money. Would it be encroaching on your private business to ask whether it is your own money you loan, or whether you act as an agent?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I am engaged in that business for eastern corporations, insurance and other corporations of Boston and Hartford. The money is loaned at 10 per cent. besides the payment of commission.

The CHAIRMAN. May I inquire what that commission makes the percentage?

Mr. BUCHANAN. It makes the money cost about 11 per cent. to the borrower.

The CHAIRMAN. Are these loans usually on short paper?

Mr. BUCHANAN. No, sir. They are on five years' time, the interest to be paid semi-annually. The length of time they have to run is the reason why they are sought by the business men of the country in preference to other loans.

The CHAIRMAN. Can the business of your neighborhood afford to pay such a large interest?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes, sir. I know one gentleman who pays 15 per cent. on a capital of $20,000, which he is using in the cattle trade, and he is making money besides.

The CHAIRMAN. I thought that you said, a moment ago, that the business of the country could not afford to pay the profits of national banks?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I referred to the average business of the whole country. There is some business which will pay even at that high rate. The trouble is borrowing money on sixty or ninety days; the interest eats into the capital and produces a financial crash. It was that silent, consuming cause which contributed most to the financial crashes of 1837, '47, '57. In this late panic there was not a particle of business which was out of joint except one department of the banking business. It was the large volume of business which was being carried on by the banks, and the mercantile credits, which broke them down. When Jay Cooke & Co. failed, all the business which they helped to carry had to stop. Take the New York clearing-house. During the last year, ending on the 1st October, the bonds and drafts which passed through the clearing-house averaged \$105,000,000 a day, over one-sixth of the whole issue of currency, and there was little over \$3,000,000 used in paying the balance—less than $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent.

Of course, after you get farther away from those large money-centers, there is more money used in the transaction of business, until you get into the rural districts, where the actual cash used in the actual transaction of business is from 50 to 65 per cent.

Mr. MERRIAM. What is the rate of interest which you calculate the national banks cost the people?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Nearly 20 per cent.

Mr. MERRIAM. And how often does the crash come—once in ten years?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MERRIAM. If, at the rate of 20 per cent., the capital is consumed and the crash comes every ten years, how long will the same thing take at the rate of 10 per cent?

Mr. BUCHANAN. If you consume a thing once in ten years, as a matter of course the thing will break down and you become insolvent. We ought to get to the lowest rate of interest possible. I do not think that we can get down to 5 per cent. interest until we get the labor of the country down to a pauper basis, as in England, and that is not to be desired. Five per cent. would strike me as being as low a rate of interest as we can reach in this country. From 7 to 8 per cent. would be the ruling rate of interest under my proposition, and the business of the country can well afford to pay that. The principle which I propose to adopt is to arrange it so that the Government will be perfectly safe. That is the first point to be guarded. The Government credit is now at par.

The CHAIRMAN. Does not your plan imply that the revenue of the country arising from taxation should be kept high enough to pay off the expenses of the Government and to gradually accumulate a surplus? Does not the quantum of taxes form an item, which is to be considered in connection with your system?

Mr. BUCHANAN. No further than in connection with any other system. The interest which the Government would be paying out on bonds to be deposited, under my system, is to be held by the Government and used in forming a sinking fund. If a 6 per cent. bond of a thousand dollars goes in, and a thousand dollars in notes comes out, and these notes stay out for sixteen or seventeen years, then there will be a dollar in gold in the depository for every dollar of paper there is out. In other words, the 6 per cent. interest will amount to the face of the bond in less than seventeen years.

The CHAIRMAN. Then you make the accruing interest furnish a sinking fund devoted to that purpose?

Mr. BUCHANAN. To that purpose, and that alone. If the Government is able to pay its interest during all that time, it will be able, at the end of that time, to redeem its notes in coin. That is clear mathematics.

As to resuming specie payment, there is no way to do it except through this kind of process. There are but three ways in which gold can be obtained: One way is by mining, another way is by getting it in exchange for our products exported to other countries, and the third way is by borrowing it. The receiving it in exchange for our products means that the balance of trade must be in our favor. The mining of gold costs more than the gold is worth. There is no nation that ever mined for its gold that did not lose money by the operation. Spain is an illustration of the truth of that statement. Take England on the other side. England never mined 1 per cent. of the gold which she handles. She gets it through the sale of her manufactured goods; and she gets it thus with large profits. The country which mines the gold loses the money; the country which gets it through the medium of exchanges makes the money, and we have got facility of production to such an extent that we can get it in the same way.

Mr. DURHAM. You start off in your system with a basis of $400,000,000 of gold. Where are we to get that?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Gold will come to the Treasury in payment of customs-duties; or else my system will act as the finest tariff we can have. For that reason I should object to receiving paper money in the payment of customs-duties, so as to force gold into the Treasury, which will give credit to the paper circulation. If the paper-money now floats on the faith of the nation, and if it is able to sustain a debt which bears interest, it certainly can sustain a debt which does not bear interest.

Mr. DURHAM. With the balance of trade against us, is it possible to increase the aggregate receipts of gold from $165,000,000 to $400,000,000?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes, sir. It will either do that or it will stop imports. If it stops imports, then our exports will go on and the balance of trade will be so largely in our favor that we will get the gold by that means.

The CHAIRMAN. What do you suppose the aggregate circulation of the country now is?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I should say between $450,000,000 and $500,000,000 is all that is accessible to the business of the country, or that has been for the last year and a half.

The CHAIRMAN. You are satisfied that it does not go over $500,000,000?

Mr. BUCHANAN. It cannot possibly go over $500,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that amount decreasing or increasing?

Mr. BUCHANAN. It is decreasing to the amount of about $\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. annually.

The CHAIRMAN. Your estimate takes no account of the money which is hoarded?

Mr. BUCHANAN. No, sir. It takes no account of the money which is retained in State, county, or city treasuries, which are thought all the time to be in a very bad condition unless they have several thousand dollars on hand, running up, in many cases, to millions. All of this money might as well not be in existence for the time, if it is kept out of use.

Mr. MERRIAM. The bank balances show where it is.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Not in Indiana. There the officers of the State and county and city treasuries keep the money in their vaults. There is now $3,000,000 of currency lying in the State treasury of Indiana, and cannot be used and will not be used, and it is a penitentiary offense for the treasurer to take it out except in pursuance of law. It is the same with many other States. That money has to be taken into the general account to show the amount of currency which is withheld from circulation. Of course you cannot arrive at that precisely, but as a mere approximation. But it would be a small estimate to say of that, and of the currency which is lost in the course of a year, that it amounts to $75,000,000. The aggregate amount for taxes paid in the course of a year to State, county, and city corporations is $900,000,000, almost twice the whole circulation of the United States. It has of course got to be paid with currency. That currency has to go through these county and State treasuries every twelve months. No wonder there is a large amount of delinquent taxes throughout the country, because there is not money enough to pay the taxes.

The CHAIRMAN. What is your judgment as to the amount of money which is needed to be issued legitimately and properly?

Mr. BUCHANAN. That depends entirely on the volume of business. If the volume of business was up to what it was before the panic of September last, we would have need of $1,200,000,000 circulating medium. That would do if it changed hands once a day. It would not do 21 per cent. of the business of the country in cash, and it is not safe to undertake to do it on less money.

The CHAIRMAN. Why can we not use the $500,000,000 we have, and then use bank credits and individual credits?

Mr. BUCHANAN. We can, if we want to do so; but it is not best for the people of the country to do so. Mercantile credits are based alone on the confidence of the individuals. They stand on so fickle a basis that they are liable to be blown away by a breath of the morning; they are liable to fall at any moment. The volume of business which was being carried on before the last panic was such that any tripping of any of the banks that were carrying this load would of course cause a large volume of business to stop. In usual business there is an average of it done by exchange, by barter, &c. There is a certain percentage of it done with money, and the portion in between is filled with these mercantile credits; and it is proper that they should come in, because they have furnished hitherto the necessary elasticity. If mercantile credits had been good last fall, there would not have been a panic, but, they having broken down, it was necessary to have money to throw in and fill up the vacuum, or else things would come to a dead lock; and things came to a dead lock.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you considered the manufacturing industries of the country so as to form an opinion of the amount of money, absolutely or relatively, which they require for working expenses?

Mr. BUCHANAN. They use a little more than the general mercantile interests of the country do.

The CHAIRMAN. They cannot use mercantile credits for that purpose?

Mr. BUCHANAN. No, sir; they use the mercantile paper in their purchases and in their sales, and then they convert this mercantile paper into currency for the payment of their labor.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the rate of interest which the manufacturing industry of the country has been paying for its money?

Mr. BUCHANAN. To speak in round numbers, it has been 12 per cent.

The CHAIRMAN. Take the general manufactures of the country—iron, cotton, woolen, and agricultural implements. Do you suppose that the profits on these manufactures have been such as to justify the payment of that rate of interest?

Mr. BUCHANAN. No, sir. But that 12 per cent. is not on all the money which they use. That 12 per cent. is on national-bank issues. As to the gold dollar, that is the assumed standard by the law of the United States. A dollar is not so many grains or pennyweights of metal; but so many grains or pennyweights of metal are made to be equivalent to a dollar. A greenback is made the same thing, in the same way, by the same authority. So for this issue which we propose. It is a representative standard set up by the law. Gold is no standard and never was. The gold dollar which we use here is not a gold dollar in London. The English have their pound sterling represented by a gold sovereign. Gold is the best representative of value on account of its being accredited most in the world, but it is not so good as a good paper currency for an internal commerce. You may inflate with metal currency just as with paper currency. But there is a fallacy which creeps in here. It is a fallacy to speak of the premium of gold and the depreciation of currency in the same breath. One or the other is not true. If there is a premium on gold, that premium is a price over and above its legal value; but there is not, at the same time, a depreciation of paper, le-cause, if the paper is depreciated, then the gold remains where it was, but the greenback is, say 20 per cent. below it. The two things cannot run together.

The CHAIRMAN. We have, in round numbers, some two thousand national banks, owned by perhaps ten thousand or more persons. They have regulated that business; they have adopted it as their occupation in life; they have put all their capital in it; and that is their calling and profession. There would be very great resistance, on their part, to being thrown out of business and compelled to seek new channels of trade. Would it be treating them exactly right and fair and just to embarrass them in this way, and to subject them to this inconvenience?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I would permit them to retain their organization and only change the character of their issue. It would furnish them really with more issue, and give them every right they have now, except the issuing of notes.

Mr. FARWELL. In case the present system is not to be abolished, what amendment would you suggest?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I do not know that it could be very largely improved so far as its notes are concerned. But I think it would be perfectly safe to let them issue currency to the amount of the face of their bonds deposited. That would furnish so much additional currency.

Mr. FARWELL. And you would make banking free?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I think that the country could not stand that. Life is too short to admit of having the business of the country broken up every ten years.

Mr. HUNTER. Do you not, under your system, expect to have banks going on?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Certainly, as a matter of course.

Mr. HUNTER. Do you think that the people would borrow money from the present banks at a larger rate of interest than 10 per cent.?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I think so. But the time that the loan is to run is always a consideration.

Mr. HUNTER. Under your system you will take $100,000 in bonds to a depository, and get $100,000 in currency for it, paying 6 per cent. gold interest?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HUNTER. What can you afford to loan that money out at?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Seven or eight per cent.

Mr. HUNTER. What do you suppose that $100,000 in bonds would cost you—$115,000?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Perhaps so.

Mr. HUNTER. If they cost you $115,000, would it not be better to dispose of them at that price, and take the money and loan it out? Can you not loan it cheaper to the people in that way than under your proposed system?

Mr. BUCHANAN. If I was going into the loaning business, probably I could. The heavy business matters of the country will be carried on by capitalists, who handle their own money and furnish their own capital; they may go to the banks every now and again, for the purpose of turning corners. But now the law is such that it forces them to go to the bank to get their money.

There is another branch of the question which I have not spoken of. This plan of mine would be the solution of the transportation question, which is now troubling Congress and the people so much.

The law has located the home of the money in New York City and east of it. The currents of money are from thence west and south, and return; and you cannot force the business across these currents; but the produce of the country is compelled to follow the money to the East over the lines of road built by this capital; and such is its power that it draws commerce from beyond the Mississippi River instead of bringing it to the river and then letting it flow down that natural channel out to the markets of the world.

Mr. MERRIAM. But you cannot get money into New Orleans unless there is somebody there who owns it or its representative.

Mr. BUCHANAN. That is true. But the bank-circulation in New York and the New England States is now three or four or five times the amount furnished to other localities of the United States. If every other locality in the United States were as well supplied with bank-circulation as the New England States are, we would have [abundance of currency.

Mr. MERRIAM. Is not that the want of capital rather than the want of banking facilities?

Mr. BUCHANAN. No, sir. There have been applications made from the West for millions and millions of dollars of banking privileges, to the Comptroller of the Currency, and they have been refused.

Mr. MERRIAM. And yet your people are not in favor of free banking?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I am not in favor of free banking.

Mr. MERRIAM. How is it with your people?

Mr. BUCHANAN. They are in favor of this proposition. We had an application for a bank in Indianapolis, and had the bonds to deposit for $200,000 in currency, and we could not get the currency. But if this system which I propose had been adopted, then we could have had the currency as a matter of course. During the panic, the cashier of the National Trust Company in New York took $800,000 in bonds into the street, and was not able to raise $100,000 in currency on it. They could not get even greenbacks for gold.

Mr. MERRIAM. What is the sentiment of your people as to free banking?

Mr. BUCHANAN. There are few in favor of free banking; I am opposed to it, and, I think, on solid grounds.

Mr. MERRIAM. Then how are you to get more currency?

Mr. BUCHANAN. If we cannot get it, we must do without it. The business of the country has been already shrunk to such a point till, from all I learn, by the first of May or June next there will not be more than 30 per cent. of the usual amount of business, and perhaps the present volume of money will prove sufficient for the coming year. That, in a great measure, is true, and merchants will use the credits of one another. But the danger is in continuing that same process, because if you do the crash will come on again.

Mr. MERRIAM. Is it not a fact that the business of the country is measured by the clearing-houses?

Mr. BUCHANAN. No, sir; the business of the associated banks is, and none other.

Mr. MERRIAM. Is not the business of the associated banks the representative of the business of all the manufactures and commerce of the whole country?

Mr. BUCHANAN. No, sir. Even the banks of New York are not all in the association.

Mr. MERRIAM. Every bank that amounts to anything is.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The majority of the national banks in other cities are not in clearing-house associations.

The CHAIRMAN. Do not clearing-houses show the operations of railroads—their daily receipts from passengers and freight?

Mr. BUCHANAN. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. That is a very heavy item, is it not?

Mr. MERRIAM. You cannot say that fully, because the receipts of railroads are collected and sent by bills of credit to New York, and every single bill passes through the clearing-house.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Through that one clearing-house there passed \$39,000,000,000 of checks for the year ending 1st October last, averaging 105,000,000 a day. That of course gives some index of the amount of business of the country. The amount of money actually used in these transactions was less than $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent.

Mr. MERRIAM. Can you give us an approximate estimate of the holding of currency by State institutions?

Mr. BUCHANAN. It is impossible to give that, because the county and city treasuries are paying their obligations daily. The State treasury holds it over and pays only current expenses.

Mr. MERRIAM. Can you not give us an estimate of your own, approximating the amount held, and how long it is held in the State and county and city treasuries?

Mr. BUCHANAN. The best average I can make of that is that the bulk of it is held for six months. The proportions I have not made an estimate of. There are ninety-two counties in our State, and the amount of revenue that passes into these treasuries averages $60,000 each, or $552,000 in all.

The CHAIRMAN. The deposits that are put by these corporations into the present banking institutions would not appear in any statistics that we have?

Mr. BUCHANAN. No; and of course that does not indicate anything as to the amount of currency. When business is active, confidence strong, and money scarce, if the banks attempt to keep up with the demands made on them, they are bound to keep up their discount-loans and to increase their deposit-accounts. One man deposits $1,000 in the morning, and another follows and takes it out, and so on; and the great discrepancy in the volume of business, as compared with the volume of money, was caused by the fact that the banks undertook to perform the business and broke down. They attempted to carry the business of the country, and they could not do it. I do not think that the banks can do it, where the banks control the issue. I think that the Government should control the issue entirely, and let the banks have all the powers they now have and such additional ones as will facilitate the business of the country. I have said that the average tax of the ninety-two counties in Indiana was $60,000. Take into consideration the tax paid into the State treasury and into the town treasuries and into the city treasuries all over the whole State, and also in other States in like manner, and you will find that the gross amount of money locked up in this way throughout the United States amounts to about 10 per cent. of $900,000,000 annually, not including many small towns, and not including United States taxes. And there is an average lock-up in Indiana for six months.

Mr. MITCHELL. State whether the Government gives any value to the five-dollar gold piece by stamping it and calling it five dollars—any value that it did not possess before the Government stamped it.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MITCHELL. Then you say that the bullion had not the value before it was coined?

Mr. BUCHANAN. No, sir; it had not.

Mr. MITCHELL. You say that gold in the form of bullion has not intrinsic value like a barrel of flour or pork?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I say that it has intrinsic value as a metal, but its value as metal is not equal to the value it has when it is stamped as money. The Government, of course, when it coins a five-dollar gold-piece, gives the value of five dollars to it.

Mr. MITCHELL. But you say it was not worth five dollars before it was coined?

Mr. BUCHANAN. No, sir; and it could not be used for five dollars.

WASHINGTON, January 16, 1874.

JOHN E. WILLIAMS, president Metropolitan National Bank, New York City, appeared before the committee in response to their invitation.

The CHAIRMAN. I will ask you this general question: State whether there are, in your opinion, any defects in our present financial system; if so, what they are, and how they may be remedied.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That question covers the whole ground, so far as I understand your views and wishes. Our present monetary system, I think, as no doubt you all think, has defects; but even with its defects it has brought great blessings, as I regard it. I feel that we in this country ought to act as an independent people—independent in our finances—as regards Europe. I believe that England is largely indebted to us for suggestions in regard to finance and banking, as we certainly are to England for information in matters of law, literature, and religion. I do not know that you care to have me trace the origin of the present system of banking. But I may state in brief that, in 1827, eleven years before the passage of the New York free-banking law, (from which the national-bank act was copied,) the Rev. Dr. McVickar, of Columbia College, suggested not only the idea but many of the details of the law of 1838, in a letter to a prominent member of the New York legislature. This was the germ, the origin of our banking system.

The principle evolved by Dr. McVickar—that of securing circulation beyond the reach of the bank—was, in 1844, ingrafted upon the new charter of the Bank of England. That plan has been even more fully adopted in our national-bank currency, separating entirely the issue department from the discount department of the bank; and also restricting the issue of notes within a certain fixed limit. Both these elements of safety having been incorporated into our system, I think the issue of bank-notes has generally satisfied our people under the present bank law. No bank can issue a dollar of currency until bonds of the Government, for the protection of the public, are placed in the hands of the Government. And the issue department is entirely separate from the ordinary operations of banking.

Our system and that of the Bank of England are of necessity similar in respect to security and limitation of circulation. Therefore similar causes in both countries have produced like results. Last autumn a currency-famine in New York produced a panic in this country. The banks could not and the Government would not afford the necessary relief by the timely issue of fifteen or twenty millions additional currency. So in England, three times, since 1844, the bank, with only its fourteen millions sterling circulation, has been compelled, by commercial or monetary pressure, to violate its charter by the issue of more notes than its chartered limitation authorized. The relief was instantaneous and the remedy effectual in England; so a temporary loan to New York banks last September would have been beneficial to our country.

In my judgment it would have been the wisest thing the President and Secretary of the Treasury could have done. I told the Secretary of the Treasury the other day, when he remarked to me that the forty-four millions were going out very rapidly, that if he had deposited in the banks fifteen or twenty millions at the beginning of the panic, he would have saved to the United States thirty or forty millions of revenue, and prevented the breaking of a great many merchants and manufacturers. The issue of that amount of the reserve at the proper time would undoubtedly have arrested the panic and the general distress which came upon the industries of the country.

I confess I cannot bow, as many seem disposed to, with profound veneration before European financial authorities. I feel that we, as Americans, having established a Government which is our own, should create for ourselves, with or without precedent, a currency adapted to our land and the people's wants, and, if possible, make it the best currency in the world. And why should we not? We have no less intelligence applicable to this subject than Europeans. The excitement of the recent panic has brought forth, I am very happy to say, from many parts of the country, comprehensive, intelligent views in regard to our circulating medium, which have encouraged me to hope that we are going to act independently; that we are going to look at this thing for ourselves as Americans, retaining the useful and casting off worn-out dogmas of finance. We have a vast, productive continent, an intelligent people, and the best Government, as I believe, in the world; and there is no reason why we should not have the best currency.

Indeed, I think our present is a better currency for this country than can be found in any other land on the face of the earth. We have prospered under it as never before, and we made it for ourselves. But it can probably still be improved if we "make haste slowly," and one of the improvements I would suggest is the abolition of bank-notes entirely. Let the people of this country supply themselves with a currency—legal tender—created by the intelligence, sustained by the character and honor of the nation, and secured by every dollar of property in the country. Why should not the Government itself issue the three or four hundred millions of currency now circulated by the banks, and save twenty millions interest to the people? I can see no reason why it should not.

First, one thing seems to me essential. A commission of skilled persons—say three—should be appointed by Congress to investigate the whole subject, and determine by statistical calculation, based upon past experience and present growth, the amount of currency now required to satisfy the necessities of the commercial, agricultural, and manufacturing industries of the country. Not too much, any more than too little, but just enough. And, when the facts are ascertained, recommend a graduated scale of increase to meet the growing wants of the people. This I take to be the first and most pressing want of all; for practical plans for relief must rest on this foundation of ascertained facts, if relief is to be permanent. "The elastic end" is spoken of; in other words, the contraction and expansion of the currency. In June, July, and August the cheap money of New York is abundant.

If, then, the assistant treasurer of New York were authorized to issue bonds, convertible and reconvertible, bearing a low rate of interest, they would absorb the surplus money and steady the market. In September, when the crops are to be moved, these bonds would be presented for payment. The money would thus flow out without disturbing the banks. I can imagine nothing more simple or effective. The question naturally arises here, should the Government pay interest on money which it cannot use? I answer that Congress has undertaken to regulate the currency by authorized bank-notes and the issue of United States notes. If, then, there should be an excess, it is because Government has permitted such excessive issue; and, further, the United States can well afford to pay a low rate of interest on a moderate amount for a short time, if it derives profit on a large issue for the rest of the year; especially if it shall tend to prevent the stimulating of wild speculation, which results from an oversupply of currency during the summer months. For, what is the object of this Government? The object, the sole purpose, of the Government is to do the greatest good to the people throughout the whole country; not simply to attend to the governmental machinery here in Washington, but to promote the vital interests of all.

But what has been the practical administration of the Treasury Department? No genius has been displayed, it must be confessed, and but small brain-power. The idea which possessed one Secretary was contraction, contraction. This was timely stopped by Congress. Another's idea was the speedy liquidation of the public debt; to pay off the bonded debt at home by borrowing abroad; to take up 3 per cent. certificates of indebtedness, and continue 6 per cent. bonds; to pay 5 per cent. to Europeans rather than 3 per cent. to our own citizens. Well, that may be a desirable business for the Secretary of the Treasury; but I do not believe any good banker or merchant would so regard it. And what is the prominent idea of the present Secretary of the Treasury? The only one I have seen developed is an attempt to resume specie payment in silver in sums of five dollars.

The truth is, our financial problem has been utterly neglected. No head of the Treasury has attempted to show, by carefully-collated facts, how much or how little currency was now absolutely necessary to transact the business of this great country—whether of paper, gold, silver, or wampum! Had proper thought and attention been bestowed on this great subject, a commission would have been appointed to ascertain what circulation for the country was required in 1860 and 1861, when we were paying specie, and when the balance of trade was in our favor. They would have found about two hundred and forty millions of bank-notes then, and about one hundred and fifty millions of specie. This shows the actual currency at that time to have been three hundred and ninety millions. Now what currency have we? Four hundred millions of legal-tenders, less forty-four millions reserve, net three hundred and fifty-six millions, and you have about three hundred and fifty millions of bank-notes, say in all seven hundred millions, less a reserve of one hundred and fifty millions kept by the banks, making, instead of seven hundred millions, five hundred and fifty millions of actual circulation. Was there ever anything more absurd, when you come down to figures, than to say that in 1861, with a population of thirty-three millions, three hundred and ninety millions was not too much currency, but that five hundred and fifty millions, with a population ten millions larger, now constitutes an inflation? Look at what has taken place within the last dozen years. In the first place, the Pacific Railroad has been built, extending the circulation all over the West. Then, look at the South. The planters did not pay their slaves money; now, when the colored man receives a green-back, he regards it as a symbol of his manhood—almost as a patent of nobility—and puts it deep into his pocket. Not less than forty, fifty, or sixty millions have been absorbed in the South, where there was almost no circulation before. Then consider the increase of business in the last eight years, since the war closed. Every reflecting man who pays any attention to statistics will understand that our business has increased fourfold. Our railroads have been extended immensely, our manufactories have been multiplied, and the commercial and mercantile operations have all greatly expanded. And you must not lose sight of the fact that prices also have advanced. But, says my friend and neighbor, prices have advanced because we made paper money. Well, how is it that in France, in Holland, in Germany, in England, and in Asia even, they have advanced 30, 40, 50 per cent.? Not because they have our currency in those countries, but it is because Australia and California have added two thousand millions of gold and silver to the circulating medium and commercial exchanges of the world within twenty-five years. That is the reason prices have risen. And it is idle to expect in this country that prices can be reduced to their former standard by any change of currency.

The intrinsic value of commodities, as measured by money, is increased the world over, because of the increase of the precious metals. So it matters little what sort of tokens are used in the purchase, whether metal or paper. This is a very important fact to bear in mind in considering this subject, and the advance is equal and fair to all. Day-laborers never before commanded so high prices. Those persons who are living on fixed incomes think it would be a very pleasant thing to get back to specie payments, because prices would be 25 to 50 per cent. less. That is all a mistake. A resumption of specie payment would not bring prices back to the old standard, but it would bring back the curse of other years. A friend, now in France, informs us that he was in Paris ten years ago, and that his bills are now precisely double what they were then.

Then, again, some men, sensible too, are saying, let us have free banking! Now, if there is anything to be deprecated, in my judgment, it is free banking. The Metropolitan Bank was instituted in 1851, to break up wild-cat banking, and that is what free banking means. We did wind up thirty or forty of those wild-cat banks in New York State. They were organized under a perversion of the free-banking laws; they deposited their securities, took out their notes, and located their banks away up in Allegany and Saint Lawrence Counties, at points where nobody could ever find them. They issued their notes and brought them to Wall street for circulation. They were based on satisfactory securities, and the notes of your national banks, under the free-banking system, would be secured by United States stocks. But that is no cure for the evils of such a system of banking. Practically it is not banking, but, so to speak, legalized piracy. My friend there, Mr. Clarke, has been a banker all his life, and understands very well the difference between banking for legitimate purposes and wild-cat banking. In banks conducted for legitimate purposes the circulation comes in incidentally, and in the country banks it constitutes a large part of the profits. Now, with a capital of $150,000, and $100,000 of circulation, very likely the deposits may be $300,000. And suppose you have a reserve of $25,000 of specie to redeem the bank-notes with, what is to become of the $300,000 deposits? Would it not be a very great farce to undertake to pay specie? The whole idea of specie payment, under the old system, has always been a farce and always will be. Our depositors can break us up any moment they choose to. In Wall street there is an accumulated capital much larger than there is at command in the national banks of New York City, and the Wall street manipulators, if you attempt to resume, could fail the banks fifty-two times in a year, once in every week, if they chose to do it. Nothing could be more absurd, in my estimation, than to talk seriously about specie payments. I hope never to see a serious attempt at resumption on the old plan of specie payments in New York; I should fear it with almost as much dread as another Chicago fire.

Possibly you may regard my speech as too intense; but my experience confirms my judgment. I have been engaged in banking for fifty years. I was a bank commissioner in Massachusetts, cashier of the Newport Bank, cashier of a bank in New Bedford, cashier of the City Bank of Boston, banking for three years in Florida, and for more than twenty years in New York; so that my experience has been somewhat varied. For a bank man I have circulated largely, and still believe in circulation. And my convictions are that we not only ought to have the best currency in the world, but that it is practicable for us to have it. Yet a sensible man on other subjects said to me the other day that he had done with this paper stuff; that he gave notice he would never touch a paper dollar after thirty days. I said to him, "Would you not take at par a thousand-dollar bond that is bearing 10 or 11 per cent. premium, payable in currency?" "No," said he. "But," said I, "that bond bears the promise of the United States and carries with it the honor and integrity of the country, and you will not take that pledge of the nation?" He said, "No; not if it is payable in what you call lawful money, for that is a broken promise of the Government." Now, this is the kind of stuff that many (otherwise respectable) newspapers are filled with every day, and many persons mistake it for wisdom. It is a kind of reasoning which, to my mind, indicates great want of reflection and information. It seems to me that if these national-bank notes and legal-tenders could be provided with a little "elasticity," with such a contrivance as I have suggested, we could go on supplying ourselves with just the amount of currency that was needed, and should be better off in regard to currency than any other country in the world, partly because we should be free from European interference. I should like for one moment to state why I have come to the conclusion I have arrived at on this subject. Everybody knows the origin of our United States paper currency, that it was thrown out during the war, regardless of amount or consequences. But even then it was not the quantity alone that indicated the value of legal-tenders as compared with gold. Gold went up to two hundred and seventy or eighty, and yet when Sherman took Savannah it went down nearly one-half. It fell rapidly about one hundred points, as they say in New York. Now, since the war, we have been gradually absorbing this issue (then excessive) by the immense enlargement of every branch of business and growth in population, until last fall that currency, once superabundant, was proved to be insufficient. We could not get enough to send west to bring the wheat-crop east.

What has been the cause of this absorption? It has been the actual growth of the country—the increase of business and population. You know, doubtless, that there are about three hundred thousand immigrants arriving at New York City every year. You know also that instead of a population, as in 1860, of thirty-three millions, there are now about forty-three millions in this country. In 1860, with three hundred and ninety millions of circulation, each person was furnished with about $12 to supply all monetary and business purposes. Now, when ten millions of people have been added, are you not going to furnish each of them also with $12, their quota? That alone will require one hundred and twenty millions more of currency.

Will any one undertake to say that the growth of the country in manufactures, in commerce, in business of every description, and in population, is not to be taken into account in ascertaining what is a sufficient amount of currency for the present day? I do not suppose anybody abhors an inflation, an excess of currency more than I do, or more sincerely deplores a deficiency. The idea, however, is preposterous that we do not need a larger volume now. You might just as reasonably require a full-grown man to wear the shoes of his boyhood because they did fit him thirty years before. The true way of ascertaining the volume of currency required is to take the population and business of the country twelve years ago, then reckon the increase of population and of business since as nearly practicable. With three hundred and ninety millions as the amount of currency required at that time, make your estimate of the currency now needed on that basis. Very few persons appreciate the tremendous strides which have been made in manufactures, in commerce, in agriculture, in railroad building and operating, and in every description of business within the last twelve years; but when you have that statement made up you can approximate a solution of the question as to the amount of currency now required, if not with mathematical certainty, yet with a strong probability of having reached a trustworthy result.

You may ask me why I think there is not enough currency now. It was found last October that every dollar of the currency had been absorbed. There was not a million of dollars to be had in New York, and the reason was that the surplus summer currency had been loaned by the interest-paying banks, for it accumulates with them, and they must lend the money at some rate or other if they pay interest for it. It had been loaned largely to brokers in the dearth of business, who, when called upon to return it, could not respond, for a great portion of it had been sent away to purchase wheat. We had been sending to you, Mr. Mitchell, and other bankers in the West, for the purpose of moving crops, $200,000 a day; so the money was used up. Now, it is an indisputable truth that if the General Government had then deposited in the New York banks fifteen or twenty millions of legal-tenders, there would have been no panic. Perhaps it is as well, however, that the climax was reached last autumn. If it had been patched up and made to run another twelve months the distress would have been aggravated by one year more of growth in population and business, with a fixed currency, which implies a still further outgrowth of the circulating medium, and consequently aggravated disaster to the country.

Mr. HAWLEY. What change would you make in the present form of national-bank notes?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not know that I would make any, except that I would gradually substitute legal-tender notes for them.

Mr. HAWLEY. In what form would you have the Government issue these notes, which are to be the currency of the whole country?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think the present form is a very good one.

Mr. HAWLEY. Then you acknowledge coin to be the basis of the law for issuing the legal-tender notes which you propose shall be the currency of the country?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I consider a dollar of this currency just as good to me as a dollar of coin, and more convenient for use. I do not care for the gold and silver dollar. I think people trouble themselves very unnecessarily about dollars in gold and silver when the whole country is accumulating wealth every day with our present currency.

Mr. PHELPS. Do the people prefer gold or the equivalent of gold?

Mr. WILLIAMS. It follows that when people get frightened they will rush to demand gold or greenbacks, if they can get them. But I believe they are satisfied with the currency we have, the people generally. The United States Government has undertaken to supply the people with currency. They have deprived the States of the power of doing so, and it is their business to see that it is supplied in sufficient volume to meet the wants of business. My complaint is that the Secretaries of the Treasury have paid no attention whatever to the matter. They have left us to drift until finally we have absorbed, not only all redundant currency, but we must have more or we cannot go increasing in population and business. That is my position.

Mr. PHELPS. Do you think our present currency is as good as one redeemable in gold?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have just suggested that my preference would be for a currency entirely of United States legal-tender notes redeemable in gold.

Mr. PHELPS. In this case is it not the duty of the United States to take some steps toward a currency which is redeemable in gold?

Mr. WILLIAMS. In answer to that I say that under the present organization of national banks, certainly not, because it would imply that the banks would have to resume specie payment. That I hope never to see. All this trouble and anxiety about the banks resuming specie payments would be soon out of sight if the ideas I have suggested were adopted. If the Government would supply the country with a currency of legal-tenders in sufficient amount, the banks would then be banking on the currency of the United States. The Government of the United States would supply all the currency, paper; and gold, to carry on the business of the country; and if it was found that a redundancy of paper money was in circulation, it would be invested in bonds at the treasury in New York, and go out again by a return of the bonds for currency when a larger volume was needed. Its action would be automatic; it would regulate itself.

Mr. HAWLEY. Would you take any steps in order to obtain that better currency?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should be guided in that respect by what could be done. If I were able to satisfy myself that I could carry a measure of that kind, I should certainly take steps to do it. But I would not fight against a windmill. I would not undertake to do what I was satisfied could not be done.

Mr. HAWLEY. Do you think you could get any currency that would be better?

Mr. WILLIAMS. That would depend upon the intelligence of the people who make laws. If I could go into Congress and satisfy Congress of the practicability of issuing legal-tender notes redeemable in gold, I would do so, and I would require all the banks to circulate legal-tenders. I would redeem the present bank-notes by legal-tender notes of the United States. I think that is a plan which could be carried through if I could get the idea into the minds of members as clearly as it is in my own mind. I think the banks would be glad of the exchange. They would be relieved of the amount of revenue now required for the redemption of these notes, which are not redeemed. The low rate of interest which they will soon be obliged to take on their bonds, now reduced from 6 to 5 per cent., and soon be reduced, no doubt, to 4 per cent., will make it no object to them to retain such bonds as the basis of circulation; and the advantage of release from taxation on their circulation would be an equivalent for any small loss of profit: so that I think it would be for the interest of the banks to give back their circulation to the United States and allow the Government to supply it. Then for all ordinary business operations these legal-tender notes would answer every purpose of specie; and whenever specie was wanted, for any emergency, the United States would have it on hand to pay. It would take from the banks their accountability for specie payments, which has always been a curse to banks ever since I have known anything about banking. It was the great trouble in 1837 and in 1857 and in all the panics that have ever occurred.

Mr. MITCHELL. I understand you to be in favor of substituting for the national-bank circulation a Government circulation to be redeemable in coin. I would like to ask if you would be in favor of limiting the Government circulation to the amount they could keep at par?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly the Government circulation should not be at a discount, and could not, if redeemable in specie.

Mr. MITCHELL. Suppose they could not redeem it in coin?

Mr. WILLIAMS. They would not then be doing any worse thing than they are now; and the experiment is worth a trial, for if it succeeds, it is all you want.

Mr. MITCHELL. Suppose they failed, would you regard that as an indication that too much currency was out?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would regard it as a sure indication that too little specie was in, and possibly, not certainly, too much paper out.

Mr. MITCHELL. How would you get sufficient specie in?

Mr. WILLIAMS. From our own mines mainly. The precious metals received from California for the year ending December 31, 1873, amounted to the sum of $72,258,693—ten millions larger than ever before.

Mr. MITCHELL. If the Government is paying coin and legal-tender notes, individuals, I suppose, would have the right to go and get a little coin if they want it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly, always, to the amount of their legal-tenders. I attempted to make myself understood in regard to the volume of paper required by a statement of this sort: I said that a commission ought to be appointed whose business it should be to make themselves familiar with the statistics of the country, and to ascertain what the absolute wants of the country are in respect to currency. If the result showed that 5 or 10 per cent. increase over the present amount of circulation was needed, they would ascertain that fact. But there has been no effort of this kind made. Such a commission could ascertain what has been the comparative amount of currency relative to the population and the business for the last twenty or thirty years, and in that way establish approximately if not exactly our present wants in respect to currency; and if more should ever be issued than is wanted, it would flow into bonds, as I have indicated.

Mr. MERRIAM. You have been engaged a good deal in assorting the notes of the different banks and free banking. If the Government were to redeem the national-bank notes, I would like to ask you what it would cost the Government to assort and redeem notes of these two thousand national banks?

Mr. WILLIAMS. It would cost the Government nothing if the national banks were required to pay for it, as has been intimated.

Mr. MERRIAM. Suppose they did not require the banks to pay the expense?

Mr. WILLIAMS. It would be a very generous thing on the part of the Government to do. Our bills are wearing out every day. If the Government is going to do the business of assorting these bills, it would be a very pleasant thing for the banks to have it done for them. But, so far as the question of assorting for redemption is concerned, I cannot imagine any advantage in it if it is merely to be sent to the issuing bank to be exchanged for legal-tender.

Mr. MERRIAM. In considering that subject, it would become a question as to whether the Government should make a charge to the banks for performing this business.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think we are pretty much all agreed that something of the sort should be done. Our bills are wearing out every day, and the Government is now talking of charging us for the printing, which would be a very onerous charge.

Mr. DURHAM. I understand you to say that you were opposed to inflation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Not if you mean by inflation an increase of the currency to meet the wants of the country. If by inflation you mean an undue amount of currency, I am opposed to it, most decidedly.

Mr. DURHAM. Do I further understand you to say you would advise the Secretary of the Treasury to issue the balance of the $44,000,000 reserve?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I spoke of a conversation I had incidentally with the Secretary. Of course I should advise it, because I think there is a deficiency. Meeting him incidentally, I spoke of it, because I was greatly disappointed that he had not done it when he was asked.

Mr. DURHAM. Do you think there is any law authorizing him to do it?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Boutwell thought there was, and did issue a part of it afterward.

Mr. DURHAM. I am asking your opinion.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have to say, in answer to that, what I said at the clearing-house meeting last September. When, in 1861, the Government had failed to raise money to prosecute the war, the banks of New York, Boston, and Philadelphia, in opposition to legal advice, came forward and advanced between $60,000,000 and $70,000,000 of specie, and took paper for it, (seven-thirties) to help the Government. The banks did not wait for a law to be passed. And so, if I had been Secretary of the Treasury when the President and Mr. Richardson were in New York last autumn, I would have resigned if the President had not allowed me to issue that money. Possibly it was the other way, for some of the best and most prudent men in the country advised it.

Mr. DURHAM. Do I understand you as favoring the issue of 3.65 compound-interest notes that shall be convertible and reconvertible?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would not advise that interest. I do not like 3.65. It is said to be a cent a day, but I was never able to compute that easily. I would advise 3 per cent., 4 per cent., and 5 per cent. bonds; the 5 per cents to be issued when money is less plenty; as it became more abundant, issue the 4 per cents; and, when feasible, the minimum, 3 per cents. I would not fix 3.65 per cent. interest. I would leave with the assistant treasurer discretionary powers, so as to be sure of securing in summer a supply of currency for fall use.

Mr. HUNTER. Suppose we had $300,000,000 of gold in the Treasury and our entire currency in greenbacks; suppose men in New York should combine and require $100,000,000 a week to redeem the currency they present; could the Government get gold enough to meet these demands?

Mr. WILLIAMS. In the first place, if it were possible for anybody to get $100,000,000 a week, the Government ought to be broken, for it would indicate recklessness.

Mr. HUNTER. The brokers of New York could collect the currency, could they not?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; they would have to go everywhere, all over the country, to pick up this money, and before they got back again the banks would call upon them for their loans, and they would be broken, not the Government. Such a state of things is inconceivable.

Mr. HUNTER. And if the Government should be so broken down that it could not redeem in gold, the brokers would be able to control all the gold in the country needed for the Government as well as for commerce.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The difference between the Government and banks is, that banks are always broken whenever they fail on their deposits, and not on their circulation. The Government, having no deposits, cannot be broken in this way. But this plan would enable the Government to kill gambling in gold. It would not be speculated in if there was no profit in the speculation.

Mr. MITCHELL. If greenbacks were equivalent to coin, parties would be no better off with the gold than with the greenbacks, and therefore there would be no motive for funding greenbacks in gold.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is the point exactly. What object would there be in drawing specie if it were no better than paper?

Mr. HUBBELL. Then, under this plan, would it not be practicable, at some future time, for the Government to receive its duties in greenbacks?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Most assuredly.

Mr. FARWELL. What, in your opinion, would be the effect upon the money-market of New York and the country if the Congress of the United States should remove the interest restrictions upon the rate of interest?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think the repeal of the usury laws would be a very excellent thing to do. It would stimulate a great deal of honest trade. The Metropolitan Bank has never taken over 7 per cent. interest, but I would be very glad to be permitted to by law.

Mr. FARWELL. Let me ask whether, in your opinion, the Government or banks could successfully resume and maintain specie payment with a balance of trade against the country.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have already said that what constitutes a balance of trade depends upon so many circumstances that it is difficult to say when the balance of trade is one way or the other. As recent statistics are given, they would show a balance of trade against us, while, as a matter of fact, we were importing specie, and the balance was really in our favor to that extent.

Mr. FARWELL. Was it not true, in the fall of last year, that the price of gold was depressed to the point to which it went in consequence of the importation of $10,000,000 of gold?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; we could not afford to pay for the gold. An Englishman said to me, "You are a very queer people. My country wanted to buy wheat of you at $2 a bushel, but you said, 'No; we will let you have it at $1.50;' and when we could get it at $1.50 we could not pay for it. If you had let our money-market alone we could have better afforded to buy it at $2."

Mr. FARWELL. What do you think of the propriety of removing the restrictions upon bank reserves?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think there should be no reserve in currency. I think there should be a reserve always sufficient to protect the depositors and secure prompt payment.

Mr. FARWELL. Under the present system, how would you avoid such panics as that of September?

Mr. WILLIAMS. By issuing more circulation and by free discounts you would restore confidence.

Mr. FARWELL. You have spoken of the free banking as "wild-catting." What, in your opinion, would be the detriment of the country to allow free banking with such restrictions as should make their currency absolutely safe?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not mean to speak of the measure of evil. The principle is wrong when you allow banks to be formed for the purpose of merely issuing bank-notes. They should be created only for the purpose of commercial business—receiving deposits and making discounts—the issuing of currency being a mere incident. When you allow them to be formed for the purpose of issuing currency mainly, you commit a mistake. I should be very unwilling myself to see a system of banking revived which I have spent a great portion of my life in trying to break up.

Reference has been made to the old "Suffolk Bank system." That was carried on on an entirely paper basis. The Boston banks found there had accumulated so large an amount of country-bank notes in the city that the Boston-bank notes could not circulate, and therefore the Suffolk Bank system was established for the purpose of emptying Boston of country-bank notes, so as to circulate their own notes in their own city. In the course of time they succeeded in sending out the notes of the country banks and in getting their own notes into circulation, as they were entitled to do, and thence grew up the system. Every country bank collected the bills of every other bank to send to Boston as a deposit in the Suffolk Bank to redeem its own bills collected there. They nominally paid specie, but that was all a fiction; none was used, for none was wanted. Year after year the whole circulation of New England was redeemed, to everybody's satisfaction, without paying a dollar of specie, and that was in nominal specie times. The banks would have a thousand or two thousand dollars in specie and issue one hundred thousand dollars or more in paper, for then no such restriction existed as is imposed on circulation now. That was the purest paper currency ever heard of in this country, yet it is quoted as an era worthy of imitation in sound banking on specie! It was well for those days; it is good for nothing for our day. Ours is an entirely different condition of things. Our notes are all secured by United States bonds, and limited in amount of issue.

Mr. FARWELL. Mr. Merriam has introduced a bill providing a 5 per cent. deposit in the Treasury of the United States by the banks, the Treasurer to be the redeeming agent. Now, if this system is to be continued, and banking to be made free, would not that check the redundancy of currency?

Mr. WILLIAMS. My idea is that such a system of redemption of notes perfectly secured is useless. Why do you want to send these notes home for redemption in legal-tenders when the legal-tenders, good as they are, have no more security than the bank-notes, although they are superior in this, that they are lawful money. The legal-tender is a promise of the United States, pure and simple. The bank-note has, in addition to the capital of the bank, United States bonds as security. The holders have the right to call on the stockholders to the amount of their stock, and they have the legal right to require the United States to redeem the bills at par.

Mr. MERRIAM. Is it not a fact that there are times when we have not currency enough to meet the wants of the business interests of the country?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; last September, for instance, was one of those times.

Mr. MERRIAM. If free banking would give us that currency, would it not be desirable?

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is one of the most uncertain things. If individuals found that by creating bank circulation they could make money, they would create any amount that could be floated into circulation. If, on the other hand, they found that it would not be profitable, they would not send out any circulation; and, therefore, as I said, there is nothing more uncertain as to supply of currency than the result of free banking unrestrained by commercial wants.

Mr. MERRIAM. Under this plan there is no chance for the broker to profit by it. You have known, in New York, times when the redundancy of the currency stimulated speculation. Now, would not this system of redemption, provided for by the plan I have suggested, reduce the surplus currency in New York to its proper level and prevent speculation?

Mr. WILLIAMS. There would probably be one beneficial result. It certainly would be a benefit to take out of circulation the half-destroyed notes and substitute new ones. But as to whether it would supply any deficiency of circulation or reduce a redundancy depends on the contingency I have spoken of.

Mr. MERRIAM. I was recently offered \$500,000 at $\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. discount. This plan of redemption would prevent any market difference between legal-tenders and national-bank notes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That brings to my mind one point, which certainly ought to be acted on. I think the national-bank law ought to be changed in this particular, so as to allow the reserves of the bank to be kept in specie, national-bank notes, or legal-tender notes, one or the other, or all. The national banks are obliged to receive any other bank-notes, and have the right to pay any debt to other banks in such notes. Why, then, not reckon them in their reserve?

Mr. MERRIAM. That would destroy the very machinery we are now trying to create, for the purpose of giving the amount of money the interests of the country actually demand. To accomplish that there cannot be an accumulation of legal-tender reserves in the bank.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The banks all have to keep their reserve in either legal-tenders or specie. Now, by the rules of the clearing-house of New York, our balances have to be paid in legal-tenders, and the reason assigned is that the reserves must be in legal-tenders only. A different rule is adopted in Saint Louis and Chicago. I think you will see the justice of allowing the banks to keep their reserves in anything which will pay indebtedness. Now, the national banks are allowed to pay their obligations to other banks in their own notes, which are a legal-tender so far as other national banks are concerned. No bank can refuse payment for any note they have discounted in the bills of any other national bank. But in the clearing-house of New York we have a rule which requires that all balances shall be paid in legal-tenders. If the rule had been different in September, it would have been easier for the banks; and it would have had an important bearing in facilitating resumption, because the banks early accumulated a great many more bank-notes than legal-tenders. I can see no earthly reason why the reserves of a bank should not be allowed to be, at least, in part, in bank-notes. If we were permitted to keep our reserve in national-bank notes, legal-tenders, and specie, we could never be embarrassed by an accumulation of national-bank notes.

Mr. HUNTER. Would it not be easier for you to change the rules of your clearing-house than for us to change the national-bank law.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not think it would. I have tried it two or three times, and I should rather undertake to get the law changed.

Mr. FARWELL. I believe I have asked you whether you would regard it as wise to remove the restriction requiring the reserve.

Mr. WILLIAMS. My answer is, in respect to deposits, no; in respect to circulation, yes.

Mr. FARWELL. Then, you think the Government has conferred no benefit on national banks sufficient to entitle them to place a restriction upon their mode of doing business?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not think national banks can afford to be further restricted or taxed. But I make a wide distinction between a reserve on deposits and a reserve on circulation.

Mr. FARWELL. Do you consider yourself guided by the laws in managing the business of the Metropolitan National Bank?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am guided by the laws certainly: and intend to conform to them.

Mr. HUNTER. In regard to these reserves as a security to depositors, would it not be better that a part of that reserve should be required to be kept in bonds in the Treasury rather than the whole reserve remain in bank?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think not. The depositor would feel secure if he knows they were here; but the bank might fail before the bonds can be converted. I think it is right that banks should be required to keep a reserve, and it ought to be in available funds—legal-tenders and bank-notes.

Mr. HUNTER. A great many men are opposed to putting their money into banks for fear the reserves should become too low. Now, if a part of the reserve were in Government bonds, would it not remove that apprehension?

Mr. WILLIAMS. There are objections to that. Practically it would be lending depositors' money to Government, and would necessarily deprive the bank of the power to aid the community by discounts, which the banks are bound to do.

Mr. FARWELL. Are not the private banks managed as safely as the national banks?

Mr. WILLIAMS. By no means. The great number of failures in the late panic show that, and it has been always so.

Mr. MERRIAM. In the case of banks which have withdrawn their circulation, do you think it necessary to retain the requirements compelling them to keep one-third of their capital in bonds in the Treasury?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think not. I have no doubt, if any is required, the 5 per cent. will do as a sort of recognition. The first idea of Mr. Chase was that one-third of the whole capital, whatever that might be, should be deposited in the United States Treasury as security for the circulation of the bank. The idea was to adopt a plan which should absorb a portion of the national debt. It would furnish a home-market for a certain amount of the bonds. Then the universal idea was that that 33 per cent. entitled a bank to receive circulation on the whole amount. Afterward it was restricted.

WASHINGTON, January 17, 1874.

CHARLES MORAN, banker, of New York, aged 62, appeared at the request of the committee, and made a statement relative to his business experience in various commercial and banking occupations in this country, including the presidency of the Erie Railroad.

The CHAIRMAN. I will ask you the same general question which has been asked other gentlemen: whether in your opinion there are any defects in our present financial system; if so, what they are and how they should be remedied.

Mr. MORAN. There are very serious defects, but which I believe may be very easily remedied. Money, historically, has gone through several transitions which have not been observed by most economists in the theories they have presented on the subject, and yet which it is material to understand in order to understand correctly the results produced by causes now in operation. It commenced with coin, followed by banks that received deposits of the various depreciated coin in circulation, credited their depositors with their actual value, which deposits were transferred on the bank-ledgers in payment of purchases made or of maturing liabilities; secondly, by paper money issued by the banks, and paper money issued by Government; lastly, by bank credits transferred by checks.

Now, while coin still remains the currency of the world, it is only a relic of by-gone barbarism. It was introduced at a time when the rule was that men could not trust each other. They found the commodities in use inconvenient means of obtaining other things in barter. But they found the precious metals represented great value in a small compass, and thus they gradually came to be adopted in the most convenient element of barter, and subsequently were transformed into money, the use of which has entirely replaced barter as means of exchanging the results of labor. Afterward the stamp of the Government was added to it, which in no way affects its value, being only a certification of the quantity and fineness of the metal contained in each coin. After this, coined money was very rapidly introduced into commerce as the medium of exchange, and before the lapse of a very long time it became universal.

When the precious metals were first coined, they were taken at their barter-value; but as soon as they came to be principally used as money, as representatives of services and useful results of labor, the cost of production ceased to control their value as money, which soon exceeded their value as commodities; and the economists to-day are in error when they assert that the value of money is based upon its value as a commodity; on the contrary, the reverse is true. When I bring gold from one country to another, I can barter it to the manufacturer or I can carry it to the mint; but if the silversmith is able to give me not so much by a quarter per cent. as the money will bring at the mint, of course it will go to the mint, and be used as money instead of being used as a commodity.

After being in circulation for a time, coin became so much wasted by clipping, wear, &c., that merchants and silversmiths would not receive it any longer at its nominal value. Experiments at Amsterdam proved that the average depreciation of the coin in circulation was 9 per cent. The result was that banks were established, which obtained charters from various governments in exchange of advances of capital, whose functions were to receive the coin and credit the depositors at its real value; and foreign merchants thereafter refused to sell goods or accept payment of bills of exchange in any other money than this bank-money. It was soon discovered that the transfer of this bank-money on the bank-ledgers from one to the other was as good, or even preferable, to an actual transfer of money from hand to hand; and out of that grew the issue of paper-money, in the form of bank-notes. The Bank of England was the first institution created to issue bank-notes as a substitute for coin. After many difficulties, the originators obtained a bank-charter upon condition of advancing their whole capital to the government.

From that beginning the bank-currency of the world has followed. During the regency of the Duke of Orleans, the celebrated bank of Law was established in France somewhat similar to the Bank of England; but the government afterward took possession of the bank and carried it on as a government bank that issued paper money, made a legal-tender by law; the result was, the ruin and bankruptcy of the bank. We, in our revolution, and the revolutionary government of France, followed the same practice of issuing Government paper-currency, based upon the credit of the Government, with precisely the same result—the entire repudiation of the paper-money issued.

One of the great errors in regard to paper money is, that Government money is confounded with bank-money; both being made of paper, it is assumed that they are both based on the same principles, and lead to the same results; hence the general outcry against paper money. Instead of that being true, Government paper money is the most uncertain and unreliable of all currencies, while bank-money is the best that has ever been invented or suggested.

Now, let me here explain how the volume of currency allowed to be issued by the Bank of England is attempted to be regulated by the bank-act of 1844. Finding at a certain period of time that about fourteen million pounds sterling of Bank of England notes were in circulation, over and above the notes issued by individual banks, the issues of the Bank of England were limited in the future to fourteen million pounds, with the privilege to the bank of issuing further bills only upon the withdrawal of an equal amount of specie from the circulation in the hands of the public. In Scotland, up to 1844, a free banking system had been in practical operation, with the results far more beneficial than were ever obtained from any other system ever known. No money panics had ever occurred, and the system of discounts was so arranged that any man in business needing a loan of fifty or one hundred pounds could obtain it. Against the earnest protest of the people of Scotland, in 1844, the act regulating the issues of the Bank of England was extended to the Scotch banks; and in 1847 and 1848, Scotland participated in the panic which then occurred in England.

Now, let us examine for a moment what a monetary panic is. It is a fear with which producers, merchants, and financial men are seized, no matter whether well founded or ill founded, that within a short period of time it will be impossible to obtain money to meet their pecuniary obligations. This, to a business man who has spent his life in creating a business and establishing his credit, is the greatest disaster that can come upon him, and to escape it he rushes, with all the others, to the bank and the money-market to secure the money he may hereafter need. The bank, on its part, seized with the same fear, contracts its loans, and so the apprehended disaster occurs. You will be able to understand the radical difference between paper money issued by a government and notes issued by a bank, when you remember that government paper money in general does not represent any equivalent value in commodities on hand anywhere, but merely represents past expenditures, without anything in hand as an equivalent to the currency issued; whereas a bank-note cannot get into circulation without an equivalent in hand of the drawers of the paper discounted by the bank. Bank-notes will not be demanded by the community unless commodities exist, produced by industry, which they desire to exchange; nothing, therefore, can be better secured than the bank-notes issued by well-managed banks.

When the Bank of England first issued notes to render them current it was stipulated that whenever the holder of any bank-note wanted coin the bank would redeem it in coin. That stipulation was not necessary at all to the local fulfillment of the functions of money, and yet the idea that this redemption is necessary to properly control the issues of bank-notes has gone through all banking. The only object in making bank-notes convertible into coin is to maintain them on a par with coin, so that all foreign balances of trade can be liquidated in coin at par, obtained in exchange for bank-notes. Bank-issues can only be properly regulated by the self-interest of the issuers and of those who use them. Bank-notes do not need to be redeemed in coin, because the indebtedness of the community to the bank is always in excess of the indebtedness of the bank to the community, and hence the liquidation of the former is amply sufficient to redeem the liabilities of the bank. But the Government is right in making bank-notes convertible into coin, for the reason that if anything be made a legal tender by statute, it should be that kind of money which is universally accepted in exchange for commodities and services. Hence the Constitution very properly stipulates that nothing but gold and silver coin shall be made a legal tender by the States. To the Federal Government is only given the power to coin money and fix the value of the coins; the States alone to possess the power to declare what shall be a legal tender in fulfillment of contracts. International commerce must use the precious metals, which alone are universally received as mediums of exchange and standards of value, and because as yet bank-notes do not circulate beyond the countries in which they are issued. The difficulty with us under suspension of specie payments is that whatever premium has to be paid to liquidate a foreign balance of trade of twenty-five millions, depreciates to the same extent the entire local currency we use, and the market-price of every commodity we buy or sell advances correspondingly to counterbalance the depreciation of the currency. This refutes the theory which you have often heard, that the effect of suspension injures the farmers more than the other classes, because they sell at gold prices and purchase at paper prices. It is not possible in any community to have two values; the prices of all commodities, whether bought or sold, are based on gold, and not on the fluctuating value of the currency. It is not possible to fix a lower standard for what you produce and sell than for what you purchase; the value of all things is measured by the same standard.

Now, from the theory that the use of paper money necessarily leads to inflation comes the great outcry as to the difficulty of resumption. It is impossible for bank-issues to lead to inflation. The issues of a Government may lead to inflation, but not the issues of a bank, because these cannot exceed the wants of the community, as no one will pay interest for bank-notes and bank-loans not needed for the exchanges and payments of the community. The national banks are authorized to issue three hundred and fifty millions of paper currency, and that amount has been issued. Now, those issues were not forced upon the people against their will by legal-tender acts. On the contrary, merchants and traders went to the banks and asked them to loan them these bank-notes. If the Government issues of legal-tenders had rendered our currency redundant, the banks could not have put out any of their own notes. Money in New York constantly falls below the legal rate of interest; at times it only brings 3 or 4 per cent. Is that because our currency is inflated? Not at all. On the contrary, the whole history of our currency shows that this condition of things momentarily occurs even when our currency is insufficient in amount to effect the exchanges of the country during the moments of commercial activity. It occurs from the fact that for the time being, temporarily, there is not the average use for money. That our currency is not inflated is shown by the fact that in the fall, when the crops are sent to market, the entire volume of the currency is insufficient to meet the wants of the country. The fact which I have stated, that bank-notes can only go into circulation through the wants and demands of the merchants and producers to exchange commodities and effect payments, proves that no inflation can occur from the free issue of bank-paper, and refutes the theory that a circulation limited by legal restrictions produces speculation and often disaster. For instance, in the semi-barbarous countries of the East, having no banks at all, whatever money there is is in the hands of a few individuals, who, when the crops are coming to market, dictate their own prices, and the unfortunate producers are placed entirely at their mercy.

As I have stated, under the old free-bank system of Scotland the currency not only supplied every want of trade, but for one hundred and seventy-five years no monetary panic ever occurred in that country. But when, through the efforts of Sir Robert Peel, the banks of Scotland were brought under the same restrictions as the Bank of England, a monetary panic almost immediately followed. But in Scotland they had what I think banks should always have for the protection of the public—the personal liability of every stockholder.

Now, if I am right in saying that we have no overissues and no inflation in this country, you perceive that it simplifies and removes all difficulties in regard to the resumption of specie payment, and, in my judgment, the difficulties apprehended are entirely imaginary. The nature of banking itself demonstrates that the legal bank-reserves, about which so much has been said, are totally useless and nothing but mischievous. You never find a bank contracting its loans without a corresponding decrease in its deposits. It is by offsetting deposits against bank-loans that our bank-contractions take place, and not by using their reserves of money. The most reliable thing a bank has to depend on is its bills receivable, just as the only thing any business-man has to rely on is his assets. If a business-man does not collect two-thirds or three-fourths of what is due him, even in a severe crisis, it is an evidence that his business has not been well managed. This fact has been almost wholly overlooked in the legislation in regard to banking, as I demonstrated years ago in criticising the bank-statistics of New York, and the truth of the theory has been amply vindicated by the experience of the country since that time. The great difficulty in regard to what is called wild-cat banking was that the currency was based upon the deposit of State bonds; the banker was allowed to select the State bonds he should deposit, and consequently he purchased those he could secure at the cheapest rates, and which were of course the most unreliable and difficult of conversion when a crisis came. But the banker would not have invested his capital in State bonds had not this been rendered imperative upon him by legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. What do you mean by wild-cat banks?

Mr. MORAN. I mean banks depending entirely upon their circulation and doing no other legitimate bank-business. I think the term "wild-cat banks" was latterly mostly applied to banks in the State of Illinois. I was in Chicago when the break-down of that system occurred. You could not get anything but this miserable paper, until the business-men of the city one day in their distress agreed they would not take this money at all; and the moment that determination was announced the wild-cat money went out of circulation, and a good, sound circulation took its place at once. The effect was instantaneous.

I saw yesterday in this room one of the two leading wild-cat bankers of that day, Mr. Mitchell, of this committee. Mr. Smith, the other, I believe secured a charter of the State of Georgia, established his bank there, and issued his currency in Illinois, and he not only made money by the operation, but also rendered valuable service to the business-men of Illinois. Both of those gentlemen, I think, retired every dollar of their currency at its full face value.

The fallacy in regard to banks is that they loan capital or money. I have analyzed the returns of one of the most prosperous banks in New York, and proved they had no capital to loan, their capital being all invested in buildings and fixtures, and held in coin and bank-bills. All the coin in the city of New York is generally in the vaults of the banks; but that coin in no way belongs to the banks; it is the result of the industrial and commercial operations of the country, and is merely deposited there for safe-keeping until wanted by the dealers of the banks or the community. A bank-president on whom I urged, in 1857, that bank-contractions could not increase the coin in the bank-vaults, admitted this, but said that if the banks by contracting could not increase the quantity of gold in their vaults, they could at least depress the prices at which commodities were held, and thus induce their shipment to Europe. To this I replied that no man in Europe would buy anything of us he did not need, and that by depressing the price of what we shipped to Europe only increased the adverse balance to be paid in gold.

Shortly before the panic of 1857 commenced it was known that there were constant meetings at Manchester to determine whether at sixteen cents a pound the spinners could get the necessary amount of cotton to keep their spindles occupied; the result of the money-panic of 1857 was that the price of cotton was depressed at one time as low as nine cents a pound, averaging not over twelve cents, causing an immense loss to the country and to the producers. This was the result, not of a redundant currency, but of unnecessary and undue bank-contraction of loans. A different policy would have prevented the panic which brought ruin and disaster on manufacturers and merchants all over the country. That there was real cause for the panic other than the bank-contraction was subsequently very apparent, for most of the bankrupts after a little time paid one hundred cents on the dollar on all their indebtedness. A bank-contraction forces merchants to sacrifice their property, when with a little assistance from the banks they might tide over the difficult moment when their commodities are unsalable. Banks should not attempt to control the commerce of a country. The moment you import more than the country needs or can pay for, there follows a loss on goods imported; whether the currency be contracted or increased, a loss will result from overimportations, and the contraction of the currency is not necessary to make men more prudent; it only ruins them.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me ask you, in regard to the subject directly before the committee, whether, with the present currency, consisting principally of legal-tender notes and bank-notes, you would make any change in the character of the currency; and, if so, what?

Mr. MORAN. I would make no change whatever, I believe, in the currency, except remove all legal restrictions as to bank-issues and legal reserves. With those modifications we have to-day as favorable circumstances for resumption as ever can be obtained.

The CHAIRMAN. You have spoken of bank-issues in such wise as might lead to a misapprehension of your position. Do you mean by unrestricted bank issues a currency such as we had before the war?

Mr. MORAN. Of course that is a matter entirely in the control of the legislative authority. I am perfectly satisfied with our present banking-system if you will remedy the few evils now connected with it.

The CHAIRMAN. Was not one evil of the old system of free banking, of what you have called wild-cat banks, found in the fact that their issues went into the hands of the farmers, laboring men, and non-financial classes, who, when the crash came, were losers to a large extent, while the moneyed men, perhaps, were benefited by it?

Mr. MORAN. No, sir. The whole losses under that system were very small, as you will find if you will look at the statistics. Now, let me state why the circumstances at present are favorable for resumption, under the present system of a mixed currency of legal-tenders and national-bank notes. The difficulty in regard to resumption is in the transition period. You cannot resume by contraction, because the moment you commence to contract you derange the business of the country and bring on a panic; you clog all the beneficial operations of trade and commerce. You must resume in a moment when there is no demand for coin for export, and that can never occur except at a time when the crops are in hand and are available to liquidate our foreign indebtedness. It must be done by such a measure as Senator Sherman introduced into the Senate last year, giving notice a year or some other period of time ahead that the Government will resume payment on its legal-tenders, and the banks must then be held to their obligation to redeem their notes in legal-tenders or in coin. If there is any redundancy of currency, the natural laws of trade will cause it to flow back into the national banks. The moment the bank-notes are not needed for the purposes of business, their holders will return them to the banks and pay what they owe, so as to stop the interest paid for their use. Contraction by a return of bank-notes to the banks is a natural process which will regulate itself; and to return money to the issuers when not needed, and to draw it out again when wanted, is, strictly speaking, neither contraction nor expansion, but the maintenance of the currency at its proper volume at all times.

By giving notice eight, ten, or twelve months ahead of the day fixed for resumption, the natural and inevitable result will be to lead merchants, business men, and bankers to take such precautions as they deem necessary. A man who has gold on hand when worth 10 or 15 per cent. premium, if he has any faith in the Government, will see that when the period of resumption comes his gold will bear no premium at all, and he will proceed to realize it and invest the proceeds in other securities. The very moment you give notice that you are to resume, gold will begin to fall. Your gold-bearing bonds, instead of rising in value, will contract in price, while your currency bonds will rise in price; and every man in Europe who desires to invest in our bonds will do it at once before the premium on gold and foreign exchange disappears and the prices of our currency bonds go up. There is no danger whatever of too much gold going out of the country; we never send either gold or bonds abroad unless we get something which we prefer or need more in exchange for them.

Mr. MERRIAM. What do you think would be the effect upon the price of gold if a quarter of one per cent. tax should be imposed upon the sales of gold?

Mr. MORAN. It would drive up the price, as you did once before by similar legislation. If you endeavor to place clogs upon any one of the operations of commerce, you immediately create a panic, and prices can no longer be controlled. The moment you prohibit the exportation of gold, it will begin to go out of the country. Louis Napoleon attempted once to attract breadstuffs to France by permitting their free importation, but prohibited their exportation from France. The result was that no breadstuffs came into the country, and the French were compelled to obtain their supplies at second-hand from England at advanced prices. No man will place his property where he cannot control it.

Mr. MERRIAM. Why does imposing a tax upon grain or upon any other commodity have a different effect from imposing a tax on gold?

Mr. MORAN. Because gold is used for different purposes than commodities. Those who hold it would not offer it at all; they would withdraw it from the market.

Mr. MERRIAM. If they withdrew it from stock-gambling operations, there would be no objection to that.

Mr. MORAN. They will withdraw it from the country unless you prohibit the exportation, and even that would not stop the outgo of gold. They will smuggle it through Canada and through Mexico.

The CHAIRMAN. Do not the speculators in the gold-room of New York tend to derange the business of the country?

Mr. MORAN. Yes, sir; constantly. I am very much opposed to the wild speculations carried on in New York.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me ask you whether the time sales of gold, long or short, whatever term you use, are made upon the idea of any actual transfer of gold? Does any coin actually pass?

Mr. MORAN. Invariably.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know how much the sales of the gold-room amount to?

Mr. MORAN. They fluctuate, I think, from twenty millions to a hundred millions a day.

Mr. MERRIAM. At one time in sixty days the sales of gold amounted to eighteen hundred millions, with only thirteen millions of gold actually in existence in New York. At the time do you suppose that actual transfers of gold took place in that instance?

Mr. MORAN. No, sir; not a dollar of gold; and I will tell you the reason why. The clearing-house of the gold-room performs the same office in New York as the clearing-house of the banks. By means of the clearing-house, transfers are made from one operator to another in the shape of a statement of balances, but each operator who acts through a broker must actually pass the gold or gold-certificates or gold-checks in the transaction; but between the brokers it is settled at the clearing-house. A year or two after the beginning of the war I hardly met a man on Wall street or Broad street whose face I knew; and why? Because when two or three thousand millions of national indebtedness were created, when you built railroads from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and gigantic operations of every kind were being carried on, do you suppose these vast operations could continue unless the securities based on them could be disposed of? You create speculations because you create things to be handled, and in handling these matters speculators grew up. Ordinarily speculation does not advance the price of things. The average price in twelve months, on the contrary, is lower with speculation than without it, and for this reason: If a speculator anticipates a short supply of corn, he buys corn and withdraws it from the market, which at once produces a rise of price which stimulates production and importation as well as greater economy of consumption; so that the ultimate result is that the price becomes lower than if the speculators had not meddled with the article. Then, so far as the result on the speculator himself is concerned, if he makes a blunder in his estimate, as they do blunder nine times out of ten, he will be the main loser.

Mr. FARWELL. I think you were interrupted in what you were going to say as to the method of resuming specie payment?

Mr. MORAN. The announcement of resumption eight or twelve months ahead will have the effect of strengthening the specie reserves of the country. You will not have contraction as the result. On the contrary, you will resume without knowing you have done so, because the fall in the price of gold will be so gradual that no panic will be produced, and actual resumption will produce no perceptible effect on business, except to stimulate it after resumption has taken place. I predict that if you announce that resumption will take place on the 1st of January next, by the 1st of November gold will be at par.

Mr. FARWELL. Your plan, then, is to name a day in the future so as to enable the people to prepare for it, and to bring the balance of trade in our favor?

Mr. MORAN. Certainly. Let me call your attention to the fact that during the whole period of our suspension we have settled promptly every dollar of our foreign adverse balances of trade in coin: and if we have done that under suspension, why can we not do it under resumption?

Mr. FARWELL. Is it not a fact that the balances of trade have all been settled during the last ten years by sending our bonds abroad in large amounts?

Mr. MORAN. No, sir; not at all.

Mr. FARWELL. What, then, have we received for these bonds?

Mr. MORAN. You have got commodities which you regard as more valuable.

Mr. FARWELL. Then they have gone out in settlement of the balance of trade.

Mr. MORAN. Very well. You have got what you have considered more valuable for them. If you had not sold bonds to Europe, you could not have imported iron and other things to construct your railroads.

Mr. FARWELL. Your statement strengthens my position: That when we imported these things we had not the gold to pay for them, and could not have got them, and the fact that we have a thousand millions of indebtedness abroad shows that the balance of trade is against us.

Mr. MORAN. No, sir; you mistake the result for the cause. We could never have imported iron if we had not exported bonds. These gentlemen abroad have said to us, "We will take your bonds, not to pay gold for them, but in exchange for iron;" and we have preferred to take the iron for the bonds. Now, importation cannot take place unless the exchange of commodities is measurably equal. The importer must be sure of his market before he can bring over his goods, and he can only be sure of a market when the people have a surplus of means to apply to the purchase of his goods; otherwise he will find that a few cargoes of railroad-iron or anything else coming into New York will overstock the market and leave him a loser.

The CHAIRMAN. What do you mean by a balance of trade?

Mr. MORAN. I mean a balance which has to be settled in coin by us.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the difference between you and Mr. Farwell is in the definition. He understands the balance to be a difference between the amount of importations and exportations.

Mr. MORAN. That is the balance as presented by custom-house returns, but this is no true criterion of the real balance.

Mr. FARWELL. My definition is that, upon footing up the transactions, mercantile and otherwise, of a year, after footing up the debtor and credit side of the ledger, whatever remains is the balance of trade for or against.

Mr. MORAN. That is the balance exhibited by custom-house returns, but it is no true criterion.

Mr. FARWELL. Can specie payment be resumed and maintained with the balance of trade against us?

Mr. MORAN. The resumption of specie payment does not require a greater quantity of coin than the suspension to-day. Every dollar of duties on foreign importations has to be paid in coin, and there must be a reserve within the reach of the importers of the city of New York to meet these payments. Gold is required to pay interest on all the bonds of the Government. We have to pay to the importers gold for all the iron, sugar, tea, coffee, and many other products they import for us. Now, a large proportion of those payments will cease to be made in gold the moment you resume. Instead of your paper currency being at a discount, it will often command a slight premium. The moment you make it equal to gold it will then only be necessary to hold specie reserves in New York and San Francisco, and your legal-tenders, being made equal to gold, will be at a premium because of their greater convenience for internal commercial uses. It is a great mistake to suppose that foreigners have any great control over the gold supply of this country; but they have greater control over it under suspension than under resumption, because under suspension gold has a tendency to leave the country, while under resumption it will have a tendency to accumulate here until the aggregate is deemed ample for our future wants. If an amount of gold is retained in the Treasury, the banks need have none. I think it may just as well be in the banks as in the Treasury, yet banks will always prefer to hold legal-tenders when they are as good as gold. The gold-room of New York will then have no further existence, because no sales of gold will take place. It is not practicable, in large transactions, to use gold as a currency. The gold-room in New York tried it in settlement of their gold operations, and found it was impossible to count and verify the coin in time to make the settlements, and they therefore passed a rule requiring all settlements to be made in gold-certificates of the United States or gold-checks on banks. You will find there will be no important demand for gold, and no large drain upon the Treasury, after resumption. There can be nothing more wild and visionary than the projects which have been put forward of accumulating two, three, or four hundred millions of gold in the Treasury. The Bank of England has generally from twenty to twenty-five million pounds sterling (say a hundred to a hundred and twenty-five millions) of gold, and she will not permit that amount to be much reduced without raising the rate of interest. You cannot accumulate a large amount of gold in the Treasury without perfectly deranging and greatly injuring the business of this country. Your cotton will not be worth 5 cents a pound or your wheat 50 cents a bushel, if you attempt to draw two hundred millions of gold from Europe. And the result would not be confined to this country. You would derange and impede the commerce of the world in your attempt. But if you can accumulate this gold, it could only be in exchange for a more than equivalent value of useful commodities. Gold is worth nothing as money except to exchange it for the articles you desire and prefer to gold, and you cannot procure gold unless you have those articles on hand. Now, the great advantage of the bank-note is this: The true theory of currency is to have its amount fluctuate in the same ratio as the fluctuations in the exchanges and payments of the community. This result can be attained by daily variations in the amount of currency in circulation, which cannot be done with coin without great loss. As I have said, there is no occasion to place any restriction upon the amount of bank issues. They can be best regulated by the demand of the community.

The CHAIRMAN. Please explain what you mean by bank issues.

Mr. MORAN. I mean the issue of bank-notes.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you mean that we shall allow banks to issue an unlimited amount of notes upon their own credit?

Mr. MORAN. That is not what I ask. Your system may for the present be allowed to remain just as it is, but eventually it will arrive at that.

The CHAIRMAN. Would you allow anybody to engage in banking and issue notes upon his own credit?

Mr. MORAN. I would; but I don't ask that. I would allow the present system to remain. I would allow the banks to redeem in legal-tenders, and the legal-tenders will then perform the functions of gold, precisely as the United States gold-certificates now perform the functions of gold. The moment you make legal-tenders convertible into gold, they become gold-certificates, and therefore will do away with all demand for gold in the interior operations of the country. In New York, whenever there is an adverse balance of trade to liquidate, gold will be drawn from the New York banks or from the subtreasury, and, as I have said, the New York gold-room will disappear forever, and that is why false representations as to the difficulty of resumption are so constantly set afloat and circulated. Gold-dealers and gold-speculators after resumption will have no further occupation, for no broker will then be able to sell a dollar of gold above par so long as it can be obtained at the subtreasury at par when needed.

Mr. MERRIAM. How much gold do you think should be in the Treasury to make it safe to resume?

Mr. MORAN. A hundred millions is the utmost; and I think you should pass a law prohibiting the Secretary of the Treasury from accumulating more than that. There is no greater wrong that can be done than for a government to collect revenue beyond its real wants, and thus lock up the instruments of exchange which are indispensable to the business operations of the country. If the Government had continued specie payments, instead of wanting vast amounts of coin to carry on the war, ten or twenty millions constantly passing in and out would have been sufficient, because war consumes no money whatever, nor does any other use of gold as money. You can invest the products of labor in railroads, buildings, &c., but not a dollar of money. Money passes from one individual to another, but always remains in hand somewhere.

Mr. FARWELL. I understand you to say that the matter of a balance of trade, as I interpret it, cuts no figure in resumption. Now, suppose the Government should decide to resume, and that men in New York or on the other side should continue to come here with a hundred million dollars of bonds, go into Wall street and exchange them for greenbacks, and take out in redemption of greenbacks what gold there was in the Treasury; would that not be an end of resumption?

Mr. MORAN. Yes; but you will have to explain how they can do that.

Mr. FARWELL. What is there to prevent capitalists abroad from coming over here with a hundred million dollars of bonds, selling them in New York, and taking the greenbacks they receive in exchange to the Treasury for conversion into coin, and then taking the coin abroad? If the bonds were all held in this country, I can see there would be no trouble; but a thousand millions of them held on the other side, and being negotiable securities, it would not be difficult to gather up a hundred millions.

Mr. MORAN. The thing is simply impossible. The moon can fall upon the earth just as easily as you could carry out such a proposition. You could not get a hundred million dollars of bonds. You forget that they are scattered all through Europe in small amounts. Nobody in Europe has a million dollars of bonds.

The CHAIRMAN. The syndicate has two hundred millions.

Mr. MORAN. They have not a million dollars. The impression seems to be in the community that these bonds lie in bulk where anybody can lay his hands on them. It is a complete mistake. They are scattered in small sums all through Europe; and, besides that, the men who hold bonds rarely, if ever, need money; and the men who want money rarely, if ever, have bonds.

Mr. RANDALL. State whether a resumption of specie payment in this country would not induce more tenacity on the part of the foreigner in holding our securities.

Mr. MORAN. Very much ; there is nothing that ever induced my friends abroad to sell their American securities until we suspended specie payments ; and the moment you announce a resumption you will find them eagerly buying up our securities and availing themselves of the larger amount of interest we can afford to pay.

The CHAIRMAN. Please explain how it happens that our agents have succeeded within the last two years in gathering up in Europe two or three hundred millions of 6 per cent. bonds for the purpose of substituting 5 per cent. bonds ?

Mr. MORAN. Because you announced that the bonds must be presented, and that interest would cease ; and even then many of the holders didn't present them, and have not to this day.

Mr. MERRIAM. The German government have taken fifteen millions of our bonds. What is to prevent them from buying a hundred millions ?

Mr. MORAN. Nothing.

Mr. MERRIAM. Suppose that is done and they afterward conclude they want a hundred million dollars of gold : what is to prevent them from sending the bonds over here and taking our gold ?

Mr. MORAN. Suppose they should get a hundred millions, which would never occur, and present them here ; before they can present any claim at the Treasury, they must convert the bonds into legal-tenders. Now, I want to know how a man will get possession of a hundred millions of legal-tenders in this country. You have got to collect them from all the towns and business centers of the country. They could not accumulate twenty-five millions. Five millions of legal-tenders withdrawn from the banks of New York will often make money so scarce as to produce a panic. You could not take twenty-five millions of currency from the business of the country without paralyzing every branch of business and reducing prices so as to make it impossible to sell any bonds. None of our wealthy men, so called, have money. Vanderbilt has no money ; Jay Gould has no money ; they are speculators and deep in debt, borrowing money on the stocks they hold continually ; and who is going to loan them money with which to ruin the Government and the best interests of the country ? They will be the first men anxious to borrow money to pay their own liabilities, which would at once be demanded of them.

Mr. MERRIAM. Then you assume that it is impossible for any large amount of legal-tenders to be presented for redemption at once ?

Mr. MORAN. I assume that it is positively impossible.

Mr. FARWELL. Let me ask another question. Suppose we announce resumption at a given day ; the balance of trade has been against us for ten years ; suppose it continues at the rate of one million a week, which must be liquidated by sending out a million of gold a week : do you think it would be practicable to continue specie payment ?

Mr. MORAN. O, yes ; you can very readily meet a drain of fifty millions a year, but it will never occur in the form you state. You are stating a thing that is impossible. You never saw in any country a drain continue for twelve months, because a drain of specie from a country is always the consequence of an exceptional condition of things. It occurs in England generally when she has a bad harvest, and requires thirty millions of breadstuffs to be brought from the United States ; she has no such amount of surplus commodity to give in exchange. It takes time to create and accumulate an excess of production, and an adverse balance of trade only occurs while this deficiency is being made up. Coin has then to be exported from the country ; but just as soon as the equilibrium is re-established, gold will flow back again.

The CHAIRMAN. On the subject of legal bank-reserves, state whether the requirement of the present law has not saved a great many banks from ruin.

Mr. MORAN. It has never saved one bank, but, on the contrary, has ruined a great many.

Mr. RANDALL. Who would you make the man to determine the amount of currency to be issued and the amount of reserve to be kept for an emergency ?

Mr. MORAN. The bank managers. If they make a mistake, their banks are wiped out and other men take their place.

Mr. RANDALL. You think the depositors have no right to require that a reserve shall be kept for their protection ?

Mr. MORAN. No, sir ; they have no right ; they are protected by the assets of the bank.

Mr. MERRIAM. You say there are certain evils in our present banking system. What evils do you refer to ?

Mr. MORAN. I would do away with the reserves ; they are an evil.

Mr. FARWELL. And permit free banking ?

Mr. MORAN. Yes ; permit banks to be established in whatever quarter they please, to issue just as much currency as they can give security for and put into circulation. The result will be that in the long run you will make your transactions upon an amount of money smaller and more nearly equalized than under any other system the mind of man can conceive.

Mr. MERRIAM. That is the only evil you think of ?

Mr. MORAN. That and the stipulation as to the legal reserves to be held by the banks are the only evils ; I think the restrictions upon the amount of currency a bank may issue is an evil.

Mr. RANDALL. Can you state what was the effect of the amount of currency in circulation upon the price of gold during the long period of suspension of the Bank of England?

Mr. MORAN. The effect in regard to the suspension of the Bank of England is entirely misapprehended; the fluctuations in the value of specie in England after the suspension of the bank had no relation whatever to the amount of the bank-note circulation; it rose with a diminished circulation, and it fell with an increased circulation. The history of that period shows conclusively that the fluctuations in the prices of gold in Great Britain during the suspension of the bank had nothing whatever to do with the amount of circulation, but was caused by the relative difference of supply and demand. As early as 1817 the bank was in a condition to resume specie payment, and to that end began to call in the small notes which had been issued during the war. Gold accumulated in the hands of the country banks and bankers, and nothing but the purchase of the Bank of England kept gold at a slight premium. But the British government, fearing that resumption by the bank would render money scarce, and thus interfere with funding the large floating debt then existing, had an act of Parliament passed which only required the bank to resume in 1823, although the bank itself was ready to resume in 1817; the consequence was that everybody became emboldened in their operations. Thirty millions of pounds sterling of the government loans of the continental nations were negotiated in England, and took from the country thirty million pounds sterling of real capital, and it was that withdrawal of capital from the country which subsequently caused the crash of 1825.

Mr. HUNTER. You have given us one of your plans of changing our currency, which is to make banking free. What other changes would you make in the laws?

Mr. MORAN. Nothing, except that the Government should bring the four hundred millions of legal-tenders to the specie-paying basis as rapidly as possible.

The CHAIRMAN. I understand that you propose that the Government shall commence specie payment in January, 1875, and that they shall withdraw their requirement of bank-reserves.

Mr. MORAN. Yes, sir; that is it.

Mr. FARWELL. On the basis that there are held on the other side a thousand millions of our Government bonds, we should have to export sixty millions per annum of gold to pay the interest on these bonds.

Mr. MORAN. You have been doing that all along.

Mr. FARWELL. And we have also been increasing our other debts.

Mr. MORAN. You may be sure that these are things that neither banks nor economists are bound to look at; they are self-regulating; you cannot disturb the exchanges between countries for any length of time.

Mr. FARWELL. But the fact, notwithstanding, exists that these bonds are held on the other side, which must be provided for in specie by this country. If these bonds were all held at home, I can see there would be no difficulty, so far as they are concerned, in resuming; but the time will come some day when we shall have to send the gold out of the country to pay for them.

Mr. MORAN. No, sir, never; for the reason that the property we received in payment of these bonds when they were sent out will have produced more than the whole price of them. You have made an investment of capital which will produce large additional returns beyond what you would have had had you not have sold the bonds to Europe, and that capital produces wherewithal to pay the annual interest, and to create a sinking fund that will redeem the bonds whenever it is necessary to redeem them.

Mr. FARWELL. I fancy it was our necessities that compelled us to send over these bonds.

Mr. MORAN. Not at all. Did your necessities compel you to build the Union Pacific Railroad, or did you build it because you wanted it built?

Mr. FARWELL. I would like to ask you a question upon the rate of interest. Would it be advisable for this Congress to pass a law removing such restrictions upon the rate of interest?

Mr. MORAN. I believe there never has been but one bank which has been properly conducted in regard to its rate of interest. The Bank of France is the only bank, except the old Scotch banks, which has ever been properly conducted. The Bank of France was created by Napoleon near the commencement of this century, and from that time until Napoleon III it never charged but one uniform rate of interest, and that 4 per cent., and yet it was within twenty-four hours of all the great monetary centers of Europe. It resisted all the drain of London, Berlin, and Vienna, charging steadily 4 per cent. interest, while the rate in London was 6 or 7 per cent.

Mr. FARWELL. Then you are in favor of the Government fixing the rate?

Mr. MORAN. That you can pass laws which will maintain a uniform rate of interest I do not believe, but there will never be another monetary panic if you will allow the banks to manage their own affairs, and there will be a better and more uniform currency than under any possible restrictions.

Mr. FARWELL. Then do I understand that you are in favor of the banks charging whatever they can get?

Mr. MORAN. Certainly; and at the same time if you choose to fix a uniform rate of interest, there is no objection to it. The whole tendency of things is to establish a uniform rate of interest throughout the world. If you can pay 7 per cent. in this country, they cannot keep the rate of interest in England down to 3 per cent. There is one thing I omitted to say. In the future the currency of the world is, in my judgment, to be in bank-checks and bank-notes, and coin will become obsolete and go out of use as money.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. You have stated that bank deposits are the counterpart of the indebtedness of the banks. What percentage do you think of the drafts that are drawn upon banks by depositors is actually presented at the counter, and cash received upon them?

Mr. MORAN. I don't think in this country we have any data from which that question can be answered. They have in London most accurate data. Sir John Lubbock had an accurate statement made of the amount and nature of all payments to his bank. Coin and bank-bills only amounted to about $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., and all the rest were pieces of paper with figures written on them; and the same thing practically is done in New York, where we liquidate daily a hundred or a hundred and twenty-five million dollars, with three or four millions of legal-tenders.

The CHAIRMAN. And these legal-tenders are used to settle the balances at the clearing-house. I infer from your remark that you have no data on which to base your opinion as to what portion of drafts are actually presented at the bank-counter for payment.

Mr. MORAN. No, sir; and the statistics would be almost perfectly worthless if you had them. Because correct statistics are presented, does that insure that correct deductions are drawn from them?

Mr. Buchanan, who on Saturday last, on the invitation of the committee, made a statement, now had permission to ask Mr. Moran such questions as he desired.

Mr. BUCHANAN. When you speak of the power of resuming specie payment upon a very small amount of coin, and instance the Bank of England, do you take into consideration the fact that the Bank of England pays specie upon its own option, and may withhold it whenever, in the judgment of its directors, circumstances require?

Mr. MORAN. You are entirely mistaken in point of fact. The Bank of England does not pay coin upon its own option; it is compelled to redeem its notes in gold.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Has not the Bank of England suspended specie payment three times since 1844?

Mr. MORAN. Never. The bank always has on hand a large surplus of coin. It was the government that suspended the bank act of 1844, which restricts the issue of bank-notes, and they would have broken the bank if they had not removed the restriction, and would have broken with it every merchant in England. They suspended the bank-act, and no more money was drawn from the bank; and in fifteen minutes after the restriction was removed the pressure for money stopped.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Is it true that during that time a large amount of paper was issued by the bank, and that the bank was compelled all the time to redeem that issue of paper?

Mr. MORAN. Every dollar.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Then there is a very considerable incongruity in the history of those times.

Mr. MORAN. Not at all. You cannot find it in any history.

Mr. BUCHANAN. There is another question connected with the same matter. You speak of hoarding up a large amount of gold in the Treasury as being against the rights of the people of this country. Now, you do not use gold coin in New York, but you use certificates for it. Suppose a large amount is collected in the Treasury of the United States, and the people have paper representing that amount for their use in business, that will not cripple them?

Mr. MORAN. There is where the fallacy of your plan is shown. You propose to issue Government paper based on Government bonds, and you propose that the interest payable on the bonds deposited in the Treasury of the United States shall be retained until the amount of four hundred millions is accumulated in coin.

The CHAIRMAN. Before you criticise Mr. Buchanan's plan, I should like to hear an answer to his direct question. Suppose that, under our present laws, gold-certificates are issued to the amount of four hundred millions or more upon gold actually deposited in the Treasury; how would that affect the industries of the country?

Mr. MORAN. Not at all, if you had the gold in the Treasury. But what will happen while the gold is being accumulated; where will you get it? If you produce it from the mines of California and Nevada, every dollar is expended in the production, and you might just as well get it from anywhere else. What are you going to do in the mean time for gold to meet the requirements of the commerce and trade of the country? Such an experiment would not only destroy the commerce of this country, but the commerce and trade of the world. The first impression is that, at the point where gold is produced and from whence it flows, interest ought to be very low, and yet the fact is that at those points interest is always excessively high. It makes no difference practically on this question where the gold is. When it is in London it is just as much in our possession as when it is in California; it is merely a question of the time it takes to bring it here.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Does not the Bank of England raise the rate of interest to prevent the outgoing of gold from the country?

Mr. MORAN. The Bank of England certainly raises the rate of interest for that purpose, but never succeeds thereby in stopping the export of gold when necessary to obtain what the country needs.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Does not raising the rate of interest by the Bank of England bring gold into London?

Mr. MORAN. It does not; it goes out in the face of it.

Mr. BUCHANAN. You speak of the hardships to the business of the country that will occur while this amount of gold is being accumulated in the Treasury of the United States. You have already accumulated there a large amount of gold-bearing bonds, and yet an amount of money equal to the necessities of the country continues in circulation.

Mr. MORAN. You cannot get gold in exchange for the bonds, but you can get commodities, which are more useful than gold.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Suppose bonds to the amount say of four hundred millions are turned into the Treasury, and four hundred millions of notes are turned out for the use of business; in the mean time suppose, as now, the mines of California continue to produce a hundred millions of gold a year, which is gradually taken into the Treasury until four hundred millions have been accumulated: would the business interests of the country suffer more than they would have suffered if this amount of gold remained in the mines?

Mr. MORAN. You leave out of sight the fact that if you bring gold into the Treasury you must have something to obtain it with. Gold must be exchanged for commodities; it cannot be obtained unless you have the commodities.

Mr. HUBBELL. Would it be possible to hold four hundred millions of gold in the Treasury?

Mr. MORAN. You may pass the act, but you forget what is the use of money; you forget that gold is only valuable as it represents something in the hands of the community. It is of no use to you while you continue to hold it. It is only in parting with it that it becomes useful to you.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The point of your objection to my proposition is that while the gold is accumulating in the Treasury of the United States, the effect will be very detrimental to the business of the country, because that business will not have the use of this coin during the time.

Mr. MORAN. My objection is that your plan is impracticable. You start upon the proposition of accumulating four hundred millions of gold. From where are you to get your four hundred millions? You must get it in exchange for the production and earnings of the people; you have got to have the property with which to buy the gold.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I can bring over from Europe within the next thirty days twenty-five millions of gold-bearing bonds in exchange for the products of this country. Now, then, if we have the coin deposited in the Treasury and take notes out, what evil occurs? There is no coin in actual circulation to-day. We use paper that represents it. It makes no difference to the business of the country whether four hundred millions of coin or four hundred millions of paper is in circulation, so that one is equivalent to the other.

Mr. MORAN. That is true only now under suspension; gold-certificates and gold-bonds are not gold; you cannot use your paper money to buy commodities with abroad; you start with conditions that are impossible.

Mr. BUCHANAN. What I say is that the general business of the country is transacted without the actual use of gold now.

Mr. MORAN. Gold is used to the extent that we actually need.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The reason we don't use gold is that we are using something else in place of it, having certificates for gold in the Treasury, to be exchanged for it at the option of the holder; that certainly does not interfere with the course of business.

Mr. MORAN. No; but to bring this large amount of gold into the Treasury would be ruinous to the country.

Mr. BUCHANAN. My proposition, however, is to bring the gold from the mines of California, and not to make any drain upon that now in the country.

Mr. MORAN. Well, it will ruin the country all the same. We want no gold. This idealization of gold is one of the relics of barbarism; gold is not wanted except for the arts, it is not wanted for money, and it will be dispensed with for that purpose altogether at no very distant day.

Mr. MERRIAM. As there is no possibility of Congress taking any steps at this session for a resumption of specie payment, the question is, what change in our national banking system would you advise?

Mr. MORAN. I am very sorry if there is no such possibility. I would then advise no change at all; let it remain until you get ready to resume.

Mr. HUNTER. You think this doctrine, that there is too much currency at one time and too little at another, has nothing in it?

Mr. MORAN. Nothing whatever; there has not at any time, so far as I know, been any great amount of actual deficiency in the currency; there has been a deficiency in bank-loans, and it was that that caused the late panic.

Mr. HUNTER. Suppose a bank has deposits to the amount of a hundred thousand dollars in greenbacks and in bank-currency, and has loaned out a hundred thousand dollars, leaving not five dollars of currency in the bank, what I want to ask you is, whether, on the first demand for currency being made, the bank will not have to suspend at once.

Mr. MORAN. You cannot prevent it; the great blunder of our banks is in their mode of conducting business by making promises which it is impossible to perform. Under the old system there was no possibility of complying with the promise they made of redeeming their bank-notes in specie. Specie payment was a perfect fallacy then and always will be on the principle banks are now conducted on.

Mr. HUBBELL. If you propose to abolish the banking reserves of the country, how are you going to keep the banks sound?

Mr. MORAN. The proper plan is for each bank to keep two accounts with its dealers—a cash account and a credit account. Let whatever is deposited in cash be withdrawn in cash; but when a man comes and wants a discount, say to him, “I will loan you my credit, but you must not come to me to-morrow morning and say that I must pay you coin or legal-tender notes for it.”

Mr. HUBBELL. Do you understand that the banks make their money out of their deposits?

Mr. MORAN. No, sir; they make their money by discounts and interest; the deposits of money do not amount to anything; but, so far as the reserve is concerned, under the present system of banking, if you abolish all legal restrictions as to reserves, the banks will in all probability keep a larger average reserve than the law now requires. The whole thing must be left to the prudence and intelligence of the men controlling the banks, and they will probably, of their own accord, keep a larger reserve than your present banking regulations require; but they will be able to use these reserves when this becomes either beneficial or necessary to the welfare of the community and of the banks, which they are prohibited from doing under the present law.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 19, 1874.

BENJAMIN F. NOURSE, representing the Boston Board of Trade, in the cotton business since 1835, appeared at the request of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Please state whether, in your opinion, there are any defects in our present financial system; if so, what they are, and how are they to be remedied.

Mr. NOURSE. I should say that our financial system is defective in this, that we have not the currency of the world; that is, one which is in the world's standard of value. We have for the time thrown out specie, which is the currency of the world. Our financial system is also defective, in comparison with others, in lacking the power for action, and, being defective, it is isolated, set apart, and cannot draw to itself, in the necessities of business, that condition of support through the currency of the world which is essential to a state of high prosperity. I would remedy it by bringing it into accord with the standing currency of the world, which is specie. I would have a currency redeemable in specie, a mixed currency which should have the value of gold.

The CHAIRMAN. Would you suggest any change in the character of the currency other than to make it redeemable in gold?

Mr. NOURSE. I think we have conclusive evidence that our present currency is excessive in amount as deficient in character. If it were not excessive, gold would not leave us as it has done the last few years under the laws of trade. For instance, during and immediately preceding the late panic, when there was a check on remittances from this country to Europe in payment of debts or in payment of imports, coin began to flow to this country. The currency having been so violently contracted just at that time, reducing the value of money, and through its value also the value of foreign exchange, gold came for the purchase of our commodities and for the purchase of exchange. The reduction of our currency by withdrawal has the same effect in trade as reduction by destruction. One is temporary, the other permanent in its character.

The CHAIRMAN. In regard to the character of our currency, would you exchange either the legal-tenders or national-bank notes, or both?

Mr. NOURSE. Passing by altogether the question of the adoption of the legal-tender notes and the necessities of the country under which they were created, I would say that whatever urgency there was then has now passed by, and the time has come, and has been for several years, when that portion of our currency should have been gradually elevated toward the par of gold by a slow but sure and irresistible process.

The CHAIRMAN. Has it not been?

Mr. NOURSE. It has not by force of legislation or action in that direction. It has by natural forces, and one of them, and a great one, in my judgment, is this: that not less than $200,000,000 or $250,000,000 of this paper currency has gone into private hoarding, and chiefly in the cotton States since 1866, when cotton began to pay a little. Since that time $2,234,000,000 have been received into the cotton States for cotton produced and sold beyond their borders. Now, I think it impossible for the most accurate statisticians among the southern men to account for the whole of that amount by at least $300,000,000, after appropriating $200,000,000 for works of public improvements, factories, &c., besides the cost of restocking plantations, and all supplies of food, clothing, groceries, tools, implements, and whatever else has been expended outside of the cotton-growing States; that is a statistical position which I arrived at approximately two or three years ago, but there is a large array of isolated acts tending to confirm it. Among the members of our national board of trade, gentlemen from New Orleans, Mobile, Louisville, and elsewhere, brought each his own array of facts in strong corroboration of the general habit, which has been increased since the war, of hoarding money in the South. You, Mr. Chairman, probably know, as I know, the cotton-growing people of the South are very peculiar in their character. Before the war there was a habit of hoarding money, chiefly in gold. It was a very general practice. There was no general system of savings-banks, such as prevailed in New York and the New England States, convenient to the plantations, and therefore the habit of hoarding up money by individuals prevailed.

Mr. MERRIAM. Let me ask whether the $2,234,000,000 taken to the South, of which you spoke, has been wholly for cotton?

Mr. NOURSE. Wholly for cotton.

Mr. MERRIAM. In your judgment, has the large amount of $200,000,000 been hoarded in the South by colored people?

Mr. NOURSE. I have no doubt very largely by colored people; but I think very much more largely by the whites.

The CHAIRMAN. What change would you make in the character of our currency, by which I mean in the form of legal-tender notes and bank-notes; what would you recommend?

Mr. NOURSE. The very first process, I think, should be to bring the Treasury notes of the United States to the par value of gold by some process of redemption; something that will accomplish that result safely and urely, not suddenly, but in the course of, say, three or four years.

The CHAIRMAN. The currency we have now is of the two kinds I have mentioned. Would you withdraw either of these descriptions of currency and substitute any other form?

Mr. NOURSE. No, sir; I would only suggest that the legal-tenders should be brought to the par of gold, which would necessarily carry along the other currency with it, because the bank-notes must be redeemed in legal-tenders.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you tell us how, in your opinion, we can or should return to specie payment?

Mr. NOURSE. By giving to legal-tenders, maturing at the rate of so many millions a month, redemption in gold. They now exist in the shape of obligations which have not the benefit of definite maturity, nor are they payable on demand. I would have a new issue of legal-tenders, either gold-notes without interest, or bearing a low rate of interest, say 3 per cent. per annum compounding, a certain amount of which should be issued each month in exchange for existing legal-tenders, the new issue payable in two years, and maturing at regular periods in the future, to be redeemable either in interest-bearing bonds, or by payment in gold. It would require time for that, for it should be done at such intervals and in such amounts as would inconvenience neither the Treasury nor the business of the country.

The CHAIRMAN. Would you have them retired as fast as they are paid off?

Mr. NOURSE. As fast as they are paid off. The plan contemplates that afterward Treasury notes may be issued and go again into the currency of the country, but redeemable in gold on demand.

The CHAIRMAN. But in the mean time how would you fill the vacuum created by the withdrawal of the amount you suggested from the currency?

Mr. NOURSE. Under the plan I suggest there can be no vacuum created until the maturity of the first amount selected, which I would not have in less than two years. Then as these obligations began to approach maturity, the natural effect would be a contraction of the currency of the country, caused by their becoming superior in character. But the process would be so slow that it would not be perceptible at any early time. In the mean time, if there should come any pinch in the money-market, the want could be supplied by the gold-notes or the 3 per cent. interest-bearing notes going into circulation.

The CHAIRMAN. You are a member of the Boston Board of Trade, and have been attending the National Board of Trade recently in session in Baltimore. I notice that they have adopted with great unanimity a resolution in favor of re-establishing our currency upon a specie basis.

Mr. NOURSE. Their action looks to that ultimately; but their resolution or memorial asks that there shall be no further issue of currency as one proposition. Their second has already been acted upon by Congress; that is, that Congress shall reduce its appropriations to the lowest possible amount consistent with the public interest, and on the basis of the severest economy.

The CHAIRMAN. Was it the wish or feeling of the Board of Trade that we should return to a specie basis?

Mr. NOURSE. It was unanimously.

The CHAIRMAN. What does the National Board of Trade represent?

Mr. NOURSE. Delegates from the local boards of trade throughout the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. It represents very largely the commercial interests of the country. If, then, they desire to see the currency of the country placed upon a specie basis, why do they not return to a specie basis?

Mr. NOURSE. They cannot do so without the action of Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. Why not?

Mr. NOURSE. Because our present currency is purely the creation of law. If that restriction were away, and it were left to the effect of natural laws, it would very speedily bring us into true relations with the rest of the world. But now we are thrown out of the normal condition by the abnormal creation which has been made under our statutes.

The CHAIRMAN. We are told in regard to rates of interest established by statute that the laws of trade and commerce are superior to the laws of the land, and not to be controlled or affected by them; that when we attempt to regulate the rate of interest we are simply laughed at. Why are we not equally powerless in regard to the return to specie payment?

Mr. NOURSE. It is very easy, if you will allow me the illustration, to dam a portion of the waters of the Mississippi Valley. Indeed I believe it would be possible to dam the Mississippi River at a certain point, and while the water remained low that dam might stand, and the water be turned back and caused to depart from its natural course. But there is a point at which that resistance would give way and the forces of the natural law of gravitation and the whole dam system would be swept away. So you have power by the legislation of the Congress of the United States, the laws of the land, to resist the natural laws controlling the finances up to a certain point, and to hold them within certain walls, but beyond that point the natural laws of trade will prevail over any such artificial restraint.

The CHAIRMAN. The specie basis prevails on the Pacific coast, does it not, at this time?

Mr. NOURSE. Yes, in a great degree.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it just possible that there is something else in the currency; that there is a practical convenience and advantage in the currency which gives it this permanency and resists this other pressure toward the specie resumption you speak of?

Mr. NOURSE. There are several very important conveniences in the currency as we now have it; for instance, the bank currency is uniform throughout the country. It travels all over the United States, and is current everywhere, as the notes of the old United States Bank were before the expiration of its last charter. In that respect it is a national currency, and I should be glad to see it made permanent if we could put it upon a specie basis.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it true, as was stated in the committee-room the other day, that we have now the best currency we have ever had in the recollection of any of us?

Mr. NOURSE. I believe the remark is true with this limitation: that we have the best for an irredeemable currency we have ever had. In many respects it is better than the old specie-paying currency under the State banks. Under that system the notes of the banks circulated only over a limited area, and were consequently continuously running home for redemption. The system of clearing now adopted is very much superior to the old system, and it would be far better if it were on a specie level.

The CHAIRMAN. What, in your opinion, was the cause of the late panic?

Mr. NOURSE. The immediate cause was the failure of some of the leading banking-houses, occurring at a critical moment, as was the fact in 1857, with the Ohio Life Insurance Company, the failure of which was then the immediate cause of the financial crisis which occurred. The causes leading up to the late panic, however, were in part a withdrawal of a very large amount of paper hoarded up by individuals in the country; and simultaneously with that the increase to a very large extent of private indebtedness. At the close of the war there was very little private indebtedness. The banks were filled generally with the public debt, which was the most profitable to them. The bonds advanced upon their hands, and the banks became rich. And as they realized from the commencement large profits from these investments, it became their interest to continue such investments rather than by the negotiations of private loans. We have now private bank loans, as is stated, to the amount of $940,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you think any legislative provision could have prevented the panic?

Mr. NOURSE. Yes; if it had been done in time, as effect follows cause. It might not have been prevented, but its effects would have been less disastrous.

The CHAIRMAN. What do you think Congress could have done which would have prevented the panic?

Mr. NOURSE. I think if they had indicated such policy as would show the determination of Congress to elevate the currency to the specie level, no matter how slowly, it would have tended very much to check the expansion of indebtedness, which, as I have said, was one cause of the panic.

The CHAIRMAN. Did not Congress do that very thing? Didn't they, early in 1869, declare that the United States notes should be redeemed in specie at the earliest practicable moment?

Mr. NOURSE. Yes; but in the mind of business men there have been practicable moments in the last two or three years that this promise could have been redeemed and was not.

The CHAIRMAN. You think they should have fixed some date?

Mr. NOURSE. No, sir; it is not within the power of the Congress of the United States or any earthly power to name a day when such an event as the resumption of specie-payments should occur, but it might inaugurate measures, the effect or tendency of which will lead to that condition when it may occur.

The CHAIRMAN. Then, to go back to my question, what do you think Congress ought to have done that it did not do which would have had the effect to prevent the late panic?

Mr. NOURSE. Take the resolution of 1869 as true and right, if the feeling that Congress had adopted some action like fixing a maturing day for the legal-tenders, it would have shown to the world and the capitalists of the world that Congress had determined, not only by resolution, but by action in the definite direction, to produce that result.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know what percentage of difference there is in the price of coin now and when that resolution was passed, in 1869?

Mr. NOURSE. I think the price of gold was then from 30 to 32, and that it is now from 10 to 12 premium.

The CHAIRMAN. Then we have appreciated in that time 20 per cent., or about that. Is not that approaching the result?

Mr. NOURSE. It is approaching; but then we are liable at any time to have the premium on gold advanced to 30 or 40 under the present condition of things. If anything should occur to bring out the currency now hoarded and throw it into the market, it would produce so disproportionate an amount of paper currency to the requirements of business that gold would immediately go up to 120 or 130 under the combinations of some gold-ring, as was threatened at one time last summer.

The CHAIRMAN. Tell us whether, in your opinion, we shall not commence specie-payment or go to a specie basis just as soon as the commercial or financial condition of the country will permit, and not sooner. Can we either precipitate or retard it by any legislative act?

Mr. NOURSE. I think your first proposition is true. There must be that condition before specie payment can be actually accomplished; but that it may be facilitated or retarded by the action of Congress I am entirely sure.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you think the late panic has passed away entirely?

Mr. NOURSE. Yes; I think the panic has passed away, and has given way to something in the opposite direction; that is, by stagnation in the uses of money, and by throwing out a very large proportion of the reserves in the Treasury, competition for the use of money has been reduced, and the owners of capital are competing with each other to find choice places in which to use it. This reduces the rates of interest upon loans very rapidly.

The CHAIRMAN. State whether a similar panic could be prevented or avoided by any legislative action.

Mr. NOURSE. Let me first add to my answer to your former question as to whether Congress could have prevented this panic: Under the conditions then existing Congress could not have prevented it; but it might have modified its effects by the measures I have suggested. There are conditions which will produce violent spasms in the money-market. One is by overtrading, and another by an overextensive use of the available capital of the country; then, when the pinch comes, you cannot prevent a panic, whether you are on a specie basis or a currency basis, in this or any other country. Such panics can best be prevented by restraint upon the creation of debt, and that policy which tends to improve the currency and bring it up to the specie level and prices to the gold standard of value, so as to restrain the undue creation of debts, and a greater discrimination between the classes of credit offered in the market for sale.

Mr. MERRIAM. If the Government had been in a condition to loan the bankers fifty or one hundred millions of currency, would not that have stopped the panic?

Mr. NOURSE. I have no doubt it would have prevented the suspension of the banks in New York; and perhaps the use of that amount of money, if it had been available, from the Treasury of the United States, would have arrested the panic. But the panic would not have been arrested by the knowledge of the fact of that amount being in the Treasury without its being actually put into circulation. The banks in the suspension of 1857, by the adoption of proper precautions, brought up the credits of the country to their proper level, and in three or four months the current rate of interest was reduced from 20 to 30 per cent. per annum to 3 or 4 per cent. in the chief cities.

The CHAIRMAN. State whether, during the late panic, there was or was not a scarcity of currency.

Mr. NOURSE. There was an actual scarcity of money, and very great scarcity of the currency in actual use, for the reason that a very large amount of it had been retired into private possession, which did not come immediately into circulation through deposits in the banks, while the banks clutched their hands on the little there was available, and locked it up in their vaults.

The CHAIRMAN. It was stated here the other day that during that panic men of unquestioned solvency, with the highest character of collateral, were unable to borrow a dollar of currency. Why was that?

Mr. NOURSE. It was for the reason that the crisis occurred when we were not paying specie. Such a result with the currency on a specie basis would have been impossible.

Mr. MERRIAM. Let me ask whether, in 1872, we were not threatened with a panic such as occurred in 1873?

Mr. NOURSE. We were threatened with a stringency.

Mr. MERRIAM. And was not the country saved from a panic by the issue of $5,000,000 from the Treasury?

Mr. NOURSE. That I cannot say. It was postponed very likely; but being in a suspension of specie payment, there are no lower depths to which we could go by a stretch of the law, the currency being already an irredeemable currency. But in 1873 the banks in New York and in the large cities forced a new currency by the use of certificates of the clearing-house, which to some extent increased the circulation for the moment, and which for the time was a relief, to a certain extent, of the panic.

Mr. MERRIAM. Please tell us whether the currency during that panic was depreciated either in its relations to gold or its purchasing power; or whether, on the contrary, it was not improved?

Mr. NOURSE. My remark was that we could not get to a lower depth in contemplation of law. The actual fact was an emphatic illustration of the theory that a contraction of the currency improves its buying power.

Mr. MERRIAM. Contraction is a word that may be used in two senses; one relates to an amount of currency actually in existence—greenbacks and legal-tenders; and sometimes the word contraction is used in a sense of limiting that amount by law. You use it in reference to contraction which went on in the process of business. Now, state whether there should not be attached to the currency some quality which will enable it to meet this contraction to which you refer, so that the currency should increase in volume when the needs of business required, and again contract; in other words, should it not have the quality of elasticity?

Mr. NOURSE. I think there is no such proper term as elastic applied to currency. It is the use of currency more or less that has signified elasticity. It is a contraction and expansion of uses. It is possible to do the business of this country with one-fourth of the currency we have to-day. You may increase the amount of currency, as it is termed, to double its present volume, and therefore tend to increase prices very materially, and yet not facilitate the progress of business. The two things are not at all necessary consequences of each other. The currency, to a certain extent, is always a convenience. When short of the actual requirements of business, it is an embarrassment; but when it is equivalent to the currency of the world, any such embarrassment will last only a few months; because in the adjustment of interest and of prices it will flow in from other countries when it is upon a specie basis.

Mr. MERRIAM. Let me ask you one question more. Why, in time of panic, when there was a stringency in the currency market, did not gold flow in to fill up the vacuum? Why did not the clearing-house of New York, instead of providing for the certificates you refer to, substitute the use of gold?

Mr. NOURSE. If it had gone a little farther down, it would have come to that point, when a resumption of specie payment would have occurred without any resort to legislation. But the legislation of Congress for the last few years has been such that gold has become demonetized; it has become a subject of barter and sale the same as pig-iron or any other commodity; and, therefore, instead of being a help to paper currency, it is actually an absorbent, from the fact that it takes money to handle it.

Mr. HUBBELL. You say the late panic was a wonderful illustration of the theory that contraction increases the purchasing-power of the currency. Is it not a fact that in countries where a specie basis prevails a panic has the same effect upon the power of gold coin to purchase?

Mr. NOURSE. Yes, sir; but the deficiency is supplied almost immediately by gold flowing in from other countries; it is not limited to its own country.

Mr. HUBBELL. You think that your currency is redundant. Now, suppose of the forty-four million reserve, of which the Secretary has issued twenty-seven millions, what would be the effect if that currency should be withdrawn from circulation?

Mr. NOURSE. I think the effect would only be a wholesome one; but I do not think the twenty-seven millions which have been put out have so far gone into circulation as to produce what we term an inflation of prices materially. Probably it has had the effect of stimulating the prices of stocks, and will stimulate the prices of all commodities in time; but I do not think it has yet entered into the prices of the commodities of the country.

Mr. HUBBELL. Has it not had the effect of starting many manufacturing establishments?

Mr. NOURSE. I do not think it has. If Congress should declare that it was to remain out, it would produce an effect in inflating prices and enhancing the premium of gold.

Mr. FARWELL. You say you are in favor of a return to specie payment, and that you would commence in two years from now?

Mr. NOURSE. I do not mean to be understood as saying that I would commence at any definite date. I would now inaugurate measures which should begin to operate two years hence.

Mr. FARWELL. What I want to ask you is, what condition of things you would expect to have occur in the mean time?

Mr. NOURSE. Under the operation of the law, there would be an absorption of the available capital of the country into this new form of legal tenders.

Mr. FARWELL. In other words, you would commence changing the form of legal-tenders into compound-interest notes, and that would be synonymous with contraction?

Mr. NOURSE. Yes; but contraction would commence two years hence.

Mr. FARWELL. Why would it not be just as well to commence now?

Mr. NOURSE. Because I think the amount of debt in the country is too large. The business interest of the country should have time to see that the people must contract their debts.

I would like, with the permission of the committee, to venture one or two remarks voluntarily on my part. We have heard a great deal said about the debtor and creditor classes in this country, and that this movement for specie payment is made in the interest of the creditor class. Now, I assume to say, and I think I can convince gentlemen, that it is the producing classes of the United States who are the great creditor-class to-day, and not those who are termed capitalists, and who have the handling of the money. The savings-banks of New York and New England to-day contain accumulations of from six hundred and thirty to six hundred and seventy-five million dollars in trust companies, and elsewhere deposited; and there are very large amounts belonging to the same classes throughout the country, aggregating from one hundred to one hundred and twenty millions more. To state it very moderately, I think it is fair to say that there is held of the currency of the country, in private possession, outside of the savings-banks, $250,000,000 more, which will make an aggregate exceeding a thousand million of the accumulated earnings of the laboring classes held by trust companies, savings-banks, and in private possession, constituting a large portion of the most profitable loanable capital of the country, loanable very generally upon real estate; loanable more or less upon long bills receivable, and in the large cities upon first-class short commercial paper, the long loans, as they are called, in the event of a panic, being too slow in their collection. Then, besides that, there is also a great running-account between the producing classes and their employers, which is represented by the pay-rolls of the country and other unpaid wages. I think that amount, from a computation per capita, is not less than two hundred millions more that is also due from employers to laborers. There is also another large class of producers who generally neither receive nor pay wages—the small proprietors of shops and fields, who, with the members of their own families, perform their own labor. These own a small part of savings-banks deposits in the Eastern States; but there, and in a far higher degree in States where there are few or no savings-banks, they are owners of loanable capital to an amount, in my judgment, of not less than eight hundred millions, and, with the latter class referred to, one thousand millions. If, upon investigation, you think this not too large an estimate, you find that the producing classes have two thousand millions interest in improving the currency. On the other hand, the debtors of the country are largely among those who are counted wealthy men. They are men who want money to use in the active channels of business, not as producers, but as those who are engaged in moving produce from one market to another. We want the available capital of the country to effect our exchanges, and we want a good sound currency in the interests of ourselves and our children in the future, and not because it is for our interest to-day.

Mr. MERRIAM. Have not these borrowing classes felt crippled in making the exchanges you speak of, in moving the crops, by the small amount of currency there is in the country?

Mr. NOURSE. No, sir; not by any means. The difficulty has not been as to the amount there is in the country, but as to the amount there is in hand to be used for the purpose.

Mr. FARWELL. Is not that just as bad as if the money was not in the country?

Mr. NOURSE. Yes, sir; but with a gold currency you cannot cramp us in that way; it has not the power of contraction or expansion like paper money.

The CHAIRMAN. There is another class in the country deeply interested in the future earnings and condition of financial affairs: A young man goes West, and gets a piece of land, payable to a large extent on credit, running from five to ten years.

Mr. NOURSE. Yes. When our early colonists settled in this country their commerce was confined to a few centers along the Atlantic coast; but as colonists have gone West, where there is such an appreciation of capital that will pay for itself within three or five years, the result is an extraordinary competition for the use of capital in these sections, and that is what creates the rates of interest there. If a man can borrow money at 20 or 30 per cent. per annum and then make money, it is proper that he should do it; while in the East men find difficulty in borrowing money at 6 per cent. and making a margin upon it. These things are adjustable from natural laws. With the same collateral a man living in Kansas or the extreme West can borrow money in New York at the same rate as the man living in New York, but the collateral is capital. And while capital is congregated and massed in the East, it has precisely the same relation to our western country that capital in Holland and London has to our own eastern country. It has been proposed that our greenbacks and 3.65 bonds should be convertible and reconvertible back and forth. I wish to say to this committee that there is no measure that up to the extent of two hundred millions would more severely contract the existing currency and at the same time absorb actual capital in active use through the deposits in national banks by the purchase of commercial paper, &c. Quite a large amount of money of the savings-banks is in active use in the commerce of the country. Authorize the 3.65 bonds, and send them out from the Treasury, and they will immediately absorb a large amount of money seeking good investment. Where savings-banks and other trustees now deposit their money in national and State banks at 2, 3, and 4 per cent., they would rather have it deposited in the United States Treasury than in any private securities. It would, therefore, reduce the amount of loanable capital very largely in that way. I am inclined to think that the savings-banks alone would invest a hundred millions at once by returning legal-tenders to that amount; and the trust companies, trustees of estates, and national banks would probably invest a hundred millions more.

Mr. HAWLEY. That is, I suppose, provided they could substitute that for their reserve?

Mr. NOURSE. Yes; especially if they might substitute it for their reserve. You would find very soon that the whole amount of legal-tenders would go into the United States Treasury and never come out.

Mr. MERRIAM. The proposition before the House is, that as these greenbacks come into the Treasury the Treasury shall use them to buy gold and cancel 6 per cent. bonds, and throw them out again upon the country as fast as they receive them.

Mr. NOURSE. I would like to know who would sell us the bonds?

Mr. MERRIAM. We have the right already by law to call in a thousand millions of bonds now past due.

Mr. NOURSE. If they would allow the currency to stay in the Treasury, you would very soon have the currency at the price of gold, and a reduction of prices. In my judgment the result of this plan would be to bring on a panic such as would disable the Treasury from meeting its obligations.

Mr. DURHAM. What, in your opinion, is the volume of circulating paper now in the country in greenbacks and bank-paper?

Mr. NOURSE. I think it is fair to say that perhaps 2 per cent. of the whole of it has been lost; a very much larger amount has been lost, but it has been restored from the Treasury.

Mr. DURHAM. Under a system of redemption what do you propose shall be the amount of circulation?

Mr. NOURSE. I would propose no amount. I think it lies in no man's wisdom to say what is the proper amount; that will regulate itself as soon as the currency is put upon a proper basis.

Mr. DURHAM. So that you would have the currency of the world to redeem paper currency, and then allow it to regulate itself as to the amount which should be issued?

Mr. NOURSE. Yes, sir.

Mr. MITCHELL. Do you take the ground that the rate of interest is not governed by the amount of currency in circulation, but by the profitableness with which people can use that currency, assuming that there is no liability upon the subject?

Mr. NOURSE. I think that statement is correct; but I want to say that while it is the increased use of currency, whatever that currency may be, which raises the rate of interest, yet, when the currency is irredeemable, the expansion of the currency inflates prices, stimulates speculation, stimulates bold and rash risks in the use of money, while the competition it creates raises the rate of interest. It is through these indirect and secondary causes and influences that an amount of currency beyond the wants of business inevitably operates to enhance the rates of interest.

Mr. MITCHELL. Do you think an increase of the volume of currency tends to reduce the rate of interest?

Mr. NOURSE. On the contrary, it enhances the rate of interest.

Mr. PHELPS. In this direct and gradual contraction by making a certain proportion of the legal-tenders payable after a time in specie, have you thought how your theory in practice should be worked out?

Mr. NOURSE. We have thought of it and discussed it many times. One effect of the process would be to appreciate the credit of the United States so as to enable it to negotiate loans at from $\frac{1}{2}$ to 1 per cent. below the rate of interest which they now bear in the markets of the world, where capital is seeking investment; and therefore it is deemed to be safe to let this process run on with the certainty that the Congress of the United States can place its loans of fifty millions or two hundred millions, or whatever amount they may determine upon, at less rates than they are now paying. There is another advantage in the proposition presented by the Boston Board of Trade, which I am not here to urge, although I heartily approve of it. It was proposed that there should be, after two years, the option on the part of the Government to tender the holders of legal-tender notes 5 per cent. or 4 per cent. bonds of the Government, as the circumstances may justify at the time, because if the loan authorized should command more than par in the market, the Government should have the benefit of it. And with this slowly maturing loan the Government can borrow as much money as it chooses for 5 per cent. or less.

Mr. PHELPS. A great deal is said in the newspapers about what we owe abroad. Is it not a true principle of political economy to borrow where capital is cheapest?

Mr. NOURSE. Every merchant thinks it is.

Mr. PHELPS. Is it not profitable to borrow all they will loan in Europe at 4 per cent. for legitimate enterprises?

Mr. NOURSE. The principle is correct. Nevertheless there is a limit beyond which we cannot safely go, because we may accumulate such an amount in this country as to lead us to extravagance. My rule would be that when a good profit can be realized upon an investment or security, we are doing our country a service by borrowing the money from abroad and investing it.

Mr. PHELPS. If our credit here as a nation is absolutely good, is there any way by which we can legally prevent foreigners from holding our bonds?

Mr. NOURSE. I cannot imagine how we can prevent them so long as they can afford to give more than we.

The CHAIRMAN. Are British consols held abroad, away from Great Britain, to any extent?

Mr. NOURSE. Very little.

The CHAIRMAN. Why?

Mr. NOURSE. I think because there is abundant capital in England which prefers that as an investment.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the rate of interest of the Bank of France?

Mr. NOURSE. The rate is about as low or lower than in England. There is no fixed rate.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you recollect what the capital of the Bank of France is, and what is its circulation?

Mr. NOURSE. I have not the figures.

The CHAIRMAN. I see a statement here that the capital is thirty-six and a half million dollars, and that the circulation is something over five hundred and seventeen millions, or about sixteen to one. What is the difference between coin and paper in France?

Mr. NOURSE. Practically nothing—about 1 per cent. The reason, I suppose, is that the Bank of France and the government of France, on the occurrence of war and suspension of specie payment, retained at home all the specie there was there. The policy of the Bank of France was to keep it in their vaults and take the risks of war, while the policy in this country seemed to be to send specie away. Gold was demonetized here under the policy of this Government. I think it would have been a wiser policy for the Government to have negotiated loans until all the gold in the country should have been drawn into the Treasury, and then to retain it there as a basis for its issue of Treasury notes.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you read the article on currency in the last number of the North American Review?

Mr. NOURSE. I have.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you concur with that article as to the propriety of establishing State-bank circulation?

Mr. NOURSE. I do not.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is not the excessive circulation of the Bank of France owing to the necessities forced upon the French by the war?

Mr. NOURSE. Yes, sir.

Mr. MITCHELL. Are you aware that the Bank of France is already pursuing the policy of reducing the currency?

Mr. NOURSE. Yes; by withdrawing their small notes.

Mr. MERRIAM. Do I understand that you advocate, in resumption, the reduction of legal-tender and national-bank notes?

Mr. NOURSE. With a specie basis that would regulate itself.

Mr. MERRIAM. Would you now expand or reduce it?

Mr. NOURSE. I think it is impossible to hold our present amount of paper at the specie par, and therefore as gold comes in paper must be retired.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 20, 1874.

FREDERICK FRALEY, of Philadelphia, president of the National Board of Trade, appeared, at the request of the committee, and made the following statement:

The National Board of Trade have had the question you have now before you in consideration since 1868, when it was organized. I have, therefore, had an opportunity of knowing to a very large extent the opinions of the delegates of that body upon what seems to be involved here—the question of the currency of the United States. But I should say that during the whole of these six years the opinions of the majority of that body, and a large majority, have been decidedly against any increase of irredeemable paper money, but that measures should be taken to get back to a resumption of specie payment at the earliest practicable period. In the course of the discussion that took place in that body, all the various plans that are now before Congress, and many modifications of them, have been subjected to the scrutiny of the board. The debates upon currency generally in the National Board of Trade—which are published, and are accessible to the members of this committee—will show that nearly all these projects have been very carefully examined; any advantages they might be supposed to possess pointed out, and the defects of them very thoroughly examined. But the National Board of Trade has never yet been able to agree upon any specific measures which they felt authorized to recommend to Congress to adopt. At the late meeting in Baltimore the discussion was a very earnest one, and directed to the recent condition of things in our country. After very thoroughly sifting the projects now pending in Congress, tending, as is supposed, to produce relief to the people, the board, by a vote of 45 to 9, adopted three principal propositions and two subordinate ones, which are as follows:

"First. The National Board of Trade respectfully recommends to Congress that there shall be no further issues of irredeemable paper money whatsoever.

"Second. That, in the opinion of this board, it is the first duty of the Government to provide for the retirement and cancellation of so much of the legal-tender issue as has been taken from the so-called forty-four million reserve.

"Third. That it is the imperative duty of the Government to restrict its expenditures in every department of the public service to the lowest possible point; and that strict economy be instituted in all appropriations.

"Fourth. That Congress be requested to so amend the national banking law that the banks shall be compelled to hold the coin they receive for interest on their bonds hypothecated as security for their circulation as a part of their reserve, until their reserves in coin shall be equal at least to thirty (30) per cent. of their circulation.

"That a further amendment to the national banking law is recommended and urged, namely, that the word 'shall' be substituted for the word 'may,' as said word 'may' occurs in section 31, following the word 'Comptroller,' and being the twenty-sixth word from the end of said section; also in section 32, between the words 'currency' and 'upon receiving satisfactory;' also in section 47, between the words 'Treasury' and 'appoint' in the first sentence; also, in section 50, preceding the word 'forthwith.'

"Fifth. That as the fractional currency is largely in excess of the need of the country, the Secretary of the Treasury shall be instructed to redeem not less than ten (10) millions thereof, beginning with the fifty-cent issue, and pay out therefor one-dollar notes.

"That Congress be respectfully asked to consider the propriety of making provision, at the earliest practicable period, for retiring and destroying the fractional currency, by substituting silver coins therefor, in classes, as each denomination may be received into the Treasury of the Government, either from redemptions or in payments, beginning with the lowest denomination, and proceeding with the others as each may be retired."

These are the resolutions that were adopted with great unanimity by this body of representative men coming from nearly every section of the country, and representing, therefore, all shades of opinion.

The CHAIRMAN. In that connection are you acquainted with the gentlemen who were in attendance there, so as to give the committee some idea of their several respective occupations; for instance, what proportion of them were farmers?

Mr. FRALEY. As we understand the occupation in the North, I cannot say there were any. Representatives from the South and Southwest I think have stated that they were planters. None of them were present at the last meeting of the Board of Trade in Baltimore. I can hardly classify the members as to their occupation. Of the representatives from the city of Philadelphia, one of them has been engaged in manufactures for a great many years. Others were engaged in commercial pursuits. One of them is engaged more extensively than any other man in the country in brewing. Usually they were representatives of the men who are closely identified with what we call the business of the country; those who are engaged in most extensive dealings, and in the transfer of the products of the country, agricultural and manufactured, from one point to another.

The CHAIRMAN. Were there bankers and importers?

Mr. FRALEY. Not so many bankers as importers and traders and men engaged in the produce business of the country.

The CHAIRMAN. What proportion of merchants and traders were engaged exclusively in the domestic trade, and what proportion in the foreign trade?

Mr. FRALEY. I should say a large majority were engaged in what may be called the domestic trade of the country; that is, in the products of the country, such as corn, pork, &c. Comparatively few of them were bankers, and only a moderate proportion engaged in foreign trade.

Mr. MITCHELL. Was that body composed of delegations from the different boards of trade throughout the country?

Mr. FRALEY. Yes. The constitution of the board is that any incorporated board of trade or chamber of commerce is authorized to send delegates, and the representatives vary from one to two and eight to nine delegates. The New York Produce Exchange was the largest board represented there, and had the greatest number of delegates. The Chicago Board of Trade had, I think, seven delegates, and six in attendance all the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The conclusions arrived at by that meeting are embodied in this series of resolutions you have presented to us, and I understand they were very unanimously approved by the board?

Mr. FRALEY. Yes. The constitution of the board does not allow anything to pass by it unless two-thirds of the members vote for it. And these resolutions, as I have said—all except that one which refers to reserves of the banks—were passed by a vote of forty-five to nine, and that one was by a vote of thirty-seven to eight.

The CHAIRMAN. Was there or not an opinion upon the part of the board that the condition of affairs in the country now was one that required relief of some sort?

Mr. FRALEY. There was a feeling of this sort, as far as I could judge from the expressions of opinion of the members, that the country required relief, but that it did not require relief in contraction or expansion of the currency; that, on the contrary, the true measure of relief was for a period at least not to permit any increase of paper money, but, on the contrary, to endeavor to get back at the earliest practicable period to the point where we stood before the panic. Such, as far as I could gather, was our position there as the general opinion of the board. There were members there, of course, who believed that the true remedy was in inflation of the currency, in further issue of paper-money to any extent which could be put out and kept out. But the number of those holding this opinion was exceedingly small, and I doubt whether any two of them agreed upon any process by which this money was to be put out to enter into the circulation of the country.

The CHAIRMAN. What class of men were those, and from what part of the country did they come?

Mr. FRALEY. They came from the extreme West; men who seemed to think that the development of their country depended not upon the introduction of solid capital into their sections, but upon the introduction of that which they call money. And when they were asked what they were to give for that money, they replied, "We suppose we would furnish some security for it." And when questioned closely upon that, they said they supposed they would give State or county bonds, or guarantees upon their lands, as security to the issuers of this currency, whether they should be the Treasury of the United States, the national banks, or the banks under the free-banking law. They supposed they could exchange these credits which they proposed to raise in their sections for credits of another kind which they deemed more valuable, and which they supposed they could circulate as money.

Mr. MERRIAM. In one resolution you demand that gold, instead of bonds, be held by the Government, and be retained in the banks for future resumption. Has your board of trade ever considered the contingency of breaking up the national-bank system?

Mr. FRALEY. A resolution similar to that was adopted in Boston in 1868, with the view of satisfying the country that the national-bank system must some time rest upon a solid foundation than paper currency; that the introduction of coin into the reserves of the bank was itself a good assurance to the people that we were gradually preparing for a restoration to the specie standard of currency. In the form in which it is stated in this resolution, it simply provides for a substitute to the extent of giving a different currency, which the national banks are to hold as their reserves, and therefore which would liberate the greenbacks from the vaults of the banks. In this way they would enter into the circulation of the country and be represented by coin in the vaults of the banks held as their reserves. In this way the banks would only lose interest upon the premium of the gold. Such, I think, could have been said to be the conclusions of the deliberations of the late meeting of the Board of Trade upon this subject.

In regard to the issue of compound-interest notes to retire the currency, and all the other projects, they came to one conclusion: that they deemed it most advisable that we should endeavor in the first place to get back where we stood when the panic commenced, and having got back to that point, which they suppose might be accomplished in six or seven months from this, to take a start toward the restoration of a specie standard of the currency.

Mr. FARWELL. What was the authorized number of delegates in the National Board of Trade?

Mr. FRALEY. The authorized number was somewhere about 80 or 90. We had about 60 at our meeting in Baltimore.

Mr. PHELPS. I understand that the resolutions were adopted by a vote of 45 to 9 in an attendance of about 60, and that the largest number of delegates who could have been present was about 80. Was this vote taken by yeas and nays?

Mr. FRALEY. Yes; by yeas and nays.

Mr. PHELPS. Have you, or any of the other members, a list of the detailed vote as taken?

Mr. FRALEY. I have none. I think Mr. Randolph, the secretary of the board, who is in the city, can furnish it.

Mr. PHELPS. The representation, as divided among the States, would be about in what proportions?

Mr. FRALEY. The representation was based upon the number of members of the commercial bodies represented. I could, perhaps, from memory give you a pretty good picture of the vote. The Boston Board of Trade voted unanimously in favor of those resolutions. There were four members from there present. Two members were present from the Buffalo Board of Trade, who voted for the resolutions. The New York Chamber of Commerce had three representatives on the floor. I think two voted in favor, and one did not vote. The New York Produce Exchange had, I think, seven members present, all voting in favor. The Importers and Grocers' Board of New York had two representatives, both voting in favor of the resolutions. Philadelphia had six members present. I think five voted in favor and one against. Four members were present from the Commercial Exchange of Philadelphia, and voted unanimously in favor of them. One representative from Wilmington, Delaware, voted in favor of them. There were four delegates from the city of Baltimore. Three voted for all the resolutions except the one requiring the banks to keep their reserves in specie, and one of them voted against it. From Cincinnati I think there were three members present from the board of trade, and they all voted for the resolutions except one, who voted against them. The Chamber of Commerce of Cincinnati had four delegates present, and my impression is that they all voted in favor of the resolutions. From Chicago I think there were six delegates present, five voting in favor of them and one voting against. Saint Louis had delegates present, and my impression is that they voted against the resolutions. The Saint Louis Merchants' Exchange had four delegates present. Two voted one way and two the other. Kansas City had two delegates, both voting against the resolutions. The members from the Richmond Board of Trade were not present when the vote was taken. I think there were three present from the Board of Trade of Milwaukee, and they all voted in favor of the resolutions. There was one gentleman returned to the board from San Francisco, but he did not vote upon any question. I do not know whether he was in the board when the vote was taken or not. There was no delegate from Detroit, none from Portland, none from Memphis, none from Louisville, where the board of trade has gone out of existence.

Mr. FARWELL. Were any of the delegates instructed by their bodies on this question?

Mr. FRALEY. Not as I understand. This was, I think, the clear judgment on that question coming from the individual conventions of the members who were there, many of them with their plans. After a discussion which lasted two days, which I only regret the members of this committee could not have heard, after a very thorough sifting of the whole matter, involving all the principles you have embraced in the different measures before Congress on this subject, and which have been referred to by the gentlemen who have preceded me in this committee, they came to the resolutions which I have read as the deliberate judgment of that National Board of Trade.

The CHAIRMAN. You have no expression of opinion from the entire southern section of the country?

Mr. FRALEY. No, sir; we had no delegates from the South. Delegates from the South have generally been present in the meeting during the six years of my connection with this board. We have met there gentlemen from Richmond, New Orleans, Memphis, and other localities of the South, and, from my intercourse with them, knowing their views upon these questions generally, I am satisfied that if they had been present, the representatives from the South would have voted in the same direction with those resolutions.

Mr. PHELPS. Do they not want money in the South?

Mr. FRALEY. Yes. Now, having said what I feel authorized to say for the National Board of Trade, with the permission of the committee I desire to say a word or two upon other matters. I want, as the Board of Trade wants, that the currency of this country should be a convertible currency—convertible into the currency of the European states and nations, and of the world. And, speaking my own opinion, I may say that until we get to that point this country is in perpetual peril of panics and convulsions growing out of those causes, which are recognized everywhere as sufficient to create panics and convulsions that grow out of overtrading and abuse of credit. I think the only safe position for the diversified pursuits and industries of this country is to have a currency under control, which the feature of convertibility will give it. I do not think the troubles which are now supposed to agitate this country can be averted by an unlimited issue of paper money. I think every increase of the present paper currency is fraught not only with disaster to the business of the country in its agricultural, commercial, and manufacturing interests, but it is fraught with infinite peril to the Government itself; and whether we increase it through the agency of the national banks or by the direct agency of the Government itself, I think the process would be equally dangerous.

The CHAIRMAN. Why did your Board of Trade come here to Congress with a memorial? Why did you not, if you thought a specie basis was desirable, decide to go home and conduct your business on a specie basis?

Mr. FRALEY. We do to a very great extent in Philadelphia, New York, and Boston at this very moment conduct our business upon a specie basis. A very large amount of the products that come from other countries are at this time dealt in in specie. All the contracts are made payable in specie; and so far as these merchants are concerned, they know exactly what they are standing upon.

The CHAIRMAN. Why do you not introduce that practice into your business?

Mr. FRALEY. Because of the fact that the Government by its paper currency has stepped in; and the moment you pass beyond the line of the mercantile world, it regulates all the dealings in business, and a debtor in a hard place comes in and says, "Take the legal-tenders of the United States in the place of gold."

The CHAIRMAN. We are told frequently by gentlemen who come before us that in the rate of interest it matters not what we put upon the statute-books, that the commercial world will disregard our laws, and will receive all the interest they can get, irrespective of our leg-isolation. Now, why not disregard the legal-tender feature of our paper and do your business upon the specie basis?

Mr. FRALEY. Repeal the legal-tender feature of the existing system, and in less than six weeks, I think, you would find that practically the business of the country was reduced to gold.

The CHAIRMAN. Why do you not disregard the rate of interest?

Mr. FRALEY. We do disregard it in our purchases abroad, just as we disregard the usury laws; but, as I said, the moment a debtor gets into a tight place and finds that he can, by breaking mercantile faith, get around his obligation, he will pay in your depreciated currency; just as when in the statute limiting the rate of interest to 6 per cent., a man makes a contract for 12 per cent. and finds himself in a tight place, he tells his creditors that he will avail himself of the law and pay only 6 per cent.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know how it is in regard to the currency in circulation on the Pacific coast; is it not done altogether on a specie basis?

Mr. FRALEY. Yes, sir; and I believe they had no panic in September.

The CHAIRMAN. Why do you not do that in the East just as they do in California?

Mr. FRALEY. I think the people on this side have had a feeling of patriotism and sympathized with the Government, and, up to a certain point, have been disposed to accommodate themselves to what the Government had provided for them.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it not possible that there is something in the character of our present currency that is adapted to the wants of our people that makes it exceedingly popular with them?

Mr. FRALEY. I do not think that would be true, except for the fact that the currency is supposed to be secured by United States bonds.

The CHAIRMAN. We very frequently hear the expression from persons in all parts of the country that we have the best currency that any man now living can remember to have enjoyed.

Mr. FRALEY. I will agree to that, with this qualification: it is the best of irredeemable currency that we can have.

Mr. PHELPS. Did you ever know a man who was so patriotic, who had such an enthusiastic admiration of currency, that when you brought a paper dollar to him and a gold dollar he preferred the paper dollar?

Mr. FRALEY. No, sir; I have never yet met that individual.

Mr. DURHAM. You said something about a recommendation of a reserve of 30 per cent. in gold to be accumulated in the banks. I do not understand why you consider so great an amount necessary. In the country banks only 15 per cent. reserve is now required, and in the city banks 25 per cent.

Mr. FRALEY. You observe that this reserve is limited to their circulation. The present reserve is upon their entire indebtedness. The exact percentage, however, is not one that I would insist on. It was supposed it would require three years to accumulate this specie-reserve, but the exact amount is not the material point at all. Gentlemen in the Board of Trade who voted against the resolution limiting the issues of paper-money voted in favor of this, while gentlemen who voted against this voted in favor of the other resolution.

The CHAIRMAN. In your fifth resolution you recommend substituting for fractional currency silver coin. How, in your opinion, or in that of the Board of Trade, was the Treasury to be furnished with that amount of silver coin in place of the fractional currency, now amounting, I think, to about fifty millions?

Mr. FRALEY. There are two ways in which it can be furnished. The Treasurer receives a certain amount of silver and receives a very large amount of gold. The gold could always be exchanged for silver, and in their present relations it would be profitable for the United States to make the exchange and coin silver in place of the gold.

The CHAIRMAN. In the present condition of affairs our revenues are barely sufficient to cover the expenditures of the Government. How are you going to get $50,000,000 additional?

Mr. FRALEY. If I were to express my individual opinion on that subject, I would say that if the receipts of gold in the Treasury of the United States were not sufficient to pay the interest on the public debt and to meet the other wants of the Government, I would purchase the silver necessary for this purpose by issuing new bonds. I would begin with the resuscitation of our currency at the bottom, and gradually go up to the top. I think, if you will allow me to carry out this idea still further, there is at the present moment in existence in the United States, and especially in Canada, an amount of small silver coin that would surprise you; and if the Government of the United States should withdraw the fractional currency by substituting one, two, five, and ten dollar notes for it, silver would at once come into the country and supply the demand for the smaller coins without the necessity of any considerable amount of recoinage upon the part of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. Would not that be inflation?

Mr. FRALEY. No, sir. That would leave the same volume as at present, and very soon there might be a reduction by the withdrawal of one-dollar notes from the national-bank currency, compelling them to redeem the notes in greenbacks. Gentlemen will remember that at the commencement of the panic of 1837 we had a volume of small currency made up-entirely of silver coins. In less than two hours after the banks suspended all disappeared, and the municipal corporations of the country did what the Government of the United States has been doing since—supplied fractional currency by issues of their own paper money. In 1842, when the resumption of specie payments took place, these “shinplasters”—the name by which they had become known—were no longer used, and the silver coins of the country came back with as magical certainty and celerity as they had disappeared.

Going back still further, to 1813, when a suspension of specie payments took place, we had the small Spanish shilling and sixpence in circulation, and they all disappeared in a day. The result was at that time the issue of fractional currency in the first place by individuals, hardware-men, and retail-grocers. Everybody issued small paper to supply change for their customers, which was made redeemable for produce, and, in some instances, in money at the bank when a certain sum was presented. I recollect that at our house we had to go to work at the end of every week and sort out this paper and send it around in exchange for candles, sugar, and other things which the people who issued it had to sell. Afterward the State banks issued small notes as low as $12\frac{1}{2}$ and $6\frac{1}{2}$ cents; but when the resumption took place in 1816-'17, this fractional currency disappeared just as the fractional currency of 1836-'37 did. I think it is a great mistake to suppose we can keep coin out of the country by the contraction of paper circulation. I would venture to say that if to-morrow you were to strike out of existence all the Treasury-notes and all the national-bank notes in the country, coin would flow in from all parts of the world and supply the vacuum, giving us all the circulating medium necessary for the purposes of business. Such a measure would undoubtedly be attended by a great shrinkage of values and prices, but they would accommodate themselves to the smaller volume of currency.

The CHAIRMAN. Would it not also be attended by a very great bankruptcy? Would not people who are in debt be obliged to sacrifice property amounting almost to destruction?

Mr. FRALEY. Undoubtedly; and this is just the point to which I am coming. I say we, as prudent business-men, do not want any such violent results. We want these prices to go on gradually toward resumption. We want the currency strengthened by the application of the proper remedies, and not by aggravating the disease in the issue of more paper currency, putting ourselves at a greater distance from the point of resumption than we are now.

The CHAIRMAN. If I understand correctly your opinion, it is to retire the fractional currency as it comes into the Treasury, and substituting in its place one-dollar and two-dollar greenbacks, and that the silver would flow in and fill the vacuum?

Mr. FRALEY. Yes, sir. We had for a great many years in Pennsylvania, as was had in almost every other State in the Union, notes of denominations below $5; but our legislature, on one occasion, had a majority of hard-money men, and it passed an act prohibiting the issue of circulation of any note below $5 by any bank in Pennsylvania. The result of that was, of course, the withdrawal of all small bank-notes in Pennsylvania, and the currency, for the smaller denominations, became gold and silver almost immediately, so that it was the rarest thing in the world to see a dollar-note, except on the immediate northern borders, where the notes issued in New York circulated to a limited extent. And such I am sure would be the result now if we only have the courage to begin.

The CHAIRMAN. Was there any opinion expressed in your Board of Trade in favor of a return to the old bank issues as the currency of the country?

Mr. FRALEY. I think only one member, by the name of Taylor, from Cincinnati, did express the opinion that he would rather leave the matter of currency to the States; and we had another gentleman, who was in favor of the re-establishment of the Bank of the United States. The feeling was almost universal, however, that the Congress of the United States should stand firm at this time in opposition to any further expansion of the currency; that they should so deal with it as to make it better and surer than it is now; and if they have any regard for the real welfare of the country, I hope they will abstain from falling into the error of the late confederacy—an error which they undoubtedly inherited from our forefathers.

Mr. MERRIAM. I understand that the members of this Board of Trade are mostly traders in the products of the country?

Mr. FRALEY. O, no, sir; in Philadelphia they embrace men of all trades and professions in the city—merchants, manufacturers, and dealers in all descriptions of produce.

Mr. MERRIAM. You say that individuals in your Board of Trade now conduct their business upon the basis of contracts made in specie and paid in specie, the same the importer pays?

Mr. FRALEY. No; I did not apply that to dealers in our own productions. I intended to limit it to those who are dealing in foreign products.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 20, 1874.

JOHN M. FORBES, of Boston, engaged in general commerce, and largely in western railroads, appeared at the invitation of the committee, and, in response to their general questions as to any defects in the present financial system of the country and the remedy therefor, made the following statement:

Mr. Chairman, you ask whether, after hearing Mr. Nourse's examination, I have any remarks to make upon it. Taking first the subject of the late panic, I differ somewhat from Mr. Nourse as to its causes, or perhaps it might be clearer to say that I should state them differently.

The surplus of currency had for years stimulated personal extravagance in all directions, and borrowing in all directions, but most notably borrowing for the purpose of building railroads, some of them needed, but too many of them in advance of the needs of the country, so that gradually large numbers of speculators, and too many others who are usually prudent, had become overloaded with securities for which they owed the banks and others.

When the failures began last fall, the vicious system of lending the reserves of the country banks to the New York banks had created an immense debt, then based largely upon railroad-securities of more or less doubtful value. This aggravated an evil often existing just at the time when money is always needed by business men to move the crops and carry on the fall-trade.

The failure of Jay Cooke merely set the ball in motion. All the elements of a panic had been previously ready. The New York banks were unable to press their call-loans, for fear of ruining their customers, and thus becoming the owners of the doubtful securities which they held. Their capital, needed for legitimate purposes, was thus practically lent out on certain iron rails, railroad ties and bridges, and rolling-stock, called railroads, many of them laid down in places where much of it was practically useless. The banks probably did the best they could in temporizing with their customers and their own creditors, but in the mean time the legitimate borrowers—the business men of the country—who were generally in a sound condition, were made the victims.

You ask if Congress could have done anything to avert this panic. Had they carried into effect measures for resumption which they merely talked about or "resolved," the surplus of currency for several past years would not have gone into premature railroads and other wild enterprises, and the business wants of the country would have been amply supplied. In Massachusetts alone, within the past year, $45,000,000 of railroad-bonds have failed to meet their obligations.

From the lessons of the past we can get some hints for the future. Many call now for a further issue of paper to cure what is called the present stringency. The same causes will produce the same effects: First, a momentary ease in the money-market; then speculation; and, finally, a worse convulsion than that from which we are emerging.

Many demand an elastic currency, meaning various things by it: but the popular idea being that the Government shall stand by with another reserve of greenbacks to pour out at the discretion of the Secretary when the next panic comes. It may be easy to pour it out and water an already inflated currency by buying up bonds one, five, or ten years hence, at advanced premiums, but it will be far harder to get it back. Each step in our downward career sends us toward bankruptcy with an accelerating force.

You ask what is the remedy? To begin, without going into the general policy of paying off a debt in advance of its maturity, there can be no sort of doubt that we have been buying up our long bonds quite too rapidly, leaving the Treasury with too small a margin for contingencies—too small a balance on hand. This forced the issue of the forty-four millions so-called reserve, which most people think was by law bound to have been canceled.

If further tax seemed expedient, the first step is to sell enough United States bonds on the best terms we can, to withdraw, or, more properly, to fund, this forty-four millions, and destroy the notes.

The next, to take substantial and irrevocable steps to carry into effect the resolutions of Congress, in the direction of resumption, no matter how slowly or by what machinery it be done, but let it be sure.

A gradual absorption of the surplus currency now out by replacing it with Treasury-notes bearing a less interest, and allowed to be used as reserve by the banks, and also as a legal-tender, may be one way.

I favor the plan introduced in the house by Hon. H. L. Pierce, which is more gradual than any other which has been proposed; yet, when once fairly carried into effect, far more certain. It provides that, at the rate of three to five millions a month, the Government shall exchange for existing greenbacks new greenbacks, payable specifically in gold in two years, and on given days. If three millions be adopted, it will be two years before the first dollar is paid in coin, and it will take about eight years to pay off in coin the first two hundred millions of greenbacks, by which time it is believed that the growth of the country and its wealth will enable the remaining greenbacks to remain out as currency on a par with, and also gradually redeemable in, specie, if the expectation that it will not be called for prove unfounded.

Once get two hundred millions of gold greenbacks into circulation, no power on earth can prevent the nation which paid gold interest during the war from paying their gold-notes as they mature.

If the surplus revenues do not supply funds, it will be easy, when the nation is on the sure road to resumption, to fund the debt in bonds at a lower rate than we are now borrowing money at.

I favor this plan, but I care not what plan is adopted if it only leads surely and gradually to resumption. I believe our ship of state is now between two dangers, one of premature and temporary resumption, the other of indefinite postponement, gliding down the rapids into bankruptcy. I would deprecate too early resumption almost as much as too great delay; but I believe that whenever Congress puts into its measures of resumption the element of absolute certainty, we shall go, however slowly, in the right direction. The sound sense and prudence of our people will bring about practical resumption long before any of us, if we had the power of the Czar of Russia, would, to decree it by legislation.

One word on the classes and sections of the country which will be effected by resumption. There is not a shadow of doubt that the hard-handed, laboring producer has the first and deepest interest in returning to a sound currency.

Mr. Nourse has shown that the laborer is by far the largest creditor; but beyond this he is totally unable to take advantage of the fluctuation of prices caused by a rise and fall in gold.

From the Wall-street or State-street speculator down to the country store-keeper, every one but the laborer has some chance to catch the ball on the bound and profit by fluctuation.

The laborer, who creates the greater part of the annual wealth of the country, must take the prices which are fixed upon him when his weekly or monthly pay-roll comes round.

The capitalist who chooses to speculate can make more money out of a fluctuating currency than out of a steady one: he does it of course at a greater risk, and some of the players will always go under, while others come out millionaires; but the sure victim, the residuary legatee of all the blunders of our gambling system, is the laborer. Prices fall for him latest, while they rise soonest. So much for classes. Now for sections.

While every steady producing industry suffers by an unsteady currency, and by prices bandied about by speculators, the victims of the country are the agriculturists. The West and the South, being mainly devoted to agriculture, suffer most. Everything which they produce and sell is measured in value by the export-price, or, in other words, by gold; while every article they buy is paid for in prices based on paper, which are very much higher than the premium on gold.

Authorities differ as to what this difference in price is; but the best informed put it at between 20 and 30 per cent. higher prices than the mere premium on gold, which is all they get on their sales of produce based on gold.

The CHAIRMAN. I should like to ask you whether in time of money stringency or panic the laboring man is not the first man who suffers by being thrown out of employment or receiving in compensation for his employment something besides money?

Mr. FORBES. That is just argument; he is always the victim. I hold that stringency is brought about by unsound currency, and that he is the first victim.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you wish to be understood as saying that the late panic, or any panic, was either caused or augmented by irredeemable currency?

Mr. FORBES. I surely do.

The CHAIRMAN. Do they have no panics in Great Britain?

Mr. FORBES. They had panics in Great Britain in '44, '77, and '56, and it was because of the existence of credit which prevails there.

Mr. MAYNARD. They had panics as excessive as ours, did they not?

Mr. FORBES. I don't think they compared with ours.

The CHAIRMAN. Were they not in danger of a most disastrous one last autumn?

Mr. FORBES. Very likely; that is a matter of opinion.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know what was the rate of interest of the Bank of England?

Mr. FORBES. I think it went up to 9 per cent.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know what was the rate at Berlin and Vienna?

Mr. FORBES. I am not familiar with continental panics or their financial systems. With the permission of the committee, I should like to say further that a good deal has been said about an elastic currency, by which a certain amount of greenback-reserve shall be held by the Secretary of the Treasury, with power to put it in circulation when necessary and alleviate the stringency of the market. It seems to me that the great cause of the panic was paper money, and there is no currency so inelastic as paper-currency. When that is locked up by the people or hoarded by savings-banks, you have nothing to draw upon; while, on the contrary, when you are under specie payment and a panic occurs, it may be known in ten seconds all over the world that prices are going down, and specie will come in that forms a measure of elasticity when you are under resumption; and in my judgment it is the only elasticity of currency that is safe. I do not believe that anybody is prepared to put into the hands of any Government officer a reserve of currency, with permission on his part to operate with it on the money-market.

The CHAIRMAN. You have spoken of the farmer losing when selling his products upon a gold basis. I should like you to explain your position a little more fully. Take, for instance, a bale of cotton.

Mr. FORBES. I will explain. The export-price notoriously governs the price of cotton. A manufacturer must ascertain what is the price in Liverpool in order to regulate the price he is to pay in this country. Although the amount consumed here may be greater than that sent abroad, every manufacturer understands generally the amount of the crop and knows the surplus which can be sent abroad, and he knows what he can get for that surplus by putting it on board a ship and carrying it across to the other side, paying a penny a pound or the cost of transportation.

The CHAIRMAN. Still, I don't see how the question of gold or currency is affected.

Mr. FORBES. The point is that the farmer or planter who sells his cotton has to sell it at what it is worth in gold. If it is worth a sixpence in Liverpool, the farmer understands that it is worth that, whether in currency or anything else.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well; and our people have learned here to understand how much five pounds sterling is worth in our own money, and will very easily comprehend how much his cotton is worth in our American currency.

Mr. FORBES. That is precisely my statement; the price is regulated by the foreign price, and the planter gets, in addition to that price, the premium, whatever it may be, on gold.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is not the cost of domestic production increased beyond the premium on gold?

Mr. FORBES. Decidedly; it is increased by the fluctuation and uncertainty of our currency, which enables every one to get a little more than he otherwise would.

Mr. FARWELL. If your notions, as expressed in Mr. Pierce's bill, should be carried out, would you be in favor of doing anything with the present banking and currency system to prevent the recurrence of the panic of September last?

Mr. FORBES. I am not a banker, and do not profess to be skillful in regard to bank questions. The only thing I have seen suggested which commends itself to my mind is that which I think is provided for in Mr. Pierce's bill, giving the Government permission to use any surplus funds on hand at some central point to redeem national-bank currency, and after holding it for not over a month, call upon the banks to redeem it, and in case of default on their part to sell securities for that purpose.

Mr. FARWELL. If the Secretary had issued promptly the legal reserve in his possession, would it not have stopped the panic?

Mr. FORBES. I don't think it would have stopped it; it would have put it off a little.

Mr. FARWELL. Did not the fact that the New York banks issued twenty millions of circulation of their own in the form of certificates save the panic and tide over the trouble?

Mr. FORBES. Yes, it did for the moment. The banks practically failed. They had money of mine, and said they would not pay it to me, for fear I should make a bad use of it, but would give me a certificate. It was a temporary suspension, such as we had in '37, and such as we had in '57, coming upon a community suddenly, and inducing the people to take the certificates by the banks for a short period; but that is a very different thing from the Government stepping in and issuing a quantity of additional currency which it is very much more difficult to get back.

Mr. FARWELL. We have a bill before the committee authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to prepare, I think, fifty millions of greenbacks to be laid aside for a special purpose, namely, for issuing at 8 or 10 per cent. interest only when required to tide over just such a panic as occurred in September. What would you think of such a proposition as that?

Mr. FORBES. I should have a general fear of giving such a power to the Secretary of the Treasury, or any Government officer, to regulate our affairs. I should almost as soon put a Secretary for the weather, to pour out rain whenever we wanted rain.

Mr. FARWELL. Congress has taxed out of existence the banks of the State and left them powerless to provide for such a condition of things; and would it not be wise, therefore, for the Government to provide for such a contingency as occurred in September last?

Mr. FORBES. I think the people can take care of themselves better than the Government can take care of them. I don't believe in such legislation; however, I have not studied this particular bill.

Mr. FARWELL. My question is, whether in the event of your not being able to carry out your own plan, what would you then try? You believe in the elasticity of the currency with gold. Now, if you cannot have a gold basis, are you in favor of something else that is elastic?

Mr. FORBES. I don't see any remedy except in something leading to a gold basis. I have no objection to any other road which terminates at the same end; for instance, Mr. Sumner's plan of issuing compound-interest Treasury notes which should be a legal tender and go into the reserves of the banks, and at the end of a year, or at some fixed period, be funded in 10-40 gold-bonds; I don't like that plan as well as the one I have just indicated.

Mr. FARWELL. Do you believe that specie payment can be maintained in this country with the balance of trade against us?

Mr. FORBES. I think the balance of trade will depend very much upon the currency. If we have an unsound currency, the balance of trade will be against us.

Mr. FARWELL. The balance of trade is now represented by a foreign debt, which has been accumulating every year for the last ten years. Do you think specie payment could be maintained for any great length of time with the balance of trade continuing against us?

Mr. FORBES. I think not; but I think if we get our finances upon a proper basis the industry of the country is sufficient to keep the balance of trade in our favor, and that if any disposition is manifested to send over bonds from the other side for gold, the laws of trade will regulate it better than any regulation Congress can make.

Mr. FARWELL. If the balance of trade should commence to turn in our favor, would not the importations of the country be lessened under resumption?

Mr. FORBES. I hardly know how to answer that question, not being in a line of business which gives me special information upon these subjects.

Mr. FARWELL. Suppose that should be the result, would not our revenues fall off, so that we should have to resort to additional taxation to meet our liabilities?

Mr. FORBES. If the revenues should fall off, we should have to resort to some other mode of taxation; but I have no doubt that the wealth of the country, with any sound system of taxation, is sufficient to meet the wants of the Government.

Mr. MITCHELL. State whether, in your opinion, it is desirable to legislate at all upon the subject of financial panics, which may happen once in ten or fifteen years. Is it not better for the Government to disregard these things, and confine itself to providing a sound convertible currency? When we have done that, have we not done the best we can to prevent panics?

Mr. FORBES. Evidently. I can see no possible act the Government can do by standing, by as a dry-nurse to the commercial community.

Mr. FARWELL. Does not the Bank of England, in a panic like that of September last issue more currency and allow it to remain out until the panic is over?

Mr. FORBES. Yes, sir; they have done it repeatedly; they have done it properly; and the only difference between them and us is that we have done the same thing in 1837 and 1857, against law, but no suit has been brought against the banks, and so the matter has passed off; while in Great Britain the violation of its charter by the Bank of England is always governed by an irredeemable act passed by Parliament.

Mr. MERRIAM. Do you think it would be wise, in case of a panic, for the Government to issue fifty millions of additional currency, and thus relieve a stringency, rather than that the people of the country should lose a thousand millions in consequence of the panic?

Mr. FORBES. In my judgment it does not follow that the people of the country will lose a thousand millions. I should differ from you there.

Mr. HUBBELL. What, in your judgment, was the amount of loss to the people of the country by the late panic?

Mr. FORBES. If I were to go into that, I should say that whatever loss there was occurred in consequence of undue inflation previous to the panic. I think the panic was the legitimate effect of prior inflation. I have no data, to answer your question directly, which will enable me to state any approximate amount which the people of the country suffered in consequence of the panic. There is another point, if you will allow me: One of the causes of panic is undoubtedly the system of loans by the banks. The country banks loan to the city banks, and the city banks, having a surplus of currency, loan to stock-brokers and others, whose speculation brought on the panic. Some means of putting the reserves of banks out of their reach is one of the measures I would have adopted.

Mr. HUBBELL. I understand your theory to be that the people of the country lost nothing by the late panic; only that prices were reduced?

Mr. FORBES. I think they lost a great deal, and, as I said, in consequence of previous inflation. Whenever men have money burning in their pockets, they will be tempted to use it for railroads or any other improvement ahead of the times which will remain useless and unprofitable for the present; that is one of the effects of inflation.

The CHAIRMAN. How many days' work do you think the people of the country have lost by the enforced idleness of laborers?

Mr. FORBES. I should have to make a great many figures to enable me to answer that question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it not beyond imagination?

Mr. FORBES. Of course it is.

Mr. MERRIAM. Is it not a fact that this country met with a definite and positive loss by being obliged to sell their products in Europe at less prices than they would have done but for the panic?

Mr. FORBES. I believe that is true. Of course in the fluctuations there must be losses as well as profits. I don't believe in the late panic, if the Secretary of the Treasury had paid out fifty millions of currency, it would have saved the country from loss. I think the people abroad would have been shrewd enough to have seen the effect of that.

Mr. MERRIAM. They stood ready, however, to take our products at a fixed price, but we were unable for want of currency to supply the merchants with means to hold their products, and then they were forced to sell them at lower prices, the same as in 1857, when we were on a gold basis, and when under the panic, cotton went down from 15 cents to 9 cents, involving a loss of more than $50,000,000 in the aggregate to the people of the United States.

Mr. FORBES. In the forty or fifty years in which I have been engaged in business, times have constantly recurred when we lose money from stringency, and times have occurred when we have lost more than now; but I think, nevertheless, it has got to be left to the laws of trade. For the Government to undertake to regulate the gold would be like pouring on water, making it one moment too dry and another too wet.

Mr. MITCHELL. Let me ask you whether in the late panic, if our currency had been upon a specie standard, coin would not have flowed in from the rest of the world to fill the vacancy occurring during this time of stringency?

Mr. FORBES. Clearly that is the elasticity to which I refer, and which gives you the whole wealth of the world to draw upon by telegraph to come to your aid.

Mr. MITCHELL. Whereas the gold which came to the country during the panic was, instead of a relief, an addition to the stringency, in consequence of the currency required to handle it.

Mr. FORBES. Undoubtedly.

Mr. DURHAM. Was the shrinkage of the values during the panic of the products to be sold compensated in any degree by the shrinkage of prices of the products we bought? In other words, while we sold our products at less prices, did we not also buy at less prices?

Mr. FORBES. Undoubtedly at less prices for the time; but the difference was not enough to compensate for the shrinkage of values on the products we sold, because the people we had to buy from had all the rest of the world to sell to.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is it your opinion that if we should undertake to resume specie payment even at a distant day, our financial system would regulate itself in a short time?

Mr. FORBES. I think if the people were sure you were going to resume, if the time was even extended over ten years, I think the effect would be to regulate our affairs in conformity to it; that it would bring out resumption long before we should dare to legislate for it. I think the element of certainty is the great thing to be aimed at. It would not make money scarce for legitimate business; it would make it scarce for wild speculation; it would make it easier for the legitimate business of the country.

Mr. MERRIAM. You say there is no currency so inelastic as paper; gold, being elastic, comes in to fill up the vacuum, &c. If you should be satisfied that it was impossible to take any measures now looking to any near resumption of specie payment, would you be in favor of the method which would make paper elastic?

Mr. FORBES. I think the danger of any panacea for making paper elastic would require you to run too great a risk.

Mr. MERRIAM. Such as free banking, for instance, which would afford the volume of currency required in time of stringency, while practical redemption of itself would prevent any inflation, giving us just what was wanted at the time for the exchanges of the produce of the country.

Mr. FORBES. My impression is that it would not, but as I am not a practical banker, I would rather you would ask that question of some gentleman more competent to answer it.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 21, 1874.

E. B. WARD, of Detroit, Michigan; principal business, manufacturing iron and lumber; also engaged in shipping; in response to the usual interrogatory of the committee as to the defects in the present financial system of the country, and remedies therefor, stated as follows:

Panics are not caused by either specie or paper currency. We cannot arrive at specie-payments with safety under any system that does not embrace in it the theory of the balance of trade being in favor of the United States as against all other countries. We must export more values than we import, and pay all the interest that the people of the United States owe to foreign countries, before we can safely attempt specie payment.

The evidences of the present panic have been coming on for the last three or four years, and each year money has been closer, and we have had to pay higher prices for it. A year ago last December the Pennsylvania Railroad Company is stated to have borrowed a million and a half of dollars in New York City at 12 per cent. interest; and during the fall months interest from 11 to 12 per cent. was generally paid by people living outside the city.

The real cause of the panic has been the enormous expansion of our industries and the continued contraction of the currency and the concentration of all the surplus money of the country in New York for speculation.

I will now state the manner in which the stringency of money has affected the manufacturers of iron in the West. For instance, take a rolling-mill with a capital paid of $2,000,000. The whole money has been put into what is called the plant, the ground, machinery, furnaces, &c. In order to run such an establishment successfully, it needs about a million and a quarter of capital to buy ores, coal, and other kinds of stock necessary to work it. In order to obtain that million and a quarter of money, this establishment that I am now referring to has had to pay from 10 to 11 and sometimes 12 per cent. interest, including commission. The interest and commission on the million and a quarter of working capital amount to a larger sum than the entire earnings of the establishment; so that for the last two years no dividends whatever have been made, and no accumulations of any kind. Now, when a panic comes, and the banks and others who have loaned their money want their pay, even when paying these high rates, the banks refuse to renew their notes, but insist upon payment. They first threaten the managers with bankruptcy, or what I call confiscation under the bankrupt act, which is about the same thing. Then, when the mill managers are alarmed, they have some one to quietly come in and offer to buy out at a very great sacrifice some of the most important and valuable assets of the company, like the pig-iron or old rails ; and as an example of this, they have forced one concern to sell their old rails, that cost $50 a ton, at about $30 a ton, the establishment losing about $160,000 between what these old rails cost and the price that they got for them. While the cashier of the bank is pressing the managers, some friend of the bank is looking around to see if they cannot buy up the property at a very low price.

Now, then, to see how the thing works, you will be told that money is plenty in New York and Boston. Suppose a manufacturing establishment West wants to borrow some money. I take, for example, the Wyandotte Silver Smelting and Refining Works. They have a paid-up capital of $100,000, an additional capital of $15,000, which they have put into the works, and are entirely out of debt. They ask a New York bank to discount a note for them to buy ore to start their works. The bank will not lend to them on any terms whatever, because they say it is against their rules to lend to a local concern. I know nothing about the reasons for this rule.

Take another example : The glass-works building on the Mississippi River, just below Saint Louis, have a paid-up capital of $250,000, and have never borrowed a dollar. They applied to a bank in Saint Louis, where they kept their account, for a loan of $5,000 to pay to their men, and the bank would not lend them the amount, even with a good indorser on the paper.

Another example : The Milwaukee Rolling Company had a note of hand, made by the Northwestern Railroad Company, for $22,000, at four months. The note was indorsed by the Milwaukee Rolling Company, a concern with a very large capital, and which employs a great many men. The note was offered to a bank in New York, and was declined. It was offered in Boston, and declined at any price. Finally the president of a bank in New York introduced me to a man who was a director in the same bank, and who had money. This man said he would lend the money on a note with good indorsers at 12 per cent. interest. I am told the Michigan Central Railroad Company has had its paper sold or offered in New York at a discount of 3 per cent. a month ; and this company is one of the soundest companies in the United States. This is a very recent occurrence. I had some four months' paper of the Michigan Central Railroad Company, which I offered in New York, but could not get it discounted. I then offered it to Moses Taylor, and he said he would take it at 2 per cent. per month. I then offered it to the Second National Bank of Boston, and they would not take it at all. Next I offered it in New Bedford, and they could not take it. It was finally discounted at 10 per cent. and 1 per cent. commission by an outsider. That paper was made by the Michigan Central Railroad Company, and indorsed by the Rolling-Mill Company, and by E. B. Ward besides, making it as safe paper as could be made.

Here is a statement that was made to me, but which I do not know of my own knowledge. It was in regard to an iron-furnace near Saint Louis. The company had capital enough to build their works, got them in operation, and got a large stock of ores on hand, but were in debt for some of their stock. The bank holding their notes were going to force the company to pay them ; but finding they could not do it, they agreed to take their pig-iron, that had cost the company $40 a ton, at $27 a ton, making a loss of $13 a ton on their iron.

The banking concerns of the country are the only real monopolists in the United States. They are gradually drawing to themselves nearly all the values there are in the country in the shape of interest ; and as a sample I want to put down some figures.

The Merchants and Traders' National Bank of New York commenced operations in February, 1865, with a paid-up capital of $1,500,000. In 1865 they made a dividend of 10 per cent., and had a surplus of $150,000. In 1866 they paid 9 per cent. dividend, and had a surplus of $162,112. In 1867 they paid 10 per cent. dividend, and their surplus was $470,475. In 1868 they paid 10 per cent. dividend, and had a surplus of $502,345. In 1869 they paid 10 per cent. dividend, and their surplus was $613,090. In 1870 they paid 12 per cent. dividend, and had a surplus of $764,216. In 1871 they paid 12 per cent. dividend, and had $863,443 surplus. In 1872 they paid 12 per cent. dividend, and had a surplus of $984,092. In 1873 they paid 14 per cent. dividend, and had on hand $1,200,343 surplus. On January 1, 1874, they paid the semi-annual dividend of 7 per cent. and had on hand $1,482,352. Their average dividend was 10.6 per cent. per annum, and their average surplus was 11 per cent. per annum ; making 21.6 per cent. per annum for the nine and a half years.

The system of paying interest on deposits by the national banks draws nearly all the surplus money of the country banks of the United States to New York City, and it is there used for the purposes of speculation and extortion. It is loaned out upon call to those who are speculating, and when any one from outside wants to borrow money, they will extort from him the last cent they can get ; and if the banks themselves will not loan to the parties, they will then have directors or some friends outside who will loan money at enormous rates of interest, but always with the most undoubted security. No establishment in the West can procure money on the basis of their own credit for strictly business purposes at any price in New York City or Boston without some extraordinary collaterals that people generally do not have.

There is no large interest in the United States that is now prospering in any manner whatever except the banking and money-lending interests. The business of the Northwest, especially the lumber interest, the iron interest, and the shipping interest, is already flat and almost dead, and that solely for want of a sufficient amount of currency to carry on their business. The rolling-mills are shut up and the workmen out of employment because there is no currency with which they can be paid. The great want of the entire West is the want of currency. The steady increase of business of various kinds has largely outgrown the amount of currency that the Government has furnished us. The Government has assumed the absolute and forced control of all the monetary affairs of the country, while it is fairly bound to furnish all that is really necessary.

When the panic came on, the laborers of the North and the colored people of the South hoarded all the money they could get hold of; and we feel that the Government should furnish the necessary amount to keep the business of the country in operation, notwithstanding this hoarding.

The CHAIRMAN. In regard to the case you mention of the sale of old rails and other material at a reduced price, below their general market-value, was the only object to meet the present demands of the establishment?

Mr. WARD. It was because the concern was forced to sell in order to get its paper at the bank.

The CHAIRMAN. In regard to the refusal of the bank in Saint Louis to loan to your works, what was the reason they would not lend the money?

Mr. WARD. I do not know what the reason was. The probability is that they used it elsewhere more profitably. The works were willing to pay 10 per cent. for the money, but they could not get it at all. The Milwaukee Rolling-Mill Company, where Mr. Mitchell lives, have received accommodations from him to the extent he was able to furnish. They applied to the bank with which he is connected in the summer, when there was no grain moving, and obtained money, but in the fall all his money was loaned out, and he could not accommodate them. We then started to New York for the money. It is only a short time since I went to New York with a note at four months for $22,000, of the Northwest Railroad Company, and applied at a bank where we did considerable business for a discount. The reply was that they could not discount the paper at the bank, and I was introduced to one of the directors who had some money to lend. He said he would lend it for 11 per cent. and commission. We looked around a while and finally found a man who was willing to loan it at a little less rate. These are among the difficulties we have continually to meet in carrying on our business in the West. During the last four years we have not been able to negotiate any paper in New York for less than 10 or 11 per cent. Once in a while in Boston we have been able to get paper discounted for 9 per cent.

The CHAIRMAN. I see in the papers that interest is down to 7 per cent. and 5 per cent., and perhaps as low as 4 per cent., in New York and Boston now.

Mr. WARD. Certainly that is true. They will loan me money at 5 or 6 per cent. with good security, payable on call; but nobody doing business can afford to borrow money on call, if you will give it to him without interest, because no business man can always have his money on hand and use it too, and then ruin will follow when payment is suddenly demanded.

Mr. MERRIAM. Are we to understand you that those different companies with which you are connected, being perfectly solvent, and with large capital paid up, can borrow money at times when money is abundant, but cannot do it at the season of the year when crops are being moved?

Mr. WARD. We cannot borrow money in New York or Boston on any security, unless it is first-class railroad or Government bonds, at less than 10 per cent. They will lend on call at a less rate, but it is utterly useless for manufacturing concerns to borrow money on call. It will ruin them if they do it.

The CHAIRMAN. Why will they loan on railroad bonds when they will not loan on sound paper of the companies, indorsed in such a way as to make the security absolutely first class?

Mr. WARD. I do not understand the principle. I know the facts are as I have stated. They will loan on the bonds of the company when they will not loan on the notes of the company, although a corporation such as the Michigan Southern Railroad Company, for instance, is of course understood to be perfectly solvent. The country banks have always accommodated us as far as they possibly could; but when we go to New York, we cannot get the money.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you state what are your best impressions as to the reason New York banks prefer loaning on bonds rather than on notes of the same corporations? Is it because in case of default they can more easily dispose of or realize on the bonds?

Mr. WARD. No doubt that is one reason. Another thing is that money comes to New York from the banks of all parts of the country, for which they pay 3 or 4 per cent. interest, and are always obliged to loan on call, so that they can at once realize.

The CHAIRMAN. Please state whether the seeming reluctance to accommodate you with loans, and the high prices demanded, were, in your opinion, the result of your supposed necessities or of the limited ability on the part of the banks to supply you.

Mr. WARD. I have no doubt that it was on account of our apparent necessities, because I know that all paper coming to Boston or New York from Chicago or anywhere in the West is treated in the same way.

The CHAIRMAN. Please state whether, in your opinion, the rates of interest in the country are too high or not.

Mr. WARD. I think the rate of interest is too high. There is no kind of business that can permanently prosper under it. Unless a man has capital enough to carry on his concern profitably without borrowing at all, 10 per cent. will swamp any concern if a large part or even half of its capital is borrowed.

The CHAIRMAN. Suppose a man has capital; could he, in your judgment, make it more profitable to carry on his business or to convert his capital into money and loan it?

Mr. WARD. He had better put his capital into money and get 3 per cent. on it than to engage in any manufacturing operation. Capital invested in money is now receiving more than three times the rate paid by any kind of business.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you state whether the rate of interest should or should not be regulated by law?

Mr. WARD. I should prefer to have it regulated by law.

The CHAIRMAN. We are told that a regulation by law virtually has no effect, because people will evade the law and get whatever rate of interest the money will bring.

Mr. WARD. In Massachusetts, before the restriction of law was removed, we could get money at 10 per cent. In the Western States, where the rate of interest is limited by law, they can get money for 10 per cent.

Mr. HAWLEY. When you obtained money at 10 per cent. in Massachusetts, was not that above the legal rate?

Mr. WARD. I believe it was. But we could obtain it at that rate more easily before the law was changed.

Mr. HAWLEY. You mean that when the rate of interest is regulated by law, even when it is evaded, it has the effect to reduce the rate which would otherwise have to be paid?

Mr. WARD. Yes. In my judgment a law of the United States regulating the rate of interest in the country would be much better than separate State laws.

Mr. MERRIAM. Is not the instance you have given of the large amount of earnings of the Importers and Traders' Bank of New York an exceptional one, that being a bank with a million of capital, which has paid interest upon deposits at the rate of 3 or 4 per cent., and made its earnings upon the large amount of deposits received in consequence?

Mr. WARD. I do not know anything about that. I only state the facts as they are published in the official statement. We have a little bank in Detroit, of which I am one of the directors. We intend to do business there in every respect upon the principle of square dealing, but our bank earns 15 or 16 per cent. a year.

The CHAIRMAN. What is your capital and rate of interest?

Mr. WARD. Our capital is a million, and we charge 10 per cent. interest.

Mr. DURHAM. If the rate of interest is to be regulated by law, what rate would you fix?

Mr. WARD. It ought not to exceed 7 per cent. There is no business, in my judgment, that can pay more than 7 per cent. in this country.

Mr. MITCHELL. I wish to ask if the profits of your bank in Detroit are not derived from the more than a million of deposits, for which you pay nothing?

Mr. WARD. I do not pretend to go into the causes at all. I simply state the facts.

Mr. MITCHELL. If you had no deposits, but simply a million of capital, after paying your expenses, you could not make 10 per cent.?

Mr. WARD. Of course not.

Mr. MITCHELL. What I want to bring out is that the profits of the banks are made from their deposits, and not from circulation.

Mr. WARD. They are made partly from deposits, partly from the circulation, and partly from the interest they receive on the bonds of the United States.

Mr. MITCHELL. But chiefly from deposits?

Mr. WARD. No, sir; I think not. I think chiefly from the other sources.

Mr. MERRIAM. What is the circulation of your bank?

Mr. WARD. I think about $900,000.

Mr. MERRIAM. Do you pay both national and State taxes?

Mr. WARD. Yes.

Mr. MERRIAM. What amount of State taxes?

Mr. WARD. I do not remember. I know I pay individually $25,000 to $30,000. I do not recollect what the bank pays.

Mr. MITCHELL. If the Importers and Traders' Bank, of which you have spoken, have ten dollars of deposits to one of circulation, are not their profits mainly upon their enormous amount of deposits?

Mr. WARD. As I have said, I am not at all acquainted with these details. I only state the facts as they appear in the published reports.

Mr. HUBBELL. Would you recommend that the tax upon national banks should be removed?

Mr. WARD. No, sir; I would still retain that, but reduce their rate of interest, and make them loan their money out at rates that people can afford to borrow.

Mr. HUBBELL. Would you limit the rate of interest to 7 per cent., and still make them pay their present tax to the Government?

Mr. WARD. I should not like to give an opinion on that without looking the facts over very carefully.

Mr. FARWELL. Do you think the Government of the United States should interfere with transactions of individuals in money any more than they should interfere with their transactions in any description of pursuit?

Mr. WARD. I do.

Mr. MITCHELL. Would it not practically be as right in one case as in the other; would it not be just as proper to regulate the price at which you should sell pig-iron?

Mr. WARD. If we had a monopoly of the business, it would be. If banking should be made entirely free, that is another thing.

Mr. FARWELL. Suppose we make banking free; would you advise the rate of interest to be fixed by law?

Mr. WARD. I would rather have it fixed by law then.

Mr. FARWELL. Would it not be just as consistent for the Government to fix the rate of pig-iron.

Mr. WARD. I repeat, that if they would give me a monopoly of the manufacture of pig-iron, I would be willing to have them fix the rate.

Mr. FARWELL. Would you favor any legislation upon the subject of any kind of manufactures, for instance, requiring you to pay a certain amount for your lumber, or in any respect?

Mr. WARD. I do not think that would be good policy. I think money is in its nature exceptional.

Mr. FARWELL. If the issuance of money should be made perfectly free, would you still desire to have the rate of interest fixed by law?

Mr. WARD. If you would make money free, and let every State and every municipal corporation issue it, we should have money plenty and cheap enough; I am afraid too cheap.

Mr. FARWELL. Would you want a law of Congress to compel you to loan me money at a certain rate, whether you wished to loan it or not?

Mr. WARD. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. If I understand your idea, it is that inasmuch as the amount of money is limited and comparatively few persons can get it into their hands, that is a reason why it should not be placed, in respect to legislation, upon the same basis as other kinds of business?

Mr. WARD. That is exactly my opinion.

Mr. HAWLEY. What do you mean by banking being a monopoly?

Mr. WARD. I mean that a man cannot set up a bank of his own and issue currency.

Mr. HAWLEY. Suppose a private bank is organized with a capital of a million dollars, owned by a dozen men who have the entire confidence of the community. Suppose they get a deposit of $1,400,000. Now, on that million of capital they ought to make 7 per cent. upon the $1,400,000 of deposit. Reserving a sufficient sum on hand, they ought to make 7 per cent. on a million of the deposits; that would be 14 per cent. on the capital of the private bank.

Mr. WARD. As long as money is as close as it is now, I think that could be done. But when money is plenty, as it ought to be, they could not do it.

Mr. HAWLEY. You could make 6 per cent. very easily?

Mr. WARD. I presume so. The private banks get as much as 25 per cent. very often.

Mr. HAWLEY. There is no monopoly in respect to private banks?

Mr. WARD. No; there is a monopoly in the issuing of currency by the national banks.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am connected with a private bank. Do you suppose I make less on the amount of capital invested than my neighbors of the National Bank of Milwaukee can?

Mr. WARD. I do not know anything about your private affairs.

Mr. MITCHELL. I issue no bills; I merely bank upon the currency in circulation. Cannot anybody go into a private bank and transact business as profitably as the national banks can?

Mr. WARD. Perhaps so. What I said was that the national banks have a monopoly of issuing the currency.

Mr. MITCHELL. Are you not aware that your discounts at the bank with which I am connected have been always liberally treated, and as liberally during the last fall as at any previous time?

Mr. WARD. Certainly. I have already stated that you have treated us liberally, and that our local banks have done all they could to help us with money. But when we go to the great money centers, where money is cheap, we can never get loans for less than 10 per cent.

Mr. MERRIAM. Is not the reason why the rate is so high that they do not know the paper?

Mr. WARD. I think the capitalists in New York are pretty well acquainted with the Michigan Central and the Northwest Railroad Companies. There are thousands of dollars of the stocks and bonds of these companies sold in the stock exchange every day.

Mr. MERRIAM. Would it not be perfectly legitimate for New York bankers to hesitate to loan money on railroad paper without knowing whether the company was absolutely solvent or not?

Mr. WARD. I do not know what the reasons are. I state the facts. I only say that we cannot get money in New York for less than 10 or 12 per cent.

The CHAIRMAN. Could you, at the time you speak of, have borrowed money on the bonds of these railroads as collaterals on call?

Mr. WARD. Certainly we could. We did not want it on call.

The CHAIRMAN. Suppose you had money to carry on your rolling-mills and other enterprises without borrowing: could you, in the present condition of affairs, find market for your products?

Mr. WARD. The re-establishment of the general prosperity of the country would very soon start all the industries of the country to going again, and a sufficient market would be created. The difficulty now is that, with everything at a stand-still, people cannot buy the products of the mills. Emigration must be largely checked by the rates of money charged in the East.

The CHAIRMAN. Our theory is that we have been overtrading, and have had too much prosperity, and that we have built too many railroads.

Mr. WARD. There is no doubt that we have been building railroads a little too fast in the West, but I do not know of more than one or two that will not in a very few years be paying roads. The country has grown very rapidly, and with a continuance of the prosperity we have had all these roads will in a short time be paying—very much sooner than people expect.

Mr. HAWLEY. If this abundance of money which we have had is to return again, will not the tendency be to go again into building railroads?

Mr. WARD. My impression is that our people have had an experience which will confine them for some time to finishing the roads they have started.

Mr. MITCHELL. If it is true that our domestic manufactures have increased beyond the amount of consumption, is it not desirable that manufactories should cease till the home demand comes up to the supply?

Mr. WARD. Undoubtedly.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is not that true with reference to iron?

Mr. WARD. Certainly. And the reason is that the prosperity of the country has been so checked that people cannot afford to buy iron or use it.

Mr. MITCHELL. Then you think an abundance of money will stimulate the use of iron?

Mr. WARD. It would undoubtedly stimulate the use of iron and lumber and all other products.

Mr. MITCHELL. And also stimulate the cost of other productions?

Mr. WARD. That might be a result; but upon that subject I differ with a great many people. I do not think it is for the interest of the United States to force the price of labor down to the lowest penny the laborer can subsist upon.

Mr. MITCHELL. Your idea is that the supply of paper-money never can be too abundant?

Mr. WARD. No, sir; I think it possible to overstock the country with paper-money. Our laboring population are not in the habit of living upon nothing, as they do in the old countries. I would like to see our laborers have money enough to send their children to school, so that when they come to vote they can send intelligent men, like yourselves, to Congress. We have lived now twelve or thirteen years under what you call an expansion of paper-currency, about which so much complaint is made, and yet this country has never in its history progressed as rapidly in material and resources as it has since the war began. And in all that time it has had no serious check until this panic. The country has never before had so long a period of continued prosperity.

Mr. MITCHELL. And you attribute that to the character of the currency?

Mr. WARD. Not to the character of the currency. I do not think that has had much to do with it. I attribute it to the enormous expansion of the industries of the country and of its general commerce.

Mr. MITCHELL. Has not the extravagance of the country had something to do with it?

Mr. WARD. Yes, it had something to do with it, of course. But when people get rich they are very apt to spend some of their money. If they do not, it would soon all get into the hands of a very few persons.

I hereby attach the following printed statement, marked B, on, "The absorbing questions of the day," as an addendum to my testimony and opinion regarding the present financial condition of industrial interests of the country.

B.

"THE ABSORBING QUESTIONS OF THE DAY.

"Forced specie payments, or national and individual bankruptcy and pauperism vs. specie payments through the industry of the United States, with progress and prosperity.

"All testimony and experience combine to establish two important points:

"The first is that no system of finance will bring this nation to a specie basis that does not embrace, as its elementary principles, an excess of its exports over our imports sufficient to pay the annual interests due to Europeans from the people of the United States.

"The second established fact is (as shown by the census returns) that the United States never added so largely to its substantial wealth and national progress as it did during the past ten years of suspension of specie payments, and what is called paper inflation.

"During the war or inflation period our manufactures were doubled twice and a half; our railroad system spread with marvelous rapidity; our population increased in a greater ratio than ever before. These are the results of active industry; and our industry was encouraged and sustained by high tariffs on foreign importations,

"To day there are at least two millions of people in this country who are suffering the miseries of enforced idleness—a loss to this nation far greater than the daily average wastes of our war.

"What is the cause of this terrible stagnation in the industries of the country? Clearly the want of sufficient money, at fair rates, to keep the vast machinery of the nation at work; while our currency has been reduced in eight years from over $2,111,000,000 to $765,679,000, and of this last sum one-fourth the amount, or $191,415,000, is kept from circulation as a reserve, leaving but $579,264,000, for actual use as currency.

"This vast contraction, constantly progressing, while at the same time our trade, commerce, manufactures, and agriculture were as constantly enlarging, demanding more and more means of exchange in the shape of currency, must in the nature of things culminate in a crisis. This crisis came. Our industries and enterprises are all at a stand-still, and our united wisdom is now searching to find out, if possible, what caused the panic.

"The banking and money-lending interest favor the issue of more interest-paying bonds to sell to Europe, in hopes by this means to reach a specie basis.

"The more that experiment is tried the farther we should be from it.

"The only possible mode by which this country can ever reach a sound condition is to work it out by and through its own industry. The bullionists say reduce your labor below the European standard and then export manufactures to Europe. Is our Congress prepared to try the experiment of pauperizing American labor? If they believe they are, it will be well to also provide a million of foreign recruits to enforce the behests of the soulless money-lenders of the country; for no American army will ever stultify itself by adding to the misery and sufferings of their oppressed friends.

"It is time for the money-changers to begin to count the probable cost of their insatiable greed, while a vast and partly organized army of more than a million of laboring men are now waiting with deep solicitude for a solution of their present difficulties.

"Those who have been the active agents in bringing on our financial troubles purpose, if possible, to induce Congress to withdraw a large part of the remaining currency, thus leaving the whole country in a state of hopeless insolvency and ruin, in order to crush your American labor down to the foreign standard.

"This can never be done, and should not be if it could. Have not your teachers, your preachers, your orators, and your legislation educated the American people to dignify and elevate labor?

"Will they now submit to be pauperized to satisfy the greed of the monopolized money-lenders of the country? The reply is, 'Never! no, never!'

"Your bondholders and importers will ask, 'Are we never to have specie payments?' Yes, with the greatest ease, provided the proper remedy is adopted, and without detriment to any American interest.

"Let the Government turn square about and take just the opposite course it is pursuing. Go on with the public works; promote the great and partially finished national railroads, as England has done in India; increase the circulating medium to at least one thousand millions; issue two or three hundred millions of 3.65 convertible bonds to give elasticity to the currency, and give the masses of people an opportunity to invest in them; increase your tariff on imports from foreign countries; and if such increase does not check importations to a safe standard, instruct the Secretary of the Treasury to add to such duties 10 per cent. every ninety days, until our imports, including interest due to foreigners, shall be less than our exports; and the day that this system is put in full operation, and is known to be the policy of the Government, the paper money of the United States will at once be as valuable as gold, for the simple reason that the demand for gold to pay foreign indebtedness and foreign interest will at once cease.

"This policy, as a whole, will be met with bitter opposition and abuse from all selfish money-lenders; from every foreigner out of this country; from all importers of all grades, and from some simple-minded people whose reason fails to serve them. But, on the other hand, we shall set the whole industrial machinery in the United States in active and profitable operation.

"We shall spread content and satisfaction throughout the land, (money-lenders excepted, as interest will lessen as currency increases,) and we shall avoid the threatening calamities that idleness and revenge may at any time be precipitated upon the country.

"As our domestic financial troubles all originate in lack of money and currency to make exchanges, give us more of it, and the difficulty is at an end. As all the difficulties in the way of specie-resumption grow out of excess in importations and a great national debt held in Europe, put the knife deep into the cancer and cure the patient by high and higher duties, until our exports fairly exceed all our annual indebtedness to foreign countries. This is our only sure salvation; and the sooner the country comes to understand and act upon that theory the sooner we shall be a solvent and prosperous nation.

"It is not probable that many members of Congress can fully appreciate the sad and desolate condition of most of our manufacturing communities, and no one can unless he is placed in a position to realize, from his own experience, the difficulties that surround the managers of these great and beneficent establishments, many of them with thousands of able-bodied men, with their dependent families, and the managers utterly unable to procure the means for their monthly pay; and if they could possibly run their mills or factories for a time, the country is so depressed that there is no safe market for their products. Put yourselves in their places, and remember these are the men who are to protect and perpetuate this Government, and that their children are to be the future voters as well as workers of this great nation. Treat them as human beings, give them work and pay, and they will bear with patience all the other ills of life, and bless the land that gives them liberty and plenty. Starve and degrade them, and the curses of broken faith and base ingratitude will haunt the authors of their wrongs to their everlasting homes.

"You cannot and must not neglect or evade the great responsibility of this vital question. It must be settled, or the hideous ghosts of starvation, and the more horrible scenes of unchecked anarchy, will soon force the most indifferent to a realizing sense of its importance.

"Famishing stomachs and shivering limbs are not the highest grade of educators in financial morals, while such education seldom improves the forbearing or reasoning powers of their possessors. Our revolutionary fathers said this Government was established on the principle of the greatest good to the greatest number, and that there are times and circumstances when forbearance ceases to be a virtue. It is to be hoped this Government will never forget the corner-stones upon which it was founded, nor the ominous teachings of unappreciated forbearance.

"The urgency with which I make this appeal is prompted by the fact that nearly four thousand idle men, and over ten thousand of their dependents, to a great extent, rely upon my simple efforts to supply the necessary means to pay for the maintenance and labor necessary for their support.

"Experience and common sense indicate that the true remedy for a financial panic and its effects is more money. The cure for irredeemable currency in this country is to buy less from foreign countries than we sell them.

"The remedy for commercial idleness is cheap and plentiful capital and plenty of work. Any system, however cunningly devised, that transfers all the profits of industry from the producer to the non-producer is fraudulent and oppressive in its operation; and the great laboring interests of the country are beginning to discover that since they have destroyed physical slavery in the South, an almost equally objectionable slavery is gradually encircling the free men in the North. Peaceful but thorough remedies will cure the evils. A long continuance of the present stagnation and idleness will end in violence.

"No class of business in the United States has yielded a profit for the past two years except the lending of money in its various forms.

"The average net gains of national banks over their expenditures for ten years past has been at least 15 per cent., and in many instances 20 per cent. and upwards, while their capital remains unimpaired.

"The rate of interest now being paid by the people is rapidly transferring the whole values of the country to the money-lenders and bankers. No legitimate business can be sustained wholly on borrowed capital, if they pay half the present rates of interest asked for loans, except call-loans, which no one but a stock-broker can afford to indulge in.

"The rate of interest for money, in the absence of unusual speculation, is the fairest index of a sufficiency or security of money. When rates are low, the indication is that money is plenty; when high, that there is a scarcity. At present the annual rate of interest paid by the mass of business is not less than 12 per cent. per annum, and in many sections of the country 15 per cent. Inflation means needless excess; scarcity is indicated by excessive interest. We had over two thousand millions currency when we had far less than half the territory, about half the population, and less than one-third the commercial demands for money we now have. And we are gravely told that we are suffering from undue inflation. Your trade, commerce, and manufactures are starving to death for want of money. Can you navigate your navy in a mill-pond, or transport your nation's products across the Atlantic in a canoe? Yes, as easily as you can transact its vast exchanges with its present meager and inadequate amount of circulating medium. Four thousand millions to-day would not be so great an excess above our needs as two thousand millions was when we had that amount to use.

"The rates of interest claimed to prevail in the city of New York, or the abundance of money there, have not the least perceptible influence in the great country west or south.

"The following simple propositions, freed from the mysterious verbiage of professed financiers, can easily be comprehended:

"The Government cannot divorce its interests from the interests of the people. When the people are idle all revenues suffer—people and nation alike. Give the people the means of making their exchanges, and immediate prosperity will follow. Contract the present amount of currency, and open and wide-spread violence will probably ensue.

“E. B. WARD.”

Mr. FARWELL. Now, what definite remedies would you suggest?

Mr. WARD. My first remedy would be to prohibit national banks from paying interest on deposits. That would tend to scatter money now concentrated in New York through the country where it is most needed.

Mr. MERRIAM. Would not practical redemption in New York City do the same thing?

Mr. WARD. I do not think it would.

Mr. MITCHELL. Would not that bring deposits into banks like mine which are now in national banks?

Mr. WARD. I would be glad if it did, for we could borrow money from you if you had it.

Mr. FARWELL. What other changes would you suggest?

Mr. WARD. I think you require from the national banks larger reserves than are necessary. Then I would like very well to see some of the 3.65 bonds issued, so as to cause some elasticity when we undertake to move our crops in the fall of the year, and that there may not be this endless stringency in the money-market, which every year embarrasses us.

Mr. FARWELL. Would not that have the effect of removing deposits from the banks?

Mr. WARD. No, sir; I think not.

Mr. FARWELL. For instance, you have fourteen hundred thousand dollars of deposits in your bank, which you loan to merchants and manufacturers like yourself at 10 per cent. Now, these men have given you the use of their money and receive nothing from you in the way of interest. Suppose, instead of depositing their money in your bank, they could step into a Government depository and procure 3.65 bonds, with the privilege of getting currency for them when wanted: would not that reduce your deposits and limit your facilities for accommodating the business of the country?

Mr. WARD. It might, but I don't see how it is to have that result. I would as soon have greenbacks in circulation as bank paper, and when there is any stringency the greenbacks will come out again into circulation.

Mr. MERRIAM. When these men put their money into 3.65 bonds, they are obliged to draw money out of your bank and deposit it in the Treasury in order to get the bonds. How, then, does it not lessen your facilities, and lessen your ability to accommodate the business of the country?

Mr. WARD. I don't think it would have that effect; I should be sorry if it would. I don't want to cripple the banks, for I have an interest in them.

Mr. MERRIAM. While the money of the people of Detroit is deposited with you, you are simply gathering it up and placing it where it can be used for the benefit of the industries of Detroit. Are not these facilities lessened, and your power to accommodate the business of the community lessened, by locking up this money in the Treasury?

Mr. WARD. I do not think, while these industries are paying 7 or 8 per cent., the owners of the money will be likely to lock it up in the Treasury at 3.65 per cent.

Mr. FARWELL. You do not pay any interest on the deposits which you receive from A, B, C, and D. Now, suppose these parties, instead of depositing their money with you and receiving no interest from it, deposit it in the Treasury and get these interest-bearing bonds?

Mr. WARD. They will not send it to Washington or buy 3.65 bonds until the rate of interest comes down below or to 3.65 per cent. The large dealers of our towns do not generally receive interest on their deposits, nor would they, under any circumstances. I have kept a bank account for very many years, but I have never received interest on any money deposited by me.

Mr. FARWELL. What do you think would be the effect of free banking?

Mr. WARD. I think it would increase the currency very much. I do not want you to understand, however, that I am an expert in regard to banking matters, for I am not.

Mr. HUBBELL. What would be your idea of the Government allowing the banks to issue at par instead of 90 per cent., as at present?

Mr. WARD. I think the effect would be good if the Government bonds are not worth par. I do not know what they are worth.

The CHAIRMAN. If I understand you, your personal interests are identified with the money-borrowing portion of the community?

Mr. WARD. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And your judgment is that the volume of the currency in the country is largely insufficient to meet the wants of the legitimate business of the country; and, further, that what currency we have is too largely concentrated in the city of New York and in the hands of persons who use it for their own advantage, and to the prejudice and inconvenience of the industries of the inland country?

Mr. WARD. Yes, sir. The industries of the West cannot avail themselves of surplus money in New York to any extent whatever. If they borrow money there, it will be at rates that would ultimately ruin them.

The CHAIRMAN. We are sometimes told that the reason why there is no money in your country and mine is that there is no capital there. What have you to say upon that subject?

Mr. WARD. Well, I think there is a little capital in the West. I think I have seen evidences of the existence of some capital in Chicago and other places.

Mr. MERRIAM. Is it not your opinion that capital in the West is invested in enterprises which pay larger dividends than the banks, and is therefore not put into the banks, and does not that account to a certain extent for the scarcity of currency there?

Mr. WARD. Perhaps so. In regard to the amount of capital invested in the West, let me say that the industries I represent have cost, in actual cash capital, about $5,800,000; but they are obliged to some extent, nevertheless, to borrow money. There is, however, that amount of actual capital put into the plant, into the factories, rolling-mills, &c. I give that as an illustration of the question whether there is any capital there, and I represent but a small fraction of the whole. When the people of the West made their investments in manufactures, they were encouraged by high tariffs on imports, and money for such investments was at that time obtainable at moderate rates. They believed that manufacturing would pay better than banking; but they had scarcely got their works in operation before the Government began to reduce the tariff on their goods and contract the currency, both working together to embarrass and ultimately ruin their enterprises. This is the third time, since my recollection, that this Government has promoted by high tariffs large investments in manufacturing; and about the time their works got fairly in operation, tariffs or financial laws have been so changed as to destroy their virtue. We supposed the war had tended to educate Congress to the true interests of the country, but find, to our cost, that, about the time we expect to make our works profitable, the foundations to all our enterprises are destroyed by those who should be our staunchest supporters—the National Government.

Mr. MERRIAM. Is there not a larger proportion of capital in the West invested to-day in business enterprise there than in banks, while in New York there is a larger proportion invested in banks, which enables them to command the money market?

Mr. WARD. Undoubtedly that is true to some extent.

Mr. MERRIAM. Would it not be better for you gentlemen in the West to put more money into banks, so as to enable you to get your discount at home?

Mr. WARD. Very likely; but then the Government steps in and says we shall not have the circulation.

Mr. MERRIAM. Suppose we give you free banking?

Mr. WARD. That will help us somewhat.

Mr. HAWLEY. Do you think it would be better for the country to have our currency convertible money—money equal to specie?

Mr. WARD. If it could be done safely it should be done, but I do not think it is essential to the interests of the country that we should have specie money. We have worked under this currency for the last fifteen years, and have progressed more rapidly than ever before in all the elements that constitute a great nation.

Mr. HAWLEY. Is there not danger that by extending this volume of irredeemable paper we shall indefinitely postpone the event of getting back to specie payment?

Mr. WARD. In the first place, a country that is prosperous can pay all its taxes and all its debts better than one that is prostrate. A country without money cannot pay its debts and cannot be prosperous. The only way to reach specie payments is, in my judgment, to check by high duties the excessive imports from foreign countries. It is our excessive imports that prevent specie payment, and not excess of currency. Our currency was never so good under any system as it is at present, and never satisfied the people so well. The only defect is, there is not enough of it to carry on our business. The people care nothing about specie; they want something to make exchanges with.

Mr. HAWLEY. Do you think the issue of more irredeemable paper will bring about an apparent or real prosperity?

Mr. WARD. I have no doubt that it will add to our real prosperity. I believe if Mr. Richardson had issued his forty-four millions reserve just before the panic, it would have averted the panic for this year. The business of the country was growing rapidly, and the panic might have come next year.

Mr. HAWLEY. Some gentlemen have advocated a plan by which we shall issue money permanently inconvertible, with simply the stamp of one dollar or two dollars, or whatever the denomination may be, for the business of the country. Do you think that would conduce to the prosperity of the country?

Mr. WARD. Not more than the present arrangement of currency. When the panic came on there was nobody who wanted gold; they wanted greenbacks.

Mr. HAWLEY. The plan I speak of is urged by able men, who propose to issue a currency that shall be irredeemable on its face, instead of the present one which promises to pay. Would you be in favor of that?

Mr. WARD. I do not think an unlimited issue of currency would be a good thing for the country, and I should rather have a currency that contained a promise to pay.

Mr. HAWLEY. But you don't want the time fixed when the promise is to be redeemed?

Mr. WARD. Not at once.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is not the difficulty the West labors under a want of sufficient floating capital?

Mr. WARD. Yes, sir; that is the great difficulty. During the war, when there was a large amount of currency afloat, we could get what money we needed. But gradual contraction has culminated in withdrawing too much circulating medium, and now it is impossible to get money in any amount needed to carry forward our most important enterprises, and our people are idle and disaffected in consequence.

There is no remedy for irredeemable currency but by lessening our imports from foreign countries to such an extent as will enable our exports to pay for our imports and the interest annually accruing to foreigners from the United States.

LESTER TAYLOR, of Cincinnati, wholesale commission business in domestic goods, appeared at the invitation of the committee, and, in response to the general question as to any defects in our financial system and the remedy therefor, made the following statement:

I think we have more paper money than we need. It is not possible, however, to determine exactly what volume of currency is required until we come to specie payments; but my belief is that we have more paper money than the commerce of the country legitimately requires, and that it is this ascendancy of paper money which has stimulated speculation, which was remotely the cause of the late panic. I believe, however, that you cannot adopt any system which will prevent panics with a people of the active, restless, Anglo-Saxon race. They will always abuse their credit. If we had nothing but a metallic currency, we would have credit panics; but I think this was increased by the unhealthy stimulus of the redundant currency, which induced our people to go into a variety of speculations that were not profitable, but which abuse withdrew money from the legitimate industrial pursuits of the country. In the recent meeting of the National Board of Trade, I was a member of the committee which made the report that has been presented here, and we unanimously agreed that it was no time now to fix any date for specie resumption. We differed widely in regard to the practical time. What we deemed it wise to enter upon now was to prevent suspension and to bring back the currency of the country to a condition occupied before the panic, and to compel the banks to retain the coin received by them in payment of interest on their bonds. After the country should have reached that point we could then present some preparatory measures for resumption. It seems to be the conviction of the members there that it was not possible to restore a specie standard and continue it without preparatory measures. This plan of issuing 3.65 convertible bonds came before the committee and before the board, but it received very little support. It was fully explained, but it was condemned on the ground that it would place it in the power of combinations of men in New York to make money easy or tight, just as they wished, by locking up the greenbacks or setting them afloat. Then you must remember that every dollar of greenbacks which under the present law constitutes the reserves of the national banks represents five dollars of currency. There was a plan presented by Mr. Chittenden, of New York, and advocated with a good deal of effect by him, which I think he said was the plan of a member of this committee—I think of Mr. Merriam, of New York—embracing what was called practical redemption of bank-notes, and also the idea of free banking. That plan received no considerable favor in the Board of Trade, for the reason that the impression prevailed that it would really become a scheme for inflation; that the practical redemption would amount to very little, while the free banking would promote inflation. It was remarked that the power of redemption was already in the hands of the bankers in New York, if they would only assort their bills and send them home as they ought to do. In regard to the recommendation that the banks should be compelled to hold the coin received by them for interest, there was great difference of opinion, and it was passed by a vote of thirty-seven to eighteen. Several members voted against it on the ground that this was an expansive measure, which to a certain extent is true, because it would release about twenty-one millions of greenbacks annually; but it seemed to be the sense of the committee and of the board that the conservative operation of hoarding this gold would prevent and counteract the possible influence of inflation, and that we must in some way or other begin to collect gold preparatory to returning to a specie standard by and by; and it was said that the national banks would never collect any considerable amount of gold until they are compelled to do so by law. I know that is the effect in respect to the national banks in the West, and especially in my own State. Indeed, it was stated that a practice exists among the small banks of borrowing greenbacks to show the examiner when he comes about, while they will not be able to borrow gold. If the reserve is to be kept in gold, the result will be also to force the money of the banks, which are weak and on the verge of failure now, into liquidation. I may say here that after the meeting of the National Board of Trade in Chicago, we discussed this question of the resumption of specie-payments and the currency question for about four weeks in the Board of Trade at Cincinnati. The president of that board is an inflationist, and he appointed a committee to report in favor of the further issue of currency. To that policy he found great opposition in the board, and it was discussed every two days for nearly four weeks, when two results were finally adopted: one was that Congress, by all this legislation touching the currency and financial matters, should look to the restoration of the specie-standard; another was that it was not practicable at the present time to restore the currency of the country to that standard, and that no effort should be made to restore it and maintain it until the country had got into that condition where it could glide from a paper-currency into a specie-currency without any serious interference with its business. The second resolution expressed the disapproval of the board to the issue of any further paper-money. That was thoroughly discussed, and adopted by a vote of ten to one. Prior to the panic our merchants and business-men were pretty nearly equally divided on the question whether an effort should be made to return to a specie basis or not; but since the panic the sentiment has become almost universal that something should be done to restore the specie-standard. We have now very few men crying out for more currency, and they are men who are always shinning it; almost always overtrading and losing their credit. One of our bank presidents told me not long ago that they had come to look with distrust on any man who was the advocate of the expansion of the currency; that it was an indication that he was overtrading and desiring more money to tide over something. I think that class of people now find great difficulty in obtaining discounts. I am not a national banker; I own no national-bank stock; but I had no difficulty in borrowing money before I came down here at $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. for four months, with the right on my part to pay a part or the whole of it at any time I chose. Money in Cincinnati is abundant; the deposits in our banks are larger than before the panic, and yet we are carrying nearly our entire pork-crop.

The CHAIRMAN. How much of your bank deposits represent debt and how much cash?

Mr. TAYLOR. I really cannot separate them in that way. The bank where I do business has a capital of $850,000, and before I came here had a deposit account of about a million and three-quarters.

The CHAIRMAN. What was its discount line?

Mr. TAYLOR. I think about a million and three-quarters. Our banks are very conservative, and do not go to the extreme point in their discounts.

Mr. HUBBELL. Let me ask you whether the loan you spoke of was made in a national or private bank?

Mr. TAYLOR. In a national bank.

The CHAIRMAN. When you negotiate a loan with your banks, are you expected to allow any portion of the loan to remain on deposit?

Mr. TAYLOR. Not a dollar of it. I have had my bank account closed at night with not $50 in the bank. I wish to say, in relation to the usury laws, that I think it would be most unwise for the Congress of the United States to interfere in any way in regard to the usury laws. I think that should be left to the States; but I should be very glad to see the States repeal their usury laws altogether. I don't believe it would make money cheaper than it is now, but it would induce the investment of large amounts of money by foreign insurance companies, who are afraid now to invest because of the usury laws. Our legal interest in Ohio is 6 per cent., but we may by agreement increase the rate to 8.

The CHAIRMAN. If these foreign insurance companies will not loan their money at 6 per cent., why would they do it at lower rates?

Mr. TAYLOR. I do not think it would bring the rates below 6 per cent.: 6 per cent. is a good deal below the average rate of interest in the West.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the effect of the usury law is that it limits it to a rate below that figure?

Mr. TAYLOR. No, sir; the usury law is not obeyed at all in the general commercial transactions; it is only obeyed by a class of timid men, who are not willing to take the risk. If it were repealed, I think it would attract capital to the State.

Mr. FARWELL. You think there is currency enough in circulation to do the legitimate business of the country; and your further theory I understand to be that it makes little difference in your business whether money is plenty or scarce?

Mr. TAYLOR. No, sir; it makes great difference with us. We advance a good deal in money on goods coming to us from the South. If we can borrow money at 6 per cent. and loan it at 10 per cent., we can make a profit by it. I may say in this connection that the business of manufacture has been in an unsatisfactory condition for several years, and we attribute it to an overproduction in this country, particularly in reference to cotton goods and iron. Several years ago that was remedied by the general consent of the cotton-mills to suspend the work for several months, and this enforced suspension by the late panic has had a good effect in that respect in the mill with which I am connected. In Pennsylvania we have had no dividends for two or three years, and we attribute it to the overtrading in our line of business.

The CHAIRMAN. The National Board of Trade were unanimously of the opinion it would be better to get back upon a specie basis. Why did not you, instead of passing resolutions looking to a memorial to Congress, adopt a resolution that you would henceforth conduct your business upon a specie basis?

Mr. TAYLOR. It is not possible to conduct a domestic business upon a specie basis.

The CHAIRMAN. Are not the people within your vicinity perfectly well satisfied with the currency we actually have?

Mr. TAYLOR. Entirely. It is a great improvement on the old currency. I want to say just here that Mr. Fraley yesterday made a great mistake when he said I was in favor of going back to the old State banks. What I said was that I would rather go back to old State banks than that the United States should remain forever in the banking business.

Mr. MITCHELL. State whether the national banks, while they are a monopoly, are not subject to penalties under the law which do not apply to private banks.

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes ; but I think the national banks in our vicinity evade the law. I think that national banking in Cincinnati is not nearly so profitable as private banking. The taxes of the United States and of the State amount to about $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. upon their capital and circulation, while our private banks, under a peculiar provision of the State constitution, almost altogether avoid taxation. It is notorious that one of the banks of Cincinnati, with a capital of a million dollars, six months ago went out of national banking and went into the private banking business. Our State tax on national banks is about $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., but they cannot tax the State banks, because their investments are mostly in United States bonds, which are free from taxation, in the hands of private individuals.

The CHAIRMAN. A national bank ceasing to be a national bank, and going into private banking business, does so with every advantage except that of circulation, and is able to do a much more profitable business than by continuing a national bank ?

Mr. TAYLOR. That is true.

Mr. HUBBELL. You say that on this 3.65 plan there is danger of a locking-up of currency in New York. Would that danger exist if the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized to fund these greenbacks into 5 per cent. bonds ?

Mr. TAYLOR. The Secretary of the Treasury would then have to be constantly on the look-out. The great objection, however, was against the Government of the United States binding itself to pay interest upon the idle money of capitalists.

Mr. HUBBELL. You say that for every dollar of greenbacks withdrawn it lessens bank credit $5. What would be the effect if the Secretary should withdraw the twenty-nine millions of the forty-four millions which have been issued ?

Mr. TAYLOR. It would reduce the bank credit of the country a hundred and forty or one hundred and fifty millions, and would more than absorb the idle money now lying in the banks.

The CHAIRMAN. Upon Mr. Hubbell's theory, you are merely substituting one form of debt for another. The Government pays you 3.65 in currency, and with the proceeds takes up another class of bonds on which they are paying 6 per cent. in gold. Was that view considered in your board ?

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes, sir ; that view was considered very thoroughly, and very ably argued.

Mr. HAWLEY. You do not mean that that twenty-nine millions has actually got into the bank reserves there ; that it has actually expanded our credit five to one ?

Mr. TAYLOR. No, sir ; I do not think it has yet, but if it remains out it will cause expansion.

The CHAIRMAN. Did I understand you that Mr. Merriam's bill was discussed before the National Board of Trade ?

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes, sir ; and the principal objection was that under the national-bank law, as it exists now, this redemption could be brought about if the banks chose to do it.

Mr. MERRIAM. You must assume, however, as a fact, that they never have done it, and will not do it.

Mr. TAYLOR. We assumed that, but it was also argued that if they did not do it they had no cause for complaint.

The CHAIRMAN. As I understand, Mr. Merriam's theory is that his plan of redemption would be a means of preventing a plethora of circulation. The answer I would make to that is that the fact of a failure on the part of the banks to enforce practical redemption is an evidence that there has been no plethora of circulation.

Mr. TAYLOR. I think if it had become so abundant as to be oppressive they would enforce that provision. There was another objection to his plan of redemption in New York, that it would operate as a further concentration of the money of the country in New York. There was considerable feeling about that.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 22, 1874.

JOHN CUMMINGS, in the shoe and leather business, and president of the Shawmut Bank, Boston, appeared on the invitation of the committee, and in response to their general question as to the defects of the present system of finance and the remedies therefor, made the following statement :

I heard the statement of Mr. Kidder, and believe, with him, that an improvement could be made in the present system of banking and finances of the country, and wish to say, what he neglected to say, that I think a change of law should be made in regard to the bank reserves which would strengthen the finances of the country. I believe the reserves required for each bank should be kept in the vaults of that bank, so that they may be available any time it may become necessary, and that this will tend to produce the desired elasticity in the currency. During the late panic not less than fifty millions, as I understand, of the reserves of the banks of the country was locked up in New York. I believe if that money had been kept out of New York, while we may have had a panic, it would not have approached in severity what occurred last autumn. I believe the wild speculations to which Mr. Kidder has referred could never have occurred but for the facility the accumulation of these large reserves in New York afforded to speculators to borrow large amounts of money on call. I want to say, further, that I think the amount of reserves required under the present law is too large. I do not believe more than 15 per cent. is required for the city banks, and none at all to protect the circulation. The fact that whenever a national bank fails its bills are at a premium demonstrates the position that we do not need the reserves in the banks for their protection.

Mr. MERRIAM. As a bank officer, let me put to you this question : Does it make any difference with the security of either the depositor or bill-holder as to what you keep your reserves in, whether they are in legal-tenders or bank-notes, so long as you keep your reserves ?

Mr. CUMMINGS. Not at all.

Mr. FARWELL. Do you think it would make any difference with a prudent banker in the amount of reserve he actually kept on under, whether he was required by law to keep it or not.

Mr. CUMMINGS. No, I think not, with a prudent banker. I think any good business-man would not deposit in a bank which did not maintain a proper reserve. If that restriction were removed altogether from my bank, the first thing a business-man would ascertain before he deposited with me would be what amount of reserve I kept for the security of depositors.

Mr. FARWELL. You think it would be just as well, then, if the requirement of law was removed ?

Mr. CUMMINGS. No ; I am not prepared to say just that. I think if there was no such requirement there would be trouble very often from banks. Let me say that the extent of actual credit between one bank and another is very much more than you are probably aware of. I cannot tell you now exactly what the amount of the daily balance of the Boston banks is, but it is very large. One bank having an extended business is liable to lose very largely, as all our banks did in the late panic, when the western banks drew out a large amount of currency. Yet the banks must redeem their checks in greenbacks at the clearing-house; and in order to do that, when one bank is short, it must borrow from other banks. You must see, therefore, that unless the law was such as to give confidence between the banks, when a bank found itself weak it would be unable to borrow, and would come into trouble.

The CHAIRMAN. I understand that under our present system you do not think it necessary to require any reserve to protect circulation. How large a reserve would a prudent man keep for his deposits ?

Mr. CUMMINGS. That would depend entirely upon the business he was doing. Where the business was fluctuating he would require a large reserve. My own belief is that the proper amount should be about 33 per cent.

The CHAIRMAN. Under our national-bank system, if there were none but prudent and skillful bankers, no requirement of law would be necessary ; but inasmuch as one man is as good as another if he can bring securities, I understand you, therefore, that the requirement of law is a wise one ?

Mr. CUMMINGS. It is no doubt wise to have some provision of that sort as a check upon inexperienced or unskillful persons who may go into the business.

Mr. MERRIAM. Suppose a plan of practical redemption were established requiring each bank to redeem its currency in legal-tenders, would there be a necessity of requiring any reserve at all ?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I think not ; if the redemption actually took place.

Mr. MERRIAM. Is it not the fact that at present there is no practical redemption in this country to-day ?

Mr. CUMMINGS. That is now the fact ; and I want to say just here that the effect of establishing various redeeming centers in the country will be to a certain extent to increase the circulation. There is now no bank in the United States which has not a quantity of bills that are mutilated and worn out laid by. They are always accumulating ; and if we could take them to a convenient place of redemption and exchange them for good bills, the circulation would be increased to that extent.

Mr. MERRIAM. That, however, would only be temporary ; after you had once exchanged your mutilated and worn-out bills, they would not accumulate again.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I have in my pocket a statement of the condition of the banks of Massachusetts, in which I find that for the whole State the amount of circulation is only about ten millions in excess of the deposits. If you adopt the rule requiring 33 per cent. upon deposits as a reserve to be kept by each bank in its own vaults, it would be a protection to the banks and a great advantage to the business of the States ; it would give to the Massachusetts banks $10,000,000, which is now held in New York, and which is taken out of Massachusetts, carried into Wall street, and there loaned, not for the purpose of legitimate business, but to foster speculation.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me ask you whether in your opinion the amount of currency you have in New England is in excess of the wants of business there ?

Mr. CUMMINGS. At some seasons of the year it is ; money is always in excess during the summer season, and is used for various purposes, so that we find in September our currency is so run down that we are obliged to resort to extraordinary means to get what is required to send to the West, and in thirty or sixty days it comes back again, and we have more than we want.

Mr. MERRIAM. Is not that difficulty in regard to moving the crops increasing year by year?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I do not know that I have discovered any marked change in one year over that of another until the last one. In 1872 the currency left us in the fall, but it returned again in the course of thirty or sixty days.

The CHAIRMAN. If your currency in New England is in excess of the wants of your business, would it not be right in itself and equitable for a portion of that currency to be withdrawn and applied to banks in other portions of the country, where they are unable to get the amount of currency needed for their business?

Mr. CUMMINGS. In answer to that I will say that I believe that the portion of country desiring that would suffer more severely by the lack of that currency in Massachusetts and on the Atlantic coast than they do now. They would not be benefited by carrying it to their own homes. Money must go where it will be used to the best advantage. Money goes from Boston and from the Atlantic coast to the West, when it is needed there, and it will remain there as long as it can be used to better advantage than in the East, when it will return to the Atlantic coast again.

The CHAIRMAN. Upon that principle why does it not come from London, where the rate of interest is so much less?

Mr. CUMMINGS. Because the credit of the country is not equal to the demands of the owners of the money.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it not also to be accounted for in the fact that capital is exceedingly timid, and that men who have money prefer to loan it at a lower rate of interest at home than for a higher rate at a distance?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I think there is an element of truth in that fact. I think the reason why money is worth 10 per cent. in the West and 7 per cent. in the East is partly that the security is not so satisfactory in the West, and partly because, as you said, money hesitates to go away from home.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you suppose if I was to go home to my people and tell them they should not have banks there because it is better for them that the money should be kept in Boston and New York, a great many of them would be likely to believe me?

Mr. CUMMINGS. No, sir; but I think if you go to your people and say that it will take $117,000 of their money to get $90,000 in bills, they will see that the establishment of more national banks is not a source of very great advantage to them. We have often sent money down South and invested it in bank-stocks.

The CHAIRMAN. Then when they are coming up here and trying to get bank circulation, I should tell them that they were seeking something that, instead of being an advantage to them, will be quite a disadvantage.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I believe they have had the opportunity in the last three or four years of obtaining additional circulation if they desired it.

Mr. FARWELL. Would you be in favor of taking off the restriction upon bank issues, and of making banking free?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I do not see much objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you believe that it would result in an amount of bank currency that would be favorable to the business of the country?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I believe that banking is carried on in New England as wisely and prudently as it is carried on anywhere, but I do not believe there are many millions of dollars that would seek to be invested in new banks.

Mr. MERRIAM. Do you consider our national-bank system preferable to the old State-bank system?

Mr. CUMMINGS. Most decidedly.

Mr. MERRIAM. Would you prefer the law now in existence, under which you must take twenty-five millions of dollars from Boston and New York, and send to the West, or would you prefer free banking, which would enable you and them to have what currency you desired?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I should be in favor of extending our system of banks, believing that it would not be used to the disadvantage of the country. I believe that if you should give us in New England double the amount of currency we have there now, we should still suffer as severely as we do now. You cannot find men who are willing to allow their money to remain idle six or seven months in the year to enable them to use it the other five or six months.

Mr. MERRIAM. I would like to ask you whether the issue of legal-tender notes does not accomplish inflation to about four times the extent of the same amount of national-bank notes?

Mr. CUMMINGS. You do inflate the currency more by the issue of greenbacks than by national-bank notes under our present law.

The CHAIRMAN. What time does paper have to run in the Boston banks generally?

Mr. CUMMINGS. The average time is about ninety days.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the rate of interest ?

Mr. CUMMINGS. The rate of interest is 7 per cent. ; that, however, is based upon the average deposits the customer keeps in the bank. We generally claim that a man's deposits should be about 15 per cent. of his liability, if he gets anything.

Mr. MITCHELL. I want to ask you if you think the security of your circulation is something that you deem it important to guard by law ?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I believe there has never been a bank-note issued that has gone below par ; but, on the contrary, wherever a bank has failed, its notes have been at a premium.

Mr. MITCHELL. When you redeem your bank-note circulation, do not you take what you receive as cash, and use it to pay your debts, so that in fact you are just as well off as if you had not redeemed them ?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I cannot see much difference. I redeem them to-day and use them to-morrow. In fact, as I have said, practical redemption would really increase the resources of the bank, by substituting new notes for those mutilated or worn out, of which there are now millions lying idle in the vaults of the banks.

Mr. MITCHELL. Can you keep your bank-notes in your own vicinity ?

Mr. CUMMINGS. Not at all.

Mr. MITCHELL. The bills go out West and stay there ?

Mr. CUMMINGS. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL. And therefore the supply of currency is governed wholly by the rules of supply and demand ?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I think so.

Mr. MITCHELL. And the accumulation, therefore, of a large amount of circulation in New England benefits the whole country just as much as it does New England ?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I so consider it.

The CHAIRMAN. And if there is a diminution of currency at a given time, the large cities in the East will take care to have their wants supplied at the expense of the South and West ?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I do not think that is so.

Mr. DURHAM. What is the net profit of your bank ?

Mr. CUMMINGS. The net profit last year was a little short of 10 per cent., and we paid 9 per cent. dividends, and carried a surplus of a little less than 1 per cent.

Mr. DURHAM. Would you recommend the removal of any restriction as to the rate of interest to be charged ?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I think that would be beneficial to all parties.

Mr. DURHAM. At what rate do you generally loan ?

Mr. CUMMINGS. At 7 per cent., with the understanding that 15 per cent. is to be left on deposit.

Mr. FARWELL. What is your opinion of the general effect of the usury laws of the country ?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I have always been opposed to them ; I believe that money might come to one man at one price and to another person at another price, and that abolishing the usury laws will allow the man who really deserves to get money to get it.

The CHAIRMAN. I understand that you are in the shoe and leather business. How has that trade been this season ?

Mr. CUMMINGS. It is depressed this year, and there has been no money made in the business for two years.

The CHAIRMAN. How are prices now compared to what they were ten or twelve years ago ?

Mr. CUMMINGS. They are about 5 or 10 per cent. less than a year ago, which was just after the Boston fire, that burned up every shoe and leather house in Boston.

The CHAIRMAN. How do you compare with two years ago ?

Mr. CUMMINGS. They are about 5 per cent. less than two years ago.

Mr. MITCHELL. What national tax does your bank have to pay ?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I cannot tell you specifically what it is. I remember this fact : that some four or five years ago, when bonds were at 20, I asked our cashier to make up our condition, supposing we gave up our circulation. He made it up and handed it to me, with the result that we should clear a hundred and fifty thousand dollars if we gave up our circulation, and that it would require fifteen years' profits upon our circulation to make up that amount. The national tax we then paid was about 3 per cent., and the State tax about 1½ per cent. in addition—1 per cent., I think, upon the circulation, and a half of 1 per cent. upon the deposit account, and a half of 1 per cent. upon the excess of capital over circulation.

Mr. MITCHELL. If your taxes were to be removed, you could afford to lend money at a good deal less than at your present rates ?

Mr. CUMMINGS. Yes ; we could lend money at about 5 per cent.

Mr. MITCHELL. And declare dividends at 12 per cent. interest instead of 9 ?

Mr. CUMMINGS. No ; not at that rate of interest.

Mr. MITCHELL. Do you suppose that the rate of interest would be at all affected by the removal of your taxes ?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I do ; because the competition would be such as to require it. We should not lower the rate of interest unless we were compelled to.

Mr. MERRIAM. You have alluded to an amount of currency, which is mutilated and worn out, now hoarded in the banks. What amount do you suppose is thus hoarded ?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I have not made any estimate, but it must amount to millions. I know we continually have it in our banks.

Mr. HUBBELL. You stated that the establishment of free banks would not increase their facilities in the West. Would it not facilitate their business facilities in the credit which comes from the establishment of a national bank ?

Mr. CUMMINGS. The increasing of the credit at capital centers is valuable for business purposes, but it does not increase the currency in circulation.

Mr. HAWLEY. Then is it not true that with the increase of capital and credit the same effect would be accomplished just as well without circulation ?

Mr. CUMMINGS. Yes, sir.

FREDERICK D. TAPPEN, president of the Gallatin National Bank, New York, for twenty-five years in the banking-business, in response to the general question of the committee as to the defects in the present financial system, and the remedies therefor, made the following statements :

The radical defects in our present financial system, as applied to our currency, are : 1st, redundancy. This is self-evident, and needs no argument ; for, measured by the standard of real money, gold, it is below that standard from 10 to 12 per cent. 2d, inelasticity. This proceeds from a twofold cause, the absence of bank-note redemption and the fixed amount of legal-tender paper, which forms the basis not only of the bank-note currency, but also that larger and quite as important currency, bank credits or deposits. The former is the people's currency in the ordinary affairs of life, and the latter, bank deposits, the traders' currency, performing the same functions, only in a much greater degree. In discussing the relations of the currency to the trade of the country, both should be included, as they are identical in their office. With reference to the absence of redemption of bank-notes, the difficulties are : 1st. The legal-tender character of the notes, as the law compels us to receive in payment of debts due us bank-notes, no matter where or by what bank they may be issued. 2d. With the present form of note, there are almost insuperable mechanical difficulties in the way of assorting them. This has been explained to members of your committee before, and they are familiar with the facts.

The greatest obstacle to elasticity in our own financial system I believe to be the fixed basis of legal-tender paper, upon which our entire superstructure of bank-notes and bank-deposits is obliged by law to rest. It is impossible to define by statute, intelligently, how much gold and silver or how much bank-note circulation any country or section of it may require, any more than mere statutes can determine by any known process what amount of bank-deposits may be necessary to economically or properly carry on the large trade of any country or section of it. If this be true, it is incontestable that the basis itself of a sound financial system should be elastic or variable as to quantity and not fixed in amount. I can find that peculiar quality and condition in no other money than specie—the money of the civilized world. We should, therefore, return as rapidly as possible to a specie basis. This will necessitate a gradual contraction of the legal-tender paper. I know of no other method. This can be accomplished by funding the legal-tenders into bonds at a low rate of interest, or into compound-interest notes, which, as the interest accumulates, would go out of general circulation, or, by the absolute cancellation of a given amount each month, out of surplus revenue.

The CHAIRMAN. I understand you that the defects of our currency are at present redundancy and inelasticity, and you would cure them both by withdrawing the legal-tenders and putting the currency upon a specie basis. What, in your judgment, was the cause of the recent panic ?

Mr. TAPPEN. I think primarily a great expansion of bank credits, a redundant currency, and consequent wild speculation. Capital had been diverted from safe and legitimate business and really wasted in the building of unprofitable and unproductive railroads, constructed probably many years before they were needed. When the failure of Jay Cooke & Co. and others occurred, it was supposed by many that the banks and financial institutions generally had invested or advanced a large part of these means in these enterprises, and a distrust as to the solvency of many institutions ensued. This led to a withdrawal of deposits and violent contraction on the part of the banks, and then panic.

Mr. MERRIAM. Do you wish us to understand that you, as a banker in New York, discounted a larger amount of paper than you would have done if there had been less currency in New York ?

Mr. TAPPEN. I do not speak of my own bank ; I speak generally. The banks in New York expanded their loans too much during the summer months, when currency was abundant.

Mr. MERRIAM. Is the extent of discount of the banks of New York measured by the amount of currency in New York ?

Mr. TAPPEN. Certainly ; if the amount of legal-tenders and bank-note currency is increased in New York, the banks will expand their loans and discounts. As a matter of fact, the banks have during the summer months, when currency has become redundant, loaned and discounted too freely, and have thus increased their liabilities, and sailed too close to their minimum of reserve. When the usual full demand for money to move the crops came, a violent contraction on the part of the banks would ensue—a general calling in of loans, and disability to discount. This has been the case for some years past—this annual recurrence of a stringent money-market in the fall.

Mr. MERRIAM. Did not the accumulation of so much funds in New York, in your judgment, arise from the payment of interest by the banks on their deposits?

Mr. TAPPEN. I have no doubt on that point. Allowing interest on deposits payable on demand would naturally accumulate a large amount of money in New York banks during the summer months.

Mr. MERRIAM. What would be the effect of practical redemption in New York upon a reduction of idle money there?

Mr. TAPPEN. I think it would be exceedingly desirable to have a thorough system of bank-note redemption. The surplus currency would then be returned to the issuers, and be available for the requirements of business in the fall.

Mr. MERRIAM. The sentiment of the country in regard to preventing banks paying interest on deposits is so marked that it will be impossible for us to legislate upon the subject. Will not this practical redemption have very much the same result as the preventing of paying interest upon deposits?

Mr. TAPPEN. Your plan is a compulsory redemption of the banks, the Treasury acting as the agent for assorting and presenting the notes. Though I believe this is a move in the right direction, I do not think it a radical cure for the evils of our present system. As I have said before, the great difficulty is the want of elasticity in the basis of our system. Would it not be absurd for Congress to legislate that we should have a fixed amount of specie as a basis of a banking system—premising we were on a specie basis—say $400,000,000; no more, no less? And yet this is precisely what Congress has done under our irredeemable paper-money system.

Mr. MERRIAM. The legal-tender note being the basis of our national banking, you assume that every thousand dollars increases the bank deposits $5,000. Does it have the same effect on the issue of bank-notes? Suppose we authorize the $44,000,000 reserve to be kept out permanently: what effect would it have upon the business of the country and upon the power of the banks to discount?

Mr. TAPPEN. The $44,000,000 of legal-tender notes would be the basis for about five times that amount of bank credits, presuming, of course, that the entire amount went into the bank reserve. The same amount of bank-notes would not produce the same effect. Bank-notes can be put into circulation only by discounting or loaning. There would then be an expansion of the currency equal to the bank-notes circulated, and the amount of deposits or bank-credits created by the process of putting them in circulation.

Mr. MERRIAM. When we talk about inflation, it really arises, in your judgment, from issuing an increased amount of legal-tenders, and not from an increase of national-bank notes.

Mr. TAPPEN. The inflation caused by the issue of bank-notes is not so great as that caused by legal-tender paper.

Mr. HAWLEY. You said an increase of $44,000,000 bank circulation would only increase the credits of the banks $44,000,000. Would not the amount immediately return largely in deposits, and therefore go to swell the amount of credits to that extent beyond the amount of increasing the circulation?

Mr. TAPPEN. That would be the effect, most certainly.

Mr. HAWLEY. Every note that is discounted, returning as a deposit, is rediscounted and doubles the actual amount of the circulating medium?

Mr. TAPPEN. Certainly.

Mr. DURHAM. How does it happen that the issue of legal-tenders increases the bank credits five to one?

Mr. TAPPEN. It must be remembered that the legal-tender paper is the basis. If the $44,000,000 enters into the bank reserve, it would furnish the basis for a bank expansion by discounting and loaning from four to five times the amount of the reserve.

The CHAIRMAN. I understand you to say that banks have demands for all the money they will loan, and that you will therefore loan all you have the power to do under the law.

Mr. TAPPEN. Banks usually expand their loans to as great an extent as they can legally.

Mr. MITCHELL. In reference to this plan of redemption that is spoken of, do you believe that a system of redemption can be effective which does not embrace not only the banks, but the business-men of the country?

Mr. TAPPEN. I do not think the people care anything about redemption. It is questionable if any system of redemption will be effective with redemption only in irredeemable paper money.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is it not practically swapping one piece of paper for another of the same value?

Mr. TAPPEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MITCHELL. Do you not think it would be leading to great inflation if, in this condition of things, a free-banking system were established?

Mr. TAPPEN. I have no doubt upon the subject. I think it would.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Merriam's bill provides that 5 per cent. of the bank circulation shall be lodged with the Secretary of the Treasury and kept there to redeem the circulation. Now, suppose that had been in operation during the last panic, fifteen or twenty millions of the circulation of the banks locked up in the Treasury: would not the effect have been to aggravate the panic?

Mr. TAPPEN. I think not. The 5 per cent. of legal-tenders you refer to would not, I presume, be allowed as a part of the legal reserve of the banks. The effect would probably be to compel the banks to conduct their business in a more conservative manner, and thus render panics less likely to occur.

Mr. MITCHELL. In the condition of the banks at the commencement of the late panic, would they not have felt it a little hard to have had fifteen or twenty millions of their currency locked up where they could not use it to pay their debts with?

Mr. TAPPEN. That may be. It is always unpleasant and inconvenient not to have money to pay one's debts.

Mr. MERRIAM. Let me ask whether it would really have made no difference in the panic if this had occurred, the fact being that it would not have effected the power of the banks over their legal-tender reserves?

Mr. TAPPEN. I do not see how it would have made any difference. There were large amounts of bank-notes in New York. The trouble was in the large reduction of the legal-tender reserve below the minimum limit.

The CHAIRMAN. I presume you hardly contemplate coin as the actual currency of our country, but rather as a basis of the currency. What would you contemplate as the superstructure to that basis?

Mr. TAPPEN. No, sir; bank-notes and deposits convertible into coin.

The CHAIRMAN. What kind of bank-notes do you mean?

Mr. TAPPEN. With regard to bank-note circulation, I should prefer the present national system to that of the State-bank system, inasmuch as the former secures the bank-note with the best security known, and it is circulated without question in all parts of the country.

The CHAIRMAN. Then you would not contemplate any change in the currency itself?

Mr. TAPPEN. No, sir.

Mr. PHELPS. If the law was so changed as to make it possible for you every day at 3 o'clock to send your bank-notes, as soon as you could assort them, into the subtreasury, and get the exchange for legal-tenders, would not you be apt to do it every day?

Mr. TAPPEN. Certainly; we would send them in every day for exchange.

Mr. PHELPS. There is, then, as far as the banks are concerned, a value in the legal-tenders above that of the national-bank notes, so that the exchange is desirable for the banks?

Mr. TAPPEN. Yes. It is made so, however, by statute.

Mr. PHELPS. There would, then, be that difference in the value, so far as the banks are concerned, practically, which would make it safe for us to issue as many bank-notes as we pleased, provided there was this system of immediate redemption. In other words, could we safely go ahead in issuing bank paper, provided we had first secured it as bank-notes are now secured, with the provision of giving the banks the opportunity of immediate redemption through the subtreasury into legal-tenders?

Mr. TAPPEN. Any practical and thorough system of redemption would certainly be desirable, and the system proposed, I think, will meet the case; but at the same time with free banking, on our present basis, I believe we would have great expansion of bank credits.

Mr. PHELPS. The banks would eagerly make the exchange, so far as they are concerned, but the people of the country would not seek any exchange.

Mr. TAPPEN. No, sir; I do not think the people recognize any difference between the two currencies.

Mr. PHELPS. The practical question is whether we can safely remove the restrictions on the issue of bank-notes.

Mr. TAPPEN. Not under our present system, based upon irredeemable paper money. With a return to specie payments, all restriction on banking might be removed. The circulation would then regulate itself.

Mr. PHELPS. Can you think of any other way by which we could have a radical departure from the present system of legislation, and make that difference in value between legal-tenders and bank-notes, so that the people would desire to make the exchange whenever money was plenty, so that we could safely remove the restriction from the issue of bank-notes?

Mr. TAPPEN. I could suggest no measure.

Mr. PHELPS. If we were to take away that element which exists in the legal-tender character of bank-notes, so far as the banks are concerned, would not that make a difference between the two classes of paper, so as to stimulate redemption?

Mr. TAPPEN. It would undoubtedly lessen the statutory value of the bank-note, and so stimulate redemption; but I do not believe the people generally know the partial legal-tender character of this kind of paper.

Mr. PHELPS. Recognizing the artificial character of our paper money, if we could in any way make it elastic, we should be glad to do it. What we want to know is whether any plan can be adopted for such elasticity which would require you, as a national-bank officer, not too much risk in attempting.

Mr. TAPPEN. As I have before stated, the very first element of an elastic currency is prompt redemption. Could a perfect system be inaugurated, I can see no risk in carrying it out; on the contrary, I think great good would result from it. But there must also be elasticity in that other and larger currency, bank deposits. This we certainly cannot have with a fixed basis of irredeemable legal-tender paper.

Mr. PHELPS. We assume here that the banks and rich men can take care of themselves. What we are looking for is to give the best currency to the scattered, remote population in the West and South where they have no credit.

Mr. TAPPEN. Should a bank be started to-morrow in the far West or South, its issues of bank-notes would not have a local circulation. The notes would go to that section of the country which is a creditor. What the West and South need is capital. They would then get their share of currency, no matter where or by whom issued.

Mr. FARWELL. Is there any means you can think of by which we can check the redundancy of the currency?

Mr. TAPPEN. With redemption in coin, there should be no artificial restrictions. Banking then should be absolutely free.

Mr. FARWELL. Your argument seems to apply precisely as well to a gold currency as to paper. It would be easy for you gentlemen in New York to retire your national-bank notes and get legal-tenders. That would reduce the volume of currency. But your conclusions do not appear to be based upon your statements.

Mr. TAPPEN. We must not lose sight of this fact: that we have three species of currency—legal-tender paper, bank-notes, and bank-credits. This last is as much currency as the others, and, in discussing the subject of currencies, must be considered.

The CHAIRMAN. Why do you say that?

Mr. TAPPEN. Because it performs the same office in United States currency or bank-notes. By far the largest portion of the transfers of property or merchandise is made by bank credits or deposits.

The CHAIRMAN. We have had a statement before us of this sort: For instance, I want a discount at your bank, $100,000. The discount is given, and the amount placed to my credit, but with the tacit understanding that I am not to draw exceeding sixty or seventy thousand dollars of it, and that the rest is to remain there until my paper matures, when the paper, deposit, and everything else disappears.

Mr. TAPPEN. I cannot accept that statement as correct. I do not believe there is any such understanding in any well-conducted bank. The cash deposits of merchants in banks are their cash reserves, and are essential to the safe and proper management of their business.

Mr. FARWELL. Do you think, if the restriction on the issue of paper is taken off, and this plan of redemption is adopted, the tendency to expansion would be more than the antidote of resumption?

Mr. TAPPEN. I think it would, though we have no actual experience on this point upon which to base an opinion. Under our present system practical redemption ought to be instituted and tried before we resort to free banking, and the consequent issue of more paper money.

Mr. DURHAM. You state that the bank-notes, in your judgment, were a better currency than greenbacks, and yet you state that the banks would redeem them in greenbacks if they had the opportunity.

Mr. TAPPEN. I intended to say that they were a better currency for the country, inasmuch as with redemption they would be elastic—a feature the greenbacks cannot possess.

Mr. MERRIAM. You assume if one currency is better than another the people will exchange for and hold the best. Now, if you resume specie payments with $200,000,000 of specie in the country, what would prevent the people from absorbing the entire amount with three or four hundred millions of greenbacks in the country, and preventing your maintaining resumption a day?

Mr. TAPPEN. On a resumption of specie payments of course the premium on gold would have disappeared. There would then be no object in demanding coin except for export; no such amount of legal-tender paper could or would possibly be presented.

Mr. MERRIAM. One of the gentlemen here stated his belief that $500,000,000 were hoarded in the country.

Mr. TAPPEN. That statement is very much exaggerated.

Mr. MERRIAM. Did not the call which your national banks made upon the Secretary of the Treasury to issue his $44,000,000 reserve indicate that you had need for more national-bank currency?

Mr. TAPPEN. There was no such call made by the banks in New York. I happened to be at the Fifth Avenue Hotel on the Sunday morning the President and Secretary of the Treasury were there. I believe I was the only bank-officer. There were many gentlemen present who were very emphatic in their opinion that the $44,000,000 should in some way be issued; but I remarked that the most of these gentlemen were more or less interested in the stock-market. The banks, as a body, did not urge anything of the kind, and did not wish it to be done.

Mr. MERRIAM. Did not the pooling on the part of the banks of their assets give them power to issue practically an additional amount of currency?

Mr. TAPPEN. No, sir; I think not.

Mr. MERRIAM. If you had had an amount of currency equal to the amount of certificates issued by you, under your pooling arrangement, would you not have paid it out?

Mr. TAPPEN. Certainly. It should be understood that these certificates were issued to replace the legal-tenders withdrawn from us by those who feared our solvency. There was really no scarcity of currency in the country, but want of confidence and general distrust. Then currency was hoarded.

The CHAIRMAN. What kind of business developed the greatest weakness in the time of the panic?

Mr. TAPPEN. The stock exchange and railroad securities generally. The merchants, as a class, were sound.

The CHAIRMAN. The reports showed that during the last fiscal year our importations were greater than in any previous year since the foundation of the Government. Do you think they were in excess, and that that had anything to do with causing the panic?

Mr. TAPPEN. Our importations were excessive, and, in my opinion, were so from the defects in our system of finance. The people were made extravagant by excessive issues of irredeemable paper money, but I do not think the excessive importations were the direct cause of the panic.

The CHAIRMAN. You were chairman of the clearing-house loan committee during the panic, and you issued certificates of the clearing-house, which were understood throughout the country to bear the character of currency?

Mr. TAPPEN. The loan certificates to which you refer were issued on the pledge of bills receivable and other bank assets; mostly, however, on bills receivable. The total amount issued was $26,500,000.

Mr. MERRIAM. What margin did you require?

Mr. TAPPEN. Not less than 25 per cent. in any case—from that to 40 or 50—the margin depending entirely on our estimate of the value of the securities deposited.

Mr. MERRIAM. These certificates were issued and passed into circulation, and were, as I understand, the equivalent of currency?

Mr. TAPPEN. No, sir; they were issued as a substitute for currency which had been withdrawn from bank and hoarded. It was not an inflation. The certificates did not enter into the general circulation of the country. Their use was entirely local, and only for settlement of balances at the clearing-house. As fast as confidence was restored and currency came out of hoards into circulation, the certificates were retired and canceled.

Mr. MERRIAM. State whether there were any artificial and extraordinary withdrawals of currency, either by combinations of parties or from fear, or from some cause which unduly contracts the amount of currency in the country.

Mr. TAPPEN. I do not think there was any combination to lock up currency. The hoarding proceeded from distrust, and of course there was undue contraction.

Mr. MERRIAM. To meet just such a contingency as that, would your remedy be a return to specie payments?

Mr. TAPPEN. I do not pretend that with specie payments in this or any other country panics will not occur; panics are the result of overtrading, and the waste or destruction of capital. It is worthy of note, however, that they are always preceded by excessive issues of paper money or expansion of bank-credits.

Mr. MERRIAM. And when they do occur, are you under the impression that the best way is to stand still and wait till it is over, as in the case of an earthquake, or can steps be taken for its relief?

Mr. TAPPEN. Steps may always be taken for measures of relief. In England the "privy council" suspends the "bank act," having no such government organization here with similar powers, we were obliged to take the law into our own hands and virtually suspend the law with reference to the legal reserves and discounts. This was unavoidable. Our legal-tender notes had been withdrawn by timid depositors, and we were obliged to have some substitute in which to transact our business. In England they do not issue what we call loan-certificates, but the limit of issues by the Bank of England is suspended, and bank-notes or bank-credits issued on pledge of securities or discount of bills. The result is that the sharp contraction of loans ceases, and the banks have the means with which to discount, as was the case here as soon as we issued certificates.

Mr. MERRIAM. Do you think there is any remedy that we can adopt which will relieve or prevent panics caused by the artificial locking up of currency?

Mr. TAPPEN. I do not think there is, if you refer to legal-tender paper. It is perfectly feasible at certain times "to corner" the money-market, as the amount of legal-tender notes is fixed by law. It has been done frequently, and will in all probability be done again. During the late panic the purchase by the Treasury of $10,000,000 bonds afforded little or no relief; the money did not go into banks or general circulation, but was hoarded.

Mr. MERRIAM. But when they stopped purchasing, a renewal of the panic and an increase of consternation was the consequence.

Mr. TAPPEN. You must bear in mind that the New York banks held very few bonds, and therefore had no means of procuring money from the Treasury. The savings-banks were the large sellers of bonds at that time, and hoarded the currency they obtained for them.

Mr. MERRIAM. Suppose you had had 3 per cent. certificates in your possession at that time; would they have afforded relief by putting them into circulation?

Mr. TAPPEN. We should have been forced to pay them out or present them for redemption precisely as we were obliged to convert our "legal-tender certificates" into greenbacks. Of these we held just before the panic upward of $20,000,000. They were reduced during the panic to about $2,000,000.

Mr. MERRIAM. Suppose you had in your possession paper which was convertible at pleasure into currency, and which in the mean time was bearing a small rate of interest, could not you issue it to advantage on such an occasion either to stop or prevent a panic?

Mr. TAPPEN. I fail to see what difference that would make; in other words, I presume you mean that instead of plain legal-tenders we should hold as a portion of our reserves 3.65 per cent. notes. This would not stop or prevent a panic.

Mr. MERRIAM. Suppose you had 6 per cent. or 5 per cent. bonds in your possession, by the conversion of which you could receive such an amount of currency as the occasion required; would not the knowledge of the fact that you had an unlimited reserve behind you stop at once a demand for currency and put an end to the panic?

Mr. TAPPEN. No doubt it would; but it would not be profitable banking to place any more of our means into Government bonds. The legitimate business of a bank is to discount bills and lend on securities.

Mr. MERRIAM. Did not the very existence in England of the power of the bank to increase its volume of currency to an unlimited extent instantly stop a panic?

Mr. TAPPEN. The temporary removal of the restrictions on bank-issues in England and the consequent power to discount and expand in times of panic has had the same effect as with us during our late panic. When we authorized the issue of an unlimited amount of loan-certificates, the panic was instantly stopped.

Mr. MITCHELL. We have now about $400,000,000 of greenbacks. Could you give us any idea as to what amount of bank-circulation could be issued with free banking?

Mr. TAPPEN. I could not.

Mr. MITCHELL. Could there be more than the redeeming agent of greenbacks?

Mr. TAPPEN. It would be impossible to state.

Mr. MITCHELL. Do you regard as dangerous the experiment to issue an unlimited amount of inconvertible paper, or convertible into another kind of inconvertible money?

Mr. TAPPEN. I do, most decidedly.

Mr. MITCHELL. During the late panic your banks paid out no currency; they simply paid certificates of the clearing-house. Do you regard that as no expansion?

Mr. TAPPEN. The banks did pay currency, but in many instances only on checks, for small amounts. Loan-certificates did not enter into general circulation as currency. They were only used for clearing-house purposes. In reality they were simply loans by the banks, which carried the certificates to the banks to which they were issued to pay their debit balances at the clearing-house, and being used as a substitute for an equal amount of currency withdrawn and hoarded; consequently there was no expansion.

Mr. MITCHELL. Are you aware of the existence in England of a similar kind of paper, called cross-checks, which are payable only through the clearing-house?

Mr. TAPPEN. "Crossed checks," I believe, are simply checks on a bank or banker, payable only through the clearing-house. There is no similarity between them and loan-certificates.

Mr. FARWELL. Will you explain the difference between substituting a like amount of one character of paper for an increase of the same character?

Mr. TAPPEN. Just prior to the panic we held in New York about $35,000,000 legal-tenders. The distrust which the panic occasioned, not only in the city but all over the country, produced a general withdrawal of deposits, and our legal-tender reserve was drawn from us and hoarded in tin boxes, vaults, and the pockets of the people. We were thus deprived of the means of paying our obligations, or of a medium with which to settle our clearing-house business. The certificates were thereupon issued to take the place of the hoarded currency. As the currency returned, the certificates were retired and canceled.

Mr. HAWLEY. You regard the present basis of our currency unsound. Is there any way of building up a sound currency on the present basis? Suppose, for instance, we expand the currency now to the extent of $75,000,000. Would the effect of such a law be to retard the resumption of specie payments for many years?

Mr. TAPPEN. I think our present basis, irredeemable paper, unsound. No sound financial system can be built upon it. The issue of any more paper money of any kind would not only retard specie payments, but, in my opinion, would be a step toward repudiation and bankruptcy.

Mr. FARWELL. Can you explain how the currency of the United States is to be in excess, with the restriction we now have of requiring $115 of capital to issue $90 of currency?

Mr. TAPPEN. I believe the currency is now in excess. Any further increase would depend upon the supposed profits of banking in the locality where the currency was to be issued.

Mr. FARWELL. Do you think an increase amounting to expansion would take place under that system?

Mr. TAPPEN. I do. I think any system of banking founded on irredeemable paper money is unsound and vicious.

Mr. FARWELL. Our currency is based upon bonds worth in the market to-day 117. To enable banks to expand, they must furnish $117 in order to get $90 to expand with.

Mr. TAPPEN. The result is an expansion, if the currency is issued. It is the conversion of debt into currency, just as the discount of a note is its conversion into another sort of currency, bank-credit.

Mr. FARWELL. Let me ask you your opinion as to the probable amount of national bonds held in this country, besides those in the Treasury, for the security of bank-notes.

Mr. TAPPEN. It is impossible to state with any degree of accuracy. Probably from three to five hundred millions.

Mr. MERRIAM. Do you think it would be easy to buy $100,000,000 of bonds in this country?

Mr. TAPPEN. I do not, without advancing the price materially.

The CHAIRMAN. How long would it require you to collect $10,000,000 of bonds in Wall street?

Mr. TAPPEN. I could not say. An order for such a large amount would, of course, require a long time to execute.

Mr. MERRIAM. Will not that fact prevent any danger from free banking?

Mr. TAPPEN. No; I think not. The entire West and South are not going to rush into free banking. The formation of banks would be gradual.

Mr. MERRIAM. Please tell us whether, in your opinion, we can commence our progress toward a specie basis at this time, and, if not, when can we safely begin, and what is the operation?

Mr. TAPPEN. I think we should begin at once to place ourselves upon a specie basis. We can do this with just as much safety now as at any other time: the gradual and systematic funding of the legal-tender paper into bonds, or their absorption into the Treasury by an excess of revenue over expenditures. This process of contraction would bring our paper money on a par with gold. It, however, should be gradual, this contraction.

Mr. MERRIAM. There is, however, no excess.

Mr. TAPPEN. Then I would make an excess, either by an increase of taxation or a more economical administration of the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. In regard to the first plan, how much currency would you retire each month?

Mr. TAPPEN. Not to exceed $1,000,000 per month. With this policy in actual operation, I would not object to the issue, if they were called for, of bank-notes, not to exceed the amount of legal-tenders retired.

Mr. DURHAM. At what rate of interest would you fund our greenbacks?

Mr. TAPPEN. I would say at a rate not to exceed 5 per cent.

Mr. MERRIAM. You have alluded to the dangers of irredeemable paper. Is it not a fact that almost all the panics that have occurred have been when we were on a specie basis?

Mr. TAPPEN. That is true, but it is also true all panics, even when we have been upon a specie basis, have been preceded, without an exception, by a large increase of the bank-note circulation, an expansion of bank loans and credits, and a consequent impetus, a stimulus to wild speculation.

Mr. MERRIAM. It was stated yesterday that the profits of our national banks in New York were represented by dividends of 15 per cent. I want to ask you whether that is not an exceptional case; whether the report of the Comptroller of the Currency does not show that, from 1869 to 1872, the dividends of the banks of New York were very much less, and from what source you obtain this information, so as to know whether it is correct or not.

Mr. TAPPEN. The statement made yesterday was not a fair presentation of the facts. The information contained in the report of the Comptroller of the Currency is obtained from sworn statements made by each bank at the regular term of declaring the dividend, whether the dividend be actually declared or not. These returns show not only the dividends declared, but also the net profits of the bank from its organization. The gentleman who made that statement could have made his case much stronger by citing, as an instance of the inordinate profits of banking, the case of the Chemical Bank of New York. This bank, with a capital of $300,000, pays dividends on that amount of 60 per cent. The statement, however, should be accompanied with another, that the real capital of the bank employed includes the surplus, which, added to the capital, amounts to $3,000,000. So that the actual profits amount to about 6 per cent.

Mr. HAWLEY. Has not the national-bank business been, perhaps, the most universally profitable business of the country for the last seven years?

Mr. TAPPEN. Banking has been profitable, but relatively no more so than other branches business—more so, perhaps, under our present irredeemable paper-money system than would be the case were we upon a gold basis. Under our present system there have been more violent fluctuations in the rates of interest. This would give the banks greater opportunities of increasing their profits, though perhaps correspondingly increasing the risk of their business.

Mr. MERRIAM. In your judgment, have the profits of the last ten years been greater than in commercial business?

Mr. TAPPEN. The profits of commercial business are always larger than the profits of banking.

JOHN AUSTIN STEVENS, jr., of New York, formerly and for several years secretary of the Chamber of Commerce of New York, appeared as a delegate of the National Board of Trade, and as also representing the views of the Chamber of Commerce of New York, so far as they were expressed in their debates upon the subject of specie payment this winter, has always been interested in finance, and as a scientific matter it has been his study for twenty years.

The CHAIRMAN. I will propound the same general question to you that I have to others. What in your opinion, if any, are the defects in our present financial system, and how should they be remedied?

Mr. STEVENS. In the first place, our present financial system is defective because of its instability. I do not know whether our circulating medium is large enough or too large; and although I believe it is in excess of the needs of the country, still, I do not know how much it is in excess. The reason of this uncertainty is, that we have departed from the usual standard of value. That, I consider, is its main defeat. I think the difficulty is, first, as to its quantity, and then as to its quality.

The CHAIRMAN. When you speak of quality, let me ask you whether or not you have reference to the source from which it emanates? The currency, you know, consists of legal-tenders and national-bank notes.

Mr. STEVENS. I mean its distance from a true standard of value; its depreciation from a gold standard.

The CHAIRMAN. Would you change its character, and authorize a different source of issue? Would you, for instance, go back to the old State-bank system?

Mr. STEVENS. No, sir. I would not, because we have now a homogeneous currency—one that is equal in all parts of the country. I would make it equal to coin, and convertible into coin at the pleasure of the holder.

The CHAIRMAN. Would you make any other change in the currency than to make it equal to coin and convertible into coin at the option of the holder?

Mr. STEVENS. Not until I had reduced its quantity.

The CHAIRMAN. By what method would you return to specie payment?

Mr. STEVENS. By funding the greenback-issue whenever money is cheap at the commercial and financial centers, and by changing the demand-obligation into a time-obligation; that is, funding it into bonds bearing interest.

The CHAIRMAN. Still, that is not specie payment.

Mr. STEVENS. No, sir; but you approach to specie payment in that way. If our measure of value was not in excess to-day, specie would be at par, or within a fraction of it.

The CHAIRMAN. Then you think that if we were to withdraw from circulation a sufficient portion of our paper currency, and convert it into bonds, and keep that process going on long enough, that would bring specie in to supply the vacuum created?

Mr. STEVENS. When the measure of values is so contracted that we come to the point at which prices in this country will not exceed those on the other side of the water, the specie in this country will flow into the vacuum, and we shall then be able to resume specie payment.

The CHAIRMAN. Are not prices in this country identical with the rate of labor in the country, and when labor is cheap do not prices come down?

Mr. STEVENS. I do not think that necessarily follows.

The CHAIRMAN. Is not the price of labor the basis upon which all other prices rest?

Mr. STEVENS. It is; but labor brings different prices at different times.

The CHAIRMAN. But when you give labor the other price in a particular industry, does not the price of the goods produced in that industry conform to the price paid for the labor in producing them?

Mr. STEVENS. Yes, sir; but the law of supply and demand must not be forgotten.

The CHAIRMAN. You have said that when prices come down to the level of what they are in Europe, then we shall be able to resume specie payment. When the price of labor rises in Europe, does it not have the same effect of increasing the prices of the goods produced that it has in this country?

Mr. STEVENS. Undoubtedly; but always subject to the law of supply and demand already alluded to. A general rise in labor will certainly cause an advance in prices.

The CHAIRMAN. What, in your opinion, does the value of gold depend on?

Mr. STEVENS. Upon the labor used in its production, and the uses to which it is applied by universal consent as the standard of values.

The CHAIRMAN. If you employ labor at 5 cents a day, your price would be very different from what it would be if you employed it at $5 a day, would it not?

Mr. STEVENS. It would; but you may overproduce other articles than gold, while gold cannot be overproduced; its price regulates all other prices, and it is always in demand.

The CHAIRMAN. That is because the laws of different countries make it carry a fixed and artificial value?

Mr. STEVENS. No, sir. Gold has been accepted from all time as the standard of value; and it will always bring its price, and its precise price, in every market.

The CHAIRMAN. And that would make no difference even if it were demonetized all over the world, would it?

Mr. STEVENS. That would make a difference, were it possible.

The CHAIRMAN. Then what would gold be worth?

Mr. STEVENS. Nothing, except for its uses in the arts.

The CHAIRMAN. Your idea is that we must reduce prices by diminishing the volume of currency until we bring the prices down to what they are in Europe, and then you say gold will flow in until we are upon a specie basis?

Mr. STEVENS. Yes, sir. You may continue the process as long as you do not permit the balance of trade to be against us.

The CHAIRMAN. A great many of you gentlemen tell us that specie payment is the panacea for all our material derangements. Why do you not adopt specie as your basis, and transact all your business upon it, and treat the bank-notes and the legal-tender notes as uncurrent?

Mr. STEVENS. A very large mass of transactions do not permit of arrangements beforehand.

The CHAIRMAN. But business disregards all law. The laws of commerce and trade are paramount to all legislation, and simply laugh at it.

Mr. STEVENS. I do not think that is true, for legislation may substitute something for real money.

Mr. FARWELL. How does the usury law affect the rate of interest in your State?

Mr. STEVENS. I think the usury laws and all other restrictions prevent capital from flowing freely in the community where such restrictions are placed, and raise the rate of money.

The CHAIRMAN. You use the word money?

Mr. STEVENS. I cannot accept the idea that debt is money in any form. Debt is not money, a bond is not money, and a greenback is not money; they are only the representatives of money to the extent of your legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. Do they and have they not constantly, on the Pacific coast, conducted all their commercial operations upon a specie basis, leaving the Government to use its currency in collecting its revenues and in the payment of its dues, and all beyond that remains as current funds in the hands of the brokers? Is not that absolutely so?

Mr. STEVENS. I do not know. I suppose that that would be the case to a very much greater extent in the Eastern States if you would take off the legal-tender quality from the greenback issue.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it not possible that there is a want among the people of the country that compels the use of the currency that we have, and forbids the attempt to use a specie basis?

Mr. STEVENS. I think it was so at one time, but I do not think it is so now. I think that specie would flow as it now flows in France—very nearly on a par with paper—when we should have taken in one hundred millions of dollars of our paper issues; but I do not think the Government of the United States should undertake a resumption of specie payment until a considerably larger amount of paper than that has been withdrawn. I think the statement is incorrect that the true ratio for resumption is the amount of coin in the Treasury to the Government issues; the true ratio is of the amount of coin in the country to the whole circulating medium.

Mr. FARWELL. Is it not a fact that there is more coin and currency in circulation to-day in France than in the banks?

Mr. STEVENS. It is.

[By the return of the bank of France, made up to the 23d June, 1870, just prior to the German war, the issue of notes was 1,374,024,258, francs, or $275,000,000, against which there was held in bank a reserve of 1,318,511,076 francs in cash and ingots, ($265,000,000.) The total circulating medium then consisted of—

Notes of Bank of France.....	$275,000,000
Coin in bank	265,000,000
Coin in outside holding.....	750,000,000
Total circulating medium.....	1,290,000,000
A proportion of four of metal to one of paper.]

The CHAIRMAN. Is that in dollars or in francs?

Mr. STEVENS. In dollars.

Mr. MITCHELL. Does not the present condition of things as to our currency tend to banish the precious metals from the country?

Mr. STEVENS. It does; with our present depreciated, because excessive, currency, we buy dear and sell cheap, and must pay our balances in coin.

Mr. MITCHELL. Having a paper circulation which the people are compelled to take, is it reasonable to expect business-men to be able to carry on the domestic business of the country on a specie basis?

Mr. STEVENS. Certainly not; nor would it be possible in any event if paper were in excess.

Mr. MITCHELL. In reference to California, has not gold always been the exclusive circulating medium of that State? And therefore there is no analogy in the condition of California and the States this side of the mountains.

Mr. STEVENS. I so understand it.

Mr. DURHAM. You said you would not recommend a resumption of specie payment except we had withdrawn one hundred millions of paper?

Mr. STEVENS. Yes, sir; but I do not believe in the Treasury Department undertaking to redeem its obligations, even though it had only half the amount of paper out that it has now. It should not undertake to redeem its obligations until the amount of coin in the country is very much larger than it is now and the amount of paper is very much less. I think with the withdrawal of one hundred millions of paper gold would flow into the country.

Mr. MITCHELL. Does it necessarily follow that, if currency was to come back to a specie standard, the wages of our laborers should correspond with those of Europe?

Mr. STEVENS. No, sir.

Mr. MERRIAM. Do I understand that the withdrawal of $100,000,000 would produce the flowing of gold here, so that we could resume specie payment?

Mr. STEVENS. Yes, sir; there would be practical resumption, because gold would not be above par; but it would still not be safe for the Government to make such resumption legal, because of the insufficiency of coin, until a considerable substitution of coin for paper had been made.

Mr. MERRIAM. What bearing does the fact have upon us that, within the last four years, the increase of population, the increase of immigration, and the increase of the wealth of the country having absorbed one hundred millions additional of our currency, why would not that of itself have the same effect as the withdrawal and cancellation of that amount?

Mr. STEVENS. I include that when I say one hundred millions; that is part of the growing-up process.

The CHAIRMAN. I understand you, then, that specie will be a result, and not a process?

Mr. STEVENS. We will arrive at it by process. I think the country has made up its mind that we are to grow up to our present standard, and I think the least that can be done is to go back to where we were before the panic. If there is to be any favorable time for the withdrawal of the greenback issue or the currency of the country, now is the time, when money is not wanted for legitimate purposes. I think the panic was a very necessary thing. By it we were disabused of the idea that there could not be suspension with paper money. That error is destroyed.

Mr. DURHAM. I suppose you would hardly adopt the maxim that they who do business on borrowed capital ought to break down?

Mr. STEVENS. By no means. I regretted to see investments made in railroads that were not quite needed; and I am sorry to hear from friends in Europe that there are eighty millions held in Holland and in Germany on which there has been a default in the interest.

Mr. FARWELL. With this large foreign indebtedness—national, State, municipal, and personal, and with the balance of trade against, as it has been for some years back—is it possible, under that condition of things, to resume specie payment at all?

Mr. STEVENS. I do not see what relation there is between the amount of our foreign indebtedness and specie payment. I do not believe that the time is ever to come in this country when we shall owe less money abroad than we do now. We must always have a large supply of European capital for our industries, as I trust it may always be so.

Mr. FARWELL. Suppose that we should resume upon a reduced greenback circulation of three hundred millions, and that we had in the country two hundred millions of gold; would it not be in the power of foreign holders to come here and take the gold out of the country?

Mr. STEVENS. I do not think that condition of things is possible. We produce sixty millions of coin in this country annually.

Mr. FARWELL. For ten years past the balance of trade has been very largely against us.

Mr. STEVENS. Yes, sir; until the year just past, 1873, when, I think, there is a difference of $105,000,000 in our favor. It was sixty millions against us the year before that.

Mr. FARWELL. If our people held this indebtedness we could control the matter; but here is a foreign creditor, who comes here with this indebtedness, and converts it into coin. This would cripple our facilities for resuming at any day. Is not such a thing as that possible?

Mr. STEVENS. I do not think it is. Why did the European holders, almost immediately after the panic, not take the money which the Treasury Department was compelled to pay in coin? Why did they, at the request of the Secretary of the Treasury, take the new fives?

Mr. FARWELL. Suppose the balance is fifty millions a year right along: could specie payment be introduced in that condition of things?

Mr. STEVENS. No, sir.

Mr. DURHAM. I understand your plan to be to contemplate a nullification of this balance of trade by reducing prices in this country to the same as they are in Europe?

Mr. STEVENS. The only way to get the balance of trade in our favor is by arresting our imports.

Mr. FARWELL. Would it not be much better to let the business and population of the country grow up gradually until we reached the point desired?

Mr. STEVENS. I would entirely agree with you, if we had funded all of the forty-four millions that are now out.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you any recommendations to make to the committee, in the shape of a banking bill, for us to recommend to the House?

Mr. STEVENS. This, I presume, alludes to the redemption clause. No, sir; I do not see how there can be any redemption, because I do not see where it is the interest of anybody to call for redemption.

Mr. DURHAM. Do I understand you to say that you want the Treasury to take in the amount of the forty-four millions that is already out?

Mr. STEVENS. Yes, sir; I want to see it funded, because prices are inflated by this increase in the measure of values. The banks are seeking the notes of importers; that is, they are willing to take the notes of importers with four and five months to run at 7 per cent., and probably in a short time they will take them at 6 per cent. This will naturally stimulate imports and turn the balance of trade against us. We have lost already, since 1860, two hundred and twenty millions of coin, and have reduced our stock in the same period one hundred and fifty millions. These figures are taken from the Treasury statements.

Mr. DURHAM. How much coin do you suppose was brought into the country by travelers and immigrants since that time, which the custom-house books do not show?

Mr. STEVENS. I do not take that into consideration. Every one that leaves the country also takes with him one hundred or one hundred and fifty dollars in coin.

Mr. DURHAM. How does the amount of coin taken from the country by persons going to Europe compare with the amount of coin that is brought here by immigrants and others?

Mr. STEVENS. Immigrants generally from other countries than Ireland bring a little coin with them; but the Irish immigrant rarely brings any.

Mr. MERRIAM. It would be fair to offset the amounts brought in by the amounts taken out. It has been estimated that we expend in Europe in traveling, every year, as much as we take from our mines. Have you any idea as to that?

Mr. STEVENS. I have not. But we do not expend it in coin. I do not exactly see the drift of this query.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you any estimates as to the amount of coin there was in the United States, say in 1861?

Mr. STEVENS. I have all the estimates here.

James Pollock, director of the Mint at Philadelphia, estimated the amount of coin in the loyal States, in October, 1861, at.....	$275 to 300,000,000
Mr. Secretary Chase, in report of December 9, 1861, at.....	275 to 300,000,000
Senaton Morton, in speech, December 16, 1868.....	240,000,000
My own estimate for 1861 is.....	300,000,000

And I prove its correctness as follows:

Accepted estimate of stock of coin in the country, (stock of 1873).....	$135,000,000
Add exports, 1861 to 1873, by Treasury statement.....	922,000,000

1,057,000,000

Deduct production, 1861 to 1871.....	$468,000,000
--------------------------------------	---------------

And imports.....	254,000,000
------------------	-------------

722,000,000

Leaves, (stock of 1861)	335,000,000
-------------------------------	-------------

Which, allowing for coin at the South, proves the statement of Mr. Pollock to have been inside the mark.

Mr. PHELPS. Is the English system of banking a criterion for banking in this country?

Mr. STEVENS. No, sir; I do not think the reference made to the English system at all pertinent to our state of things. The system of England is that of a practically government bank; that of France is nearly analogous to it. The English government deals directly with the bank; for instance, in the savings-bank; the English government, through its operations with the bank, may very well pay 2½ per cent. interest to the depositor, since it may at any moment it wants it get the coin at the bank.

Mr. PHELPS. Have you examined this bill presented by the Postmaster-General?

Mr. STEVENS. Yes, sir; with great care. While he thinks it would be a desirable thing to protect the laborer in his savings, at the same time he provides no mode in which the money shall be used to raise interest for the Government, and at the same time be at the call of the depositor when he wants it.

The CHAIRMAN. That is a matter that could be easily provided for, is it not?

Mr. STEVENS. I don't see how the Government of the United States can go into banking.

The CHAIRMAN. A little experience would show what percentage it would be necessary to retain to meet the daily calls of depositors. Suppose we were to contrive to change some of our present bonded indebtedness into indebtedness to our small depositors?

Mr. STEVENS. I do not see why the United States Government should bid for the capital of the country. The savings of the poor already invested in savings-banks amount to about $700,000,000. Of this I do not believe that there are to-day $50,000,000 in Government securities; and I should like to see some form in which a portion of that should be required to be in Government securities.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it not a matter of paramount importance to give security to the laboring people—the poor widows and that class of folks who have only a small accumulation?

Mr. STEVENS. Undoubtedly.

The CHAIRMAN. We have every year a surplus of coin. We are the sellers of coin. We sold coin last year and realized a premium of $11,000,000.

Mr. STEVENS. Yes. I do not see upon what right the Government should divert to its own uses the capital already in the savings-banks of the country. A very large part of it is upon bond and mortgage; and for every dollar that would be withdrawn from the present savings-banks for deposit with the Government there would be thrown upon the market some form of security that will have to be taken up otherwise.

The CHAIRMAN. Has not the character of the savings-banks very materially changed from what it has been in the last few years?

Mr. STEVENS. I think it has. The money of our savings-banks is to a great extent loaned to banks; and that, in my opinion, is all wrong.

The CHAIRMAN. The original savings-banks of the country were managed without profit to the managers, were they not?

Mr. STEVENS. Yes, sir. But even the great savings-banks of our country are compelled to make a satisfactory interest on their deposits; they are obliged to loan their money to banks in many cases. I think if the savings-banks were called on to-day by the Government to tell the amount of Government securities held by them, they could not show that they held over sixty millions.

Mr. MITCHELL. What rates of interest do the savings-banks provide for in New York and New England?

Mr. STEVENS. I do not know precisely; 5 to 6 per cent.

Mr. PHELPS. Have they not gone as high as 7 per cent. the last few years?

Mr. STEVENS. Yes, sir.

Mr. MITCHELL. Suppose the Government offered 4 per cent., and those old savings-banks were offering 6, which would the depositor prefer to lend to?

Mr. STEVENS. I think, in a great many cases, the money would go to the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. In the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland there are over three thousand savings-banks, with a balance at a given date, nearly ten years ago, of something over four millions sterling. Might or might not that system be adopted in our large centers of population—not extending it to the sparsely-settled portions of the country—with the same results as in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland?

Mr. STEVENS. I do not see how the Government is to employ the money and pay it whenever wanted. It has no loan in which it could invest. It would be merely taking the money of the poor to pay its own debt. The British government does not do that.

The CHAIRMAN. Could it not reserve a percentage sufficiently large to cover all demands that would be made? The averages of savings-banks are as well understood as the flow of the tides, a matter reduced to almost a mathematical certainty.

Mr. STEVENS. I think it might be applied; but to make its application desirable is a very different thing. I think that the moment you undertook to pay 4 per cent. the depositor in the savings-bank of any considerable sum, seeing that you were not willing to pay him such a percentage, would prefer either the higher rates of the banks or else purchase the 5 per cent. bonds. They want their money close at home. A word on the general subject of our own and foreign systems of finance: With regard to Great Britain, I think that all the comparisons that have been brought forward are based on false premises. The money-market of Great Britain can always be disturbed by the money-markets of the rest of the continent, Great Britain being the market for the sale of all sorts of securities. The securities of France, Germany, Holland, Spain, and Italy, all find a market under the London Exchange; and the balance of exchange can be turned against her by stock-sales of such securities and the withdrawal of coin. We have no market for such securities; and the only way in which coin can be drawn from this country is by turning the balance of trade against us—the balance of commodities.

The CHAIRMAN. Do I understand you to state the proposition that you think the best interests of this country would be promoted by increasing our foreign indebtedness?

Mr. STEVENS. No, sir; but still I think that our true interest is to get back this last issue of the reserve before it affects our prices again, even if we have to make a loan abroad.

The CHAIRMAN. When capital attains the form that you speak of, then it becomes invested; it adheres to the soil and becomes a part of the freehold. You think there is no business or industry carried on, no insurance, no importing done on foreign capital?

Mr. STEVENS. In industry of course foreign capital goes a great ways.

The CHAIRMAN. You have referred to France. Please state whether there is or not this difference between the condition of things in France and in this country: that there the only surplus of production takes the form of realized capital, while here it takes the form of vested capital.

Mr STEVENS. I do not recognize the distinction. I think that the money earned in France is kept there—spent upon herself. France has very little sympathy with the rest of the world, and its people spend their money at home.

The CHAIRMAN. France has been a wonderfully prosperous country, has it not?

Mr. STEVENS. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Would we not do better to take France as our financial study than to take England, as we generally do?

Mr. STEVENS. Yes, sir.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is it not true that there is no banking system in France that amounts to such?

Mr. STEVENS. That is true.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is there not but a very small portion of the business of France done through banks; is it not a very rare thing for a man to have a bank-account in France?

Mr. STEVENS. I would not say that. The people use the banks but little because of the large circulation there. We have seven or eight hundred millions of dollars circulation here. France has nearly twice that amount over a much smaller surface, but her credit system is restricted.

Mr. MITCHELL. The present circulation of the Bank of France is wholly abnormal and about being corrected?

Mr. STEVENS. Yes, sir; the paper is being withdrawn as fast as possible.

Mr. MITCHELL. This question of borrowing abroad, is it not, in your judgment, wise to leave it to the people and let them say whether it is best for them to borrow abroad or not?

Mr. STEVENS. Yes, sir.

Mr. MITCHELL. If I squat on a farm in Iowa, is it not better for me to borrow there than here?

Mr. STEVENS. Yes, sir; and that would be a judicious thing to do if we could do it; but nations, like individuals, generally prefer to borrow where they can borrow cheapest, and any legislation to the contrary is unnatural and unwise.

JAMES B. COLGATE, (No. 47 Wall street, New York,) a dealer in bullion and stocks, and president of the National Gold Exchange, appeared before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. You have heard the general line of inquiry that has been followed in reference to other gentleman who have favored us with their views, and I beg that you will give us your views upon the same general questions and any other that may occur to you as important.

Mr. COLGATE. The subject has been very fully gone over, but I would like to express myself in opposition to any increase of the currency of the country, for this reason: that it diminishes its purchasable power. For instance, during the recent panic, when money was exceedingly tight, gold fell to about 6 per cent. premium. The purchasable power of a greenback then was about $94\frac{3}{10}$; that is, $94\frac{3}{10}$ of gold was equivalent to one dollar in greenbacks. At the present time, gold being about $111\frac{1}{2}$ premium, the purchasable power of a greenback is about $89\frac{6}{10}$; and this comes, in my opinion, from the probable increase of our currency. Now, apply the same principle to this subject that an individual would apply to his own business; this principle is applicable to two individuals or three individuals composing a firm, and is equally applicable to a whole community or nation, because a nation is but an aggregate of individuals. Our greenbacks are selling at about $89\frac{6}{10}$ on the dollar at the present time: that is equivalent to about $10\frac{4}{10}$ discount. If the notes of a firm or an individual were selling at a discount of 10 per cent., the most desirable thing that that firm or individual could do would be to buy the nearest due paper. If more paper were issued it would sell at a greater discount; and this is precisely the condition we are in just now as a nation. Our paper is selling at a great discount. Should greenbacks be sold instead of gold, this would be very apparent to the whole nation. We have too many greenbacks, and the only way, in my opinion, left to us is to fund them, thereby decreasing their number until their purchasable power equals that of gold. The cost of a greenback is nothing; it is worth just the paper it is printed on; but its value lies in the promise to pay and its legal-tender attribute. What is the value of that promise to pay? The value of that at the present time is $10\frac{1}{2}$ discount as compared with gold, and the way to make it more valuable is to decrease the number of greenbacks, whereby their purchasable power is increased.

The CHAIRMAN. Suppose that the greenback had no other quality in it except a promise to pay indefinite, no time fixed but at the pleasure of the Government, and nobody supposing that it would be paid in gold or anything else under four years, and perhaps not then: do you believe that it would stand as near to coin as it does now?

Mr. COLGATE. If it had not the legal power attached to it, it would sell at a much greater discount as a security. I would give the national-bank notes the preference.

The CHAIRMAN. You think the receiving of them for taxes by the Government does not add anything to their value?

Mr. COLGATE. The legal-tender clause gives them value.

The CHAIRMAN. Do they not answer every purpose in all the domestic exchanges of the country that coin would answer, excepting to pay duties on imports?

Mr. COLGATE. No, sir; because coin is of greater purchasable power than the greenback.

Mr. FARWELL. You say that the greenback has additional value put to it by its being a legal-tender, and if it was not so it would sell like some of our other securities. The national-bank note has not that quality. Why is not that like our other securities?

Mr. COLGATE. Because it is secured by a bond on which the nation is bound to pay interest; that does not attach to a greenback, for it pays no interest. The security of a national-bank note receives interest in gold; it is also secured by the stockholders of the banks.

Mr. FARWELL. Do you not think the security of the greenback is just as good as the other if it was not a legal tender?

Mr. COLGATE. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You have said that the price of gold has advanced from 6 per cent. and a fraction to perhaps $11\frac{1}{2}$ since the panic, which you attribute to the apprehension on the part of the community that the amount of legal-tenders is to be increased. Do you recollect what the premium on gold was just prior to the panic?

Mr. COLGATE. I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you remember what it was along in July last?

Mr. COLGATE. It did rise last year as high as 19.

The CHAIRMAN. What was the occasion of that?

Mr. COLGATE. The apprehension was that there was to be a great scarcity of gold, and a great demand for exportation, and also it was from speculative purposes owing to the great abundance of currency and anticipative scarcity of gold.

The CHAIRMAN. Just prior to the panic, was not the price of gold as high in New York as it is now?

Mr. COLGATE. As money began to tighten gold declined. When the banks suspended there was a temporary advance of gold to 15, payable by checks on suspended banks; but the difference was some 3 or 4 per cent. less at one time by being paid in greenbacks.

Mr. FARWELL. What was the importation of gold in September?

Mr. COLGATE. I do not think there was any.

Mr. FARWELL. About the time that gold fell to $6\frac{1}{8}$?

Mr. COLGATE. The entire import of gold from England during the panic was about $10,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The price of gold, with the exception of a few days in October, both before and after the panic, was quite as high as it is now. Wherefore do you tell us that the rise of gold since October is the result of an apprehension on the part of the people that we are going to issue more greenbacks, and that that was not the cause of its standing the same way before?

Mr. COLGATE. There are many things which have to be taken into this calculation. Money has become exceedingly plenty in the city of New York, and the difficulty of carrying gold is less than it was. When money is very tight and it costs 7 per cent. and sometimes more to carry gold, few feel willing to buy gold in anticipation, when the rate of interest is so much against the buyer. But as money becomes abundant, and it costs less to carry it, it is bought up in anticipation, and especially is this the case when our imports are large and there is a prospect for a demand for gold for export. Gold can be carried now in New York for about 5 per cent. This is very much against the purchaser. Should money become exceedingly plethoric, and there is a prospect for a large importation of goods, importers and speculators would buy gold in anticipation of a rise often incurred by shipments of coin. In the reverse case, gold would naturally decline.

The CHAIRMAN. Are all the operations of gold actual transactions, or is any portion of them speculative?

Mr. COLGATE. Like every other article of merchandise, a great many of the operations are speculative—highly so. Parties at the time do not always anticipate the transfer of coin, but are speculating upon what the rates will be. In the New York Gold Exchange every transaction, except otherwise expressed, is regularly settled through the clearing-house; and if a purchaser has more gold over than he requires, he is compelled to provide for its payment in currency.

Mr. FARWELL. The clearances per day will vary from twenty-two millions up to as high as one hundred and forty, one hundred and fifty, or one hundred and sixty millions. Would they average one hundred millions per day?

Mr. COLGATE. I do not think they would. On very excited occasions they might run as high as one hundred millions.

The CHAIRMAN. The total clearance of the Gold Exchange for 1873 is seventeen billions and three millions, which would average something upward of fifty-six millions a day.

Mr. COLGATE. There is no reason at the present time why gold should be selling at $11\frac{1}{4}$ except the prospect of the issuing of the forty-four millions additional currency.

Mr. MITCHELL. If we put out the forty-four millions permanently, what would be the price of gold?

Mr. COLGATE. I do not think it would rise very much beyond its present price. If it were not for that forty-four millions, my opinion is that gold would be selling now at from 5 to 6 premium.

Mr. MITCHELL. Suppose there was no speculative dealings in gold: what would be the price of it? Would it not be governed by the rate of exchange?

Mr. COLGATE. There is a vast amount of business which is done in New York in gold. For instance, sales of sugars, coffees, teas, lead, and foreign exchange, &c., are usually made in gold, and importers make very large contracts in gold to cover the sales of merchandise. For instance, a cargo of coffee amounting to $150,000; the owner will accept an offer for it, provided he can buy gold at such a price, and have it carried thirty days: this gives him thirty days to have that cargo discharged, weighed, collect the bills receivable, and get the paper discounted so as to meet the payment of that amount within thirty days; and any obstruction which is put upon the purchase and the sale of gold is an obstruction put upon commerce. The speculations in gold do not amount to much except on special occasions.

Mr. FARWELL. That refers entirely to foreign commerce?

Mr. COLGATE. Yes, sir.

Mr. MITCHELL. The contracts made in Chicago to be delivered in Europe, are they not made in exchange?

Mr. COLGATE. Yes, sir.

Mr. MITCHELL. This issue of forty-four millions has tended to raise the price of gold, you say, from 6 or 7, up to 11?

Mr. COLGATE. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And somehow I do not get your reasons why it was higher before, at, and after the panic than it is now. During the panic our monetary system was much deranged.

Mr. COLGATE. The first foundation was gold, the second was national-bank notes and greenbacks, and the third was suspended banks; and persons would apply in this way: "I wish to purchase $100,000 in gold" for greenbacks. He would purchase his gold at 3 per cent. less than he paid by check on a suspended bank. And that accounts for the fluctuations in gold at that time. A buyer would pay less for his gold if he paid for it in greenbacks, because greenbacks were selling at 3 per cent. premium. The last panic, if I can understand it, did not arise from any distrust of the Government issues, but it arose purely from distrust in the depositories of money. That is a point which is very seldom alluded to. We had at that time more greenbacks and more national-bank notes than were necessary to carry on the business of the country, if it were not for this fear of the credit of the banks. In other words, the people had no apprehension about the safety of their currency, but they did have apprehension that they might not be able to get it from the banks. I think it was a great mistake on the part of the Secretary of the Treasury, with some sixteen millions of greenbacks in his possession, in time of panic to part with them, when no prudent man would have parted with his, but would have kept them to meet his own debts. If the Secretary had issued one hundred millions of greenbacks at that time, they would have been all taken up, and would have gone into the pockets of individuals. I venture to say that the business of this country can be done for the coming year with one hundred millions of currency less than was required the year previous. There is an impression abroad that an easy money-market is beneficial to the nation. I hold the reverse—that a tight money-market is the greatest benefit to the community, because a tight money-market brings about economy.

The CHAIRMAN. Then everything that would tend to keep the people in a state of poverty and dependence upon their own exertions would be beneficial to the country?

Mr. COLGATE. No, sir. A tight money-market tends to thrift, not poverty. There is a difference between a tight money-market and a stringent money-market. A stringent money-market is when money cannot be obtained, and a tight money-market is when it can be got by paying interest.

Mr. FARWELL. Suppose that the Secretary of the Treasury had deposited in the national depositories the amount of the clearing-house certificates: do you suppose that the panic would have happened at all?

Mr. COLGATE. I give it as my opinion that, if the Secretary of the Treasury, on the day of the failure of Jay Cooke, when he offered his gold for sale, had been equal to the occasion, he would have accepted every bid for gold, and ordered that money to be placed in the Bank of Commerce, or some other large institution, asking of them security. I venture to say that, if he had done so, it would have allayed one-half the panic. As I said before, this panic, I think, is a great national blessing. It might have occurred under a gold basis. We will never come back to specie payment, in my opinion, until we get rid of our greenback currency.

The CHAIRMAN. You say you think the panic was a great national blessing. Were there not a great many people in the United States who, in consequence of the panic, were obliged to go without food?

Mr. COLGATE. It is so reported, and I believe it.

Mr. FARWELL. On the basis that it is a great national blessing, of course you would not advocate that we have one every year?

Mr. COLGATE. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Please tell us in what the extravagance of this nation consisted.

Mr. COLGATE. What is true of an individual is true of many individuals ; and a nation which in the course of seven or eight years lives in such an extravagant manner as to part with their best stocks to cover over balances of trade amounting to a thousand millions of dollars, I look upon as being very extravagant, and opposed to the thrift which we see in France.

The CHAIRMAN. I want you now to specify in what respect the extravagance has manifested itself, in your opinion.

Mr. COLGATE. Every man is extravagant when he lives beyond his income.

Mr. FARWELL. I wish to ask whether specie payment and a healthy condition of the country can be maintained unless the balance of trade is in our favor ?

Mr. COLGATE. After we come back to a thrifty condition we can pay out a large amount of specie, because we take from the earth yearly from seventy to eighty millions of bullion.

Mr. FARWELL. If the balance of trade is still against us, can we maintain specie payment in this country ?

Mr. COLGATE. I do not think we can.

Mr. FARWELL. What, in your opinion, would be the consequence or the result of a law of this kind, taking restriction off from the limit of national-bank notes within an easy method of redeeming ?

Mr. COLGATE. I have no data to go by ; but if I were to give an opinion according to the best of my experience, my impression is it would be a very great benefit to the country.

Mr. FARWELL. In the present condition of suspended circulation you would favor a law of redemption ?

Mr. COLGATE. I would.

WASHINGTON, January 22, 1874.

SIR : I take the liberty of addressing you this in the hope of presenting my views on banking, currency, and resumption more tersely, more clearly, and more practically than in the verbal remarks I was recently permitted to make before your committee.

The great impediment in the way of resumption and the proper modification of the national-bank act appears to be the doubts in the public mind in regard to the questions of inflation, the redemption of our paper currencies, and the balance of our trade with foreign nations.

Now, the redemption of one species of currency or money by another can be no remedy for a redundant currency. The substitution of one kind of money for another in no way alters the aggregate amount in circulation ; it only alters the relative amount of each, of which the aggregate amount is composed. The only process by which a circulating medium can be properly and advantageously contracted, when excessive, is by its return to the issuers in liquidation of the indebtedness of the community. Bank-notes and bank-loans are the only form of currencies or circulating medium which can thus be promptly and easily returned to the sources from which they emanate. The precious metals cannot be advantageously returned to the bowels of the earth from whence they have been extracted ; they can only be exported to foreign countries ; and, unfortunately, owing to general ignorance of the true functions of money, this is generally seen with fear, and hence is usually attempted to be checked. Government paper money only returns to the source from whence it emanates by the taxes collected by the Government that issues it ; and in that case it is soon returned into circulation by means of the expenditures of Government.

The only form of redemption really necessary to enhance the usefulness of money or currency of any kind to the community is its daily, hourly, redemption by the community in exchange for useful products and services. It is to this end, to render our paper currency more readily accepted over a greater extent of territory, that resumption of specie payments is necessary. Our legal-tenders and national-bank notes do not circulate in foreign countries, hence need to be converted into the only circulating medium as yet universally accepted—gold and silver—before they can properly perform all the functions of money in our internal operations, which are all more or less interlinked with our foreign trade. The convertibility of our legal-tenders into coin at par will render our paper currencies as invariable in value as the precious metals. When made convertible into coin at par, our paper currencies will circulate on a par with coin in all parts of the country, and will be readily accepted in the Pacific States and in Texas, where they have thus far been refused, in spite of our legal-tender act, on account of their daily fluctuations in value.

It is an error to suppose, as so many do, that to bring up the value of our legal-tenders and national-bank notes they need to be redeemed in money of greater value. To render our currencies more useful and of greater value than at present, it is only necessary to render them as useful as gold in all the internal operations of the community. When this result shall be attained, our currencies will be on a par with gold throughout the whole country. But so long as they are refused in payments of duties on foreign imports, and in payment of foreign exchanges and foreign products ; as long as they are not current in the Pacific States and in Texas, it is evident they cannot take the place of gold in a large portion of the internal operations of the community ; hence cannot be equally valuable with gold, which is, therefore, held at a premium and hoarded until it can be obtained. After resumption, for all the internal operations of the country our currencies will be preferable to coin, because more easily and more economically transported, counted, and verified, and coin will then only be preferred to our currencies when it becomes necessary to obtain foreign products and commodities in excess of the value of our momentary exports of products and commodities. For the internal operations of the country the legal-tenders after resumption will often command a slight premium in exchange for coin, if we limit the issues of legal-tenders, as we should, to $400,000,000. As to the extent of the foreign demand for coin, the experience of the past, both here and in Europe, renders it almost certain that it cannot exceed, under any possible circumstances, either here or in Europe, $50,000,000 at any one consecutive period of time, and this will be spread over at least three or four months, during which new supplies will flow in from our mines and from other sources to replace, in whole or in part, the coin exported.

One very important measure that should at once be adopted by Congress is to authorize the coining of silver, and make it a legal tender to any amount at the same relative value to gold as it is at present coined in Europe in the countries that use the two standards of gold and silver ; i. e., in the proportion of 1 to 15½, instead of our present relative legal standards of 1 to 16. By continuing the present relative standard of 1 to 16 we drive silver out of the country, diminish its usefulness and value, and force its exportation even at the very time that we are importing gold from Europe. What can be more absurd than, by erroneous legislation, to force our people to pay the cost of transporting to Europe the silver produced from our mines at the very moment when, if retained here at its value in Europe, it would fulfill all the functions of gold, and save us the trouble and cost of importing the latter from Europe ?

If I am right in my premises, it follows that resumption is an easy process, which will confer great benefits on the entire community, without any serious compensating disadvantages. By passing at once an act that shall make the legal-tenders convertible into coin at par, at the subtreasuries at New York and San Francisco, on and after the 1st January next, and removing all existing restrictions in regard to the issues of national-bank notes against the deposit of United States bonds, and the legal reserves to be held by the national banks, our currencies will be made, on or before that day, equal to gold, without being diminished in quantity, and the currency will become elastic in the only manner in which this desirable result can be properly attained. Thereafter the volume of the currency will mainly depend on the community rather than on the banks, since the latter, from self-interest, will then be led to issue bank-notes and make bank-loans to those who will pay interest for them and furnish undoubted security for their prompt repayment, which means their return to the banks, at a fixed period of time, (which, to all intents and purposes, is the best possible and only necessary redemption of bank liabilities over and above their acceptance by the community in exchange for useful products and services,) at the identical value at which they are issued. This incessant issue of bank-notes and bank-loans, and their redemption by offset against the claims of the banks upon the community, require no coin whatever, and yet the volume of the currency will thereby be daily adjusted to the wants of the community. Surely no system of regulating the currency can be simpler or more efficacious.

After resumption the liability of the banks being made by law redeemable in legal-tenders, the reserves voluntarily held by the banks from self-interest and prudence will consist in legal-tenders, thus creating a constant demand for them so long as the issues are limited by law to $400,000,000. And the greater part of the entire stock of coin in the country can then be concentrated at the only two points where it will be needed or useful—at New York and San Francisco—instead of being divided among our innumerable national banks, as would be necessary were they forced by law to redeem their liability in coin ; and the legal-tenders presented for redemption in coin can be promptly re-issued in the disbursements of the Government, thus preventing their long withdrawal from active circulation or from the reserves of the banks. There is every probability that the average aggregate bank-reserves voluntarily held by the national banks will be fully equal to, if not greater than, those now held in consequence of the law ; but, being available to the banks in moments of emergency, they will not then, as now, be the cause of the diminution or of the entire cessation of bank-issues, or bank-notes and bank-loans, to the great injury of the most legitimate interests of the country.

The 1st of January, 1875, is probably, at present, the best possible period of time for resumption, as it will give ample time to every one to make the preparation deemed necessary to guard against the possible effects of the transition from an inconvertible currency, daily fluctuating in value, to a convertible currency of unalterable value, and yet not so far distant as to unduly prolong the serious evils our present inconvertible currency inflicts on the community. At that period of the year our exports of agricultural products are more than sufficient to liquidate our maturing foreign indebtedness, so that we can then count on an absence of a foreign drain of coin, which might alarm the timid and doubtful in regard to our ability to maintain specie payments, and thus render resumption less easy. The moment Congress positively fixes the time when legal-tenders shall be convertible into coin the premium on gold will inevitably begin to decline, and will gradually approach par, which will probably be reached some time before the day fixed for resumption, in consequence of the growing desire of the holders of gold to realize the premium before it finally disappears. In England resumption was ordered by an act of Parliament to take place in 1823, but gold was at par in 1820, before the bank resumed, and the Bank of England voluntarily resumed on the 1st of May, 1821. Similar results must occur here the moment the day of resumption is fixed by an act of Congress.

It is a great error to suppose, as many persons do, that we need $200,000,000 or more of coin to resume and successfully maintain specie payments. The moment legal-tenders become convertible into coin in New York and San Francisco, they will become identical with our present gold-certificates, except that, being smaller in the amounts they represent, they will render far greater services than the gold-certificates now render, and will be preferred to coin for all the internal operations of the community. After resumption it will only be when coin has to be shipped to foreign countries that legal-tenders will be presented to any extent for conversion into coin.

There is no foundation for the supposition that either our capitalists or speculators or foreign bondholders will ever find it possible and to their interest to present legal-tenders for conversion into coin to any considerable extent. After resumption no large amount of legal-tenders can be withdrawn from circulation or from the bank reserves without rendering money so scarce and high that it will be more profitable to employ it in the purchase of commodities and securities than in holding coin, which produces nothing to the holders so long as it will not in the future be salable at a premium. After resumption brokers will not purchase coin even at par, for they cannot then hope to resell it at any premium so long as it can be obtained at par at the subtreasuries. Foreigners cannot force us to purchase their commodities, nor the American securities they hold, unless we find it to our advantage to do so, and have the means of paying for them without deranging our own finances, industry, and commerce. We and not foreigners control our purchases of all kinds as well as our sales. International exchanges are self-regulating, and need no restrictions whatever from any other source than individual self-interest. We cannot be forced to purchase and pay for what we do not need or desire, nor to sell or part with what we do need or desire. The custom-house returns do not indicate the real monetary balance of international trade. Nothing truly indicates this but the current rate of the foreign exchanges and the exports or imports of coin. The imports of every commercial nation of the globe exceed its exports, and yet the exchanges and exports of coin conclusively prove that large exports of coin are not often necessary to liquidate these adverse balances of trade, which are more apparent than real, due to the fact that the custom-house returns do not present all the elements which enter into the natural exchanges of the world, and that they are generally adjusted in some other manner than by transfers of coin. Coin is rarely used in international trade, except when a nation suddenly needs an unexpected amount of anything indispensable, like food after bad harvests. The imports of Great Britain, as a rule, very largely exceed her exports. It is only the exports of semi-barbarous nations that exceed their imports, and this result, instead of being advantageous and an evidence of prosperity, indicates the contrary. The people of those countries part with a greater amount of useful products than they receive, and hence their foreign trade impoverishes instead of enriching them. Surely this is not a result to be desired. Even if the balance be paid to them in coin, the latter cannot render them the same services as useful commodities, which coin must seek and be an exchange for before it becomes really useful to its owners. There can surely be no cause for alarm when we receive from foreign nations more useful products and commodities than we send to them.

We can, therefore, successfully maintain specie payments even in the face of an apparent adverse balance of trade, only we must not attempt to resume at any period of the year when we usually export coin for lack of surplus products and commodities, because prudence requires that resumption shall not be rendered more difficult by taking place when we have a foreign demand for coin. But the transition from suspension to resumption once passed, we need not fear any possible foreign demand for coin, which is greatly exaggerated. We can at all times sustain specie payments full as easily as Great Britain, for our products are eagerly sought by all the nations of the globe, to whom our surplus cotton, breadstuffs, provisions, tobacco, petroleum, and innumerable other products are absolutely indispensable. Resumption will increase our exports by reducing the cost of production of everything useful as well as the cost of exchanging the results of labor. Gold and silver, as a rule, do not move from the mines toward the countries where the rate of interest is high, but, on the contrary, toward those where the rate of interest rules low, because it is in the latter where the coin-reserves of the world can be most economically held until needed to transfer products and commodities. But the precious metals invariably move from their reservoirs toward those points where useful commodities are low when needed, whatever be the rates of interest current at the points whence they are moved or at those to which they are transferred. These well-established facts are a perfect refutation of the erroneous theory that the Bank of England successfully maintains specie payments by her incessant variations in the rate of discount. These variations only distress and disturb and hence diminish the productive industries and the foreign commerce of Great Britain, the sole means by which she can attract the precious metals to her shores. Resumption will enable us to balance our foreign trade with a less amount of coin than during suspension; and instead of forcing us to use and return on hand a larger amount of coin than during suspension, will permit us to dispense with it entirely in our internal operations, to the great benefit of the whole community, and to the loss of none but the gold dealers and speculators, who, however, can easily find other occupations more profitable to the community, if not to themselves.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CHAS. MORAN.

Hon. HORACE MAYNARD,
Chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House of Representatives.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 23, 1874.

HENRY P. KIDDER, of the firm of Kidder & Peabody, bankers, Boston, appeared, on the invitation of the committee, and in response to the general question as to the defects in our financial system and the remedies therefor, made the following statement:

Our business is mostly in foreign exchange, and I have been asked to give such facts as come from our peculiar stand-point, which may be a little different from some of the views you have heard expressed. I suppose everybody understands that all business and finance are based primarily upon credit. It has seemed to me that the amount of circulation of the country bears little proportion to the amount of business that is done. Credit is the largest part. The basis of the business of foreign countries is gold; therefore we are at great disadvantage with all the world in not being on a specie basis. Then, I suppose, the question what shall be done with our currency to bring it safely to the specie standard is the most important question. It seems to me there is no cause whatever for inflation. On the other hand, it seems that there is no great occasion for an immediate decrease of the currency. The fact that there has been inflation is shown in the prices now as comparing with prices a few years ago, when the business of the country was conducted with not more than one-half as much money as now. It seems to me, therefore, that the volume of currency is larger than absolutely necessary or safe, looking to the time when we are to return to the specie basis, and that if we can, by a gradual process, make the country and world understand that we mean to go back to the specie basis, by the withdrawal of a certain amount of currency during that period of the year when money is easy, that is what we ought to do. Confidence would be gradually restored, and we should, by a natural process, bring our notes back to the same standard as specie. Whenever we begin on that operation our credit will be restored, and there will be use for really less coin than there is now, because now we are all the time keeping it in motion. If any of you will look at the amount of settlements in the New York Exchange, you will see that the absolute amounts paid in the shape of balances bear very little proportion to the amount of transactions. Why? Because we have all credit in each other. I think another thing that might be done to assist in restoring confidence would be to establish a rule that the banks should be obliged to redeem their bills. The national banks, now all over the country, have issued their bills, and they very rarely see them again, and never expect to see them, and perhaps prefer not to see them. If banks understand that they are obliged to redeem with greenbacks, it would operate as a check upon the speculation which now occurs under our excessive amount of currency. Credit is what is wanted, more, it seems to me, than increase of currency.

The CHAIRMAN. You have expressed the opinion that there is a redundancy of currency in the country. I wish you would give us an opinion upon the state of facts we meet with in the South. A considerable portion of the cotton-crop has been actually lost in consequence of the impossibility of getting money to gather it. Will you give us your opinion of the reason of that deficiency, when there is a superabundance of money in the country?

Mr. KIDDER. I do not believe that has occurred in any other season. It has happened so this season because of the stringency which occurred in the panic. But it is not a thing which would occur every year, nor when money was flowing in its ordinary channels. As a matter of fact, when the panic began to be felt in New York, money flowed in from the South and West until the stringency occurred, and then the currency flowed back again.

The CHAIRMAN. In my section of country the complaint is not that the currency is below par, but that they cannot get currency. Let me ask you, on the subject of your business in foreign exchanges, how much time your transactions generally consume.

Mr. KIDDER. They may be done in a moment. We often telegraph to London in the afternoon, and the next morning the matter is consummated. Ordinarily our exchanges are in the shape of sixty-day bills on London.

The CHAIRMAN. When you loan money on credit, how long is it before the borrower brings the transaction to a close?

Mr. KIDDER. There is no specified time. For instance, when we give bills of exchange to persons going to China, they are always good for a year.

The CHAIRMAN. What proportion of your business is in the nature of call-loans, and what in the nature of time-loans?

Mr. KIDDER. We do very little call-loan business.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know enough of the business transactions of the city of Boston to state how long bank-paper has generally to run?

Mr. KIDDER. My impression is from thirty to ninety days.

Mr. HUNTER. You say that in Boston you do your business largely upon credit and confidence. Now, in the West and in the rural districts people cannot do their business in that way; they have to do it by passing money from one to another. Do you suppose there is money enough in the country to enable people to transact their business in that way?

Mr. KIDDER. I think so. I have very large interests in the West, but I cannot in my own mind divest one section from the other in that regard.

Mr. DURHAM. I understood you to say that you would require the national banks to redeem their notes in specie.

Mr. KIDDER. No; in greenbacks.

Mr. DURHAM. Would you have everything put upon a greenback basis?

Mr. KIDDER. That is in my mind.

Mr. DURHAM. The Secretary has issued a part of the $44,000,000 reserve. You think that should be returned?

Mr. KIDDER. I think so decidedly.

Mr. DURHAM. You recommend now a contraction of the currency to take place to that extent?

Mr. KIDDER. I do, certainly. One means of accomplishing it would be to sell again the bonds that were purchased during the panic.

Mr. DURHAM. A proposition was introduced into the House yesterday to make $400,000,000 greenbacks the basis of our currency. Is that in your judgment too much?

Mr. KIDDER. I think it is in addition to the national-bank currency authorized. I think the effect of it is very similar to what would have been several years ago if we had fixed $800,000,000 as a basis.

Mr. FARWELL. Suppose that was a method of redemption, like the one presented by Mr. Merriam requiring the national banks to deposit in the Treasury of the United States 5 per cent. for the redemption of their notes, which should be received by the Treasury Department, and greenbacks issued in place of them: would $400,000,000 be too much, then?

Mr. KIDDER. I think it would not be needed then.

Mr. FARWELL. Suppose we should take off the limit in respect to bank-currency, and allow banking to be free in that respect, accompanied with the method of redemption to which I have referred: would not this redemption, in your judgment, limit the amount of money in circulation?

Mr. KIDDER. I think it would increase it.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you think there is any danger in unrestricted banking—allowing every man to establish a bank wherever he pleases under our present system?

Mr. KIDDER. Yes; I believe there would be great danger.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you believe a man would go into banking with bonds for which he had to pay $117 or $118 before he could issue $90 currency unless he could make something very considerable by it?

Mr. KIDDER. The credit they would obtain by having the power of issuance, it seems to me, would be a very bad thing.

The CHAIRMAN. We hear frequently of men engaged in national banking voluntarily retiring from the business and giving up their franchises.

Mr. KIDDER. I do not think it is often done where they can issue currency. I do not know whether you have in mind the charter which I have surrendered for a gold bank.

Mr. MERRIAM. We have petitions from various banks, asking permission to surrender their currency.

Mr. KIDDER. I am not perfectly conversant with these facts, and was not aware of what you state.

Mr. MERRIAM. You have alluded to reduction of prices as having a tendency not to require so much currency to do business. From what data do you assume there has been a reduction of prices?

Mr. KIDDER. Any one acquainted with business can understand that prices are lower to-day than they were a year ago; for instance, sugar is now at about the same price as before the war.

Mr. MERRIAM. How in regard to coffee and cotton?

Mr. KIDDER. Coffee and cotton are higher.

Mr. MERRIAM. Is it not a fact that our production of gold since 1848 has advanced the prices throughout the world, and that we can never hope to get our prices down to what they were before 1848?

Mr. KIDDER. I have no such dream as that, but I think we can get a part of the way down, and be upon a safer and better basis than now, particularly if our plans are so arranged that we all go at once and are all affected alike. It would prevent that wild speculation which is calculated at any time to bring on panics and commercial crises; which stimulates the building of a great many more railroads than there is any actual need of. The railroads built years ago in the country nearly all turned out profitable, and encouraged new enterprises many years beyond the wants of the country, and which have been during the last autumn brought to grief. I do not know how many millions of bonds defaulted last January.

Mr. MERRIAM. Do you regard the construction of these railroads as wild speculation in the ordinary use of the term?

Mr. KIDDER. I do so regard them.

Mr. MERRIAM. You regard them as of the same character as Law's Mississippi scheme and the South Sea bubble, and other enterprises of that nature?

KIDDER. Not so bad as these, but of the same general nature.

JOHN E. GANO, publisher and financial editor of the Cincinnati Commercial, appeared, on the invitation of the committee, and, in response to their general question as to any defects in our present financial system and the remedy therefor, made the following statement:

I am not very skilled in finance, but I have been giving this subject a good deal of attention since the organization of the Cincinnati Board of Trade. At its first meeting, in 1868, I presented a plan which seemed to me to be a possible remedy for the existing and acknowledged evils; and although I have bothered my head with a great many plans since that time, I do not know of any other which seems to me more likely to reach a successful solution of the difficulties, if it is possible to get back to specie payments, as I think we shall all agree it certainly is. In the first place, I should not consider any plan as likely to be successful if in its operation it shall come into collision with the business machinery of the country. Any plan adopted must be exceedingly simple, so that the business of the country will adjust itself without producing any jar. In that view I presented a plan at the late meeting of the National Board of Trade, which is actually applicable to our fractional currency, and in reference to which I think very nearly the same course should be introduced. I would say in regard to the peculiarity of our finances that there are so many, if I may use the expression, concentric wheels in the machinery of commerce and finance, that it is impossible to have them all running and then suddenly change their motion without revulsion and disaster. Men who are simply theorizing on this subject may be upset continually with the infinite variety of arguments that are presented. Now, the plan to which I have referred is that Congress should, at a certain date ahead, declare that no note should be a legal tender for less than $5; and, at a certain date still further ahead, no note should be a legal tender of less denomination than $10; at a certain other date, less than $20; further on less than $50 and $100, and so on. That puts the Government in process of resumption. These notes having to be redeemed, will naturally appreciate to the gold standard, so that all the business of the country will begin to adjust itself. One particularly desirable thing accomplished will be that the values in the community will begin to be adjusted to the specie level. These notes being redeemable, the national banks will necessarily bring out their small notes. If any one will examine his pocket-book, he will see now that probably 75 per cent. of the small notes are legal-tenders. I am pretty sure that is the case in all the leading cities.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know whether the national banks have issued any considerable number of notes of less than $5?

Mr. GANO. The report of the Comptroller of the Treasury will show exactly what has been done in that regard. I have not the statistics at hand.

Mr. HAWLEY. Is not that fact partly accounted for in the fact that the banks, being compelled to keep their reserves in legal-tenders, would naturally select, for counting out their reserves, notes of larger denominations?

Mr. GANO. That would undoubtedly account for it in part. The Government of course would have to provide itself with coin by such process as may be considered most desirable in order to be ready to redeem its notes. The question will come up as to what shall be done to provide small notes for currency as these small notes are being retired. How shall the vacuum be filled as these notes come in and are redeemed? And there will occur in the same connection the question, in regard to which there is much difference of opinion, as to whether the currency should consist of legal-tenders or national-bank notes, or both, as at present. My idea is that, as this plan shall proceed in its operation, national banking shall be made free on a gold basis, and that the national banks should be allowed to issue gold-notes, as legal-tenders are canceled, until the national-bank notes shall become the only currency; that, if it should be thought best to have the entire issue of greenbacks, the Treasury of course will issue dollar for dollar gold-notes as the legal-tenders are canceled. One great object to be accomplished would be to get the country onto a specie basis without saying a word about contraction, and allow such contraction as may be necessary to accrue under the administration of business and not under the administration of law. I would simply adjust the business machinery to the financial machinery of the country in such a way as to make it solve its own problem. I cannot regard it as possible to proceed in any other way, except to go on with the free issue of money until it shall become worthless, and in the revulsion that occurs money based upon gold shall be substituted as a matter of necessity.

In presenting this proposition in regard to national-bank currency, Mr. Stevenson supplemented it with a proposition that the fractional currency, of which now there is an excess, should be contracted to the extent of $10,000,000. If that should be done, it would apply principally to the fifty-cent pieces. I think the experience of all business men will show that the fifty-cent pieces are very largely supplanting the dollar notes. I have here a letter written by Mr. Stevenson, which has never been published, in which there are some interesting facts which I think the committee will be glad to hear.

[Mr. Gano here read from a printed slip the statement referred to.]

The CHAIRMAN. Now, be good enough to tell us in what way you would remedy the defects of our financial system. Explain your plan.

Mr. GANO. The operation would be to begin with the redemption of a certain amount of fractional currency and to substitute therefor legal-tenders, so that the amount may be reduced to conform with what the Secretary himself suggests. In the operation of substitution there is another point, I think, it will be very interesting for you to know. The redemption of the currency under the present system is very rapid. It would be a good plan to begin by redeeming and canceling ten-cent pieces as they come into the Treasury, the operation being all the time to send to Washington the mutilated and worn fractional currency and get new in the place of it. There is another fact in connection with our currency which I think is an interesting one, relating to the amount of currency which is always in transitu, and which has the effect, to a really considerable extent, of reducing the amount of currency in circulation.

The CHAIRMAN. Your proposition to substitute for our present fractional currency silver coin I presented one day to the Secretary of the Treasury, who immediately inquired where the Treasury was to get the silver coin for circulation in place of the fractional currency. What answer would you give to that question?

Mr. GANO. He would have to provide himself by purchase or by exchange of gold for silver in such way as he can. The production of the country in the precious metals is very large, and most of it now goes out of the country. The Government would have to purchase bullion and coin; and of course such a thing as this would have to be gradual, and some preparatory steps must first be taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Government is at present burdened by an amount of taxation which is still not equal to the revenues required. Would you impose additional taxation or negotiate an additional loan?

Mr. GANO. In our condition of affairs just this period would not be regarded as a favorable time to commence the process, but it is to be hoped that before very long the Government will come into a better condition. The great object to be obtained is to work the machinery of finance so as to appreciate our currency as rapidly as possible to the specie standard.

The CHAIRMAN. Suppose the Secretary of the Treasury were to retire the ten and fifteen cent fractional currency: do you think the small coin in silver would flow in and fill up the vacuum without any inconvenience to the business of the country?

Mr. GANO. I think it would if the premium was not too large. If the premium on silver is not above 7 per cent., silver would remain in circulation. You will remember that in 1843, when there was scarcity of fractional currency, there was a substitute by individuals themselves, for temporary convenience, and perhaps this would occur again.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you think it would be an improvement on our currency to substitute shinplasters in place of the Government issues we have now?

Mr. GANO. No; I only mention it to show that, whenever this occurs, there will have to be a strain, and that the people will resort to something to help themselves while the operation is going on.

Mr. MERRIAM. If you withdraw the ten and fifteen cent fractional currency you say it can be replaced by silver coin when the premium is less than 7 per cent. The premium on gold is now very considerably above 7 per cent., and it is useless, therefore, to talk of withdrawing this currency and substituting silver at present, because the silver would not remain in circulation, not even the amount paid out in the $5 resumption experiment of the present Secretary.

Mr. GANO. That is true. I only mentioned the individual credits to which I referred to illustrate the fact that trade will make its own machinery if compelled to do it.

Mr. MERRIAM. Would you suggest the withdrawal of the ten-cent fractional currency before the general resumption?

Mr. GANO. I think it would be a very desirable thing even now.

Mr. MERRIAM. Would it not be better to give the people what they demand? They are satisfied with the present issue; and would it not be better to give them what they regard as most desirable, especially as the Government gets the benefit of the loan of $40,000,000 from the people without paying any interest?

Mr. GANO. According to the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury, we are now considerably above the requirements of the country in our issues of fractional currency, which are running up very rapidly. If the committee will allow me, I desire to present one additional suggestion. During the panic it seemed to me exceedingly desirable to consider the effect of the process of the exchanges of the country, by which so much currency is kept in transitu and entirely out of circulation. I think it will be practicable to effect a system of exchanges between the leading commercial centers of the country which should correspond to the exchanges through the clearing-house in New York and other large cities.

Mr. MERRIAM. Have you any estimate as to what amount of currency is kept out of circulation in transitu?

Mr. GANO. It would be very difficult to ascertain that fact. I have heard it estimated as high as $25,000,000.

Mr. MERRIAM. Your point is that this amounts to the hoarding of so much currency?

Mr. GANO. Yes; and there is also a point I want to suggest, that the establishment of such a system of exchange as I have referred to would be a great saving of risk as well as of wear to the currency.

Mr. MITCHELL. You speak of in transitu as being out of circulation. Is not currency in the pockets of people and in the vaults of banks out of circulation?

Mr. GANO. There is no doubt about that, but they are nevertheless performing the office of circulation.

Mr. MITCHELL. You do not mean that money in a person's pocket is in circulation?

Mr. GANO. In one sense it is. When a bank has made a discount, the discount itself has performed the function of putting currency into circulation.

Mr. MITCHELL. As a matter of fact, is not the currency in the pocket, in the banks, and in transitu all discharging the function of circulation?

Mr. GANO. To a certain extent, perhaps, it is.

LYNCHBURGH, January 21, 1874.

MY DEAR SIR: I find it will be impracticable to appear in person before your committee at any day. I therefore inclose a written statement of the views which occur to me on the subject, invoking for them from yourself and the committee such attention as the subject discussed is entitled to. I write from a railway-station. My home hereafter will be Norfolk, Va.

I am, most respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. W. HUGHES.

Hon. HORACE MAYNARD.

A PAPER ON BANKING, CURRENCY, AND FINANCE, SUBMITTED BY R. W. HUGHES, OF VIRGINIA.

Hon. HORACE MAYNARD, Chairman, &c.

DEAR SIR: The enormous foreign and domestic indebtedness of this country, its immeasurable and varied resources, its advantageous position for trade with the great eastern and western populations of the other hemisphere, its restless population, full of exaggerated hope and dauntless enterprise, its late civil war ending in triumph and confidence, but leaving stupendous financial results, all produce a state of things in banking, finance, and commerce wholly without example, and calculated to tax the financial statesmanship of the nation to a degree altogether unprecedented. In every way is our situation new and extraordinary. We have no experiences to go by in our anomalous situation, and, as a natural consequence, the statesmanship of the country finds itself baffled on the whole subject of finance.

EFFECT HERE OF SHORT CROPS IN GREAT BRITAIN.

At the close of the late English harvest it was found that an extraordinary importation of grain would be required for British and Irish consumption. The English financiers at once began to prepare for the unusual demand upon their resources. The effect in this country was immediate and almost electric. Our rickety system of credit, which rested upon the contingency of easy money-markets abroad, was shaken to its foundation. Not even did the project of an immense exportation of produce give relief. Our whole commercial and financial system was stricken with paralysis, and although our material wealth was greater than ever before, our financial condition became deplorable in the extreme.

THE ENGLISH CURTAILMENT CLOSED OUR AMERICAN BANKS.

The British grain-crop was found to be short by some 100,000,000 bushels. The discovery of it cut off the demand for our bonds of all kinds, and put up the rate of interest in England. The effect began here with the great railroad houses of Jay Cooke & Co., Fisk & Hatch, Henry Clews & Co., and Howes & Macy, and threw upon all a demand for payments due abroad. Our banks were driven to the necessity of curtailing, in consequence of the run upon their resources. at the rate of 4 to 1 in cities, and 6 to 1 in towns. Then came certified checks, hoarding of currency, and general suspension and panic. The common impression is that the short crop in England acted merely as an aggravation of our pressure. It was more; it was the cause of it.

Our system of banks is so organized that the loss of any dollar of their reserve fund from any extraordinary cause, forces a curtailment of four to six dollars in their discounts; so that if any accident of trade occurs to draw off a few millions of their funds, their doors have to be slammed against all the borrowers in the land, and their reserves, instead of being available for the mitigation of a money-pressure, become the very means of intensifying it. Another vice of the system is that their loans are in great part made on call instead of on business time-paper; so that in periods of crises, pressure is speedily converted into panic. Thus it may be that such a contingency as a short crop of grain in Western Europe, which ought naturally to strengthen our financial condition, can close every bank, and paralyze the best industries in the land.

WHY THE CURRENCY IS NECESSARILY DEPRECIATED.

I am not competent to review the general subject of our financial situation. I must confine what I have to say to the single subject of the currency.

It is not strange that the currency should be depreciated, even after seven years of remorseless contraction. It would be marvelous if it were not.

Of the prodigious mass of American debts, with which the home and foreign money-markets are loaded, there are $2,200,000,000 of the Government debentures of the United States. All this national debt is payable in gold, except some three hundred and fifty millions of paper, which is in the hands of the people as money.

The natural result of so enormous a supply of debt upon the money-markets would be the depreciation of the whole mass. But the credit of the National Government is good; and its promise to pay gold, as to seventeen hundred and fifty millions of its bonded debt, overcomes the effect of redundant supply, and puts its bonds upon a par with gold. But there is no such promise in behalf of the national paper, which is in the hands of the people as money. The Government makes no promise to pay gold for this currency. It even refuses to take it in payment of all dues accruing to itself from the people. The law of supply and demand, operating upon the redundant supply of Government paper, is concentrated in its effect upon the paper, which circulates as money; and this currency yields to the power of an inexorable law of trade. It would be a miracle if it did not. It does so without reference to the contraction or inflation of this part of the general mass of the Government obligations. To be effectual, the contraction should be considerable and general enough to affect the whole mass of Government bonds in all markets, and not be confined to the one-sixth part circulation as money at home. So long as the Government has anything like twenty-two hundred millions of paper obligations outstanding in markets already plethoric with American securities, that part of the mass which it does not promise to pay in gold must be depreciated. It is not in the power of contraction to bring this latter sort of paper to the value of gold. While even so small a quantity as a hundred thousand dollars of this irredeemable paper is outstanding, it will remain depreciated so long as measures are not taken to counteract the effect upon it of that law of supply and demand which depreciates the price of every article too abundant in the market.

I repeat, the only sort of contraction which can materially reform the price of this circulation would be a large and sweeping contraction of the whole mass of the Government debt of every form; and I think I might safely add that the contraction would have to embrace all sorts of American debts in all markets at home and abroad. While the general mass remains unsubstantially affected in amount, I do not believe that the judicious addition of one hundred millions to the small part which circulates as currency would of itself sensibly affect its value compared with gold.

WHAT ARE THE DISORDERS OF THE CURRENCY?

There are several complaints of the currency. To the objection that it is unequal to gold is added another, that it circulates in such a manner as to be easily engrossed and taken out of general use by combination of speculating capitalists. It is so uniformly valuable throughout the country, it is so mobilized, that it can be readily concentrated in great centers of speculation, there to be employed in the wild gambling of stock-boards rather than in the legitimate business of merchandise and trade.

Our ante-war paper-currency had not this general circulation; it was a local currency. Its tendency was always and strongly homeward to the localities of issue. It was a very defective currency, and I hope it may never be restored; but it had at least the merit, by its home-staying habits, of serving the local communities for whose use it was issued, and could not be monopolized for speculating purposes by powerful and reckless operators in the great centers of business and speculation.

THE REAL PROBLEMS OF THE HOUR.

How to bring the currency to the value of gold ; how to prevent its undue concentration in special localities ; how to confine its employment approximately to the legitimate operations of trade, and how to render it available for the mitigation of financial pressure, when it occurs, seem to me to be the imperious problems of the hour. To arrive at specie payments, with a circulation fairly distributed over the country, current everywhere, and available to business men for their legitimate enterprises, at fair rates of interest, as well in times of financial crisis as of ease, seems to me to be the desideratum of the times.

THE COMPLAINTS AND SUGGESTIONS OF ALL CLASSES SHOULD BE HEARD.

I make no pretensions to a special familiarity with these subjects. I am neither a professional merchant nor banker, but I had the advantage, before the war, of being a director, for seven years, of banks in Richmond, Va., in association with the late James Caskie, of that city, one of the clearest minds and ablest financiers this country ever knew. I should not presume to enter this debate, on a subject so intensely occupying the public mind, if the bankers, merchants, and great financiers of the country had not had their way with the currency for ten years, and had not signally failed in bringing it to a specie standard. The remedies which they proposed, and to which they have held the country so long, have secured to the bankers and great capitalists an average interest of 12 per cent. for all that period, which has been wrung from the necessities and distresses of the people in the name of specie payments ; and as yet we are as far from specie payments as ever. It is time that the ideas of the general public were elicited on this subject of universal concern, and that the suggestions of all classes should be contributed to the common stock of thought. I have no nostrum for the currency to insist upon ; no pet measure of remedy or reform to urge. I propose to present ideas and make suggestions which seem to me important, and that is all.

CONTRACTION A FAILURE.

The great financial authorities of the country have insisted that contraction was the remedy for the depreciated currency—contraction of the greenback debt of the National Government alone, and not of the general national debt, or of the general paper debt of the whole country. They have applied this measure with remorseless vigor for a long series of years. I am neither an advocate of contraction nor of inflation applied merely to the paper currency, because I know that neither policy can materially affect the relative value of paper and gold. The amount of paper money afloat is certainly one of a dozen or more conditions on which specie payments depend ; but it is only one of them. There are other conditions more controlling ; and the distressing experience which we have had with contraction will, I trust, drive us to other experiments and to a better policy. “Many of our wisest measures of finance,” says Lord Overstone, “have originated, not in the unprompted suggestions of forecast, but in the necessity of applying a remedy to evils, the nature of which we have learned to understand only by feeling their effects.”

SPECIE PAYMENTS AS FAR OFF AS EVER.

Everybody in the land desires that all our money shall be of the same value. But although gold has commanded in the last half year a smaller premium than it has done for many years, we all feel that specie payments are still beyond reach through any measures yet tried for bringing them about.

PRICES ARE NOT DEPENDENT UPON THE VOLUME OF CIRCULATION.

The method by which the bankers, merchants, and high financial authorities have insisted upon restoring specie payments has been by contracting the volume of the currency. They have vehemently and arbitrarily insisted upon “contraction, pure and simple, without artifice or indirection.” They have assumed dogmatically that the cause of the gold premium has been the redundancy merely of the currency—of this form alone of the prodigious mass of our paper securities. They have assumed, again, that by contracting the currency alone it would be made to rise in value, and become and remain equivalent to gold.

A MOST COSTLY AND DISASTROUS EXPERIENCE has proved both those ideas to be fallacious. Facts show it. On the first of May, 1865, the total circulation of the country, made up of legal-tenders, postal and fractional currency, one and two year 5 per cent. notes, compound-interest notes, and national-bank notes, was $807,218,190 ; and the premium on gold was 28½ cents. On the 1st of August, 1869, after eleven States had been added to the area of circulation, the total amount of the currency, after deducting the reserves held by the banks, was $646,000,000, and the premium on gold had risen to 33½ cents. Thus, in spite of a contraction to the amount of $160,000,000, and the addition of eleven States to the Union, there had been an advance of 5 cents in the gold premium. We have now carried one hundred millions of dollars further, at the expense of destroying the greatest houses, crushing the most flourishing enterprises, and turning out of employment the best classes of skilled workmen in the country, and we still have a difference of 7 to 11 cents between gold and currency to overcome, which is as hard to surmount, in our enfeebled condition, as the 33 cents seemed to be in 1869. During the past three months the currency has been diminished possibly one-half by hoarding, and yet the gold premium has gone up, notwithstanding, from 7 to 10 or 11 cents. Mere contraction is plainly not the process by which to bring about specie payments.

THE PROCRUSTEAN POLICY OF CONTRACTION

As the premium on gold depends, in great part, on the export demand for it, it is indeed true that contraction may be carried to such an extreme as to paralyze importations, and thus bring gold into a fictitious equivalency with the currency; but nobody wants specie payments at the cost of ruin to the foreign trade and domestic business of the country. The public have been enduring that sort of treatment for the alleged disease of inflation for some time, and the universal cry in the agony of suffering is, "Let us have the disease rather than the remedy."

CONTRACTION PARALYZES INDUSTRY MORE THAN IT AFFECTS PRICES.

The most grievous evil of contraction consists in its taking effect chiefly upon the unmercantile districts and classes of the country. Wherever the facilities of credit exist in their highest perfection, as in New York and the large cities, there, in the form of checks, clearing-houses, and the like machinery of finance, substitutes are found for actual money. It is only in the interior districts and among the industrial classes that money itself is indispensable to business. Contraction, therefore, is a policy which oppresses and may destroy production, while having little effect in the great markets where prices are fixed and regulated. Nothing is more true and usual than the recurrence of great fluctuations of prices while the volume of the currency is undergoing little or no change.

ENGLISH EXPERIENCE CONDEMNS CONTRACTION.

Lord Ashburton, in his pamphlet on the "Financial and Commercial Crisis," published in 1847, deprecated the policy of contracting the currency, chiefly because of its effect upon the industrial interests of the country. He denied that its volume affected prices; and he denied that the amount of paper money in circulation had had any influence in England upon the export or price of specie. He said:

"The comparative moderate drain of bullion is from a known cause, a want of food, and not from any overissue of bank-paper; and, above all, we should recollect how greatly we aggravate our difficulties by so cramping our circulation as to disturb those ordinary sources of our industry by which alone the supposed adverse balance with our foreign customers can be set right. * * * Should we be afflicted with a second year of famine, the gold must go over for food, whatever may be the consequences; but nothing more absurd could be proposed than to obstruct all trade by withdrawing the means by which to circulate it as a mode of meeting those difficulties which the active condition of that trade can alone enable us to support."

WHAT CONTRACTION HAS DONE HERE.

The dogged application of the policy of contraction here has advanced the rate of interest everywhere to a figure which no profit can pay. It has deprived the most solvent houses of the means of meeting their legitimate engagements; it has caused a universal reduction of prices, and thus baffled the calculations of the most prudent men; it has reduced wealthy merchants to the condition of paupers; it has deprived manufacturers of the means of executing their orders, throwing thousands of industrious people out of employment; it has forced our people to sell large amounts of produce and merchandise at less than the prime cost, entailing grievous national loss; it has stopped the progress of many useful public works, and destroyed confidence and credit among the classes where they are essential to enterprise and success. The ruinous workings of this and its disastrous failure in this country have been so thoroughly depicted by Hon. William D. Kelley, of Philadelphia, in recent publications, that nothing more is left to be said by me on the subject.

MISCHIEVOUS POLICY OF CONTRACTION

Reason teaches that

CONTRACTING THE PAPER CIRCULATION DOES NOT CHEAPEN GOLD.

Contracting the amount of paper money contracts and makes dearer all money, including gold, so far as gold continues to be money. Where there are two kinds of money, not made equivalent by law, the value of each kind depends upon the special causes affecting itself, and does not depend upon the circumstance of the quantity of the other kind in circulation. During a suspension of specie payments paper and gold are released from mutual dependence in their respective values, and each rises or falls by virtue of separate causes especially affecting itself. Gold ceases then to be a part of the home currency, and becomes a mere commodity of commerce. Its value then comes to depend, in great part, upon the causes which increase or lessen the demand for it for exportation, and these causes have very little necessary connection with the home-value of paper currency.

On the other hand, as paper money cannot be used abroad, its value depends upon causes operating at home, which are distinct from those affecting the value of gold. It is only indirectly that the causes which affect the value of home-staying paper money also affect that of exportable gold. Redundancy in the currency does indeed tend to produce overtrading, thereby creating a foreign balance against the country, increasing the demand for gold for exportation, and enhancing its value. But such an effect is indirect, and does not change the fact that the values of gold and currency, in periods of suspension, are affected by separate causes, and cannot be forced into equivalency by any arbitrary process applied to one of them alone.

MERE INFLATION DOES NOT INCREASE PRICES.

The premium on gold, during suspension, has been proved by Thomas Tooke, in his History of Prices, and by others, not to depend upon the amount of paper currency in circulation, provided that the currency shall have been issued in amount and manner based upon the business transactions of the community. Whenever the receivers of it, in receiving it, contract the obligation to return it in due time with interest to the issuers, then the quantity of paper issued adjusts itself to the actual wants of the community. Then there is no vicious inflation of the currency as such, and its value is not affected by nor does it affect the value of gold. Then the demand for it equals the supply and prevents the evil of inflation.

Mr. Tooke, after an elaborate examination of the prices of leading articles of the English market for the period from 1793 to 1837, concludes that the changes in them were to be wholly accounted for by circumstances affecting supply and consumption, and not by the condition of either the paper or the general circulation. He further concludes that whatever variations occurred in the circulation during the period referred to were the consequence, rather than the cause, of changes of prices. He said, in 1832, under oath before a committee of Parliament:

"In point of fact, and historically, as far as my researches have gone, in every single instance of a rise or fall of prices, the rise or fall has preceded, and could not therefore have been the effect of an enlargement of the bank circulation."

It has been the experience in England that the highest inflation in the prices of the leading articles of trade has occurred when the currency was undergoing contraction. And during the wild speculation in railroad shares, which, in September, 1845, reached the enormous aggregate of $2,500,000,000, the circulation of all the British and Irish banks was not greater than it had been in 1840, and was then undergoing a decided contraction. (London Quarterly Review, vol. 81, pp. 253-255.)

I deny that inflation is the disease of the currency, curable by contraction. If you apply a remedy effective only for a disease which does not exist, you are apt to do precisely what contraction has been doing for the country; you are apt to kill the patient.

THE PRESENT DISEASE OF THE CURRENCY IS NOT INFLATION.

I have no fine-spun argument to adduce on the subject. I rely upon two homely practical facts: First. The people are hoarding our paper money; and in all the history of demand and supply the phenomenon was never known of an article being hoarded which was too abundant. Second. The currency has commanded all over the Union, for several years, an average interest of 1 per cent. a month on first-class bankable paper, which is double its proper value on loan. If these facts do not prove that the currency is not inflated, there can be no such thing as demonstrating a commercial problem. There are theorists, it is true, who insist that inflated currencies command high interest; but I insist, per contra, that such currencies are never hoarded. High prices may indeed sometimes occur in glutted markets, but the cases are exceptional, and do not impair the general truth that high prices result from limited supply. Facts confirm the assertion.

Exclusive of bank-reserves and Treasury-balances, we have only about $600,000,000 of paper money in circulation. Is that too much? Is it enough for the business wants of this country?

Mr. Calhoun, who always spoke after exhaustive research and reflection, in one of his great speeches on the subtreasury, in 1837, said:

"The currency of a country is to the community what blood is to the human system. It constitutes a small part, but it circulates through every portion, and is indispensable to all the functions of life. * * * What that proportion is has not been and perhaps cannot be accurately ascertained, as it is probably subject to considerable variations. It is, however, probably between 25 and 35 to 1 of the aggregate capital of the community. I shall assume it to be 30 to 1." (Vol. III of Works, p. 115.)

If 30 to 1 be the approximate ratio between a country's aggregate property and the circulation, then $600,000,000 is not an inflated amount of currency for the United States. The census of 1870 gives the property of the Union at thirty thousand million dollars, ($30,068,518,507.) This was nearly double what it had been in 1860. So that we may safely estimate the aggregate value of all property for 1874 at thirty-six thousand millions. At the rate of 30 to 1, this would call for a circulation of $1,200,000,000 for the United States. If we include bank-deposits in what is termed currency, which are about six hundred millions, we have only twelve hundred millions of currency in a condition of things demanding twelve hundred millions. And, if we leave a fourth of the bank-deposits out of account, as representing only credit-entries, and not substitutes for currency in the form of checks and drafts, there is shown a deficiency in the volume of the currency of the Union of $200,000,000. In view of these data, and of the long-continued prevalence of as high a rate of interest as 1 per cent. a month on the best commercial paper, it cannot rationally be contended that the currency is inflated.

If inflation be not,

WHAT IS THE DISEASE OF THE CURRENCY?

May it not arise from the manner in which the currency has been issued, and in which it is maintained in circulation? There are two modes of using paper money: First. That of the banks in the way of loans, to be returned after a time. Second. That which was practiced by the Government in paying away paper of its own make for services rendered, purchases made, and debts variously due.

THE ENGLISH METHOD OF ISSUING CURRENCY.

The currency of England which circulated throughout the long period of suspension from 1797 to 1819, was issued and maintained in circulation in the first of these modes, through the agency of the Bank of England and some other banking institutions. There was some depreciation of paper money and some inflation of prices; but when we contemplate in the light of our own recent experience the smallness of that depreciation compared with that which has characterized our own currency for ten years, it is impossible not to conclude that there was something in the manner of issuing and maintaining the English circulation that prevented its depreciation. The principle on which it was issued and kept outstanding was that of maintaining an equilibrium between the out-go and the return of the money, between the efflux and the reflux of the currency.

THE AMERICAN METHOD OF ISSUING IT.

This principle is wholly lost sight of when Government undertakes to supply a currency to the country by paying it away in discharge of demands upon its Treasury. Every dollar thus issued tends pro tanto to inflation. Under the first of these modes of issue injurious inflation is as difficult as under the other it is facile. Under the first mode the amount put in circulation is regulated by the business wants of the community, and represents actual business transactions. It is sure to be in demand to the amount put forth, for repayment of the loans for which it was borrowed. There may be overtrading and overbanking, with attendant evil consequences, but there is no inflation of the currency as such, a demand being provided for it equal to the whole volume in circulation capable of preventing any injurious depreciation.

EVILS OF THE VICIOUS SYSTEM OF CIRCULATION.

Very different is the condition of a paper currency arbitrarily issued by Government. Such a circulation does not represent the business transactions of business men. There is no reflux demand provided in the act of issuing it. If there should be no prospect of a cessation of issues, it soon falls into hopeless depreciation. The confederate government speedily ruined its finances by this method of issuing the currency. Had the war lasted a year or two longer the same catastrophe would have overtaken the national finances.

A PROPERLY ISSUED CURRENCY ADJUSTS ITSELF TO THE PRACTICAL WANTS OF THE COUNTRY.

It is scarcely possible for a currency issued in the way last described to be sound and stable. Its amount is determined, not by the wants or conveniences of business, but by the arbitrary will and judgment, often by the necessities, of government. Trade is a better gauge of the proper volume of the currency than the discretion of any government, however wise, just, or able. The wants of the great public, measured by actual transactions of business and regulated by the habitual caution of experienced bankers, are apt to affix a safer limit to the amount of paper money than the most studious discretion of a financial minister.

THE EXPERIENCE OF ENGLAND ON THIS SUBJECT.

Mr. Fullarton, in his work on the Regulation of Currencies, has the following reflections on the subject, (pp. 65 to 68 :)

"The case which I have supposed is precisely that of every government which attempts to defray the national expenditure by a compulsory issue of inconvertible paper. The paper so issued is expended in the purchase of naval and military stores, in building ships, in constructing edifices, and in payment of services performed to the state, and no precaution is usually taken to insure its ever being returned again into the exchequer. In the case of the Bank of England, on the other hand, the reflux of the notes was at no period interrupted. Perfect convertibility is no doubt one essential condition of every sound and efficient system of currency. It is the only effectual protection against internal discredit, and the best preventive of any violent aberrations of the exchange with foreign countries. But it is not so much by convertibility into gold as by the regularity of the reflux that, in the ordinary course of things, any redundancy of the bank-note issues is rendered impossible. * * * * It is the reflux that is the great regulating principle of the internal currency; and it was by the preservation of the reflux throughout all the perils and temptations of the period of restriction that the monetary system of these kingdoms was saved from the utter wreck and degradation which overwhelmed every paper-issuing state on the Continent, and which, in all human probability, must have been likewise our fate had our currency, at that epoch, been administered by a government board instead of by the Bank of England. I have adverted, in a former paper, to the deep debt which the nation owes to the bank for its services through that long and trying crisis. I believe they cannot be too highly appreciated; and I believe, further, that the same services could not have been so beneficially performed by any mere bank of the state, or by any body whatever, less intimately bound up, in all its interests and relations, with the commercial affairs and prosperity of the country. That will be an evil day for England when the supreme executive authority of this country shall take the administration of a credit circulation into its own hands. I trust never to see it; and I hold the sort of levity with which the possibility of such an arrangement has sometimes of late been alluded to, and even hinted, in the way of menace, to the Bank of England, to be one of the worst indications of the existing state of public opinion on these all-important concerns."

MR. CALHOUN'S OBSERVATIONS ON THE SAME SUBJECT.

Such have been the British utterances on the subject. Mr. Calhoun, in his speech on the subtreasury already referred to, (see his Works, vol. III, pp. 110, 111,) gives some American experiences. Speaking of the suspension of our banks, caused by the declaration of war with England in 1812, he said in October, 1837 :

"I shall never forget the sensation which the suspension and the certain anticipation of the prostration of the currency of the country, as a consequence, excited in my mind. We could resort to no tender act; we had no great central regulating power, like the Bank of England; and the credit and resources of the Government were comparatively small. Under such circumstances I looked forward to a sudden and great depreciation of bank-notes, and that they would fall speedily as low as the old Continental money. Guess my surprise when I saw them sustain their credit with scarcely any depreciation for a time from the shock. I distinctly recollect when I first asked myself the question, what was the cause, and which directed my inquiry into the extraordinary phenomenon. I soon saw that the system contained within itself a self-sustaining power; that there was between the banks and the community mutually the relation of debtor and creditor, there being at all times something more due to the banks from the community than from the community to the banks. I saw in this reciprocal relation of debts and credits that the demand of the banks on the community was greater than the amount of their notes in circulation could meet; and that consequently, so long as their debtors were solvent and bound to pay at short periods, their notes could not fail to be at or near a par with gold and silver. I also saw that as their debtors were principally the merchants, they would take bank-notes to meet their bank-debts, and that whatever the merchant and the Government, who are the great money-dealers, take, the rest of the community will also take. Seeing all this, I clearly perceived that self-sustaining principle which poised the system, self-balanced, like some celestial body, moving with scarcely a perceptible deviation from its path, from the concussion it had received."

AMERICAN OPINION DRIFTING IN THE SAME DIRECTION.

The intelligence of the country is rapidly arriving at the conclusion that there can be no arbitrary method of ascertaining the proper amount of currency that should be maintained in circulation. The New York Times, in a recent article, says :

"This is a duty for which the Government is not fitted. It devolves on Congress, and Congress, of all departments of the Government, is the least able to perform it. Indeed, it is not too much to say that the task is one that surpasses the powers of any set of men. The amount of knowledge, experience, discretion, and foresight necessary to determine the question never has been and is not likely ever to be found in any selected body of men."

And the New York Bulletin, adopting the same view, justly concludes that the amount of the currency can only be regulated with safety by the business transactions of the country, most wisely remarking :

"We know of no other way of ascertaining how much currency a country requires than by allowing the banks, under proper conditions for the protection of the note-holder, to issue what their customers need, subject to effective arrangements for insuring the redemption of the notes. That amount will never be the same on two successive days, but it will always be just what is wanted, neither more nor less. We should be glad to see the existing circulation subjected to this test. If the volume is really in excess, it would certainly be contracted, and in a way so natural as to hurt no one: If it is inadequate, it would be increased, and in a way to benefit all. There is no other natural and safe gauge for the currency requirements of a community."

The Philadelphia Press seconds these views, remarking that before the war, when banking was free and the issue of the bank-notes limited only by the necessity of redemption, the amount in circulation constantly varied according to the needs of business, being in—

1854.....	$200,700,000
1855.....	187,000,000
1857.....	214,700,000
1869.....	193,300,000

These were in addition to the large amount of gold and silver in circulation. The volume of currency then shown to be demanded by the country cannot be taken as indicating even approximately our present needs. Long credits were then almost universal, and scarcely any business was conducted on a cash basis. The plentifulness and convenience of the greenback currency during the war worked a great and beneficial change in this respect; debts were promptly paid, and long credits became the exception.

REGULATING THE CURRENCY NOT A PROPER FUNCTION OF GOVERNMENT.

Our currency has not been issued nor is its circulation regulated in the manner described by Mr. Fullarton and Mr. Calhoun. The Government may fix the amount of greenbacks in circulation at any arbitrary figure whatever, and as long as they are not brought within the influence of such a law as these two great authorities describe their value will have no healthful basis, and they will be likely to remain depreciated under any degree of contraction or inflation. There was once a great cry in this country for a divorce of the Government from the banks. If that demand was founded on good reason, there is stronger reason for a divorce of the Government from currency.

THE GREENBACKS NOT SUBJECT TO THE LAW OF EFFLUX OR REFLUX.

The leading items in the banking reports of the United States, taken for any date, will show that the greenback circulation does not come within the influence of the law of efflux and reflux, which should control all paper currency. The figures for the 2d October, 1871, for example, are as follows :

National-bank note.....	$315,517,997
Deposits	600,808,486
Greenbacks, (about).....	400,000,000
Total circulation.....	1,316,326,483
Discounts	827,663,005
	489,666,488

Thus it appears that practically the whole amount of the greenback circulation was at that date outside of the swing of efflux and reflux.

Are we not now prepared to answer, with some degree of confidence, the question—

WHAT IS THE MATTER WITH THE CURRENCY?

If it had all been issued, like that of the national banks, upon the principle of maintaining an equilibrium between its outgo and return, there would be less difficulty now in dealing with the vexed question of a resumption of specie payments. But alongside of the currency thus healthfully issued by the banks has been a larger circulation, which was put forth, first, according to the sole rule of the necessities of the Government, and afterward manipulated in amount according to its arbitrary discretion under the advisement of the money-lending class.

As long as more than half of the paper circulation of the country outstands in the form of a currency put forth by the Government, having no relation to the actual daily business of the community, that circulation cannot be sound; its beginning is vicious and its career is continually unhealthy. I know of no public assignats ever issued which ever did, as such, glide into a specie currency. I do not think that ours can prove an exception to the rule of universal historical experience. Our Government might, indeed, at any time, by the energy of its credit, declare the greenbacks to be equivalent to specie, and redeem them with specie, but it would have to maintain their credit against every law of regular trade and prudent banking.

IMPORTANCE OF ALLYING THE CURRENCY WITH THE BUSINESS AND PROPERTY OF THE COUNTRY.

The sooner that the whole mass of the currency is brought to represent, at every moment of its circulation, business paper founded upon actual transactions, contracted as often as lent, to be continually redeemed at the maturity of the paper on which it is lent, the sooner shall we get rid of that disease of the currency which alienates it from its proper relations with the home business and foreign trade of the country, and with the specie and other commodities of commerce.

LOANS ON CALL, WITH COLLATERALS PLEDGED.

The greenback system of currency creates and perpetuates that vicious system of bank-loans which is founded upon collaterals, to the disparagement of commercial paper. This latter paper, which has always had preference in sound banking, is now often tabooed by a class of banks, and a mottled host of bonds and shares are made the ideal of security and safety. Rash speculation is the hideous nursling of such a system of banking and currency, to the grievous prejudice of industrious enterprise and methodical business.

HOW TO METAMORPHOSE GREENBACKS INTO A SPECIE CURRENCY.

The true remedy for the present distress of the country resulting from the currency would seem to be found in some plan by which the greenback circulation could be gradually metamorphosed into a currency, every dollar of which, in being put into circulation, should represent some regular business transaction and a debt due to the issuing source. To do so is essential, because it is only by this means that we shall adjust the quantity of the currency to the needs of the people; that we shall distribute it, and keep it distributed in fair apportionment, among all sections of the Union; that we shall release it from the clutch of the powerful speculators, who borrow it on call upon the pledge of collaterals; and that we shall ally it to the legitimate business, and make it the representative of the mercantile and industrial transactions of the community.

OBJECTIONS TO AN EXPANSION OF THE PRESENT NATIONAL-BANK SYSTEM.

Except for its involvement with the objectionable system of currency which has been described, our present system of national banks is probably the best which has ever been devised for local purposes. Separate their own circulation from the greenbacks, and there would be nothing in their organization which would present any serious obstacle to specie payments. But admirable as these institutions are for accommodating the local wants of the country, their number is too great to allow of their being of any avail in regulating and controlling the great commercial and financial operations of the nation. We have now nearly two thousand banks. The system is not an organism. It requires to be unitized. It needs a balance-wheel, in the form of some central institution of large capital, endowed with the powers and responsibilities of the Bank of England, or of France, or of Prussia, or of Austria.

HELPLESSNESS OF THE PRESENT NATIONAL BANKS IN TIMES OF CRISIS.

Nothing could illustrate the inefficiency of the present national banks in a period of trial more clearly than the helplessness for good which they displayed at the beginning of the present crisis. Although holding reserves aggregating some two hundred millions of dollars, which if concentrated could have carried the country safely through a much more serious disturbance, yet, with those reserves scattered among two thousand banks, they became the means of utterly destroying the very confidence which they were intended to secure. In the light of recent experience, nothing could be more obvious than the policy of devising some means of concentrating these reserves under one control at the great center of trade, and providing that they should be liberally employed in mitigation of those disorders of commerce periodically occurring which they are provided to meet.

The one-reserve system of England, held and controlled largely by the Bank of England, must strike every intelligent mind as infinitely preferable to the scattered reserves of our own two thousand banks, which experience has proved to be a crushing incumbrance rather than a saving help to the country in periods of pressure and panic. In the hands of one great central bank, of large capital, control, and intelligence, having its reserve concentrated in some half dozen branch banks in leading cities, a reserve of $60,000,000 would be in America, as it is in England, competent to avert from the country many periods of crisis which the present $200,000,000 of scattered reserves only precipitate and intensify.

A CENTRAL NATIONAL BANK OF LARGE CAPITAL SUGGESTED.

It is partly with reference to the proper management of the reserve that the policy of establishing one controlling bank, clothed with appropriate powers, would seem preferable to that of further multiplying the national banks and enlarging their capital and circulation.

Confining myself, however, to considerations having reference to the currency, I am inclined to adopt the sentiments expressed by Daniel Webster in his second great speech on the subtreasury, delivered in March, 1838, that, "with experience before us, and with the lights which recent discussions both in Europe and America held out, a national bank might be established with more regard to its function of regulating the currency than to its function of discount, on principles and subject to regulations such as should render its operations extremely useful."

I believe that a banking institution, national in its dignity, influence, and control; in its responsibilities, powers, and functions, in the reputation, intelligence, and character of its managers; and in the confidence of the Government and the country with which it should be invested, is one of the most popular ideas of the times, as well with the mercantile and financial community as with all classes of people.

THESE IDEAS OFFERED ONLY IN THE SPIRIT OF SUGGESTION.

I suggest these remedies for the evils of our financial situation with great diffidence, but with less distrust than I would do if they were original with myself. I take them in part at second hand from a friend of large experience and ripe thought on the subjects of banking and currency, Daniel H. London, esq., of New York.

THE WIDE PREVALENCE OF THE FOREGOING VIEWS.

I believe the views I have presented are widely entertained in the country, and will ultimately prevail; I present them in no dogmatic spirit, and if they should not commend themselves to the intelligence and patriotism of the country, no one will be found more ready than myself to support the measures which Congress and the administration shall devise for the public relief.

THE COUNTRY NEEDS AND DEMANDS SOME MEASURE OF PROMPT, PERMANENT, AND EFFECTIVE RELIEF.

But prompt, permanent, and effective relief in some form is indispensable. The present system taxes and depresses the industrial interests of the country too severely. We need a system of banking and currency more uniformly and universally beneficial, more popular in its scope, more catholic in its fostering aim. A 12 per cent. system of finance will ruin any country sooner or later. It is sure to paralyze the industries of the working millions. It must inevitably impoverish and crush the yeomanry of the country. It slowly and surely steals away the wealth of the land from the many to the few. Under its pernicious influence the two extremes of pampered opulence and homeless poverty are daily recruiting their swelling ranks, while the staunch middle classes are steadily losing from their dwindling numbers. The tendency of the system is in the two directions most to be deprecated—to splendor and to squalor. Under a Government of free institutions this tendency ought to be arrested; and no future Goldsmith should be able to pronounce upon our land the splendid requiem—

Ye statesmen who survey
The rich man's joys increase, the poor's decay,
'Tis yours to judge how wide the limits stand
Between a splendid and a happy land.
Hoards even beyond the miser's wish abound,
And rich men flock from all the world around.
Yet count our gains. * * * The man of wealth and pride
Takes up a space that many poor supplied;
Space for his lake, his park's extended bounds;
Space for his horses, equipage, and hounds;
While, scourged by famine from the smiling land,
The mournful peasant leads his humble band;
And while he sinks without one arm to save,
The country blooms a garden and a grave.

I am, sir, most sincerely and respectfully, your obedient servant,

RO. W. HUGHES.

[From the Philadelphia American and Gazette, January 21, 1874.]

CAUSES OF THE RECENT BUSINESS REVULSION—SUPPLY OF CURRENCY.

The President, in his last annual message, strongly presents, in outline, the existing deficiency of the currency for the transaction of the legitimate business of the country. He would not, by undue inflation of the circulation, postpone or prevent the resumption of specie payments, but he would not crush the industrial prosperity of the people and diminish our foreign exports in order to prepare for such an end, no matter how desirable, when it can be made to come along in the natural order of business affairs; that is, he would not force the season by putting on a summer dress in a late and inclement spring, fearing a consumption would most probably follow. The untoward policy of an untimely contraction of the necessary ways and means of resumption seems to him just as inopportune and mischievous; to which we may be allowed to add that the process, in reference to our monetary affairs, is not only improvident but impossible.

After declaring that "our present currency is the best that has ever been devised," he proceeds to notice, first, its want of flexibility or adjustment in amount to the very varying requirement of the different seasons of the year for its service in the business of the country, and suggests a remedy for this inflexibility and its incident evils, with which remedy, however, we are not now directly concerned. He next plainly urges deficiency of the currency in amount, produced by two sets of causes, one of these being a direct and absolute contraction of the Government issues within the last four years, and the other an additional relative or comparative contraction, occasioned by an enhanced demand for money arising out of an "increase of population, increase of manufactories and all the industries."

We propose now to develop these points, so well taken in the message, with the statistics which we think very abundantly support the opinion and policy which the President necessarily states in generalities.

We take, for the purpose of this exhibit, the year 1868, or five years before the panic of last autumn, as the fairest and most easily balanced relation of the currency to our business needs as a point of departure, and suggest the money account-current of 1865, while yet the national finances were in the flurry of the late rebellion, merely to note the prodigious change from the state of war to that of peace. We hold the data of the argument within the boundaries 1868 and 1873 as the best and truest presentation of the facts which bear upon the policy now demanded, and at the same time as exhibiting the causes of the panic or revulsion on our money and business markets.

FIRST—DIRECT REDUCTION OF CIRCULATION SINCE JULY, 1868, ABOVE THREE HUNDRED MILLIONS OF DOLLARS.

In the annual finance report of 1872, at page 291, the United States Treasurer gives a tabular statement of the "currency outstanding at the close of each fiscal year for the last eleven years." By "currency outstanding" in these statements is intended the issues of the United States Treasury. The items embraced are old demand-notes, legal-tenders, compound-interest notes, one and two year notes, and fractional currency. For the total currency in actual circulation, or otherwise serving indirectly to the same effect in the money-market, we take the statements of the United States Treasurer at the dates which we select, and add thereto the amount of 7.36 notes, 3 per cent. certificates, and State-bank notes outstanding, thus:

Treasury currency, 30th June, 1865, according to Treasurer's report.....	$698,918,800
Add 7.30 notes, 31st July, 1865.....	830,000,000
National-bank notes, 3d July, 1865.....	131,452,158
State-bank notes, July, 1865, (say).....	240,000,000
Total circulation in July, 1865.....	1,900,370,958

This, however, was the state of the circulation immediately upon the close of the war. Let us now look at the currency-account after it was fairly reduced to a peace-footing :

Treasury currency, according to Treasurer Spinner, June 30, 1868.....	$444, 196, 262
Add 7.30 notes, (January 1 1868).....	240, 291, 300
Three per cent. certificates, June 30, 1868.....	50, 000, 000
National-bank notes, July 6, 1868.....	294, 908, 264
State-bank notes, July 6, 1868, (say).....	4, 000, 000
Total circulation in July, 1868.....	1, 033, 395, 826
Treasury currency, according to Treasurer Spinner, June 30, 1873.....	401, 527, 267
Seven-thirty notes.....	274, 100
National-bank notes, June 30, 1873.....	30, 000
Three per cent. certificates, June 30, 1873.....	344, 858, 627
State-bank notes, June 30, 1873.....	Nil.
Total circulation in July, 1873.....	746, 689, 994
Treasury currency, 30th September, 1873.....	402, 923, 039
Seven-thirty notes, 30th September, 1873.....	260, 500
National-bank notes.....	348, 007, 958
Total currency, 30th September, 1873.....	751, 191, 497

By this statement (which is official as to all the items except the State-bank notes, which we have taken pains to estimate as accurately as may be) the reduction of the paper-currency issues of the Treasury and the National Currency Bureau from the 1st July, 1868, to the 1st July, 1873, five years, amounts to $286,705,832.

To this sum should be added the increased amount required to be held as reserve by the national banks, which, from 1st July, 1868, to the 13th June, 1873, amounted to $14,727,894. The amount, therefore, withdrawn from actual circulation in the period is $301,433,726. We add the increase of the bank reserves, because the entire issue of legal-tenders and of other reserve funds is charged to the outstanding circulation at each of the dates given in our statements.

COMPARATIVE REDUCTION OF CIRCULATION SINCE JULY, 1868.

Let us try the items under this head. Of course only approximate estimates can be made; but with any margin for differences, the very lowest will answer the purpose of this inquiry.

First. Increase of population in the five intervening years. Taking the rate of increase per annum in the decade 1860-1870 for the measure of increase from 1868 to 1873, it would stand thus: Population in 1868, 37,260,335; in 1873, 41,358,971; increase, 4,198,636, which is 11 per cent. Most probably the increase was quite 12 per cent., or 4,471,240.

Second. Increase of merchandise imported and retained for consumption:

Fiscal year 1867-'68, gold value.....	$344, 773, 435
Premium on gold, 37½ per cent.....	129, 290, 037
Currency value.....	474, 063, 472
Fiscal year 1872-'73, gold value.....	624, 584, 056
Premium on gold, 12 per cent.....	74, 950, 086
Currency value.....	699, 534, 142
Five years' increase of imports for consumption, equal to 47.5 per cent.....	225, 470, 670

Third. Marketable domestic industrial product:

Year 1868, total value.....	4, 036, 030, 974
Year 1873, total value.....	5, 821, 409, 636
Increase in five years, 44.2 per cent.....	1, 785, 378, 662

Fourth. Cost of travel and transportation by railroads:

For the calendar year 1867.....	332, 000, 000
Year ending middle of 1873.....	486, 000, 000
Increase in 5½ years, 46.5 per cent.....	154, 000, 000

Fifth. Cost of construction of railroads:
Year 1867, 2,449 miles, at $55,116 per mile.....	$134, 979, 084
Year 1872, 6,427 miles, at $55,116 per mile.....	354, 230, 532
Increase in five years, 162.4 per cent.....	219, 251, 448

NOTE.—Thirty-one thousand and forty-one miles of railroad were constructed in the five and a half years from 1867 to the middle of 1873, at a cost of $1,710,855,756. During the five and a half years preceding 1868 the cost of construction was $418,220,208. Increase in the latter period over the former, $1,292,635,418—309 per cent.

Sixth. Increase of wealth of the United States:
In the five years—1868 to 1873—45.25 per cent.....	$11, 715, 616, 652

Seventh. Increased demand for circulation in payment of wages in the South:
Four millions of slaves were emancipated in the period of five years, and if the wages exceeded the former cost of keeping $25 per year, we have an increased demand for money of 100 per cent., or.....	$100, 000, 000

Referring the mere estimates here given to the judgment of experts, we will now summarize the particulars, reminding the student of the subject, however, that no estimates of the increased cost of canal, river, or coastwise travel, transportation, and equipment, or of telegraph construction and expense of use, is here attempted.

SUMMARY OF THE ITEMS SELECTED.

	Per cent.
Increase of foreign imports for consumption.....	$225, 470, 670— 47.5
Increase of marketable industrial products.....	1, 785, 378, 662— 44.2
Increase of cost of travel and transportation by railroads.....	154, 000, 000— 46.5
Increase of cost of construction of railroads.....	219, 251, 448—162
Increase of wealth of the United States*.....	11, 715, 616, 652— 45.25
Increase of wages demanded in the South.....	100, 000, 000—100

Aggregate increase in amount of items enumerated..... 14, 199, 717, 432— 45.8

Except in the erratic items of railroad construction and wages of emancipated labor in the Southern States during the period of 1868–1873, these results, derived from an entirely independent examination, give a striking correspondence of the increased wealth and of the several items of demand for money or other means of payment in the business of the country. It hovers very closely to 45 per cent., both in the particulars and in the aggregate. This is so much in support of our calculations. Further, the increase of population in the decade 1850–'60 was 35½ per cent., and that of wealth was 129 per cent. The like ratio of population in the period 1868–'73 would require an increase of wealth of 50 per cent., which, under the unfriendly conditions then existing, is not too large a reduction, but rather a confirmation of our calculation.

According to the ratio of business demand for the means of payment in 1868, the requirement of midsummer, 1873, would be $1,506,691,114. The supply, however, was but $746,689,994, which shows a relative deficiency of $760,001,120. A portion of this deficiency was made up by railroad bonds, another portion by the exportation of domestic exports, and other portions by permanent investments, which were evidences of debt unpaid, and the remainder by commercial and other business credits; but all these substitutes left balance enough to produce a scarcity of ready money, which resulted in the panic of last September and the pressure which still continues. The value or force of our statistics is submitted for the consideration of those who will give them an attentive consideration.

A PLEA FOR A REGULATOR OF FINANCE.

WASHINGTON, March 16, 1874.

Mr. JOSEPH C. GRUBB, of Philadelphia, having appeared before the Committee on Currency and Banking of the House of Representatives, made the following argument:

Mr. CHAIRMAN and GENTLEMEN: In the half hour of your time that I shall occupy I ask your indulgent courtesy, for I feel only too well that I am unequal to the occasion.

* The wealth of the United States in 1860, valuation of slaves deducted, we put at..... $14, 183, 215, 628
Census valuation in 1870..... 30, 068, 518, 507

After deduction of discount upon the currency in 1870 the average annual rate of increase would be 7½ per cent. compounded. This rule gives $25,777, 600,000 for the wealth of the United States in 1868, and $37,442,000,000 for the wealth of 1873. Increase in five years, 45½ per cent.

N.B.—The data of the foregoing calculation, though official, are in many respects inaccurate, and exact precision of figures in the results has not been intended. The mere estimates are not insisted upon; a safe approximation to results is all that is possible in the premises.

My theme is confidence—well-placed confidence, confidence as the main element of modern civilization. The argument, the honor of the nation, its pledged word. I am to plead for an unimpeached integrity of the orphan's portion and the widow's mite; an unshortened reward for labor, sweat, and toil. I am to beckon you back from the precipice's edge to the ancient ways, to remind you that there is a pregnant moment in the life of republics when despotism is welcomed as repose.

A consideration of the method by which the promises of the General Government and of the national banks, funded and payable to bearer on demand, can be brought to and maintained at par with coin or its equivalent, may safely be confined at the present time to an exhibit of the figures that will indicate the means, fortified by a few of the clear and evident reasons for its necessity.

A candid examination will disclose the fact that the highest financial prosperity has been secured only by uniting the public capital with private fortunes, and then intrusting it to the skill and vigilance of private interest clothed with the supreme authority. Fifty years of such management at the outset of the Government placed the United States on an equality with the chief commercial nations of the world. This continued until the close of the year 1833. A separation, then, of the General Government from the National Bank, the removal of the public deposits to State banks, the adoption of the independent treasury, the succession of State-bank failures, of financial panics and commercial embarrassments, consequent upon such a state of things, is a part of the history of the past and need not now be repeated.

Trade interests of the national Treasury after that year were never in harmony and often in collision. Such was the state of affairs at the commencement of the civil war in 1861.

Passing the intervening time, we encounter the conditions which must be considered now in any plan of restoration. These are contained in the Treasury statement of March 1, 1874, and in the report of the national banks, Friday, December 26, 1873. They consist of the following, using approximate round sums :

National debt, principal and interest, payable in coin	$1,720,000,000
Annual coin interest	110,000,000
The demand debt, bearing no interest :
In legal-tenders	382,000,000
In fractional currency	48,000,000
Retired legal-tenders in the Treasury	18,000,000
National-bank notes	341,000,000
Paper currency in the United States Treasury	55,000,000
United States bonds to secure bank circulation	390,000,000
Other United States bonds held by the banks	23,000,000
Annual coin interest on these two items	25,000,000
Coin in the United States Treasury	45,000,000
Other coin in the Treasury	40,000,000
Coin in the national banks	27,000,000
Coin in California	25,000,000
All elsewhere	18,000,000
Legal-tender and fractional currency held by the banks	108,000,000
National-bank notes held by the banks	22,000,000
Internal revenue :
Currency receipts for current year	188,000,000
Coin receipts from customs for current year	120,000,000

These are the rudiments, the unshaped ingredients, that will be incorporated into any plan of restoration. If we will but accept the situation, the road is plain; it is the beaten track. We have only to retrace our steps.

With the single exception of the default in the circulation and proportions of the sums to be handled, matters stand precisely as in 1833. The present banks are correspondent to the National Bank of that period. They hold their charters; the stock is taken. Wise legislation has enacted the transition from a State-bank circulation, unequal and unsafe, to one uniform and national.

If resumption of coin payments is to be the only aim at this time, then a corporate body, the legal proportions of which would be to have succession for a term of seven years, charged with this special duty and with the care and preparation of such measures as will accomplish the work, would, it may be affirmed, be a remedy certain and perfect. The experience of every civilized commercial nation has proved it.

To whom, then, may this power be delegated? Certainly to the parties in interest—the national Treasury, the national banks, and trade interests. Three representing the business of the country, three the banks, the chairman of the Committee on Finance of the Senate, and of the Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, for the time being, and the Secretary of the Treasury, would be a suitable body. There need be no salaried offices to fill, as the clerical force could be drawn from the Treasury and the banks. The Mint or the Treasury might be its location.

Few instances are recorded of any people returning voluntarily from the uses of irredeemable paper to sound currency, and then only by the one road—surplus income, national and private. All that legislation can safely do is to turn to the best account, and to convert to a useful purpose, that which might otherwise be locked up unprofitably. Legal compulsion should not be resorted to. Theory and the schools can give no help.

These premises allowed, the remedies can readily be prescribed. Perfect credit, solvency, is enwrapped in the first two items, namely, that part of the funded debt payable in coin, and the promises payable in paper on demand. Both alike are defaults. A promise to pay gold by the General Government is not a pledge of credit; it is a contract by a defaulting debtor, stipulating to deliver coin, now lifted out from a true system of finance, and it is doubtful if it is a prerogative of the Government thus to bind itself to deliver, at a future period, a production which it is no part of its business to develop, and over which it can have no control except by arbitrary enactment.

The bank-notes have a certain quality, that will assimilate with a reformed system, as there is a material commodity behind them, while the legal-tenders, being injected from without, are simply an evidence of indebtedness for property bought and consumed, but not paid for.

As shown, there is currency in paper :

Of legal-tender notes	$400,000,000
National-bank notes.....	341,000,000
Fractional currency.....	48,000,000
Currency in paper.....	789,000,000

The banks now hold in legal tender and fractional currency.....	108,000,000
Paper currency in the United States Treasury.....	55,000,000
The banks hold of their own notes.....	22,000,000
Balance of retired legal-tenders	18,000,000
	203,000,000

There is coin in the Treasury.....	45,000,000
Other coin in the Treasury	40,000,000
Coin in the national-banks.....	27,000,000
To fund the bonds held by the banks into a currency loan will give.....	25,000,000
	137,000,000

A certain sum may surely be relied on that in no event would become a disturbing element. Assuming this to embrace the largest portion of the fractional currency and, in addition, an equal amount, say eighty millions in all, we may proceed. Merging now the Treasury statement with the bank exhibit, thus joining the public capital to private fortunes, there is, as seen—

Currency in paper.....	$789,000,000
To the credit of the Treasury and banks:
In currency.....	$203,000,000
In coin-resources.....	137,000,000
An estimated sum.....	80,000,000
	420,000,000
Leaving a default of.....	369,000,000

There yet remains of gold in reserve :

In California.....	25,000,000
All elsewhere	18,000,000
Yearly product of mines.....	60,000,000
	103,000,000

The annual coin-interest is now reduced to.....	78,000,000
The funded debt payable in gold is reduced to.....	1,317,000,000

The parties in interest by their chosen agents, a corporate body, composed of men of calm judgment—such men can be found who will manage business only with reference to reputation and sound principles—may now assume control. Here is where we left off forty years ago. The experience of other nations has shown that such a head meets best the demands of modern civilization, and we must come back to it sooner or later. Law has its court of last resort; finance, without such an authority, is nothing less than lynch-law.

It may be inferred that such a management at the outset would agree upon limited fiscal terms. The first of these might close with the year ending December 31, 1875.

The currency receipts of the Government for the intervening twenty-one months would be	$315,000,000
Coin-receipts from customs	210,000,000
Income	525,000,000
There is currency yet in default	369,000,000
Leaving resources in excess	156,000,000
And a reserve remaining:
Of coin in California and elsewhere	43,000,000
Of coin-production for twenty-one months	105,000,000
Gold in reserve	148,000,000

There is still a debt of $1,317,000,000, payable principal and interest in coin. This, in view of approaching solvency, could no doubt, with the $413,000,000 held by the banks, be funded into a currency loan similar to the Pacific sixes.

All that now remains are questions solely of good book-keeping, and of living within our means; of spending less than we earn. The details would vary with the times and conditions. Foreign balances would now be settled with gold gathered into and distributed from a common hoard, instead of being carted from the mines to the ship's side. We would then know what amount we could pay for. In a word, under a comprehensive management, the gold we have, and home-grown gold, and the contributions of commerce and trade, can smelt the public capital and private fortunes now saturated with alloy and distrust into an unquestioned credit; and this is the key with which to solve the problem.

The proposition to fund the legal-tenders is inadmissible; the superstructure equally with the promise itself must be cared for. An inexportable currency is credit in its most vicious form. Trade will be carried on at all hazards and at all times. To appreciate the legal-tenders to par, that we may pay the bank circulation with them, is an effort to compromise at fifty cents on the dollar; it is the structure, not the separate props, that must be treated. An interest-bearing bond, interchangeable with irredeemable currency, would be utter rottenness and only evil continually.

It is quite time that we had learned that the interdependence of nations is not optional, but that it is a law of nature. The world, with its arctic, temperate, torrid zones, its varied soils and productions, its iron and coal beds lying in one zone, its cotton growing only in another—the world as it is is so framed as to compel the nations of different races to weave the web of intercourse more and more as they advance in civilization; to intertangle the threads of their national prosperity into an international skein. Clearly this is not merely human contrivance or human law; and thus it is that the solvent dollar of credit becomes a beneficent and a providential fact, and that it is a divine decree.

The men of our time, who are led most by attentive observation, see but one result. If the catastrophe is to be avoided, it will be by the exercise of an authority that shall bestow upon its contemporaries, not what they shall praise, but what they shall need. The willingness of the people to atone for a grave error of the Government in the past may be relied on. If these conclusions, then, are correct, the selection of three persons representing the national banks, three the business interests of the country, the chairman of the Finance Committee of the Senate, and of the Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, would doubtless be a suitable body to present to Congress terms for an adjustment, as the initial proceeding, by which the national circulation in paper may be brought to and maintained at the specie standard. Surplus revenue in the time named, seven years, will, I have not a doubt, extinguish the default.

In a word, the remedy would be applied to individuals in the same condition; and it is of individuals aggregated we are treating. The result is attained by a transposition of underpinning; the coin being taken from what does not require it, the funded debt, to support that which draws continuous life only from it.

Gentlemen of the committee, it may be said of the business interests of the country that every face is turned toward Washington. We ask you to meet our gaze. We ask that you will make our national dollar an honest dollar, that it may always tell the truth. Here, at the source of power, I may be permitted to say that forty years of careful disciplined thought, has convinced me that some such adjustment as is now presented would be accepted as satisfactory, and that it is the one controlling need of the times. Gentlemen, we ask that in our ventures even to the uttermost parts of the earth our national dollar may accompany the national flag. As it is, it is scouted from the avenues of trade, in every foreign market, as unfinished and sent before its time, while itself, at home the implement of binding, is the chief violator of the sanctity of all contracts.

The plan proposed builds up nothing new ; it accepts that only which already exists, and supplies a missing link. It offers to do the work in the shortest time and at the smallest expense ; and it further commends itself from the fact that it will be at the common cost.

This is not the proper time to discuss that other most important question inseparable from a complete system of national finance, and without which there can be no full settlement—free trade absolutely between the lender and the borrower, and the entire repeal of all laws imposing restrictions and penalties, thus allowing individuals, parties to the contract in any capacity, to receive and to pay such rates for the use of money as they shall agree upon.

Mr. Grubb suggested the following as a joint resolution for the adoption of Congress :

Whereas Congress may properly receive from the parties in interest a statement of the terms and conditions upon which the national debt in coin, and currency in paper, may be brought to and maintained at a uniform standard : Therefore,

Be it resolved, That three persons from the business interests, three authorized by the associated national banks, the chairman of the Committee on Finance of the Senate, and of the Ways and Means of the House, with the Secretary of the Treasury, would be a proper body to present such plan of adjustment.

President Grant, in his message of 1873, says :

"The exact medium is specie. To hold what we have and to appreciate our currency to that standard is the problem deserving the most serious attention of Congress. Could but one-half the gold extracted from the mines be retained at home, the advance toward specie payment would be rapid. My judgment is, we never can have permanent prosperity until a specie basis is reached. Without this national as well as individual bankruptcy must ensue. A specie basis cannot be reached and maintained until our exports, exclusive of coin, shall pay our imports and our interest and other obligations due abroad, or so nearly as to leave an appreciable accumulation of the precious metals in the country."

The report of the Comptroller of the Treasury for 1871 says :

"A candid investigation develops the fact that there is no branch of the fiscal service adequate to the issue and care of such a currency as the country requires. The Treasury system is so little in harmony with the interests and wants of trade that its operations are regarded by business men as constituting a powerful and very uncertain element, difficult to estimate in their transactions. The Government circulation cannot be made convertible without first making a radical change in the National Treasury, by which it shall be converted into an institution calculated to perform the functions of a bank."

Hon. E. G. Spaulding, himself the author of legal-tender law, has said :

"The Bank of England is a striking example of the combined power of public authority and private influence in sustaining the credit of a government.

"We may safely profit by this example. It is the fiscal agent of the British government ; and notwithstanding it is a bank of discount, deposit, and circulation, it has thus far received and disbursed the public moneys without the loss of a dollar of the money intrusted to it. It is well known that our Government never lost any of the money deposited in the first or second banks of the United States. They were both fiscal agents of the Government. All the public money was received and disbursed by them with fidelity and usefulness to both parties. Had such a bank been in full operation at the commencement of the rebellion, it would probably have been unnecessary to have issued the Government greenbacks."

[Extract from a recent pamphlet.]

A Senator (General John A. Logan, of Illinois) has said, "An increase of property, as a logical result, requires an increase of currency." This is not the logic of trade ; for our bills payable disappear as our property increases. Bankers' expedients, checks, bills of lading and of exchange, transfers by telegraph, are the currency of commerce. Bank-notes are used to turn the scales. The need is for stable capital, for flexible credit ; the issues of mere paper can be no substitute for that.

The Economiste Francaise, describing the monetary crisis in the United States, says :

"Here one may perceive how great a service may be rendered to the Government by such an intermediary as the Bank of England or the Bank of France. There is the government always at hand to save so fragile an edifice as that of banking credit from falling to pieces. Apart from such resources, the United States Government found itself face to face with the powerlessness of the banks and with all other business in a state of embarrassment."

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF COMPTROLLER OF THE CURRENCY,
Washington, March 2, 1875.

SIR: In accordance with your verbal request, I have the honor to transmit herewith the following information: The number of applications received at this office for the organization of national banks since the passage of the act of January 14, 1875, is sixty-seven, representing capital amounting to $7,850,000; increase of capital applied for by existing organizations, $3,387,900; circulation applied for on capital already paid up, $2,997,870.

The amount of additional circulation actually issued since the passage of the act of January 14, 1875, to March 1, is $1,606,375.

The total circulation of the national banks, on March 1, was $351,859,344.

The amount of legal-tender notes deposited to March 1, under section 4 of the act of June 20, 1874, was $12,348,000. The amount of legal-tender notes deposited since the passage of the act of January 14, 1875, is $4,024,000.

I am, very respectfully,

JNO. JAY KNOX,
Comptroller.

Hon. HORACE MAYNARD,
Chairman Committee on Banking and Currency, House of Representatives.

TREASURY OF THE UNITED STATES,
NATIONAL BANK REDEMPTION AGENCY.
Washington, March 2, 1875.

SIR: In compliance with your oral request of this morning, I take pleasure in inclosing herewith a statement of the amount of national-bank notes received for redemption by this agency under the third section of the act of June 20, 1874, from July 1, 1874, to the close of February, 1875.

I append thereto statements of the amount redeemed and of the amount assorted and delivered to the Comptroller of the Currency during the same period, and of the express charges paid from July 1, 1874, to February 1, 1875.

The bill for express charges for February has not been received.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

F. E. SPINNER.
Treasurer of United States and Redemption Agent.

Hon. HORACE MAYNARD,
Chairman Committee on Banking and Currency, House of Representatives.

National-bank notes received for redemption under the act of June 20, 1874.

1874.
July	$10,539,207
August	10,593,366
September	7,821,466
October	5,618,376
November	10,226,906
December	11,285,791
1875.
January	15,888,926
February	13,168,720
Total	85,142,758

National-bank notes redeemed and paid for.

1874.
July	$6,892,749
August	11,543,167
September	8,377,872
October	3,781,519
November	11,471,914
December	11,153,925
1875.
January	12,702,221
February	10,027,009
Total	75,950,376

The difference between the above amount and the amount received is the amount of notes of national banks failed, in liquidation, or reducing their circulation, sorted by the agency and redeemed by the Treasury in legal-tenders, and of bank-notes fit for circulation exchanged with the Treasury for notes unfit for circulation.

National-bank notes assorted and delivered to the Comptroller of the Currency.

1874.
August.....	$1,117,600
September.....	8,827,750
October.....	9,827,870
November.....	10,687,090
December.....	10,865,995
1875.
January.....	13,006,700
February.....	12,265,690
Total.....	66,598,695

The difference between the above amount and the amount redeemed was the amount of notes in this agency in the various stages of assortment on the 27th ultimo.

Express charges paid on national-bank notes received for redemption and United States currency returned therefor.

1874.
July.....	$4,802 27
August.....	6,404 73
September.....	3,898 37
October.....	2,150 40
November.....	4,932 80
December.....	4,949 00
1875
January.....	6,393 27
Total.....	33,530 84

Average rate of express charges to February 1, 1875, 23½ one-thousandths of one per cent. of the amount transported, or 23½ cents per thousand dollars.

INDEX.

VIEWS ON THE CURRENCY.

	Page.
Views of Amasa Walker.....	7
J. K. Sanborn.....	15
C. P. Culver.....	19
James Buell.....	27
M. London.....	36
George W. Allen.....	46
A. A. Low.....	49
George S. Coe.....	63
S. B. Chittenden.....	76
James Buchanan.....	81
John E. Williams.....	88
Charles Moran.....	96
Charles Moran, (letter).....	155
Benjamin F. Nourse.....	107
Frederick Fraley.....	114
John M. Forbes.....	119
E. B. Ward.....	124
Lester Taylor.....	134
John Cummings.....	136
Frederick D. Tappen.....	140
John Austin Stevens, jr.....	147
James B. Colgate.....	152
Henry P. Kidder.....	158
John E. Gano.....	160
R. W. Hughes, (letter).....	162
Article from Philadelphia American.....	172
Joseph C. Grubb.....	174

JOHN S. WOOD.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. ALBRIGHT, from the Committee on Military Affairs, submitted the following

REPORT:

[To accompany bill H. R. 4017.]

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4017) for the relief of John S. Wood, respectfully report:

That said John S. Wood enlisted as a private, August 19, 1861, at Harrisburgh, Pa., and recruited several men for the Seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Cavalry.

At an election of officers on the 1st day of September, of the same year, he was chosen first lieutenant of Company I in said regiment, and on the 3d day of the same month he was mustered into the service of the United States, by Maj. D. H. Hastings, of Fifth United States Cavalry.

At the time of muster, however, he had received no commission as lieutenant from the governor of Pennsylvania. Colonel Wynkoop, commanding the regiment, seemingly wishing the place for another, and assuming that the want of such commission disqualified Wood from maintaining his rank, in December of the same year refused to recognize him as lieutenant, had another installed, and dropped Wood's name from the rolls.

Wood maintained that he was regularly constituted a lieutenant, and persisted in serving in the Army. By order of superior officers he was sent from his regiment on detached service, and served long and well, receiving many wounds, taken prisoner and confined in southern prisons, and when released, in 1864, was greatly injured in both body and mind.

The following is a synopsis of his military record as furnished by himself. Much of it can be verified by the records, while as to the rest Mr. Wood is indorsed as a gentleman of character and integrity by Generals Ord, Ruggles, and other military gentlemen:

Enlisted as private August 19, 1861, at Harrisburgh, Pa.

Recruited seventy-two men for Company I, August, 1861.

Elected, by company, first lieutenant, September 1, 1861.

Mustered into United States service, as first lieutenant, by Maj. D. H. Hastings, Fifth United States Cavalry, United States mustering officer, September 3, 1861.

Commanded company, and was drill officer for officers and men to December 19, 1861.

Moved with company to Tennessee, December 19, 1861, to February 26, 1862.

On General Nelson's staff, commanding escort from Nashville to Pittsburgh Landing, April, 1862.

Served on Duffield's staff, Twenty-third Brigade, Army of the Ohio, latter part of April, 1862, until July 14, 1862.

Wounded in head by musket-ball, and received seventeen buck-shot in body, at Lebanon, Tenn.

In action at Gallatin, Tenn., August, 1862.

In action at Lavergne, Tenn., October 7, 1862, commanding Tennessee troops.

Wounded in hip by shell, and horse killed, at Stone River, Tenn., January 1, 1863. In this engagement had a major's command of Tennessee troops.

Was in General Minty's command in pursuit of VanDorn by General Sheridan from Spring Hill to Duck River, March, 1863.

Wounded at Franklin, Tenn., April 10, 1863, under General Stanley.

In action at McMinnville, Tenn., April 21, 1863; Col. R. H. G. Minty, commanding.

In engagement at Hoover's Gap, Tenn., June 24, 1863. Had horse shot and killed in this engagement. Was off duty, (but with command,) on account of heat affecting wound in head, until August, 1863.

In engagement at Chickamauga, Ga., September 19, 20 and 21, 1862, with companies Seventh Pennsylvania Cavalry. Was wounded through right knee, captured, and taken as a prisoner to Andersonville, Ga.

Was exchanged in the spring of 1864.

Have no personal recollection of circumstance, but have been informed, and believe, that I was taken first (after exchange) to hospital at Louisville, Ky., from which place I was removed, in June, 1864, to Carlisle barracks, Pa., where I remained, an invalid, for over two years, or until 1866, unable to do anything. My leg is yet flexed at an angle of about forty-five degrees, from wound at Chickamauga, and my wound in head was trepanned, and I yet wear the silver plate, under the skin, over the opening in my skull.

Opinion is divided as to whether Mr. Wood was legally mustered in, he not having provided himself with a commission. That it was necessary is the view of the War Department. But he having served till in December, 1861, before he was refused recognition, that Department offers to give him an honorable discharge on receipt of tender of his resignation as first lieutenant, Company I, Seventh Pennsylvania Cavalry, to date December 19, 1861.

In view of this decision, and of the fact that he has never been mustered out of the service, and is therefore unable to make application for pension, or to avail himself of the homestead-law as applied to soldiers, and in view of the further fact that he so faithfully served during the war, he is entitled to an honorable discharge as of the date of the mustering out of his regiment.

We therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

JAMES G. WILLIAMS.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. CLINTON L. COBB, from the Committee on War Claims, submitted the following

REPORT :

[To accompany bill H. R. 4887.]

The Committee on War-Claims, to whom was referred the petition of James G. Williams, of Memphis, Tenn., having considered the same, report :

That the said Williams entered the service of the United States in April, 1861, as an engineer on board the Government transport B. B. Cheney, plying between Cairo, Ill., and Columbus, Ky.; that he continued in such employment until the 17th of July following, when he entered the United States service under the command of General McPherson, then besieging Corinth, Miss., in the capacity of scout and guide, in which service he continued until the fall of 1863; that up to the 11th day of May, 1865, he acted as a guide and scout under Generals Stephen A. Hurlbut, C. C. Washburn, A. J. Smith, and their subordinates; that he enlisted in the First Mississippi Mounted Rifles, under command of Lieut. Col. W. O. Shorey, in February, 1864, and was nominally borne on the rolls of Company D of said regiment, but never mustered in, never did any service in said regiment, and never drew pay, clothing, or rations in such capacity.

It appears from the petition that the claimant has not received pay for his services from February 3, 1864, to May 11, 1865; that during such period he furnished himself with horses, clothing, lodging, and board, and fed and cared for his horses at his own expense, and never received anything toward defraying the same; that during said period he was on duty in and about Memphis, and went out frequently into the enemy's lines on secret-service duty; that he went frequently from Cold Water, Miss., to the Tallahatchie River and Holly Springs, in said State, and to various points in West Tennessee; that he acted as guide and scout on the Sturgis raid, and was captured between Gunton and Saltillo, Miss., by rebels under command of General Forrest; that he was taken to Tupelo, tried by a court-martial and sentenced to be shot, but succeeded in making his escape and returned to Memphis in safety; that on this occasion he lost a horse, equipments, and pistol; that soon after this he went with General A. J. Smith's expedition to Tupelo, Miss., as a scout and guide, and was present at nearly all the battles and skirmishes that took place on said expedition, during which he lost another horse and horse-equipments, together with a pair of Colt's revolvers. It appears from the statement that he had no written contract for compensation for said service, but was promised payment from time to time, and that he did not make application for pay at the time; and that after the close of the war, until recently, he had supposed he could secure pay for his services, and a pension for the wounds he still suffers from, through the Executive Department; but now finds that because he was not mustered into the United States service he has no other remedy than by application to Congress. He submits an account for his services in secret-service department of Tennessee from February 3, 1864, to May 11, 1865—fifteen months and eight days—at $150 per month, $2,290. Claim is also made for two horses and equipments, and for pistols, &c.; the claim amounting in the aggregate to $2,821.50.

It further appears from the statement of the claimant that on the 15th of August, 1864, while on this last-named expedition, his horse was shot dead and he was wounded, being shot through the left breast, the ball lodging near the shoulder-blade, where it remained, and from which he has been subject to hemorrhage of the lungs at intervals; that he was also wounded in the neck, from which he has not recovered; and that, with the exception of the disabilities caused by the said wounds, he rendered constant and efficient service during the period of time charged for.

The statement of Williams is sworn to, and is corroborated by the affidavits of M. T. Williamson, late first lieutenant Company C, Seventy-second Regiment Ohio Volunteers, and by William W. Jackson, late captain and commissary commanding First Mississippi Mounted Rifles. These affidavits are as follows:

STATE OF TENNESSEE,
Shelby County:

M. F. Williamson, being duly sworn, deposes and says that he is 45 years of age and resides in the city of Memphis, county and State aforesaid, and that he is city register of said city; that he served as first lieutenant in Company C, Seventy-second Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, in the late war, until the fall of 1864, and as colonel of the Third Regiment enrolled militia, district of Memphis, until February, 1865, and after that time until May 8, 1865, as brigadier-general of said enrolled militia, when the same was disbanded; that he was almost continually in said city of Memphis from November, 1863, to the close of the war in 1865; that from May, 1863, until the fall of 1864 he was on the staff of Brigadier-General R. P. Brickland as aid-de-camp, and that as such staff-officer he became acquainted with J. G. Williams in the spring of 1864, and that he then knew said Williams as being in the employ of the United States Government, through its military officer, as a scout and guide; that he always understood and believed that said Williams was faithful in the discharge of his said duties; and further, that he has always understood and believed that said Williams was so employed from the time affiant first knew him until the close of the war.

Affiant further states that he does not know whether said Williams has been paid for such service, or not.

M. F. WILLIAMSON.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 21st day of March, 1874, by the said M. F. Williamson, whom I believe to be respectable and credible, and I have no interest in this matter.

Witness my hand and official seal.

ISAAC MORRISON,
United States Commissioner.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington County:

On this 9th day of April, A. D. 1874, personally appeared before me, Nicholas Callan, a notary public in and for said District and county, William W. Jackson, a resident of Saint Louis, Missouri, who, being duly sworn according to law, deposes and says that he was the commanding officer of First Mississippi Mounted Rifles in the service of the United States during the year 1863 until the close of the rebellion; that as such commanding officer I employed James G. Williams as scout and guide during the years 1863 and 1864. Subsequently he was employed as scout and guide by General A. J. Smith in his march to Oxford, Mississippi; and also in his march from Fort Gaines to Spanish Fort and Mobile, Alabama, from whence, as I was informed, he acted as scout and guide for General A. J. Smith in his march to Selma and Montgomery, Alabama.

I personally know that he was continually employed in the service as scout and guide from February, 1864, to the capture of the Spanish fort at Mobile, Alabama.

He lost his horse and equipments at the time of his capture by Henderson scouts, under Forrest's command. He also lost his horse on General A. J. Smith's expedition to Oxford, Miss., together with all his equipments, on which occasion he was dangerously wounded, one of the wounds penetrating his breast. This occurred near Holly Springs, Mississippi, during the month of August, 1864. In addition to his verbal order he had private written authority from General C. C. Washburn, per hand of Adjutant-General William H. Morgan, thereby establishing his connection with the United States military authorities, to prove his identity in case of emergency. I further certify that his life has been imperiled by constant attacks of hemorrhage of the lungs, produced by the wound received in his breast. This is my information from the physicians who have attended him during these attacks. I also state that his services were efficient and effectual, and that he had the confidence of those with whom he served as a brave and reliable man, and proved himself as such on all occasions. In justice to the petitioner, I will say that I am always ready to give my testimony before any tribunal in substantiation of the justness of his claim for the valuable services rendered, and loss of his property as charged.

WILLIAM W. JACKSON,
Late Capt. and O. S. Comds. First Mississippi Mounted Rifles.

Sworn and subscribed before me this ninth day of April, A. D. 1874.

N. CALLAN,
Notary Public.

The following statement of Hon. J. P. C. Shanks, member of Congress from Indiana, is submitted as showing the character and services of the claimant:

Let this certify that I was, in the years 1863 and 1864, acquainted with James G. Williams, who was at that time a scout in the service of the United States in the States of Tennessee, and Kentucky, and Mississippi.

Williams was on duty with the command with which I was at the time, and also the command under me. Mr. Williams was a very efficient and worthy scout, reliable and brave.

Respectfully,

J. P. C. SHANKS.

Certificates are also submitted from physicians and surgeons, two of whom served in the United States Army during the late war, establishing the fact that the hemorrhage of the lungs was caused by the presence of a foreign body in that organ. The following certificate establishes this fact:

MEMPHIS, TENN., May 11, 1874.

I have this day examined James G. Williams, and find that the lower half of his left lung and a portion of the middle lobe of the right lung is diseased, the nature of the diseased parts being one of partial hepatization, and of loss of lung-substance, brought on, as I believe, from the presence of a foreign body in the organ. He suffers greatly from periodical hemorrhages from the lung, causing great prostration, and consequent unfitness for labor.

W. J. ARMSTRONG, M. D.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 11th day of May, 1874, by the said W. J. Armstrong.

Witness my hand and official seal.

ISAAC MORRISON,
United States Commissioner.

Your committee are satisfied, from the evidence, that the claimant served as a scout and guide during the period for which compensation is claimed; that he was wounded while in the line of duty, from which he has never recovered, and that he has received no compensation for the service rendered since February 3, 1864. They therefore report the accompanying bill for his relief appropriating $2,500 as full compensation for services rendered the United States as scout and guide during the late war, and for one horse killed in battle while the said Williams was in the line of duty, and recommend its passage.

The history of the American people is a story of struggle and achievement. It is a story of the founding of a new nation, of the growth of a great empire, and of the pursuit of a better life for all. The story begins with the first settlers, who came to this land in search of freedom and opportunity. They found a land of vast resources and a people of diverse backgrounds. They worked together to build a new society, one that was based on the principles of liberty and justice for all. The story continues through the years of exploration, discovery, and expansion. It is a story of the brave men and women who risked their lives to open up new lands and to bring the benefits of civilization to the people of the world. The story ends with the present day, when we stand on the shoulders of our ancestors and look out over a land that is more beautiful and more prosperous than ever before. The history of the American people is a story of hope and dreams, of the pursuit of a better life for all. It is a story that inspires us to strive for a better future, one that is based on the principles of liberty and justice for all.

MRS. ELIZA POTTER.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. KELLOGG, from the Committee on War-Claims, submitted the following

REPORT:

[To accompany bill H. R. 4888.]

The Committee on War-Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Mrs. Eliza Potter, having considered the same, report:

That the petitioner is the widow of L. T. Potter, deceased, of Charleston, S. C., and a former resident of Evanston, Cook County, Ill.; that she resided with her late husband in the city of Charleston until 1871, and that her husband had resided in Charleston, previous to his removal from that city in 1871, for about thirty-three years, his native city being Providence, R. I., to which place he returned, and there died in 1872.

The petitioner represents, and the proof fully sustains the allegation, that at the outbreak of the rebellion herself and husband were in affluent circumstances, her late husband being reputed worth $500,000, the petitioner owning about sixty thousand dollars in her own right. She further represents that at the breaking out of the war her husband and herself espoused the cause of the Union, and continued loyal to the Government of the United States throughout the entire war, and never, in any way or manner, aided the rebellion; that in the month of May or June, 1862, a large number of soldiers of the United States Army were brought as prisoners of war to the city of Charleston, having been wounded in an attack on Lamar's battery on James Island, the petitioner obtaining permission from the confederate authorities in charge of the Mart Hospital, on Queen street, where the prisoners were confined, to visit them; that she did so visit them; aided in dressing their wounds; furnished them with clean underclothing and outer garments; supplied them with money, food, blankets, and mattresses, and did everything in her power to render them as comfortable as men in their situation could be made. She has preserved a list of these wounded prisoners upon whom she first attended, together with their regiments and places of residence, which is submitted to the committee in proof.

From May, 1862, onward during the entire war, she cared for the wounded and sick soldiers of the United States Army who were brought to Charleston, making daily visits to the hospitals where they were confined, and sometimes had as many as fifty wounded soldiers under her care at a single time, and there were under her care in the hospitals at Charleston during the war several hundred wounded Union soldiers, and in supplying them with the articles necessary for their comfort, and in many cases to preserve their lives, the petitioner expended a large amount of her own and her husband's money; how much she thus expended she is now unable accurately to state, but from the best estimate she can now make she believes she thus expended more than $40,000, having paid upward of nineteen thousand dollars of her own money in caring for the first lot of prisoners whose names are contained in the list above referred to. The petitioner further represents that she continued ministering to the wounded and sick Union soldiers until the latter part of the year 1864, when the confederate authorities refused to allow any further visits to the wounded prisoners in the hospitals, and although her husband and herself made every effort to procure a revocation of the order referred to, they were unable to accomplish it, by reason of a strong public feeling which had by that time been aroused in Charleston against her husband and herself on account of their well-known Union sentiments and sympathy with the Government of the United States and its soldiers. It appears further, that her late husband expended large sums of money for the benefit of Union soldiers confined as prisoners in Charleston, Columbia, and Florence, exceeding in amount the sum of $100,000, and during that time aided many Union soldiers to escape from imprisonment in Charleston and Columbia to the lines of the Union Army, where they were restored to the service of the Government, and that these large expenditures by her husband and herself were principally in gold or its equivalent.

It appears that during the time when the petitioner and her husband were doing all in their power to alleviate the sufferings of Union soldiers confined in the prisons and hospitals of South Carolina, they did it freely and voluntarily, without hope or expectation of re-imbursement, doing this noble work out of their zeal for the Union cause, and as a matter of charity, not expecting that with their abundance they should ever be reduced to want. But the war reduced them almost to poverty. Her husband met with heavy losses. Valuable mills situated near Charleston, and docks and store-houses in Charleston, were burned, and certain property which her husband had sold, investing the proceeds in cotton which was stored at Florence and at Sumter, amounting in all to over five hundred bales, was burned by the confederate army retreating before General Sherman, and after the surrender of Charleston some Union troops, under command of General Potter, made a raid on Sumter and burned the cotton there. A bill for Mrs. Potter's relief, appropriating the sum of $20,000, was reported from the Senate Committee on Claims in the second session of the Fortieth Congress, by Senator Howe, and passed the Senate on the 14th of July, 1868, and at the close of that session was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the House Committee on Claims, from which it was not reported back.

Your committee refer to the Senate report No. 157, second session Fortieth Congress, which embraced the statement of Mr. Frederick R. Jackson, formerly a sergeant in the Seventh Regiment Connecticut Infantry, who lost his left arm in the attack on Fort Lamar on June 16, 1862. The statement was made June 18, 1868, Jackson then being a clerk in the Treasury Department. His statement is quite full as to details, which are unnecessary to be given, but it corroborates those made by the petitioner, it appearing that Mrs. Potter's son met his death through injuries received from visiting the hospitals and attending to the wants of Union soldiers. The concluding paragraphs of the Senate report referred to are herewith given, as follows:

The petitioner concedes that the Government is not legally liable, either for her services, her charities, or her losses; she never expected any compensation for either.

And although she found her family at the close of the war reduced from affluence to poverty, it was no part of her purpose to ask any recognition from the Government of the sacrifices she had made, or of the sacrifices to which she had been subjected. Her trust was that business would return to Charleston with peace, and that with returning business the fortunes of her husband would revive. That hope has been disappointed, and she now feels compelled, by necessity, to ask of the Government some return for what she and her family have done and suffered.

The loyalty of the petitioner and her husband, and the excellence of their personal characters, are approved by Senators who have known them for years, and by many prominent citizens who have enjoyed the same advantage, and some of whom reside in this city, and some elsewhere.

The tireless diligence displayed by Mrs. Potter in her care of our sick and imprisoned soldiers is attested by a voluminous correspondence submitted to your committee, to which correspondence such soldiers and their friends in different portions of the country are parties.

The committee are of opinion that the Government cannot undertake to make return for all the individual charities by which the history of the late war is distinguished, nor to make compensation for all the property destroyed in the prosecution of that war. But, considering the munificence with which the petitioner voluntarily ministered to the necessities of the nation's soldiers when they were in distress, the committee think it would befit the generosity of the nation to relieve her necessities now that she and her family are in distress, more especially since that distress has been in part occasioned by the national forces.

Your committee have carefully examined the evidence presented in support of the petition of Mrs. Potter and find it sustains all her allegations. It appears further, that Mr. Potter's death was hastened by the loss of his property reducing him to penury, and that he died under very distressing circumstances, having lost his reason through pecuniary troubles. Your committee fully concur with the sentiment expressed in the Senate report, that while the Government cannot undertake to make return for all the individual charities by which the history of the late war is distinguished, yet considering the munificence with which the petitioner voluntarily ministered to the necessities of the nation's soldiers when they were in distress, your committee think it would befit the generosity of the nation to relieve her necessities now that she and her family are in distress, more especially since that distress has been in part occasioned by the national forces.

Your committee are of opinion that the sum of $20,000 would be no more than a proper amount to bestow upon Mrs. Potter in recognition of her noble work; but considering the numerous demands of this character upon the nation's bounty, and the condition of the national Treasury, they believe that the sum of $10,000 is a proper amount to recommend as payment to Mrs. Potter, and they therefore report the accompanying bill, appropriating that sum, and recommend its passage.

ISAAC TAYLOR.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. KELLOGG, from the Committee on War-Claims, submitted the following

REPORT:

[To accompany bill H. R. 2319.]

The Committee on War-Claims, to whom was referred the bill H. R. No. 2319, having considered the same, report:

That this bill is one to adjudicate the losses incurred by Isaac Taylor, owner of the bark Alvarado, of Boston, Mass.

The particulars upon which this claim is founded are more fully set forth in the statement of Gardner C. Whiting, the master of said bark, duly sworn to before a United States commissioner, together with the statement of his wife, Mary Eleanor Whiting, herewith appended and marked A and B respectively.

A.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
District of Massachusetts:

BARK ALVARADO, OF BOSTON.

I, Gardner C. Whiting, of Boston, on my oath do say that I am a citizen of the United States, aged fifty-two years, and that I was master of the bark Alvarado, of Boston, on her last voyage. I further say that said bark was a registered vessel of the United States; George Thomas, of Quincy, personally known to me, being the registered owner, and Isaac Taylor, of Boston, also personally known to me, being the charterer for the voyage. The voyage on which I sailed was to Cape of Good Hope and back. The said bark sailed from Boston February 3, 1861, and arrived at Cape of Good Hope April 30, I think, without any deviations. After discharging outward cargo, I took in a cargo for Boston. G. S. Holmes & Co. were the shippers. My copy of bills of lading which I gave and the manifest and other papers afterward were destroyed, in the manner hereafter to be related, and at present I can only state from memory as to the contents of the cargo. I think it was seventy-five tons iron, (scrap,) three tons of old copper, four hundred and fifty bales wool, (unwashed,) three hundred and fifty bundles hides, fifteen thousand goat-skins, fifteen thousand sheep-skins, twenty-five bales of buchuleaves, twenty barrels argols. After obtaining a clearance and the other legal papers and certificates from the United States consul in due form, the bark sailed, June 3, 1861, from Cape Town, at said Cape of Good Hope, on her return voyage to Boston, to which port the cargo was consigned. My instructions from Mr. Isaac Taylor were to receive a cargo which I should find provided for me at Cape Town and bring it to Boston. The original letter was destroyed with the other ship's papers, as will hereafter be related, as also was the log-book of the ship. On the 21st of July, 1861, the bark was in about latitude $25^{\circ} 30'$ and longitude 61° west; a vessel in sight was noticed about 5 o'clock a. m. standing toward us; at half past 6 a. m. she crossed bows and then stood along with us, and hoisted the English flag; shortly afterward she fired a shot across our bows, and then hauled the English flag down and ran up the confederate flag. Being entirely within the range of her guns, I hauled up my mainsail and luffed up into the wind. We were then boarded by a dozen men, well armed, from the privateer, the commanding officer, Mr. Postel, saying to me that my vessel was a prize. I asked by what authority; he replied by the authority of that big gun and of Jefferson Davis. He then went on to say that there was war declared between the North and the South and demanded my papers. I gave him the vessel's papers and the manifest of the cargo, and he sent them on board of his vessel for the captain's inspection. This was the first intimation which I had received of a war having broke out.

I was then informed by Mr. Postel that our captor was the Jefferson Davis, a brig commissioned as a privateer by the Confederate States, and commanded by Captain Coxeter. The flag hoisted by the brig when she fired, and which at that time was unknown to me, I now learn was the flag of the Confederate States, who had lately seceded from the United States of America. I was kept in suspense for two hours waiting for the decision of Captain Coxeter, at the end of which he sent his boat with a prize-crew, consisting of eight men, on board, with orders for the crew of the bark to put their things in the boat and go on board of the brig, and with permission for myself and my wife and the cook, George Ellet, to remain on board. This was done. They also took what provisions they chose from the ship—four or five barrels of beef and pork, one barrel of flour, and some tea and small stores; they did not break into cargo at all at that time. The prize-master then set sail and steered away to the westward. Nothing material occurred until the morning of August 5 at daylight; espied a sail to leeward, distant ten or twelve miles. Supposing her to be a man-of-war, the prize-crew made all haste in toward the land, expecting to make it out every moment. At half past 7 the land was in sight, and the supposed man-of-war gaining on us evidently. At half past 10 o'clock a. m. the bark was run on shore, the man-of-war being distant four or five miles. Previous to her grounding, the prize-master had got the boat over the side, all ready for leaving as soon as she took the bottom, and he asked me if I would like to go in the boat with him; this I declined. We were going about four knots when we struck on a sandy bottom. The sea was quite smooth, and the prize-crew immediately left in the boats, taking nothing belonging to the bark with them. We were distant from the channel into Saint Mary's, Ga., about two miles, and were abreast of Amelia Island. Immediately after they left I hoisted the American flag, union down, and then tried to get the sails aback by bracing the yards up, but the wind blowing so directly on to the shore we could not succeed. The man-of-war was then beating up within the distance of three miles, and showing the American flag. Shortly after, we saw the boat of the prize-crew returning from the shore toward us. They came alongside, and two citizens from the shore jumped on board and said, "We want you to go on shore." There were about eight men in the boat, part or them being of our former prize-crew.

I asked if we could take our private property, and they answered me no. We were then hurried very unceremoniously into the boat, and they cut the halyards of the American flag and took it on shore with them, but took nothing else out of the vessel. We were then taken on shore; my wife was taken up to the town of Fernandina, one and a half or two miles from the landing, and the steward and myself kept under guard on the beach. The prize-master then volunteered to return to the bark and get the private property and baggage of myself and wife and bring it on shore. He got half-way out in a boat, when, seeing boats coming from the man-of-war, he returned without accomplishing his object. When I left the bark she was on an even keel, and on my arriving at the shore I discovered that it was low-tide. Within three-quarters of an hour after I got ashore I observed that the bark was afloat again and drifting along the shore with the flood-tide. The man-of-war had beat up to windward of the bark and anchored about two miles off, before she came afloat, and then lowered three boats, who pulled toward the bark. The bark had drifted a mile or more when they got on board of her, and was then stationary, as if she had taken the bottom again. After they boarded her they set all sail, hoisted the American flag, squared the yards in. She was then heading nearly directly on shore, and within fifteen minutes from their boarding her I observed smoke rising from the deck of the vessel, and immediately after the boats left the bark and pulled back to the man-of-war, who got under way and ran down to them as they pulled out into deeper water. She hoisted in her boats and stood off the shore. The people on shore said the man-of-war was the United States sloop Vincennes. She appeared to me to be a sloop-of-war. The bark commenced burning about half past three o'clock in the afternoon. When I left her at half past eleven or twelve o'clock she was not on fire. The cabin was on deck, and the crew that boarded us last, before I left, did not go below nor were they out of our sight while in the cabin. I am confident she was not set on fire by any one prior to our leaving her. I saw no indications of fire until after the man-of-war boats boarded her. The Alvarado drew about fourteen feet ten inches of water on the day she was destroyed. The Alvarado burnt all that afternoon and night, and on the next morning she had burnt down below the between-decks.

And then the prize-master and crew went out to her and scuttled her to put out the fire. They succeeded in extinguishing it, and saved from the wreck, as the prize-master told me, sixty-two bags wool, some skins, and a little copper. I saw part of these on shore afterward. When I left the bark she was beyond the range of the guns at the fort at the mouth of the Saint Mary's River, nor did she afterward drift within their range. When the man-of-war boats were pulling along to leeward for the bark, two 6-pounder guns were brought down to the beach and fired about a dozen shots at the boats, who were within range. The ammunition gave out before the boats reached the bark, and no shots were fired at the bark at all. I have followed a seafaring life for thirty-three or four years, and it appeared to my judgment practical for the three boats and their crews to have got the bark off after they boarded her by getting out an anchor, especially as the tide was still rising and as they made sail on her to crowd her on faster before they left her. I am not able to say with certainty whether when they reached her she was afloat or not. I know she had ceased to drift, and probably was touching. I also say that, in my judgment, if the man-of-war boats had been sent to my assistance when I first hoisted the signal of distress, the bark and her cargo could certainly have been saved. So far as the position of the bark was concerned, I have not been able to see any reason for burning her without an effort to save her. I think they could have saved her. There was no other boat upon the beach than the Alvarado's, in which we had landed, and none other to be got or had, and none in sight at the time of the burning of her. The bark Alvarado was of three hundred tons burden; built in 1845; in good repair, sound and strong; coppered in January, with sails and furniture nearly new, and was worth $10,000. The value of the cargo I do not know. The prize-master retained and took on shore with him the ship's register, crew-list and articles, and the manifest of her cargo. Her log-book, duplicate bills of lading, and everything else were left on board, and were either burnt or taken possession of by the man-of-war men. I have never heard of them since I left. The steward, George Ellet, accompanied me as far north as Baltimore, where he remained. I have not heard of him since I left there. I and my wife were retained at Fernandina, Fla, seven days as prisoners, when the collector of that port sent us and the steward, in charge of Captain Mason, to Richmond, Va., where he got new passes from the confederate authorities and took us on to Norfolk, Va., whence we were sent under a flag of truce to Fortress Monroe, where we arrived August 19, 1861; and further says not.

GARDNER C. WHITING.

Be it remembered that on this day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-one, before me, the subscriber, a commissioner of the circuit court of the United States for the district of Massachusetts, duly appointed to take bail and affidavits in civil causes and for other purposes, came Gardner C. Whiting, who, being by me duly sworn, made solemn oath that the foregoing deposition by him signed is true to the best of his knowledge and belief. Witness my hand and seal.

CHAS. LEVI WOODBURY. [SEAL.]

I certify that the foregoing is a true copy of the original in my possession.

CHAS. LEVI WOODBURY,

Commissioner Circuit Court.

B.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,

District of Massachusetts :

I, Mary Eleanor Whiting, residing in Boston, and the wife of Gardner C. Whiting, late master of the bark Alvarado, on her voyage from Boston to the Cape of Good Hope and back to Boston, but captured on her return voyage by the privateer Jefferson Davis, on my oath do say that I accompanied my husband on the said bark Alvarado from Boston to the Cape of Good Hope, and that we sailed from Cape Town June 3, 1861, with a cargo of wool, skins, and other matters. I further say that, on the 21st of July, about half past 6 a. m., I saw a sail about two miles off. She soon came across our bow and then fired a shot across our bow. We partially hove to. She had no flag when I first saw her. Shortly after she hoisted the English flag, and, at the same time she fired, she hauled down that and hoisted another flag, which at the time I did not know. I have since learned that it was the Confederate States flag. She then sent her boat on board, with about twelve men in it. One said he was the captain of the marines of the privateer Jefferson Davis; the other said he was first lieutenant of her; his name was Postel. As soon as the first lieutenant came on board he asked for the captain. My husband stepped forward. He then said to him that the vessel was a prize. Captain Whiting asked by what authority. Mr. Postel replied, "By the authority of that big gun and of Jefferson Davis." I also state that, as the boat came alongside of us, the officer in command hailed the bark to haul down that flag and heave the ship to. His words were, "Haul down them colors and heave," &c. We had the American flag flying at the time; it was set immediately after we saw the English flag of the privateer. After Mr. Postel stated his authority on the deck, Captain Whiting asked him if war was declared. He replied yes. This was the first I had heard of this outbreak of hostilities. Mr. Postel demanded the papers of the ship. After a little hesitation they were given to him and were then sent on board the Jefferson Davis. I don't know what papers they were. I saw Captain Whiting take them from the place where they were usually kept (a writing-desk) and hand them to these two officers who had followed him into the cabin for the purpose of receiving them.

In about two hours the papers were returned from the privateer, and a prize-crew of eight men, including a prize-master, Mr. Hay, came on board and took possession of the bark. All our crew were taken out, except the steward and my husband and myself were allowed to come on in the vessel. Mr. Postel and his party, after taking out a quantity of our provisions and small-stores, leaving us only enough to carry us into port, left the vessel. They did not open the hold or examine the cargo; they asked its probable value. The prize-master said our destination was Saint Mary's, Georgia, and we steered in that direction. The next day they cut up a small American flag and made a confederate flag, as they called it. Mr. Postel, while on board, said to me that they had a commission of letters of marque from Jefferson Davis. I further say that, on the morning of the 5th of August, I went on deck at 6½. They were examining a sail to leeward from aloft. About 8 o'clock, as she got closer, they decided that she was a man-of-war. About 7 o'clock the lookout reported that he sighted land. About 8 o'clock I saw both the vessel and the land from the deck. The sea was quite smooth, and as we were going with a slight breeze, about three or four knots, toward the land, several light-houses were in sight. Soon after the prize-crew commenced to make preparations to lower their boat; they packed up their things and got fully ready to leave the ship. They then waited till she struck, when they immediately left the ship in their boat. They said nothing to us about going, that I know of. As soon as the prize-crew left, my husband, the steward, and myself commenced trying to back the yards, and then we raised the American flag, union down. I should say we were not over two miles from the shore, and the man-of-war was about three and a half miles to the leeward, with a flag flying, and working up toward us. We still continued trying to get her off till we saw the boat coming back from the shore toward us.

It was about half past ten when we struck. The boat came alongside, and four men from the shore and part of the prize-crew were in her. They told me to get ready to go ashore, and hurried us out of the vessel, giving us no time to get my things. I had my hat on when they came on board, and they gave me no time to get anything. Some one brought a cloak and put on my shoulders while they were adjusting the rope round me to lower me into the boat. One of the persons in the boat said to me, "Come madam, make haste, you see that," pointing toward the sloop-of-war. They then pulled toward the shore with us. They took nothing from the ship that I saw, and touched nothing. I am convinced they did nothing to destroy the ship; their only object seemed to secure us three as prisoners, and they seemed to fear that they had not time for that purpose, and urged their speed as they pulled. When we reached the beach I remained only about five minutes, and was then taken to the town of Fernandina, to the residence of the Hon. Mr. Yulee—distant about two miles from the place where we landed—and did not see the ship again till I saw the smoke of her some hours afterward. When we landed I saw no boat but the one we came on shore in, the bark's boat. I saw no guns on the beach; no fort in sight. A large crowd of people were on the beach; citizens from the town, in plain dress; many had muskets. I think it was about twelve o'clock when we landed; the man-of-war had not then anchored. It was said at the town that the man-of-war was the Vincennes. About half past four o'clock I went up into the cupola of a high house in Fernandina, in company with a young lady resident there, and saw the bark burning in the offing. The Vincennes was also in sight, and seemed to be about two miles from the vessel. It was the current report of Fernandina that the man-of-war boats had set her on fire. Afterward I saw some skins laid out to dry, which had been taken from the wreck. We were afterward conveyed to Richmond and Norfolk, and surrendered under a flag of truce at Fortress Monroe, as related in my husband's deposition. Neither my husband or myself saved any of our private property or baggage; his instruments and some small things were all left when we were brought on shore, and I have never seen them since; presume they were destroyed by fire. And further says not.

MARY ELEANOR WHITING.

Be it remembered that on this fifth day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-one, the subscriber, a commissioner of the circuit court of the United States for the district of Massachusetts, duly appointed to take bail and affidavits in civil causes and for other purposes, came Mary Eleanor Whiting, above signed, who, being duly sworn, made solemn oath that the foregoing affidavit by her signed is true.

Witness my hand and seal.

CHAS. LEVI WOODBURY. [SEAL.]

I certify that the foregoing is a true copy of the original in my possession.

CHAS. LEVI WOODBURY,
Commissioner Circuit Court U. S., Dist. of Mass.

In corroboration of the foregoing statements are submitted letters from Commander Charles Green, commanding United States sloop-of-war Jamestown, dated August 6 and 7, and marked C and D respectively.

C.

UNITED STATES SLOOP-OF-WAR JAMESTOWN,
Off Fernandina, August 6, 1861.

SIR: I have to report the destruction by fire of the American bark Alvarado by the boats of this ship on the afternoon of the 5th instant.

The bark was chased ashore by this ship and abandoned by her crew near the entrance of the Saint Mary's River. The boats were sent, under the command of Lieutenants Flusser and Pythian, with the marine-officer, Mr. Houston, Assistant Surgeon Cleborne, Midshipman Tyson, Acting-master Chisholm, and Boatswain Long.

The orders were to get her afloat if possible; if not, to burn her. The latter alternative was forced upon them, as, while advancing toward the bark, a number of pieces of artillery (three or four) opened a cross-fire upon them, against which they steadily advanced; opposed also by wind and tide for about half a mile, when the bark was reached and the United States ensign hoisted without the loss of a man, although the enemy's guns were within less than a mile, and two of them supposed to be rifled. The vessel proved to be the bark Alavardo, of Boston, J. G. Whiting, master, bound from Cape Town to Boston with a cargo of sheep-skins, goat-skins, and buck-skins, hides, and about seventy tons of iron; also wool.

She was a prize to the privateer Jefferson Davis, captured on the 20th July in latitude 25° 4' north, longitude 50° west.

Nothing was saved except the captain's instruments and some letters, journals, &c. I will send a more detailed account by the first opportunity.

The want of a pilot was very sensibly felt.

I have the honor to be, respectfully, your obedient servant,

CHARLES GREEN,
Commander.

Flag-Officer SILAS H. STRINGHAM,
Commanding Atlantic Blockading Squadron, Hampton Roads, Virginia.

The above letter was received September 10.

D.

UNITED STATES SLOOP-OF-WAR JAMESTOWN,
Off Fernandina, August 7, 1861.

SIR: In compliance with your order of the 13th instant, I left the blockade of Savannah on the 3d, and on Monday morning, the 5th, we were off this place.

As we were running in for the light a strange sail was discovered inshore of us standing along the land, with a fair wind, toward the entrance of the port. This ship was close-hauled on the port tack, with all plain sail set, the wind light. As the vessels converged, the stranger being close to the entrance of the channel and this ship about four miles to the eastward and a very little to leeward, he suddenly ran his vessel upon the southeast side of the shoal making out from the light-house point, lowered his boat, which was already hanging over the side, and abandoned her with all hands.

Immediately after she struck people began to collect near by on the beach, to the number of, perhaps, two hundred, and soon after we saw them dragging down several pieces of artillery. At this time it became necessary for this ship to tack, in order to get to the southward of the shoal. After getting to windward it was very doubtful if we could get the stranded vessel within range of our guns, as the soundings are not laid down inside of seven fathoms, and, having no pilot on board, I did not feel justified in running the ship much inside of that depth, knowing that the water shoals very suddenly in this vicinity. It was finally determined to take a position as near as the safety of the ship would admit, come to anchor, and send the boats to get her off or destroy her.

Had time allowed, I could have sent a boat to take soundings, but the tide was flood, the weather squally, with showers of rain, and the chances were that if we allowed her to remain in her present position for the night she would be lightened of part of her cargo and floated round into the harbor by the people on shore, she being only about five-eighths of a mile from the beach and nearly three miles from this ship. We accordingly came to anchor, and the boats were got out and placed under the command of Second Lieutenant Flusser, in the launch, armed with the light 12-pound howitzer. The other officers in the launch were Lieutenant Houston, of marines, Assistant Surgeon Cleborne, and Boatswain Long. The crew consisted of 17 men, armed with Sharps rifles, muskets, and revolvers, also 8 marines. The third lieutenant, Mr. Phythian, went in charge of the first cutter, with Acting Master Chisholm, 16 men, and 5 marines, armed in the same manner. The fourth cutter was placed in charge of Midshipmen Tyson, with a crew of 12 men, armed with muskets and revolvers. The party was furnished with means for setting her on fire.

Mr. Flusser's orders were to go in and reconnoiter the vessel, and, if abandoned, or if but a small force was on board, to board her, and, if possible, to get her off, but otherwise to burn her; and not to run the risk of being overpowered by enemies from shore.

The boats left the ship about 3 p. m.; the tide was strong flood, (and the bark had already begun to move in her bed,) and swept them up to the northward. When within half a mile of the wreck, the artillery, which had been placed so as to direct a cross fire, opened upon them, against which they steadily advanced for half an hour or more, opposed also by wind and tide, when they leaped aboard the prize and ran up the American ensign. At this time the firing ceased from the shore, their ammunition having apparently given out, and was not renewed until they left, when one or two shots more were fired.

The firing was thought to have been from rifled pieces, and was good in range and line, but, by skillful management and the mercy of Providence, neither boats nor crews were injured.

The boarding party had scarcely reached the bark before the smoke of a steamer was seen, and soon the steamer appeared coming out with the evident intention of cutting off the boats. I therefore made signal of recall, lifted our anchor, and ran in near enough to the entrance of the harbor to bring the steamer within range of our guns as she came out. The smoke soon told that the bark was on fire, the boats left her, and the steamer, after coming nearly within range, turned and went back.

The bark was completely destroyed, as nothing but her stern-post was in sight the morning after. She proved to be the American bark Alvarado, of Boston, from Cape Town, bound to Boston. Her log-book shows that she was captured in latitude $25^{\circ} 4'$ north, longitude 50° west, by the privateer Jeff. Davis, and that her cargo consisted of wool, sheep-skins, goat-skins, buck-skins, and about 70 tons of iron. A few articles only, belonging to the captain, were saved, together with some letters and papers, all of which, together with the log-book and private journal of the captain's wife, from which most of the information regarding the capture, &c., is taken, are forwarded herewith.

I have the honor to be, respectfully, your obedient servant,

CHARLES GREEN,
Commander.

Flag-Officer S. H. STRINGHAM,

Commanding Atlantic Blockading Squadron, Hampton Roads, Virginia.

Your committee are of opinion that the claimant is fairly entitled to have determined by the proper legal tribunal the question of the liability of the Government to make compensation for the losses alleged by him to have been sustained by reason of the acts of United States officers. It is alleged by the claimant that the reason of his not presenting his claim to the Court of Claims when he had the right so to do was on account of the advice of his attorney, the late William Whiting, of Massachusetts, that the Government was pecuniarily embarrassed; that the necessity for the vigorous prosecution of the war requiring all the means it could obtain for that purpose, rendered it proper for patriotic citizens for the time being to defer the prosecution of claims of this character till the war had closed, and the Government, relieved of its embarrassment, could then adjust these losses more satisfactorily to both itself and claimant.

Your committee are of opinion, as before stated, that this is a proper case for reference to the Court of Claims, where the right of appeal on the part of the Government lies to the Supreme Court, and accordingly report back the bill and recommend its passage.

WAR-CLAIMS OF NEW MEXICO.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. KELLOGG, from the Committee on War-Claims, submitted the following

REPORT :

[To accompany bill H. R. 1505.]

The Committee on War-Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1505) authorizing the Secretary of War to ascertain and report the amount necessarily expended by the Territory of New Mexico in organizing, equipping, and maintaining the militia forces during the late rebellion, having considered the same, report :

That, by virtue of General Order No. 72, dated War Department, Adjutant-General's Office, Washington, D. C., September 3, 1861, soldiers were enlisted in New Mexico for the purpose of acting in concert with, and in aid of, the United States Government troops in the suppression of the rebellion, and were assigned to duty under orders of General Canby, then lieutenant-colonel, commanding the Department of New Mexico. It appears by an order issued by General (then lieutenant-colonel) Canby in 1861, that several companies of New Mexico infantry and cavalry were ordered to rendezvous at various points in that Territory, and to repel an armed force from the State of Texas which had taken possession of two forts within the limit of the Territory, appropriating property of the General Government, and establish military rule over the forces invaded. The governor of New Mexico issued his proclamation on the 9th of September, 1861, ordering an immediate organization of the militia forces in the different counties of the Territory, and calling for all officers, civil and military, to begin at once the said organization; which proclamation is filed with this report, with the order of Colonel Canby, and other papers.

It has been shown to your committee that, in pursuance of said proclamation, several regiments of troops were organized and rendered efficient aid in repelling said invasion, and that the Territory incurred the expense of the same, for which it has not been re-imbursed as pledged in the General Order No. 72 of the War Department already quoted. Congress has re-imbursed the Territory of Colorado for a similar expenditure, and your committee are of opinion that the Territory of New Mexico is entitled to similar re-imburement. They therefore report back the accompanying bill as a substitute for H. R. No. 1505, and recommend its passage.

STATE OF NEW YORK

Albany, 1884.

Printed by the State Printer, Albany, 1884.

REPORT

(To the Senate and Assembly)

OF THE
COMMISSIONER OF THE GENERAL LAND OFFICE
FOR THE YEAR 1884.

ALBANY: PUBLISHED BY THE STATE PRINTER, 1884.

THE COMMISSIONER OF THE GENERAL LAND OFFICE, in presenting this report to the Senate and Assembly, has the honor to acknowledge the assistance and cooperation of the various departments of the State, and particularly of the Department of the Interior, in the collection and compilation of the statistics and facts contained herein.

The report is divided into two parts: the first part contains a general statement of the condition of the State Land Office, and the second part contains a detailed statement of the operations of the office during the year.

The first part of the report contains a statement of the condition of the State Land Office at the beginning of the year, and a statement of the operations of the office during the year. The second part of the report contains a detailed statement of the operations of the office during the year, and a statement of the condition of the State Land Office at the end of the year.

The report is divided into two parts: the first part contains a general statement of the condition of the State Land Office, and the second part contains a detailed statement of the operations of the office during the year.

The first part of the report contains a statement of the condition of the State Land Office at the beginning of the year, and a statement of the operations of the office during the year. The second part of the report contains a detailed statement of the operations of the office during the year, and a statement of the condition of the State Land Office at the end of the year.

MARTHA J. COSTON.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. LAMISON, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, submitted the following

REPORT:

[To accompany bill H. R. 4867.]

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the claim of Mrs. Martha J. Coston, respectfully report:

That Mrs. Coston is the widow of Benjamin F. Coston, the inventor of the signal-lights which for years have been adopted and used in the United States Navy.

That in view of the great value of this invention and system, which Mrs. Coston had spent years in perfecting, Congress in 1861 purchased from her the patent for said signal-lights and the full right to manufacture and use the same.

The sum appropriated for this purpose by the House was $30,000, but in the Senate this amount was reduced to $20,000, although the immense importance of the invention was conceded in the debate. (See vol. 45 Cong. Globe and Appendix, 1861, p. 462; also, act of June 5, 1862, Stat. at Large, vol. 12, p. 315.)

At the request of the Navy Department, Mrs. Coston agreed to manufacture these signal-lights for the use of the Navy—an agreement which she faithfully carried out until the close of the war, devoting much of her time to the supervision of the matter. The price to be paid was $4 50 per set of 12 signals.

Gold, however, soon rose, and with it the prices of labor and every article entering into manufactures. Mrs. Coston, as is fully shown to your committee, made constant efforts by letter and in person to obtain an increase of the amount allowed her for these signals. This demand was met by the statement that she had contracted or agreed to furnish them for $4.50 per set.

The Navy Department had made the attempt to manufacture these lights and failed, the cost also being greater than the price paid to Mrs. Coston.

To have refused to go on with their manufacture would have deprived the Government of a great service; she therefore continued to manufacture and furnish them, constantly pleading for the allowance of an increase, as her correspondence with the Navy Department proves. Hon. William Faxon, formerly Assistant Secretary of the Navy, in a letter to Mrs. Coston, dated January 15, 1875, says: "It was the universal testimony of the officers of the Navy that the signals were of the greatest possible service—indispensable, in fact—and always thought that you were very patriotic in continuing to furnish them at gold prices, taking pay in largely-depreciated paper. After the patent was purchased an attempt was made to manufacture the signals in the navy-yard, but they cost more than your prices."

By section 69, act of July 1, 1862, (vol. 12 Stat. at Large, p. 460,) it was provided that the taxes on all articles manufactured and sold in pursuance of contracts made before the passage of said act should be paid by the purchasers thereof; and by section 97, act of June 30, 1864, (vol. 13 Stat. at Large, p. 273,) every person who shall have made any contract prior to its passage is empowered to add to the price "so much money as will be equivalent to the duty so subsequently imposed on the articles." Mrs. Coston applied to the Navy Department for the addition to her bills of the taxes and duties she was required to pay upon the manufacture of these lights. There she was met by the letters of the Ordnance Officer, to the effect that there was no written contract with her upon which she might claim the benefit of the acts above quoted.

Your committee are of the opinion that the Government cannot escape its liability by such a plea. If there was no continuing contract, then she had an undoubted right to increase the price of her signals or refuse to furnish them any longer. If, on the other hand, the agreement with Mrs. Coston was in effect a contract, she is entitled under the strict letter of the law to add to the price of the signals so much money as will be equivalent to the manufacturers' tax and the duties subsequently imposed upon said articles.

By a letter from Capt. William N. Jeffers, Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance of the Navy Department, it appears that 100,000 sets of these signals were furnished by Mrs. Coston to the Navy Department during the war.

About the time of its close, even when prices had fallen, the Department recognized the justice of Mrs. Coston's demands by paying to her one dollar more per set for the signals thereafter furnished by her.

At a like rate for those delivered by her previously, $100,000 would be due to her. The manufacturers' tax, with the additional duties upon the articles which entered into the manufacture, it is estimated, would reach $20,000 additional.

Upon a review of all the facts, your committee recommend an appropriation of $15,000 to Mrs. Coston, to be accepted by her in full of all claims and demands for the manufacture of the said Coston signal-lights and their use by the Government.

Any less sum would scarcely do justice to the equitable claim of Mrs. Coston above fully set forth. Hon. Gideon Welles, then Secretary of the Navy, wrote her on December 5, 1865: "During the recent rebellion these signals were of incalculable service." Vice-Admiral Porter, in a letter of March 29, 1870, said: "They are the very best ever invented." Rear-Admiral Joseph Smith, on May 23, 1870, wrote her: "The service you have rendered reflects the highest praise upon your patriotism, ability, and perseverance."

These services, in the opinion of your committee, received but a small return in money for the results attained by the use of the Coston signal-lights, and a fair construction of the law amply justifies the payment of the amount recommended to be paid Mrs. Coston.

CHERRIE M. LEVY.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORRISON, from the Committee on War-Claims, submitted the following

REPORT:

[To accompany bill H. R. 1731.]

The Committee on War-Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1731) for the relief of Cherrie M. Levy, having considered the same, report:

That the bill proposes to appropriate the amount of two years' pay and allowances, as captain and assistant quartermaster of volunteers, for services which the said Levy alleges he held himself ready to perform during the late war.

Your committee have examined the proof submitted by the claimant, and find that in the early part of the war the said Levy was appointed captain and assistant quartermaster of volunteers, and was cashiered and dismissed the service October 9, 1863, and that subsequently the disabilities occasioned by said order of dismissal were removed by direction of the Secretary of War; and the claimant was thereupon appointed and confirmed a captain and assistant quartermaster.

It is claimed by the said Levy that he was ready for duty; but it does not appear from the evidence submitted, and your committee have ascertained from the War Department, that he never did serve in that capacity; and in fact he does not claim that he was ever ordered to or did perform any service whatever for the Government under said appointment.

Your committee are of opinion that the claimant is not entitled to receive compensation for the period claimed by him, inasmuch as no service was performed, and therefore report back the bill, and recommend that it do lie upon the table.

HANNAH M. DALEY.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. RUSK, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, submitted the following

R E P O R T :

[To accompany bill H. R. 4889.]

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Hannah M. Daley, widow of Capt. John M. Daley, have examined the same and report :

That the evidence in this case shows that John M. Daley entered the United States service as first sergeant, Company D, Seventh Regiment Michigan Volunteers, August 22, 1861, and that he was appointed captain in the Mulligan Regiment November 11 following, and the appointment was approved by Governor Austin Blair.

On March 1, 1862, he was ordered to recruit a company for the Third Regiment Berdan's United States Sharp-Shooters, and left the State on the 20th of the same month, and on the 7th of May following he was obliged, by sickness, to leave his company, then at Yorktown, Va.; was confined for months to his bed with chronic diarrhea, which, the testimony shows, attacked him in September, 1861, on the march from Washington to Poolesville, and from which he partially recovered before receiving his appointment as captain.

The evidence shows that this disease continued and took the form of dropsy, and he died March 13, 1866, leaving a widow and three small children.

Your committee believe that the widow should receive the same pension to which she would be entitled had her husband received his commission as captain, that being the rank to which he had been duly appointed; and he was in command of his company when stricken down with the disease, from which he never recovered; and we therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

JAMES ATKINS.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. LAZARUS D. SHOEMAKER, from the Committee on Claims, submitted the following

REPORT:

[To accompany bill H. R. 3961.]

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3961) for the relief of James Atkins, late collector of internal revenue for the fourth collection-district of the State of Georgia, respectfully submit the following report:

Your committee find that the said James Atkins is indebted to the Government in the sum of $14,819.33, and that $4,000 of said amount was stolen by one Luther B. Brady, a deputy collector. Brady was appointed deputy collector upon the recommendation of Hon. Columbus Delano, then Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who wrote to Collector Atkins, under date of June 1, 1869, as follows:

I have a friend, a very worthy young man, who is strongly urged for the position of collector or assessor in Georgia, that I would be glad to have appointed deputy collector at Atlanta, unless there is some good reason why you cannot appoint him.

Will you give this prompt attention, and reply by telegram?

Upon the receipt of this letter, Collector Atkins, who knew of no good reason for denying the request of the Commissioner, appointed Brady deputy collector. He (Brady) presented an official bond, in the usual form, with good and sufficient sureties. Because of the high testimonials of character which he (Brady) presented, he was trusted by the collector, who had no reason to doubt his honesty.

In April, 1870, however, he (Brady) neglected to account for ($4,000) four thousand dollars that he had collected. The collector demanded the money, which Brady failed to pay. He was arrested at the instance of Collector Atkins, but gave bond and failed to appear for trial, thereby forfeiting the bond. Collector Atkins subsequently employed detectives, and had Brady arrested in Chicago and brought back to Atlanta for trial, when he again gave bonds. It also appears that Brady, in some way, gained access to Collector Atkins's private papers, and abstracted the bond he had given as security for the faithful performance of his duties as deputy collector. Suit was brought in the District of Columbia by said Atkins, where the bondsmen reside, to establish a copy of the bond of Brady, which he had abstracted, as before stated. The suit failed because the parties who were supposed to have signed the bond testified that they had never signed any such bond.

Your committee further find that $8,007 of said amount was stolen by one Michael S. Wheelan, a deputy collector under said Atkins. Wheelan, who had been a Union soldier during the late war, was regarded as a man of high character when appointed, as appears from the affidavits of several respectable citizens, which are now on file with your committee. Collector Atkins made commendable efforts, and used due diligence, to recover the money and punish Wheelan, but failed; and as Wheelan is now dead, there is no hope of recovering the money. When Wheelan was appointed deputy collector he gave a bond, in the usual form, with good and sufficient sureties. Suit has been brought on said bond by Collector Atkins, but he has failed to make the money on the same. After the exercise of due diligence, and as the sureties are now insolvent, it will be impossible for him to realize anything in the suit.

Your committee further find that the balance, ($2,812.33,) two thousand eight hundred and twelve dollars and thirty-three cents, is due as uncollected taxes from parties who are insolvent, and Collector Atkins has been and is unable to collect the money from said parties, though due diligence appears to have been used.

Your committee therefore report that the sum of $14,819.33 was lost without the fault or neglect of the said Atkins, and they recommend the passage of said bill.

○

ROMAN CATHOLIC CLERGYMEN OF MARYLAND.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. A. HERR SMITH, from the Committee on War-Claims, submitted the following

REPORT:

The Committee on War-Claims, to whom was referred the petition of the corporation of Roman Catholic clergymen of Maryland, having had the same under consideration, report:

That the claim is for use and occupation of the property of said corporation, situated in Charles County, Maryland, known as "Saint Thomas's Manor," by United States forces during the late war.

The items of the claim are as follows:

THE UNITED STATES,
TO THE CORPORATION OF ROMAN CATHOLIC CLERGYMEN,	DR.
To use and occupation of farm, wharf, store-house, warehouse, granary, blacksmith shop, and stable, by Scott's 900 Cavalry, September 15, 1862; Colonel Maulsby's First Maryland Home Brigade Infantry, June, 1863; Col. Graham Purnell's Legion, 1864; a detachment of Veteran Reserve Corps, under Lieutenants Laferty and Gates, in April, 1865; Sheridan's Dismounted Cavalry, under Colonel Fitzsimmons, (General Bartlett commanding the district,) from April, 1865, to June, 1865, for a period of four (4) years, at $3,000 per annum	$12, 000 00
To the cost of seeding, plowing, and cultivating (including the price of seed) of the crops injured and destroyed by United States troops.....	2, 200 00
To repairing store-house and warehouse.....	775 00
To actual damage to 800 locust and walnut trees by being barked and girdled, thereby killed, at $2 each.....	1, 600 00
To 70,000 rails, used by Sheridan's cavalry, at $40 per thousand.....	2, 800 00
To 9,000 rails, used by "Scott's 900" as fire-wood, at $40 per thousand....	360 00
To 2,000 feet fence-paling, at $12 per thousand.....	24 00
To 72 cords of fire-wood, at $4.....	288 00
To 3,000 feet hemlock fence-boards, at $15 per thousand.....	45 00
To 15,000 feet of pine scanting, at $12 per thousand.....	180 00
To 1,000 laths, at $3 per thousand.....	3 00
To 400 large locust and cedar posts, at 50 cents each.....	200 00
To 500 feet clear white-pine boards, at $35 per thousand.....	17 50
To 750 cords of wood standing, at $2.50 per cord.....	1, 875 00
To 1,100 bushels of wheat, at $2 per bushel.....	2, 200 00
To 588 bushels of rye, at $1.15 per bushel.....	676 20
To 432 bushels of oats, at 75 cents per bushel.....	324 00
To wheat-straw consumed by cavalry, 60 acres.....	71 50
To rye-straw consumed by cavalry, 71 acres.....	38 21
To oat-straw consumed by cavalry, 24 acres.....	40 00
To 4,400 bundles of blade-fodder, at 2½ cents.....	100 00
To 120 acres of clover, (2 tons to the acre,) at $20 per ton, exclusive of cutting and curing.....	4, 800 00
 Total quartermaster's stores.....	 30, 617 41

Subsistence stores.

To 550 pounds of tobacco, taken by the troops, at 6 cents per pound.....	$33 00
To 2 oxen, (weight, 1,400 pounds,) at 4 cents per pound.....	56 00
To 91 hogs, (weight, 3,850 pounds,) at 10 cents per pound.....	385 00
To 20 sheep, (weight, 1,200 pounds,) at 10 cents per pound.....	120 00
To 6 bacon-hams, 90 pounds, at 20 cents per pound.....	18 00
To 250 bushels potatoes, at 75 cents per bushel.....	187 50
	799 50
Grand total.....	31,416 91
Deduct cash received from Treasury Department in August, 1867.....	2,053 57
Leaves a balance due of.....	29,363 34

The claim was presented to the Third Auditor in 1866, who, under date of July 20, 1867, reported the case to the Acting Second Comptroller, recommending payment of $4,970.68, which officer, under date of August 16, 1867, overruled the opinion of the Third Auditor, and reduced the allowance to the sum of $2,053.57, which amount was duly paid said corporation in that month.

It will be seen from the items of the claim that the larger portion of it is for the occupation of the farm, wharf, store-house, &c., by Scott's 900 Cavalry; subsequently by a detachment of the Veteran Reserve Corps of dismounted cavalry, the said occupation covering a period of four years, for which the sum of $3,000 per annum is charged. The remaining items of the claim are mainly for rails, fencing, wood, timber, stores, and supplies, for which taking the Third Auditor had jurisdiction to allow. The review of the Third Auditor's report by the Second Comptroller, whose action is final in the case, covers the ground so fully, that your committee deem it proper to present it in full, and it is therefore given herewith:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
SECOND COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE,
August 7, 1867.

SIR: I have examined the papers filed in the claim of the corporation of the Roman Catholic clergymen, and concur with the Auditor that the evidence is insufficient to establish the fact of loss and damage as alleged.

The only portion of the claim which, according to the precedents of similar settlements and the construction of the law for the adjustment of claims, can properly be estimated and allowed by the accounting-officers is for use and occupation.

The Auditor, upon this basis of settlement, allows for three years, at 6 per cent. upon a valuation of the property at $21,000.....	$3,780 00
Taxes for same period	415 68
Cost of repairs to buildings	775 00

Total	4,970 68
-------------	----------

The actual occupation began September 15, 1862, and ended June 19, 1865, 2 years 9⁴/₁₀ months. I consider that this period only should be paid for, because, in the probable event of a settlement and payment for the damages incurred, a double payment would be made for a portion of the claim, if the period of three years should now be computed in the settlement.

Neither do I think that the valuation of $21,000 adopted by the Auditor should take the place of the valuation as assessed by the local authorities for the purposes of taxes.

This valuation is $14,875, and the rate of 5 per cent. upon this amount for the use and occupation of the property recommended by the Quartermaster's Department seems, in my opinion, to be just and proper.

The proximity of claimant's property to the enemy's lines, the fact of its occupation by national troops in order to protect the people of that locality and maintain the authority of the Government, are causes sufficient to explain the fact that real estate in that section of the country during the above period greatly depreciated in value, and the annual market-rental thereof likewise in corresponding ratio diminished.

Five per cent. of the valuation is, therefore, I think, a very liberal percentage, and should include the taxes.

As rent for 2 years 9⁴/₁₀ months, at 5 per cent. per annum on the assessed value of the property, at $743.75 per annum, from September 15, 1862, to June 19, 1865, $2,053.57. An account for the above amount may be stated in favor of the said corporation. The papers in the case are herewith returned.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. W. SMITH,
Acting Comptroller.

Hon. JOHN WILSON,
Third Auditor.

Your committee see no occasion to re-open the case, believing that it has had careful and thorough examination by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department. The opinion of the Second Comptroller seems to be correct, and your committee concur therein.

They accordingly report back the petition and accompanying papers, and ask that they do lie on the table.

○

THE HISTORY OF THE
CITY OF BOSTON
FROM THE FIRST SETTLEMENT
TO THE PRESENT TIME
IN TWO VOLUMES
BY NATHANIEL BENTLEY
OF THE BARRISTER AT LAW
IN THE SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE
IN THE COUNTY OF MIDDLESEX
LONDON: PRINTED BY J. JOHNSON, ST. PAULS CHURCH-YARD, 1733.
IN TWO VOLUMES.
THE FIRST VOLUME.
CONTAINING THE HISTORY FROM THE FIRST SETTLEMENT TO THE YEAR 1630.
THE SECOND VOLUME.
CONTAINING THE HISTORY FROM THE YEAR 1630
TO THE PRESENT TIME.
LONDON: PRINTED BY J. JOHNSON, ST. PAULS CHURCH-YARD, 1733.

WILLIAM D. STRYKER.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. JAMES WILSON, from the Committee on War-Claims, submitted the following

REPORT:

[To accompany bill H. R. 4840.]

The Committee on War-Claims, to whom was referred the petition of William D. Stryker, of New Jersey, having had the same under consideration, report :

That the said William D. Stryker was, during the late war, a paymaster in the United States Army, appointed thereto the 19th February, 1863; that in the spring of 1865 he was ordered to Columbus, Ohio, as senior officer in charge of payments to paroled prisoners at Camp Chase and to Ohio troops mustered out and discharged at Todd Barracks. The funds necessary for the disbursement to a large number of soldiers concentrated at Columbus was all received by the said Stryker from the chief paymaster at Cincinnati. It appears from the statement of the claimant, which is established by satisfactory evidence, that on the 14th of July, 1865, Major McKeon, paymaster United States Army, brought from Cincinnati, in the mail-bag, locked by the postmaster at Cincinnati and opened by the postmaster at Columbus, the sum of $460,000, which amount the said McKeon deposited to his credit at the First National Bank of Columbus; that he subsequently reported himself to the said Stryker, and the amount so deposited was checked out by Stryker for use the next morning. It further appears that these funds were delivered to Major McKeon in sealed packages. The claimant represents that being unable to leave his office, on account of pressure of duties, he ordered Major Scovel, paymaster, to procure a carriage and with his clerks draw the amount from the bank and bring it to his office under guard; that the said Scovel presented the check at the bank and received the funds according to mark placed on packages, and that he paid over the amounts so received to the said Stryker, and these funds the claimant alleges were paid out to paymasters at the post, in the same sealed packages as he received them, and that the said paymasters receipted for them as they were marked on the wrappers. He further states that after this distribution Maj. Dudley W. Rhodes, a paymaster, informed him (Stryker) that the package turned over to him (Rhodes) was short $500; that he (Stryker) saw Rhodes count over the package and found that in one bundle marked $5,000 there were but nine bundles, each containing $500, (one hundred $5 bills,) when there should have been ten; that Major Rhodes asked him to make it good, which he did, and that he had to take $500 of his own personal funds to do so. Major Stryker then demanded that the First National Bank of Columbus make good the deficiency. This the bank refused to do, and Major Stryker sued it, but was beaten in the suit, on the ground that the amount deposited was a "special deposit."

Your committee believe the decision erroneous, insomuch as a special deposit is not liable or subject to check—a well-recognized rule and principle in the financial world, and, it may be added, according to long-established practice.

The claimant submits to the committee, in addition to his own sworn statements, the affidavits of Majors McKeon, Scovel, and Rhodes, and P. W. Huntington, the teller of the First National Bank of Columbus. These affidavits sustain the statements of Major Stryker, and, in the judgment of your committee, establish the fact that the loss sustained by him did not arise from any want of prudence or diligence on his part, but from circumstances beyond his control. He has closed his accounts with the Government, many millions of dollars having passed through his hands, without the loss of a dollar to the Government.

Your committee believe him entitled to receive from the Government the same consideration accorded other officers under similar circumstances, and to that end report the accompanying bill appropriating $500 for his relief, and recommend its passage.

PENSIONS.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. RUSK, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, submitted the following

REPORT:

[To accompany bill H. R. 674.]

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 674) which provides that all pensions on account of death, wounds received, or disease contracted in the service of the United States since March 4, 1861, which have been granted, or which shall hereafter be granted, on application filed previous to January 1, 1875, shall commence from the date of death or discharge, and for the payment of the arrears of pension, having had the same under consideration, submit the following report:

The act of July 14, 1862, provided that pensions should commence on the day of discharge where the application was filed within one year after the date of said discharge, otherwise to commence on the day of filing the application. This was repealed by the act of July 4, 1864, and time for filing the application was extended to three years from date of discharge or death. This act in turn was repealed by that of July 27, 1868, extending the time to five years; which is now the law in force upon this subject.

Your committee further find, from data furnished by the honorable Commissioner of Pensions, taken from the records of the Pension Office, that at the date of June 30, 1873, the total number of pensioners on the rolls was 238,411; out of this number 224,074 have received pension back to date of death or discharge, leaving 14,337 who would be benefited by the provisions of the bill, and of those to be benefited 5,581 are widows and minor children, the remainder, 8,756, being invalids.

It is estimated by the Commissioner of Pensions that it will take to pay the arrears of pension in these cases $9,684,445; and of this sum $3,000,000 will be required for the fiscal year 1875-'76, $4,000,000 for the year 1876-'77, and $2,684,445 for the year 1877-'78. This is believed by the committee to be an over rather than an under estimate.

The Commissioner further states that there were dropped from the rolls 9,870 during the last fiscal year, and that the percentage of loss on the rolls on account of death, remarriage, and expiration of the pension to minors, was four and one-seventh per cent.

From the facts and figures found it is shown that over nine-tenths of all those pensioned have received the full amount of pension due them back to date of death or discharge; and your committee fail to perceive any rule of right or justice that should debar the lesser number from receiving equal benefits of the nation's proffered bounty, merely from the fact of their not having made application within a prescribed time, and more especially when it is found that the omission to apply within the time required was in most cases from ignorance of the law, or desire not to become a burden upon the Government while there was a hope for recovery from the ills that the service had entailed upon them.

Therefore your committee report favorably upon the bill, and earnestly recommend its passage.

The following letter of the Commissioner gives the estimates of the Pension Bureau:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, PENSION OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 26, 1874.

SIR: In accordance with your request, I have the honor to state that under the provisions of the proposed law to extend the period for making applications for pensions from five years after discharge, or after the date when the right accrued, to January, 1, 1875, the number of pensioners now on the rolls that would be benefited thereby and the amount to be paid is estimated as follows:

Eight thousand seven hundred and fifty-six invalids, amount of arrears....	$5,262,291
Five thousand five hundred and eighty-one widows and others, amount of arrears	4,422,154

Since the passage of the act of July 27, 1868, limiting the period to five years within which applications must be made to entitle parties to have their pensions commence when the right accrued, there have been received from July 1, 1868, to June 30, 1873, as follows:

From invalids.....	75,273
From widows and others.....	82,852

Total applications for five years.....	158,125
--	---------

In October, 1871, the number of invalids on the rolls was 93,235; of them 77,149 were disabled by wounds, including amputations from whatever cause, and 15,816 by disease.

Invalid applications filed so long after discharge from their military service are properly more rigidly scrutinized than those previously presented, and more or less of them are found to have been disabled anterior to enlistment, or was not received in the line of duty. More of them would be rejected as not entitled for these causes, and others are rendered doubtful from the obscure origin of the disability, such as hernia, hemorrhoids, ulcerations, disease of the kidneys &c.

There were on the pension-rolls June 30, 1873, as follows:

		Losses from the rolls during the year.
Invalids, (Army and Navy).....	101,234	2,171
Widows, minors, and dependent relatives, (Army and Navy)...	113,858	5,463
Survivors of the war of 1812.....	18,266	2,020
Widows of the war of 1812.....	5,053	216
Total on the rolls and of losses.....	238,411	9,870

The losses during the last fiscal year are composed of deaths, remarriages, and expiration of the pensions to minors, and will probably be somewhat larger the present fiscal year.

The percentage of loss to the rolls from above causes is four and one-seventh per cent.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOS. LOCKEY,
Acting Commissioner.

Hon. J. S. MARTIN,
House of Representatives.

MARY A. McCOMB.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. DOBBINS, from the Committee on Patents, submitted the following

REPORT:

[To accompany bill H. R. 1150.]

The Committee on Patents, to whom the petition of Mrs. Mary A. McComb was referred, beg leave to report:

The petitioner is administratrix of the estate of her husband, David McComb, late of Memphis, Tenn. She asks that she may be authorized to renew the application made by her husband in May, 1850, and October, 1856, for patents for bale-ties in the same manner as he could have done any time prior to the expiration of the limitation of the patent law of 1870.

In support of her petition she has furnished the committee with reasonable proof that her said husband was an inventor of a non-elastic bale-tie. This proof is found in the former application, official documents, and affidavits of citizens of Memphis of the best character and standing. From these it appears that her said husband spent some three years in perfecting the invention embodied in said application of 1850; that in spite of his strenuous efforts he was unable to induce the Commissioner to allow a patent, notwithstanding he continued his efforts until he made application again in 1856 for a modification of some patterns of said invention; and afterward, until the breaking out of the rebellion in 1861, he devoted his time and means to the introduction of his invention into general notice and use. The aforementioned affidavits are full upon all these points. Said affidavits are made by men of undoubted character for veracity and business ability. These testimonies show clearly that said McComb was a frugal, industrious, and temperate man, and that his time for many years was devoted to the introduction and perfection of the invention. It appears by said affidavits he died in the spring of 1864, of small-pox, contracted in waiting on sick soldiers in the hospitals, leaving a widow and a family of five small children without any means of support. It appears that neither he in his life-time nor his widow or family since have derived any remuneration from this important invention. This tie is now in general use, and is found to save, as is alleged, about $1 per bale when used instead of the rope-tie heretofore in general use. It appears that since his death the Patent Office granted, prior to 1871, numerous patents for similar inventions, without considering the right vested by law in said rejected application. It also appears that said administratrix has not parted with any right or interest in said invention, and that it was not until recently, and long after the limitation of the statute of 1870, that she had knowledge of the value of said invention. This invention appears to be peculiarly an American invention, and is useful in its way as others which have a much higher place in fame.

The petitioner appears to us to have made out a case peculiarly meritorious and full of equity, and as a matter of mere justice we see no reason why the request should not be granted, and would respectfully report the accompanying bill, &c.

O

GEORGE W. BRADLEY.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. DUNNELL, from the Committee on Claims, submitted the following

REPORT:

[To accompany bill H. R. 1061.]

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1061) for the relief of George W. Bradley, have had the same under consideration, and respectfully report :

The claimant asks for one hundred dollars as bounty for service in the late war, and for value of clothing destroyed by fire in Baltimore hospital.

The following letter from the office of Adjutant-General will show the nature of the claim :

ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, April 9, 1872.

SIR: In reply to your communication of March 29, 1872, I have to return herewith petition of Geo. W. Bradley, who, it appears from the records of this office, was enrolled and mustered into service August 9, 1862, as private Company H, One hundred and twenty-first Pennsylvania Volunteers, to serve three years; was sent to hospital October 30, 1862, and discharged at Baltimore, Md., February 5, 1863, on surgeon's certificate of disability, by reason of "chronic rheumatism, not incident to, but aggravated by, service." Following remark also appears in this connection on the certificate of disability: "Was admitted into hospital with paralysis of all his limbs. He is evidently superannuated and too much enfeebled for service, and says he is 54 years of age."

This man having been discharged, before serving two years, for disability other than injuries received in line of duty, is not entitled to $100 bounty under the law.

There is no law under which a soldier can be paid the money-value of clothing lost in the service.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. D. TOWNSEND,
Adjutant-General.

CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON CLAIMS,
House of Representatives.

Your committee report back the bill and recommend that the same do not pass.

NICHOLAS WHITEHALL.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. EAMES, from the Committee on Patents, submitted the following

REPORT:

[To accompany bill H. R. 667.]

The Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the petition of Nicholas Whitehall for leave to apply to the Commissioner of Patents for extension of letters-patent granted to him, submit the following report:

The patent which the applicant seeks to have extended was issued on the 27th day of October, 1857, and is described as being an improvement of a double cultivator, the middle of which is elevated to pass over the corn, with a compound evener suspended upon three points and so arranged as to bring the draught square against the shoulders of the horses, causing the plows to run as lightly and evenly as a single plow.

The committee find from the evidence that the said Nicholas Whitehall was, at the time of the granting of his patent, a poor man, and that he has remained so ever since; that he lived on a small farm in the country, and had built thereon a small wagon and work shop; that he divided his time between his shop and cultivating his farm, by which to procure subsistence for a large family; that at said shop he made about 100 of said improved cultivators during the time his patent run, and sold a few county and one shop right to manufacture said machines, from all of which he has not derived, by over a thousand dollars, the amount which he has expended in developing his invention and introducing it into use.

The said Whitehall made application in time for an extension, but, on account of his inability to meet the expenses, was not able to be personally present at Washington. The evidence produced before the Commissioner, upon application for an extension, was based upon the work which this class of implements performed and the saving effected by the invention of the straddle-row cultivator, instead of being confined to the invention claimed in the patent, namely, "providing a double cultivator, the middle of which is elevated to pass over the corn, with a compound evener suspended upon three points and arranged as described for the purpose set forth." The rules of practice in the Patent-Office require testimony to "distinguish carefully between the specific devices covered by the claims of the patent and the general machine in which these devices may be incorporated." By reason of not having complied with this rule, and for want of a complete statement of receipts and expenditures on account of the patent, the extension was refused. The evidence before the committee shows that Mr. Whitehall was misinformed as to the nature of proof as to the value of his invention required by the rules of the Patent-Office, and by mistake based the estimate of value not upon the specific devices covered by the claims of his patent, but upon the value of the general machine in which those devices were incorporated, and that said Commissioner of Patents decided against said extension on the grounds above named, and none others; and that he did not learn of the rule of the Patent-Office until by law it was too late to apply for a rehearing in said case.

His only course was to apply for relief to Congress; and, having applied by bill, in the last session of the House, he could get no hearing on account of the shortness of the session and the amount of prior business before the Committee on Patents.

The evidence also shows that the said Whitehall was the first and original inventor of the improvement for which letters-patent were granted to him in 1857; that the same is a valuable invention; that said patentee had used diligence in endeavoring to procure the introduction of said invention; that said Whitehall is now the absolute owner of said invention; and that he made no assignment of the same, except the one-half to his brother; that he was compelled to make this assignment in order to procure means to make his application to Congress for the extension of his patent, not having the means of his own to do so, but that his brother has in no way derived any benefit out of said invention.

The committee think that said Whitehall was deprived of a full and fair hearing on his said application for extension; that his improvement is a useful and valuable one, saving much of the expense of cultivating corn and other growing crops; and that he had not derived a reasonable remuneration for the benefits which his invention has conferred on the public.

Upon this statement of facts, the committee are of opinion that the petitioner ought to be allowed another hearing before the Commissioner of Patents for an extension of his patent, granted October 27, 1857, and for that purpose recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

SAMUEL A. KNOX.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. EAMES, from the Committee on Patents, submitted the following

REPORT:

[To accompany bill H. R. 1599.]

The Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the application of Samuel A. Knox, of the city and county of Worcester, in the State of Massachusetts, for leave to apply to the Commissioner of Patents to extend letters-patent issued to him for improvement in plows, submit the following report:

Letters-patent were granted to said Knox on the 14th day of October, 1856, for a period of fourteen years. The invention for which this patent was issued was made while Mr. Knox was in the employ of Ruggles, Nourse, Mason & Co., who claimed the right, as the invention was made while the inventor was in their employment, to the use of the invention. Mr. Knox, supposing such right to exist, made an agreement with the said firm to sell this invention, in connection with a hoe-patent, for the sum of three thousand five hundred dollars, and in pursuance of such agreement sold the patent to said firm for said sum of money. Prior to the sale, but subsequent to the agreement for sale, other parties offered Mr. Knox for said invention the sum of twenty thousand dollars, but, believing himself bound by reason of being an employé of said firm to dispose of said invention to said firm, refused to sell or assign the same to any other person or firm.

Upon an application of said Knox to the Commissioner of Patents, made within the time and as required by law, for an extension of his patent, the Commissioner refused to grant an extension, giving as a reason that he was constrained to say, by the statement of the applicant, he had thrown his invention away, and that if he had not received ample remuneration for it he had no one but himself to blame.

It appears from the evidence that the demand for the plow constructed according to this patent was large, and that the price of such plows has not been reduced since the expiration of the patent. This patent is for the construction of mold-boards for plows upon mathematical principles, so that when the character of the soil in which the plow is to be used is given, the shape and configuration of the mold-board can be determined. This method of determining the shape of the mold-board is a saving of time and expense in making experiments upon such mold-boards, as usually done before the invention of Mr. Knox, to the extent of from one dollar to three dollars on each plow.

Mr. Knox filed his petition in Congress for leave to apply to the Commissioner of Patents at the earliest opportunity after the adverse decision of the Commissioner herein referred to.

The committee, upon the evidence, are of opinion that Mr. Knox believed himself in honor bound to carry out the agreement which he made with said firm, and that the amount which he received in the sale of his patent under such agreement is not a reasonable reward for the benefit which his invention has conferred upon the public.

The committee therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

○

ROBERT E. BRYANT.

MARCH 3, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. COBURN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, submitted the following

REPORT:

[To accompany bill H. R. 4892.]

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of Robert E. Bryant, submit the following report:

In this case the petitioner, Robert E. Bryant, late captain and commissary of subsistence, volunteers, United States Army, claims pay for services performed by him as such officer, from the 7th day of October, 1861, to the 2d day of February, 1862, inclusive.

It appears from evidence submitted to the committee, that in the month of September, 1861, the said Robert E. Bryant was notified by Brig. Gen. Lew. Wallace, then in command of troops at Paducah, Ky., that he, Bryant, had been appointed on the staff of General Wallace, as commissary of subsistence, with the rank of captain, and directed to report at once for duty; that the said Bryant immediately proceeded to close up his business as railroad-express agent, at Crawfordsville, Ind., and, on reporting for duty at Paducah, was placed on the staff of General Wallace as commissary of subsistence, on the 7th of October, 1861, in which position he continued to serve until the close of the war. Owing to an error, his commission as captain was dated to commence on the 3d day of February, 1862, instead of being dated on the 7th of October, 1861, the day on which he entered on the discharge of his duties as commissary of subsistence. In a statement made under oath on the 20th of January, 1875, the petitioner says, "that from the 7th day of October, 1861, when assigned to duty by Brig. Gen. Lewis Wallace, until the 3d of February, 1862, although all the time in the service of the United States, he received no compensation whatever from the United States Government, but had to pay for his subsistence and other expenses incident to his position as an officer, from his own means; and that at no time since has he ever received any pay or other compensation for such service."

The statements made by Captain Bryant, in relation to his position and services between the 7th of October, 1861, and the 3d of February, 1862, are supported by the affidavit of General Lew. Wallace, of the 1st of September, 1874. The claim for compensation for these services has been rejected by the War Department, on the ground that the petitioner, Bryant, was not recognized by the Department as captain and commissary of subsistence, prior to February 3, 1862.

In view of the evidence before the committee in reference to the claim of Robert E. Bryant, they believe that he faithfully performed the duties for which he asks compensation; that he never received any pay for the discharge of those duties, and that he is justly entitled to the relief which he asks from Congress. The committee, therefore, beg leave to report the accompanying bill, and recommend its passage.

House documents

Bd.: [279,7.] 1874/75 = Congress 43, Sess. 2

Washington, DC 1875

Am.b. 3040-279,7 urn:nbn:de:bvb:12-bsb11312806-6